What is going on in their minds? Look there in the background and see for yourself. There is the sweet, smiling countenance of Mother Goose. There she sits with her fat goose under her arm. She waves her wand, and from our view dissolves the material world of those who a moment ago we had been observing; and before our delighted vision troop forth splendidly caparisoned steeds, ridden by bold-looking knights, and there in front of them, bedecked and beribboned, is the white horse and the beautiful young maiden on its back, whose bells and rings were always a joy and delight to our childhood's fancy. And so it goes on through the series, which includes, of course, Jack and Jill who went up the hill, and later on tumbled down again with all the water, which they had drawn a pail of, tumbling on top of them.

THE TWO BROWNS

Champion Release, November 29

The story is of the West, the breath of the plains sweeping over the various scenes with unmistakable surety. There are two Browns. One is John W.—the other Joe W. John is from New York City, Joe is to the manor born. These two worthies fall desperately in love with Virginia Dare, daughter of their ranch boss. Virginia favors the suit of John, the New Yorker, and this arouses the jealousy of Joe, who, falling into a bad mood, resolves to gain his ends by foul methods.

This is what he did. He had a friend in New York write a letter to John, making it appear as from John's wife. When John receives it, he regards it as a mistake or a practical joke, and laughingly hands it to Joe. This is what the latter expected, and once in his hands, he saw that it fell into Virginia's hands. That settled it. She spurned John from that time forth, giving him no chance to defend himself, nor the slightest hint of what she had learned, which she, of course, believed.

Then Joe found favor with her, more to spite John than for aught else. Thus did unhappiness come to Virginia and John because of Joe's rascality. Then came the workings of fate. Joe's pal in New York, who had sent the unfortunate letter, wrote to Joe about it. But he addressed it to J. W. Brown, and so it happened that the letter fell into John's hands and was opened by him. You'll remember that his initials were also J. W. He thereat learned of Joe's trickery.

It may well be imagined how Virginia felt when she discovered how wrongly John had been dealt with, so to him she made all amends in her power, showering her gifts of affection upon him in abundance. But we are anticipating a little. Let us go back before the discovery of Joe's perfidy. The parson was just about to tie the knot between Virginia and Joe, when in burst John with the timely evidence, and upset the plans which Joe had so nicely laid.

Joe retired under the scornful and scorching glances of every one present. No one had a particle of sympathy for him, and John received the congratulations from the guests which otherwise would have been the other's. The unexpectedly happy termination of this story is brought about so naturally and logically that all hands will award it a measure of plaudits.

TOO MUCH INJUN

Powers Release, November 28

This is Indian, but —a comedy! A little surprise, yet it's so— first Indian comedy ever made. It introduces the youth that has the spirit of the plains in his Eastern blood, and we show him whetting his ferocious appetite for redmen's blood. He's going out West, you must know, and he's practising the plunge of the bowie, for he's anticipating many a savage hand-to-hand encounter. His subject is the nearest to the real article that a tenderfoot can get— namely, a cigar store Indian. But the Indian is not the kind you expect him to be, so he resents it in such fashion that the erstwhile despoiler of the copperman's domain changes his mind about that triumphant tour of the Woolly West.

THE LINEMAN AND THE GIRL

If she were not such a careful thing about herself and her home, she never would have bothered about the electrical wiring men who were working on the sidewalk in front of her house; but she noticed that they were about to plant a telegraph pole right before her door, and this just grated on her sense of artistic landscape arrangement. So, when they had a nice hole dug for it, she left the cake in the oven and, stepping into the excavation, defied them to remove her. Just like that!

And they didn't. But what did follow made the young engineer in charge of the work wish he owned a will like hers and he decided to get it, if he had to take her with it. which was just to his taste, because she was so young and sweet, and determined and—well, he got her!

THE WANDERER'S RETURN

Powers Release, December 2

The visit of old Daddy Time is constantly changing this little old world of ours, and it changes us, too,—and as the years roll by Fate casts us over the endless domains of the globe, some near to and some far from the fanciful spot we revere as "home." An iota in the great human plane, Harry Reid became lost to his loved ones, and advertisement by the most modern methods extant failed to bring him into the light of the love of his family. It was just a freak of circumstance that another man cruelly undertook to wound the hearts of the mourning ones by masquerading as the lost man. He might have played his part successfully, too, if the same fate that sent Jack into the endless chasm of oblivion had not wrought a miracle still more wondrous. Now, dear reader, you are waiting for the saddest part of this tale. You are to be disappointed, however, for there is no sad part to it. Strange to say, this film is a roaring farce, full of funny situations. Do you see the opportunity for fun?

VIEWS OF LAKE COMO

Here we take a boat ride over this world-famous Italian lake, which is noted chiefly for its scenic wonders and beauties. The romantic gondolas glide majestically by and we can almost hear the twang of the native guitar as we sail along on the glassy water.

JOLLY BILL OF THE ROLLICKING R

American Release, November 27

Jolly Bill couldn't be tidy. All the cowpunchers had long ago given him up as hopeless. But one day they pulled out his shirt, "mussed" up his hair and sent him off to propose to Miranda. And—holy smoke! Miranda just happened to need a man and grabbed at the chance. So they mysteriously made it up between them to go off to 'Frisco, the big place, and have a bully time. Which they did.

On their return they were surprised to find the whole ranch out and prepared to "kid" them. But they who came to conquer remained to worship, for here was the erstwhile Miranda gayly attired in the very latest that 'Frisco could show. And as for Bill—well, you should have seen the mortal frame jerked about in agony by unaccustomed tight pants, high collars, dandified waistcoats, etc. But he carried the new glory becomingly and the cowpunchers merely fainted by way of showing surprise.

But you know that couldn't last. They finally got Bill out back of the barn and off went vest, coat, and collar and untidy Bill was supremely happy once more. Not for long, though. Miranda, becoming suspicious, bustled around the barn just in time to witness the final demolition of the new togs. Miranda gave chase and overhauled Bill under a big cactus whose thorns couldn't possibly hurt Bill so much as Miranda's ready tongue.

But she succeeded—and thereby hangs the tale of Jolly Bill's rejuvenation. A film of astonishing possibilities in the fun-making line. It's a scream from start to finish. The pantomime is exceptionally strong. Approximate length, 1,000 feet.

THE SHERIFF'S SISTERS

American Release, November 30

Edith Howard has learned to love Jack Evans, foreman of her father's ranch, but her affections are not returned. Jim Dawson, another suitor, has also been persistent in his attentions to Edith, but, loving Jack very deeply, she gives him scant encouragement.

Edith's sister, Clara, returns from an Eastern boarding-school and her charming ways soon win her the love of Jack Evans, thus shattering Edith's one hope of happiness. Clara and Jack quickly become engaged and easily obtain the mother's consent to an early union. Not so with the father. Jack is heartbroken, and having always regarded Edith as a dear friend, confides his troubles to her. Jealousy seizes Edith.

In the meantime Jim Dawson seeks out the father and asks his consent to his love for Edith. Wrought up by the apparent crisis in his family affairs, Mr. Howard becomes insulting and pulls his gun on Dawson. But the latter is quicker and kills Howard. Jack, conversing with Edith, hears the shot and hurries to the scene, picking up the dead man's gun in an effort to identify his slayer. Then Dick Howard, the sheriff, brother of the two girls and son of the old gentleman, rushing to the scene, finds Jack in the compromising position, and knowing that he had before had an argument with Father Howard, places him under arrest. Clara does not believe her lover guilty and begs for his liberty to no avail.

All this time, Edith, knowing that Jack was with her when the fatal shot was fired, remains silent through jealousy. The prisoner is placed in jail by the sheriff, who then returns to console his little sister. He loses the prison keys and Clara finds them. She hurries at once to the jail, liberating her lover and placing herself in his place. Jim Dawson, having thus luckily escaped, gathers a gang of cowpunchers, bent upon storming the jail to at once hang Jack. They arrive in time to see Jack escaping, give chase, capture him and in the flight that ensues Jack is thrown from a railroad viaduct onto a passing freight. Bruised and bleeding he falls to the ground, where he is picked up later by the sheriff. Edith then confesses her duplicity. A reconciliation follows and Jack is allowed his freedom. A powerful tale of fierce passions, carrying a complicated plot of surpassing interest to an easy and logical conclusion.

Approximate length, 1,000 feet.

MISS MASQUERADER

Eclair Release, November 28

What could afford a better foundation for a delightfully humorous picture tale than a lovable, vigorous specimen of budding girlhood, out for a lark, bundled up in male attire and chaperoned by a doting uncle with boyish tendencies?

Her experiences at a fashionable club, on the golf links and other places rarely frequented by women offer many laughable situations.

Naturally there's a love plot attached in which the girl figures triumphantly. Exquisite photographic value is apparent in every scene, while the production, as a whole, is a delightful remedy for brain-fagged, overworked mortals who tire of the grind and long for an excuse for laughter to brighten their weary souls.

THE FIVE DAUGHTERS OF MR. DURAND

Eclair Release, November 30

Mr. Durand is the happy father of five charming girls, who lay siege to the heart of a son of one of his old college friends. This friend writes Mr. Durand that his son, George, will pay him a visit, and he expresses the desire that the young man should fall in love with one of his daughters and win her as his bride. The letter falls into the hands of Marietta, the youngest of the daughters. Although only twelve years of age, she enters joyously into preparations for the reception of the Fairy Prince. They all endeavor to give him a royal time, with the exception of Renee, who seemed timid and disinterested. This timidity is, however, assumed, as her sisters discover her one day, when George is asleep, sketching the object of her silent adoration. Her sisters make sport of her bashfulness, and each one tries her utmost to captivate young George, but all to no avail, as Renee wins the day, and George asks Papa Durand for her hand in marriage.

On the same reel is

GUSSY'S CONGRATULATIONS

Gussy, desiring to pay his respects to his maiden aunt on the anniversary of her birthday, bought a beautiful bouquet of flowers, and starts to deliver them in person. He found after he had started on his journey that he had forgotten his gloves, so drops into a haberdasher's to purchase a pair. He gave the bouquet to a man to hold for him, and after making his purchase finds that the scoundrel had decamped, having sold the flowers for 40 cents. Gussy is dismayed and searches for a florist. He is disappointed, and was about giving up in despair, when he arrives at the apartment-house where his aunt abides. A servant is entering with a beautiful bunch of flowers. He persuades the latter to let him take the bouquet, and greets his aunt with effusion, handing her the bouquet, not knowing that a note accompanied it. The bouquet was intended for an actress on the first floor, and when the aunt reads the letter she is indignant and cuts Gussy out of her will.

THE LATE MRS. EARLY

Comet Release, December 1

In this film the mirror of nature is thrust before us in all its unmistakable correctness. We see ourselves as others might see us and our many faults are reflected without fear or favor. Mrs. Early has a habit of always being late, and this habit is the bane of Mr. Early's existence. It manifests itself at the opening of the story when the pair start for a week-end stay in the country. Mrs. Early is late and they miss the train. Next day at breakfast Mr. Early presents wifey with a watch. The gift is more of a gentle reminder for her to mend her tardy ways than anything. Mrs. E. even fails to take the hint, for she is late receiving the timepiece. Then the pair decide to go to the theater. Mr. Early starts ahead and purchases the tickets. Mrs. Early is a long time getting there, and after waiting a reasonable period Mr. Early tears up the pasteboards and departs. Mrs. Early arrives, discovers the torn coupons and sends a note to John Smith, an old flame, asking him to take her out to dinner. Smith assents.

Mr. Early also receives a note. It is from an old girl friend who has just reached town. Mr. Early, lonely and disgusted, is only too glad to find companionship and consents to chaperon the writer. All hands, by a strange coincidence, make their rendezvous a certain restaurant, and when wife and hubby meet under these unique circumstances the situation is better imagined than described. Mrs. Early promptly faints, but speedily recovers. Explanations follow and she promises that in the future she will never be late again.

BILL AND BERTIE'S WEDDING DAY

Lux Release, November 24

This is a funny story of how Bill and Bertie went into double harness on the same day. Their respective bridal parties met at the church door and quarrelled and the quarrel continued with disastrous results. When a man's married his troubles begin. On the same reel is

A PASSING CLOUD

Edward Bunthorne and his sweetheart, Grace, came down to the river to pass away an afternoon in luxurious idleness and sweet content. Their courtship could well be compared to a blithe spring morning. The sun shone, the birds sang, and all the world went merrily. Then came a tiny speck upon the distant horizon; it grew and soon loomed overhead, blocking out the light of the morning sun, hushing the song of the birds and making the world a dismal place indeed. The cloud was Madeline Martin, a young lady who came to the river with her little sister. The lovers made friends with her, and very soon they formed a pleasant party. Edward became infatuated with his new acquaintance, and some time afterwards was observed by Grace carrying on a desperate flirtation. Alas! the cloud must break, and Grace's little world will be clad in sombre hue, but—no, there proves to be no rain, for Grace bravely rescues Miss Martin's little sister from death. The unselfish bravery of this action reveals to Miss Martin the selfishness of her own actions, and she retired, leaving the lovers to make their peace. The sunshine comes again after a hard struggle, and Grace and Edward are finally forced to agree that Miss Martin was but—A Passing Cloud.

HIS VACATION

Nestor Release, November 20

John Strong, the village blacksmith, and Violet Dandy, the village belle, are having a rather easy time with their love romance, when Count Giustino de Ribboni blows in upon them in search of some restful diversions.

All the village maidens, Violet included, are dazzled by the Count's polished and grand manners, his cute, Kaiserlike mustache and the glamor of a title. All strive to win the Count's favor, but Violet wins the race, much to the disgust and despair of her big country lover.

Count de Ribboni's vacation proves to be an eventful one. At first his love affair progresses rapidly and Violet's ambitious mamma is in the seventh heaven of delight. Little Tommy, however, positively dislikes the Count, and proceeds to "queer" him with the prospective Countess. Unwittingly he helps his brother's (John's) suit.

Thanks to Tommy, the Count's vacation is transformed into a nightmare. Tommy anticipates the Count's every move, and "doctors" the stoop, the hammock, the carriage and, last but not least, the rowboat. Poor Giustino is kept busy falling, tumbling, taking flying leaps and floundering in the lake. At the opportune moment, John, the smithy, plays the hero's part by saving the girl, thereby earning her everlasting gratitude and love. Giustino manages to gain terra firma only to be thrown back into the water.

His vacation over, the Count returns to his count . . . er, the ribbon counter in a department store, where he is discovered by John and Violet. In a desperate attempt to hide himself, Giustino scatters yards and yards of ribbons and finally lands out in the street with the powerful assistance of a husky floorwalker.

THE COWBOY PUGILIST

Nestor Release, November 22

The boys were disappointed. Edwin Baxter, the only man of whom their Western little town could boast as being really clever with the gloves, had absolutely refused to answer the challenge of the theatrical company, booked for the Opera House next week. The manager had sent out posters announcing that his pugilist would meet all comers, and offering $200 to anyone able to stay four rounds with him. Edwin stubbornly insisted he was not good enough at the game, and, anyway, May Sutton disapproved of his fighting; so further argument was useless.

Upon calling at the Sutton home the next day, and learning that May and her grandfather and grandmother were to be dispossessed unless they could meet their six months' back rent, or the girl consented to become the wife of Samuel King, the landlord. Edwin vigorously declared he would answer the challenge after all, and started training at once.

Before the day for the fight arrived, King had heard of his townsman's intention, and as soon as "Kid" Flynn, the pugilist, and his manager appeared, he called upon them and offered the fighter his own price if he would give Edwin a sound thrashing. Having arranged matters to his satisfaction, King watched his rival in love answer the challenge with a very derisive grin.

In the first round each man was trying to feel the other out; but in the second, after Edwin had put three punches on the "Kid's" jaw, the fighter decided it was time to "start something." The two men mixed it for a few seconds, then suddenly the "Kid" attempted to land his famous sleep prescription, a terrible right swing, which Edwin cleverly avoided just as the gong sounded. In the third, the "Kid" clinched. Edwin landed a right hook to the jaw and followed it up with a solar plexus that sent the fighter down for the count of eight. He rose, surprised and angry; but nimble Edwin managed to keep out of the way. In the fourth round the men fought hard, each taking a good deal of punishment; but the fighter was utterly unable to put over the deciding punch. When the gong sounded, Edwin modestly acknowledged the wild applause of his fellow-townsmen, gladly pocketed the $200 and hastened to his dressing-room.

On the following day the young man had the extreme pleasure of literally kicking Samuel King out of the Sutton home. He thus won the undying gratitude of the old folks and his little sweetheart.

Length, 1,000 feet.

THE THEFT OF MONA LISA

Great Northern Release, November 25

Fred, in his private office, is disturbed in his work by the entry of the Head's daughter, with whom he has a certain understanding. They bill and coo together without noticing the entrance of the proprietor, who, with difficulty keeping a straight face, orders his daughter out of the room. Fred resolves to test his fortune at once, and asks papa's consent to his marriage. The proprietor then says: "As soon as you have done a good piece of work as a journalist, I will consent to the marriage." Fred immediately sets out, and after a time, becoming thirsty, drops into a cafe. Here he overhears a number of artists discussing the bad supervision prevailing at the Louvre, and this instantly suggests a plan to him. Proceeding to the gallery, he inspects the world-famous work of art, and then going to an open window nearby, is gratified to find that some workmen have erected a cradle to travel from the ground to the window. That evening he returns, and reaching the window by the cradle, enters the room and steals the picture. The next morning the loss is discovered, and the police soon have the matter in hand. The director of the gallery is rung up and is told that the picture has disappeared. Glancing at his paper, he sees a report of the theft written by Fred, and backed up by a number of police, he makes his way to the office of the paper, and there is introduced to Fred. The picture is taken down from the wall, where it has been temporarily hung and wrapped up in a piece of paper. The director turns for a moment to chat with the Head, when Fred exchanges the picture for another canvas of the same size and shape. This is taken in solemn procession to the gallery, but there a shock awaits the gathered crowd, for the canvas is not "Mona Lisa," but a painting of the Nordisk trade-mark. At this juncture, Fred pushes his way in with the real painting, which he delivers up in the sight of all. He has accomplished what he set out to do, and we last see him with his prize folded in his arms.

GRANDMA'S TOOTHACHE

Comet Release, November 27

The plot of this interesting film revolves around an aching tooth. The situations are numerous and amusing and the denouement is arrived at in an unexpected and attractive manner. Dr. Howe is a dentist. He has a little daughter, Edith, who dotes on her grandma, a motherly old lady who at the opening of the story comes to the Howes and stays for dinner. At the table Grandma complains of a violent toothache. The Doctor suggests the immediate extraction of the molar, a procedure which Edith views with abject horror. The dentist then retires to another room, followed by his wife, and prepares for the operation. Edith hurries and brings a bottle of paregoric, but when she realizes that her father is bent on pulling the tooth she takes Grandma to a room in the garret. Papa and Mamma Howe then institute a search for their little one, leaving the dinner untouched. Two tramps enter the house and forthwith apply themselves to the meal. Then they go to the garret and, believing them to be the dentist and his assistant, Edith and Grandma cover themselves with bedsheets. The tramps mistake them for a pair of ghosts and beat a hasty retreat. Mr. and Mrs. Howe have returned about this time. They search high and low and finally go to the garret. Edith and Grandma then pose as daredevil bandits and almost scare the Howes out of their wits.

The Doctor and his wife are worried and completely nonplussed over the unusul disappearance of their darling and Grandma. As a last resort they appeal to the police. Upon the arrival of the authorities the search is started all over again. All hands visit the garret, and, lo and behold! instead of bandits, the party discover Edith and Grandma, fast asleep, locked in each others' arms and seemingly at peace with the entire universe. Explanations follow and the police, nettled over what they deem "stupidity of some guileless folks," leave the house in anything but good humor. Edith's ruse wins and it is needless to say that Grandma and her sick tooth, for the time being, are not separated.

THE COURTING OF MARY

Majestic Release, November 26

Mary, the tomboy, and Owen, the sportsman, have equally an aversion for the opposite sex. Although pursued by many charming ladies, Owen eludes them and steals off to his favorite trout stream, which divides the two estates. Mary is also annoyed by many admirers, among whom is a poet, but she ingeniously gets rid of them all, only to meet her fate at the trout stream in which Owen fishes industriously.

Meeting there one day, Owen orders Mary off his side of the stream, where she has comfortably ensconced herself, but alas! Cupid has lost his opportunity and the die is cast.

Mary's uncle, although seemingly severe, has a tenderness for an interesting spinster of uncertain age. Mary surprises her uncle with the spinster and shows emphatically, in various ways, her dislike of the proposed match. Uncle, while appearing severe on Owen's suit, plans to get Mary married off, at the behest of the spinster lady, and succeeds in his scheme. Owen and Mary elope with the aid of a long ladder and an automobile and (we are told) lived happily ever after.

When Writing Advertisers Please Mention Moving Picture News

FEATURES!
FEATURES!

The Independent manufacturers are producing some of the greatest feature films I ever saw in all my born days. If you don't get them you miss some of the best money-makers you ever struck. Why not hook up with Laemmle films, Laemmle service and "Laemmle luck" and get ALL of the best things ALL of the time? Come on along!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters:
New number 204 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.
Sykes Block, Minneapolis, Minn.
1312 Farman St., Omaha, Neb.
1110 Wyandotte St., Kansas City, Mo.
515 Mulberry St., Des Moines, Iowa.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

(My Free Employment Bureau never sleeps. It will work for you—FREE)

JUST OFF THE PRESS—THE NEW
MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14

By far the best book of comedy material I have ever written. Contents include 20 sure-fire parodies, 11 great monologues, 10 fine acts for two males, 6 acts for male and female, a splendid minstrel first part, an original one-act comedy, also brand-new acts for quartettes and sister teams, besides an almost endless assortment of newest gags, jokes, sidewalk patter, etc., etc.

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14 is sold with the guarantee of being absolutely satisfactory in every way or money instantly refunded. Send orders to

JAMES MADISON
1404 Third Avenue, New York

STOP!

supplying your patrons with dirty, rainy films. Have your films Redeveloped, Cleaned and Softened before sending them out, by the

ORTHO FILM COMPANY
40 E. 12th St., New York City

Advertisers want results. When writing to them it is our due that you mention The Moving Picture News

W. E. GREENE
FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE IN NEW ENGLAND

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Start the Season right by using an Independent Service from a Reliable House. We are buying the Output of the Sales Co. and have some choice services open. Write—wire—or call To-Day at

W. E. GREENE FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.
228 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.
Telephone: 2187-3790 Oxford.

SALES COMPANY

The following films have been released during the week of November 20th by the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company:

Monday, November 20th.

The Test ..... American
National Guardsmen and Regulars at Ft. Riley ..... Champion
From the Bottom of the Sea ..... Imp
His Vacation ..... Nestor
The Office Boy's Dream ..... Comet

Tuesday, November 21st.

The Broken Trap ..... Bison
Rivals—Views of Italy ..... Powers
A Master of Millions ..... Thanhouser
Hands Across the Sea in '76 ..... Eclair

Wednesday, November 22d.

When the Sheriff Got His Man ..... Champion
The Cowboy Pugilist ..... Nestor
Helpless Man ..... Reliance
Hushands Wanted ..... Solax
Golden Wedding ..... Ambrosio

Thursday, November 23d.

Master of the Vineyard ..... American Executive Clemency ..... Imp
Portuguese Centaurs ..... Eclair
Charlie and the Autcmatic Lighter ..... Eclair
The Price ..... Rex

Friday, November 24th.

The Diamond Locket ..... Comet
White Fawn's Escape ..... Bison
Bad Man ..... Bison
The Basehall Bug ..... Thanhouser
The Will of Providence ..... Solax
Bill and Bertie's Wedding Day ..... Lux
A Passing Cloud ..... Lux

Saturday, November 25th.

Desperate Desmond Pursued by Claude Eclaire ..... Nestor
Jug-o-Rum ..... Powers
A Daughter of Italy ..... Reliance
The Theft of Mona Lisa ..... Great Northern
The Tailor Wants to Be Paid ..... Itala
The King of Noose Throwers ..... Itala

Sunday, November 26th.

The Courting of Mary ..... Majestic

BARGAINS—BARGAINS.
Motion Picture Machines $35 up. Cineograph $65. Powers Cameragraph No. 5 only $110. Edison Model B $150. Enterprise Gas Outfit $25.
New Edison Model B, Powers Cameragraph No. 6 and Standard as specialties.
Send for Supplement No. 33 Bargain List.
Motion Picture Machines Wanted.
HARBACH & CO., 809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

When Writing Advertisers Please Mention Moving Picture News

THE WORLD'S GREATEST THEATRE CHAIR
Sanitary, Space-Saving, Life-Saving, Money-Saving.
To Use This Chair Is to Make Your Business Grow.
Write Today for Circular W.
HARDESTY MFG. CO.
Canal Dover, Ohio.

QUICK—CHEAP—GOOD

OPERA CHAIRS

Ask for Catalog 306
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.,
218 So. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

25c IN STAMPS GIVES YOU ONE COPY OF
HALLBERG'S
1912 MOTION PICTURE CATALOGUE AND REFERENCE BOOK

Special Jobber of
EDISON
POWERS
MOTIOGRAPH
Moving Picture Machines

The "Hallberg Economizer"
Used in connection with any of the above moving picture machines, produces the finest results on your screen that money can buy.

I Equip Theatres Completely
And carry in stock only the highest grade goods required for your theater.
Free catalogues, circulars and pamphlets furnished of individual items you require.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Free Catalogue No. 2.

English Representation

An English firm of exceptional financial standing is open to negotiate for representation of good American maker. Full particulars on application (which will be treated confidentially) to

Box 6, London Office of The News,
8 Sherwood St., London, England.

Theatre Sales Co.
211 Dearborn Street, opposite Post Office
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
Long Distance Phone, Harrison 341
Dealers in Theatres anywhere in the United States and especially Chicago. Write or Call.
Make Known your Wants

China to the Front
THEATRES
If you wish to draw the crowds order a selection of our new Chinese slides, all from direct photographs. We have over 250 to select from at $4.00 per dozen. High-class coloring. Send for list of this and other subjects. 30,000 slides always in stock.

Riley Optical Instrument Co.
3 EAST 14th ST., NEW YORK CITY

Data from Manufacturers' List of Releases

MEMBERS OF SALES CO.

AMBROSIO

(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

		Feet
Oct.	4—Wrestlers and Wrestling
Oct.	11—The Little Chimney Sweeper
Oct.	14—Tweedledum's Monkey
Oct.	14—One of Tweedledum's Tricks (Com.)
Oct.	18—The Conversion of St. Anthony
Oct.	25—Salambo
Nov.	1—Judas (Dr.)
Nov.	8—Dolly's Doll
Nov.	8—Tweedledum's Motor Car
Nov.	15—The Convict's Song (Dr.)
Nov.	22—The Golden Wedding

AMERICAN

Oct.	12—The Cowboy and the Outlaw (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	16—Three Daughters of the West (Dr.)	850
Oct.	16—The Caves of LaJolla (Sc.)	150
Oct.	19—The Lonely Range (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	23—The Horse Thief's Bigamy (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	26—The Trail of the Eucalyptus (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	30—The Stronger Man (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	2—The Water War (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	6—The Three Shell Game (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	9—The Mexican (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	13—The Eastern Cowboy (W. Com.)	1000
Nov.	16—The Way of the West (Com.)	1000
Nov.	20—The Test (Dr.)	1000
Nov.	23—The Master of the Vineyard
Nov.	27—Jolly Bill of the Rollicking R
Nov.	30—The Sheriff's Sisters

CHAMPION

Oct.	23—The Copperhead	950
Oct.	25—Law or the Lady	950
Oct.	30—Field Day Sports at Ft. Riley, Kansas	950
Nov.	1—The Cowboy's Pies	950
Nov.	6—Folks of Old Virginia	950
Nov.	8—The Moonshiner's Trail	950
Nov.	13—The Redemption of a Coward	950
Nov.	15—The Passing of Sal	950
Nov.	20—National Guardsmen and Regulars at Fort Riley, Kansas (Top.)	950
Nov.	22—When the Sheriff Got His Man (Dr.)	950
Nov.	27—The Mother Goose Series (1st Reel)	950
Nov.	29—The Two Browns	950

COMET

Nov.	20—Office Boy's Dream
Nov.	24—The Diamond Locket

ECLAIR

Oct.	16—Lake Garda (Scenic)	185
Oct.	23—Youth! Queen of Hearts" (Com.)	740
Oct.	23—Percy Gets Tired of the Theater (Com.)	260
Oct.	30—A Father's Heart (Dr.)	920
Nov.	6—Willie Challenges Jim Jackson (Com.)
Nov.	6—Life Under the Sea (Educational)
Nov.	13—The Legend of the Eagle (Dr.)	925
Nov.	21—Hands Across the Sea
Nov.	23—Portuguese Centaurs (Mil.)	600
Nov.	23—The Automatic Lighter (Com.)	400
Nov.	28—Miss Masquerader (Com.)	1000
Nov.	30—The Five Daughters of Mr. Durand (Com.)
Nov.	30—Gussy's Congratulations (Com.)

GREAT NORTHERN

Aug.	26—A Traitor to His Country (Dr.)
Sept.	2—The Foundling (Dr.)
Sept.	9—A Dream with a Lesson
Sept.	16—The Conspirators (Dr.)
Sept.	23—Caught in His Own Net (Dr.)
Sept.	30—The Conspirators (Dr.)
Oct.	7—The White Tulip (Com.)
Oct.	7—Barcelona (Scenic)
Oct.	14—Secret of the Underground Passage (Dr.)
Oct.	21—His Fidelity Investigated (Com.)
Oct.	28—The Vicissitudes of Fate (Dr.)
Nov.	4—The Actor as Soldier (Com.)
Nov.	11—A Woman's Wit (Com.)
Nov.	18—A Rendezvous in Hyde Park (Com. Dr.)
Nov.	18—High Scotland (Scenic)

IMP

Independent Moving Picture Co. of America.

Sept.	14—The Brothers (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	18—The Bicycle Bug's Dream
Sept.	21—By Registered Mail
Sept.	25—The Co-Ed. Professor (Com.)	750
Sept.	25—Through the Dells of the Wisconsin in a Motor Boat (Sc.)	250
Sept.	28—'Tween Two Loves (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	2—The Rose's Story (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	5—Through the Air (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	9—The Sentinel Asleep
Oct.	12—The Better Way
Oct.	16—Uncle Pete's Ruse
Oct.	19—The Aggressor
Oct.	23—The Biting Business
Oct.	26—The Waif
Oct.	30—His Dress Shirt
Oct.	30—A Few Minutes with Steeplejack Lindholm
Nov.	2—King, the Detective
Nov.	6—Waiting at the Church (Com.)	1000
Nov.	9—The Wife's Awakening (Dr.)	1000
Nov.	13—The Fallin' Out
Nov.	16—Breaking the Seventh Commandment
Nov.	20—From the Bottom of the Sea
Nov.	23—Executive Clemency
Nov.	27—Uncle's Visit
Nov.	30—Over the Hills

ITALA

Aug.	19—Foolshead—Manikin
Aug.	19—The Blunt Sword
Aug.	24—Modern School of Italian Cavalry
Aug.	26—Foolshead—Chauffeur
Aug.	26—For a Straw
Sept.	2—Clio and Phyletes
Sept.	7—The Infinitive Ways of Providence (Dr.)
Sept.	9—Foolshead Hypnotizer (Com.)
Sept.	9—Toto Has a Purse
Sept.	16—The Horse of the Regiment (Com.)
Sept.	16—Foolshead Charges Himself with Removal (Com.)
Sept.	23—The Mask of the Red Death
Sept.	23—The Hornet
Oct.	7—Foolshead a Model Guest
Oct.	21—Foolshead Quarrels With His Sweetheart
Oct.	28—Toto and the Dummy (Com.)
Oct.	28—The Rearing of Pheasants (Dr.)
Nov.	4—Foolshead's Holiday (Com.)
Nov.	11—A Woman's Wit (Com.)
Nov.	11—A Victim of Competition
Nov.	28—Second Dr. Crippen

LUX

By Prieur.

Oct.	6—Bill Has a Bath (Com.)	452
Oct.	6—Neighbors (Com.)	488
Oct.	13—A Dog in a Coiner's Den (Dr.)	593
Oct.	13—Bill, Police Cyclist (Com.)	390
Oct.	20—Bill Pays His Debts (Com.)	442
Oct.	20—Henpecked Bertie Goes Fishing (Com.)	514
Oct.	27—Bill, His Wife and the Water (Com.)	455
Oct.	27—Bertie and His Rivals (Com.)	472
Nov.	3—Bill and the Bear (Com.)	554
Nov.	3—Tommy's Camera (Com.)	393
Nov.	10—Bill Taken for a Ghost (Com.)	426
Nov.	10—The Diversions of a Nursemaid (Com.)	495
Nov.	17—Saas Grund, a Village in the Alps (Sc.)	295
Nov.	17—The Mystery of Beaufort Grange (Dr.)	695
Nov.	24—Bill and Bertie Get Married (Com.)	325
Nov.	24—A Passing Cloud (Dr.)	658

MAJESTIC

Nov.	26—The Courting of Mary (Com.)
Dec.	3—Love Heeds not Showers (Com.)
Dec.	10—The Ultimate End (Dr.)
Dec.	17—Little Red Driving Hood

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Oct.	18—The Town Marshal (Com. Dr.)
Oct.	21—Mutt and Jeff Join the Opera Co.
Oct.	21—The Blessed Baby (Com.)
Oct.	25—Lone Bill's Last Ride (Dr.)
Oct.	28—Mutt and Jeff Discover a Wonderful Remedy (Com.)
Oct.	28—Dippy Advertises for a Pup (Com.)
Nov.	1—Big Noise Hank (W. Com.)
Nov.	4—Mutt and Jeff and the Lady Stenographer (Com.)
Nov.	4—The Suit Case Mystery (Com.)
Nov.	8—A True Westerner (Dr.)
Nov.	11—Desperate Desmond Almost Succeeds
Nov.	18—Mutt and Jeff and the Unlucky Stars (Com.)
Nov.	15—The White Medicine Man (Dr.)
Nov.	18—That Kid from the East (Com.)
Nov.	20—His Vacation
Nov.	22—The Cowboy Pugilist (W. Dr.)
Nov.	25—Desperate Desmond Pursued by Claude Eclaire (Com. Dr.)

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

("Bison")

Oct.	6—Range Justice
Oct.	10—The Pioneer's Mistake
Oct.	13—The Indian Rustlers
Oct.	17—A Western Bride
Oct.	20—A Warrior's Treachery
Oct.	24—A Noble Red Man
Oct.	27—An Indian Hero
Oct.	31—The Cattlemen's War
Nov.	3—A Young Squaw's Bravery
Nov.	7—A Race for a Bride
Nov.	10—Wenona's Broken Promise
Nov.	14—The Winning of Wonega
Nov.	17—The Ranchman's Mother-in-Law (Com. Dr.)
Nov.	21—The Broken Trap
Nov.	24—White Fawn's Escape
Nov.	24—A Bad Man

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

		Feet
Oct.	3—A Matrimonial Idyl (Dr.)
Oct.	7—The Branded Indian (Dr.)
Oct.	10—Large Lakes of Italy (Scenic)	285
Oct.	10—Thou Shalt Not Steal (Com.)	700
Oct.	14—Running Fawn's Chief (Dr.)	990
Oct.	17—Yarn of a Baby's Shirt (Com.)
Oct.	17—First Mail by Aeroplane (Topical)
Oct.	17—Headline Acrobats (Com.)
Oct.	21—The Awakening of John Clark (Dr.)
Oct.	24—John Baxter's Ward (Dr.)
Oct.	24—The Little Brown Calf (Dr.)
Oct.	28—The Revenue Officer's Last Case (Dr.)
Oct.	31—Apples and Destiny (Com.)
Oct.	31—The Progressive Book Agent (Com.)
Nov.	4—The Pride of the West (Dr.)
Nov.	7—Mobilization of the American Fleet
Nov.	11—For the Tribe (Dr.)
Nov.	14—When First We Met (Dr.)
Nov.	14—The Tell-Tale Parasol (Com.)
Nov.	18—The Old Leader (Dr.)
Nov.	21—Rivals (Com.)
Nov.	21—Views of Montserrat, Italy (Sc.)
Nov.	25—Jug o' Rum (Dr.)

RELIANCE

Nov.	1—A Mix-up in Suitcases
Nov.	4—The Greater Love
Nov.	8—Marriage
Nov.	11—The Track Walker
Nov.	15—The Moonshiners
Nov.	18—The Injustice of Man
Nov.	22—Helpless Man
Nov.	25—A Daughter of Italy
Nov.	29—Happy Thanksgiving

REX

Sept.	21—The Rose and the Dagger (Dr.)
Sept.	28—The Derelict (Dr.)
Oct.	5—Lost Illusions (Dr.)
Oct.	12—Chasing a Rainbow
Oct.	19—Her Sister
Oct.	26—A Breach of Faith (Dr.)
Nov.	2—The Tale of a Cat
Nov.	9—Saints and Sinners
Nov.	16—The Return

SOLAX COMPANY

Oct.	20—His Better Self (Mil. Dr.)
Oct.	25—Percy and His Squaw (Com.)
Oct.	27—For Big Brother's Sake (Dr.)
Nov.	1—Following Cousin's Footsteps (Com.)
Nov.	3—A Heroine of the Revolution (Dr.)
Nov.	8—An Interrupted Elopement (Com.)
Nov.	10—Grandmother Love (Dr.)
Nov.	15—Baby Needs Medicine (Com.)
Nov.	17—Only a Squaw (Dr.)
Nov.	22—Husbands Wanted (Com.)
Nov.	24—The Will of Provideuce (Com. Dr.)

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Aug.	29—The Moth
Sept.	1—Romeo and Juliet, Part I
Sept.	5—Count Ivan and the Waitress
Sept.	8—Romeo and Juliet, Part 2
Sept.	12—The Buddhist Priestess (Dr.)
Sept.	15—In the Chorus (Dr.)
Sept.	19—The Lie (Dr.)
Sept.	22—The Honeymooners (Dr.)
Sept.	26—Lochinvar (Dr.)
Sept.	29—Love's Sacrifice (Dr.)
Oct.	3—The Five Rose Sisters (Dr.)
Oct.	6—The East and the West (Dr.)
Oct.	9—The Higher Law (Dr.)
Oct.	13—The Tempter and Dan Cupid (Dr.)
Oct.	17—The Early Life of David Copperfield
Oct.	24—Little Em'ly and David Copperfield
Oct.	31—The Loves of David Copperfield
Oct.	20—The Satyr and the Lady (Dr.)
Oct.	27—The Jewels of Allah (Dr.)
Nov.	3—Their Burglar
Nov.	7—The Missing Heir (Dr.)
Nov.	10—The Last of the Mohicans (Dr.)
Nov.	14—The Higher—the Fewer (Com.)
Nov.	17—A Mother's Faith (Dr.)

YANKEE FILM COMPANY

Sept.	8—Mesmerizing Moe (Com.)
Sept.	8—Faded Roses (Dr.)
Sept.	11—Tangled Heartstrings
Sept.	15—Woman
Sept.	18—The Star Reporter
Sept.	22—The Girl and the Chauffeur (Dr.)
Sept.	25—For the Wearing of the Green (Dr.)
Sept.	29—Man (Dr.)
Oct.	2—She Never Knew (Dr.)
Oct.	6—The Goose Girl (Dr.)
Oct.	9—His Second Wife
Oct.	13—Society Hobos
Oct.	16—The Lost Handkerchief (Com.)
Oct.	20—The Man Who Came Back (Dr.)
Oct.	23—The Drummer Boy of Shiloh (Dr.)
Oct.	27—Flower of the Forest (Dr.)
Oct.	30—The Van Osten Jewels (Dr.)
Nov.	3—At Daisy Farm (Dr.)
Nov.	6—A Coward's Regeneration (Dr.)
Nov.	10—He Didn't Like the Tune (Com.)
Nov.	13—Into the Light (Dr.)
Nov.	17—The Two Rooms (Dr.)

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

	Feet
Sept. 28—Her Awakening (Dr.)	997
Oct. 2—Too Many Burglars (Com.)	499
Oct. 2—Mr. Bragg, a Fugitive (Com.)	497
Oct. 5—The Making of a Man (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 9—Italian Blood (Dr.)	999
Oct. 12—Trailing the Counterfeiter (Com.)	529
Oct. 12—Josh's Suicide (Com.)	469
Oct. 16—The Unveiling (Dr.)	998
Oct. 19—The Adventures of Billy (Dr.)	999
Oct. 23—Through His Wife's Picture (Com.)	530
Oct. 23—The Inventor's Secret (Com.)	468
Oct. 26—The Long Road (Dr.)	999
Oct 30—Love in the Hills (Dr.)	998
Nov. 2—A Victim of Circumstances (Com.)	382
Nov. 2—Their First Divorce Case (Com.)	616
Nov. 6—The Battle (Dr.)	1084
Nov. 9—The Trail of Books (Dr.)	994
Nov. 13—Dooley's Scheme (Com.)	530
Nov. 13—Won Through a Medium (Com.)	467
Nov. 16—Through Darkened Vales (Dr.)	990
Nov. 20—The Miser's Heart (Dr.)
Nov. 23—Resourceful Lovers (Com. Dr.)
Nov. 23—Her Mother Interferes (Com.)

EDISON

Oct. 25—The Fairies' Banquet (Com.)	400
Oct. 25—How the Telephone Came to Town (Com.)	600
Oct. 28—An Island Comedy (Com.)	1000
Oct. 28—The Kid from the Klondyke (Com.)	1000
Oct. 31—The Reform Candidate (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 1—The Rise and Fall of Weary Willie (Com.)	1000
Nov. 3—The Girl and the Motor Boat (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 4—Love and Hatred (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 7—A Modern Cinderella (Com.)	1000
Nov. 8—Logan's Babies (Com.)	1000
Nov. 10—The Black Arrow (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 11—Willie Wise and His Motor Boat (Com.)	650
Nov. 11—Icebergs Off the Coast of Labrador	340
Nov. 14—Ludwig from Germany (Com.)	1000
Nov. 15—The Living Peach (Com.)	600
Nov. 15—The Young Men's Christian Association	400
Nov. 17—The Ghost's Warning (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 18—The Story of the Indian Ledge (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 21—Life in the United States Army	1000
Nov. 22—The Bosun's Watch (Com.)	1000
Nov. 24—Home (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 25—A Perilous Ride (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 28—The Lure of the City (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 29—The Troubles of a Butler (Com.)	1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Oct. 27—Pals (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 28—The Forester's Plea (W. Dr.)
Oct. 31—Outwitting Papa (Com.)	1000
Nov. 2—The Right John Smith (Com.)	364
Nov. 2—Hi Feather at the Fair (Com.)	636
Nov. 3—Bill Bumper's Bargain (Com.)	1000
Nov. 4—The Outlaw Deputy (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 7—He Fought for the U. S. A. (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 9—Showing Uncle (Com.)	400
Nov. 9—Gee Whiz (Com.)	600
Nov. 10—The Empty Saddle (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 11—The Girl Back East (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 14—Hubby's Scheme (Com.)	1000
Nov. 16—President Taft at San Francisco	1000
Nov. 17—The Point of View (Com.)
Nov. 17—Excess Baggage (Com.)	1000
Nov. 18—The Cattle Rustler's Father (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 21—Too Much Turkey (Com.)	1000
Nov. 23—Old Fidelity (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 24—At the Stroke of Twelve (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 25—The Desert Claim (W. Dr.)	1000

GAUMONT
G. Kleine

Oct. 3—Ajaccio, the Birthplace of Napoleon (Trav.	325
Oct. 7—The Upward Way (Dr.)	726
Oct. 7—Cintra, a Picturesque Town of Portugal	269
Oct. 10—The Missing Bracelet (Dr.)	1150
Oct. 14—Rejected (Dr.)	845
Oct. 14—Pansies (Botanical)	155
Oct. 17—Done Brown (Com.)	837
Oct. 17—A Fairyland of Frost and Snow (Scenic)	163
Oct. 21—The Masked Huntsman (Dr.)	784
Oct. 21—Opening Flowers (Botanical)	216
Oct. 24—Jimmie in Love (Com.)	555
Oct. 24—The Ostrich Plume Industry, France (Ind.)	428
Oct. 28—Fridolin	578
Oct. 28—The Principality of Monaco	400
Oct. 31—The Widower	1020
Nov. 4—The Jesting Princess (Com. Dr.)	787
Nov. 4—Belgian Cavalry at Exercise (Mil.)	200
Nov. 7—The Vagabond (Dr.)	623
Nov. 7—A Trip on a Dirigible Balloon (Topical)	331
Nov. 11—The Hour of Execution (Dr.)	787
Nov. 11—Manresa, a Spanish Town (Travel)	200
Nov. 14—Jimmie and His Country Uncle (Com.)	820
Nov. 14—The Outskirts of Paris (Scenic)	164
Nov. 18—The Reckoning (Dr.)	875
Nov. 18—A Trip to Saxony	150
Nov. 21—The Sealed Confession (Dr.)	900
Nov. 21—A Stone Quarry in Saxony	75

	Feet
Nov. 25—The Escape from the Dungeon (Dr.)	825
Nov. 25—Cave Homes in the Canary Isles	180
Nov. 28—A Busy Cupid	758
Nov. 28—Review of the Austrian Army	232
Dec. 2—The Promoter (Dr.)	1140

KALEM CO.

Oct. 11—For the Flag of France (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 13—The Smugglers (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 16—The Colleen Bawn (3 reels)	3000
Oct. 18—Daniel Boone's Bravery (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 20—The Mesquite's Gratitude (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 23—A Prisoner of Mexico (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 25—The Lost Freight Car (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 27—The Peril of the Plains (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 30—For Her Brother's Sake (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 1—The Greatest of Engineering Feats.
Nov. 1—The Plot Against Bertie (Com.)
Nov. 3—The Price of Ambition (Dr.)
Nov. 6—The Luck of Reckless Reddy (Com.)	1000
Nov. 8—White Brave's Heritage (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 10—The Engineer's Daughter (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 13—When California Was Won (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 15—The Desert Well (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 17—The Fishermaid of Ballydavid (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 20—Dan, the Lighthouse Keeper (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 22—How Texas Got Left (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 24—The Temptation of Rodney Vane (Dr.)	1000

LUBIN

Oct. 21—Her Exclusive Hat (Com.)
Oct. 21—Willie's Conscience (Com.)	1000
Oct. 23—The Scandal Mongers (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 25—The Tars Ashore (Com.)	1000
Oct. 26—A Rural Conqueror (Com.)	1000
Oct. 28—Love's Victory (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 30—Somebody's Mother (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 1—A Gay Time in Atlantic City (Com.)	1000
Nov. 2—One on Reno (Com. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 4—The Mexican (Com.)	1000
Nov. 6—Aunt Jane's Legacy (Com.)	1000
Nov. 8—Who Owns the Baby (Com.)	1000
Nov. 9—Jack's Umbrella (Com.)	1000
Nov. 11—The House that Jack Built (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 13—His Chorus Girl Wife (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 15—Some Mother-in-Law (Com.)	1000
Nov. 16—A Newsboy's Luck (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 18—A Romance of the '60s (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 20—My Brother Agostino (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 22—The Ranchman's Daughter (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 23—A Blind Deception (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 25—His Brother's Double (Com.)	1000

G. MELIES.

Sept. 21—$200.00 (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 28—The Mission Waif (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 5—The Stolen Grey (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 12—Tommy's Rocking Horse (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 19—The Cross of Pearls (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 26—The Gypsy Bride (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 2—Right or Wrong (Dr.)	360
Nov. 2—Mexican as It Is Spoken (Com.)	590
Nov. 9—The Spur of Necessity (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 16—The Miser Miner (Com. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 23—An Oil Country Romance (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 30—The Reason Why (Com.)	1000

PATHE FRERES

Oct. 13—Raffles Caught (Dr.)
Oct. 13—Guerrero Troup
Oct. 14—Marooned (Dr.)
Oct. 16—The Gambler's Dream (Dr.)
Oct. 17—Pathe's Weekly No. 42
Oct. 18—The Ranch Girl's Terrible Mistake (Dr.)
Oct. 19—The Renegade Brother (Dr.)
Oct. 20—A Trip Down the Magdapis River (Scenic)
Oct. 20—Eva Moves In (Com.)
Oct. 20—Up the Flue (Com.)
Oct. 21—A Puritan Courtship (Dr.)
Oct. 23—The Traitor (Dr.)
Oct. 23—Nomadic Tribes in El Kantara Gorges (Algeria) (Sc.)
Oct. 24—Pathe's Weekly No. 43
Oct. 25—Revolution in a Bachelor's Club (Com.)
Oct. 26—In Frontier Days (Dr.)
Oct. 26—The Island of St. Kilda, Scotland (Sc.)
Oct. 27—Mother is Strong on Hypnotism (Com.)
Oct. 27—Funeral in Annam (Sc.)
Oct. 27—Logging and Milling in Sweden (Sc.)
Oct. 28—Saved by the Flag (Dr.)
Oct. 30—Grandfather's Violin (Dr.)	754
Oct. 30—A Burlesque Bullfight (Com.)	210
Nov. 1—Love Moulds Labor (Dr.)	941
Nov. 2—A Sioux Lover's Strategy	899
Nov. 3—An Episode Under Henri III	968
Nov. 4—The Coward (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 6—Pathe's Weekly (No. 45)
Nov. 7—Uncle's Money (Com.)	321
Nov. 8—The Story of the Typewriter	960
Nov. 10—The Bandit's Bride (Dr.)	236
Nov. 20—Pathe's Weekly
Nov. 21—Cain and Abel
Nov. 21—A Grouch Cure (Com.)
Nov. 22—A Pinch of Snuff (Com.)
Nov. 22—The Bari Tribe (Sc.)
Nov. 23—Cowboy Life
Nov. 23—The Kioday Equilibrists
Nov. 24—Two Daughters of Havana (Dr.)
Nov. 24—Comic New Year Games in Singapore
Nov. 25—The Lost Necklace (Dr.)

SELIG

Oct. 20—His Better Self (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 23—Coals of Fire (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 24—Why the Sheriff is a Bachelor (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 26—Lost in the Jungle	1070
Oct. 27—A Painter's Idyl	1000
Oct. 30—Little Injin (Dr. Com.)	1000
Oct. 31—Captain Brand's Wife	1000
Nov. 2—The Inner Mind	1000
Nov. 3—His First Long Trousers (Com.)	500
Nov. 6—The Coquette	1000
Nov. 7—Western Hearts (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 9—Old Billy	1000
Nov. 10—Lieutenant Grey	1000
Nov. 13—In the Days of Gold (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 14—The Bootlegger (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 16—The New Superintendent (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 17—A Spanish Wooing (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 20—The Convert of San Clemente (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 21—The Night Herder (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 23—Blackbeard (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 24—Getting Married (Com.)	750
Nov. 24—In Japan (Edu.)	250

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

July 19—The Tie That Binds (Dr.)	760
July 19—A Round-Up In Chili	240
July 26—An Amateur Skater	440
July 26—Satan on a Rampage	660
Aug. 2—The Struggle for Life	650
Aug. 2—On the Coast of Bengal	326
Aug. 9—The Heiress	705
Aug. 9—Lyons, the Second City of France	295
Aug. 16—For the Honor of the Name (Dr.)	790
Aug. 16—Moss-Covered Ruins on the Isle of Wight	245
Aug. 23—Condemned for Treason (Dr.)	845
Aug. 23—Wool Industry of Hungary	135
Aug. 30—A King for an Hour (Com.)	572
Aug. 30—Sights of Berlin	423
Sept. 6—Clever Beyond Her Years (Dr.)	675
Sept. 6—Lake Thun in Switzerland (Scenic)	325
Sept. 13—The Hand of the Law (Dr.)	665
Sept. 13—Norwich and Vicinity, England (Travel)	330
Sept. 20—In Ancient Days (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 27—The Trials of a Tall Traveler (Com.)	458
Sept. 27—Manufacturing Fireworks (Ind.)	542
Oct. 4—A Jealous Wife (Com.)	338
Oct. 4—The Grand Chartreuse (Trav.)	292
Oct. 4—Ezra and the Fortune Teller (Com.)	348
Oct. 11—Pardoned by the Governor (Dr.)	646
Oct. 11—Making Cheddar Cheese (Ind.)	342
Oct. 18—Ordered to Move On (Dr.)	605
Oct. 18—Madeira, Portugal (Travel)	385
Oct. 25—A Woman's Slave (Dr.)	950
Nov. 1—Trapped (Dr.)	975
Nov. 8—An Eye for an Eye (His. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 15—The Hindu Jewel Mystery (Dr.)	1015
Nov. 22—Guy Fawkes (Dr.)	1010
Nov. 29—The Mysterious Stranger (Dr.)	610
Nov. 29—Salt Industry in Sicily	372

VITAGRAPH

Sept. 26—His Sister's Children	1000
Sept. 27—A Western Heroine	1000
Sept. 29—The Ninety and Nine	1000
Sept. 30—Her Hero	1000
Oct. 2—Our Navy	1000
Oct. 3—The Wager (Com.)	1000
Oct. 4—The Mate of the John M. (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 6—Carr's Regeneration (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 7—Ups and Downs (Com.)	1000
Oct. 9—Daddy's Boy and Mammy	1000
Oct. 10—The Missing Will	1000
Oct. 11—The Indian Flute	1000
Oct. 13—Answer of the Roses	1000
Oct. 14—By Way of Mrs. Browning	1000
Oct. 16—The Fighting Schoolmaster	1000
Oct. 17—Vitagraph Monthly	1000
Oct. 18—Selecting His Heiress (Com.)	1000
Oct. 20—The Cabin Boy (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 21—Lady Godiva (His. Dr.)	1000
Oct. 23—The Foolishness of Jealousy	1000
Oct. 24—Wig Wag	1000
Oct. 25—Aunt Huldah, the Matchmaker	1000
Oct. 27—Kitty and the Cowboys	1000
Oct. 28—Regeneration	1000
Oct. 30—Captain Barnacle, Diplomat	1000
Oct. 31—Madge of the Mountains	1000
Nov. 1—Southern Soldier's Sacrifice (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 3—The Gossip (Com.)	1000
Nov. 4—A Message from Beyond (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 7—Auld Lang Syne (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 8—Arbutus (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 10—Who's Who (Com.)	1000
Nov 11—An Aeroplane Elopement (Com. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 13—Suffer Little Children (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 14—The Girl and the Sheriff (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 15—Their Charming Mamma (Com. Dr.)	1000
Nov. 17—The Little Spy (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 18—Vitagraph Monthly of Current Events	1000
Nov. 20—Heroes of the Mutiny (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 21—Wistaria (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 22—The Half-Breed's Daughter (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 24—An Innocent Burglar (Com.)	1000
Nov. 25—The Life Boat (Dr.)	1000

Here's Your Baby!

With a grin like a Cheshire cat—a grin born of pure joy, eagerness and enthusiasm—we announce His Royal Implets, the "Saturday Split Imp." Heavens! How we've waited for this moment, planned, schemed, worked! How we've asked your help and how you've given it! You all said "Give us Comedy, Comedy, Comedy—and split reels every Saturday." So we've done what you ordered. And that's why we say it's YOUR baby, this third Imp! Treat him well as long as he's good. BUT if he misbehaves—kick him out! Our first "Baby Imp" comes on SATURDAY, DECEMBER SECOND, and is named

"THE MASHER"

(Copyright, 1911, by I. M. P. Co.)

About 650 feet long—and every foot a screaming comedy! Read the synopsis elsewhere and then please, please, please whisper to your exchange QUICK! We're going to set you wild with enthusiasm over our "Saturday Splits." A special company has been engaged to work on these and nothing else! First release Saturday, Dec. 2. Remember!

"BILL" TAFT ON THE SAME REEL!

We caught President Taft and a whole lot of notables dedicating the wonderful new Naval Training Station near Chicago. Had the exclusive picture rights from the United States Government. Good enough for a whole reel but we could use only 350 feet of it.

"Uncle's Visit"

(Copyright, 1911, I. M. P. Co.)

A rapid-fire COMEDY. You'll wish it was twice as long. Released MONDAY, Nov. 27th. Will you go after it as hard as you can?

WANTED!

First-class negatives, ideas, plots, scenarios—anything that will add to the lustre of the Imp's name and fame. Will pay best prices.

WE ASK EVERY IMP EXHIBITOR to wire his exchange immediately for a booking on our wonderful 2,000-foot educational drama "FROM THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA," released Monday, Nov. 20th. Don't wait to see it. Take our word that it is a magnificent film. Meet your exchange half way by offering to pay extra for it. As great a drawing card as the famous "Fall of Troy" and similar features. Made through the courtesy and co-operation of the United States Government. Feature it BIG, BIG, BIG!

"Over the Hills"

(Copyright, 1911, I. M. P. Co.)

One of the best mining dramas we've ever produced. Released THURSDAY, Nov. 30th. Tell your exchange you won't be happy till you get it!

WANTED!

The name and address of every exhibitor not on our regular weekly mailing list. Important matter being sent out weekly. Big news coming!

IMP FILMS COMPANY

102 W. 101ST STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y. CARL LAEMMLE, PRESIDENT.

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

Solax

WHY SOME EXCHANGES
ARE INCREASING THEIR BUSINESS

By watching each manufacturer's product from week to week and picking out the BEST. SOLAX pictures are NOW the best on the market.

DO YOU KNOW THIS?

SOME EXCHANGES have been quick to appreciate this and placed their orders—while others do not see what they buy and rely on the old system of waiting until their customers become dissatisfied, before waking up. Often a customer doesn't kick, but quietly goes elsewhere.

PUT IT ANY WAY YOU LIKE, if a man does not LOOK at what he buys. he is not getting the MOST out of his investment.

LOOK AT OUR RELEASES, ALSO LOOK FOR OUR THIRD RELEASE—MONDAY, DEC. 18th

3--A WEEK--3

RELEASES

- NOVEMBER 22d—"HUSBANDS WANTED"—Comedy
- " 24th—"THE WILL OF PROVIDENCE"—Drama
- " 29th—"A TROUBLESOME PICTURE" } Split Reel
- " "LIFE ON BOARD A BATTLESHIP" } Comedy
- DECEMBER 1st—"A REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE"—Military

Solax Company

CONGRESS AVENUE
FLUSHING, L. I.

REMEMBER—ALL OUR FILMS ARE TINTED AND TONED
Sold exclusively through M. P. D. & S. Co.

ANNOUNCEMENT No. 6

READ WHAT IS SAID ABOUT THE

Simplex

THE PEER OF ALL

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Galveston, Texas, Tribune, Friday, Sept. 29, 1911.

"The Hulsey series of moving picture theaters of Galveston has shown its intention of co-operating with the city in every possible means to insure against the arising or spreading of fire by procuring eight "fool and fireproof" picture machines. They are the first of their kind in the South. The only danger, practically, that can befall a moving picture theater is a film fire, and the fact that the same is shown from the rear of the theater is a constant source of danger. With the Simplex machines, two of which are being installed in each of the Hulsey theaters, this is impossible even through carelessness of the operator."

"Another feature with this latest innovation in the moving picture world is the arrangement of the shutter, which is so connected with the machine as to almost wholly obviate the eye worry, so often met in moving picture theaters."

Denver, Colo., Oct. 6, 1911.

SIMPLEX SALES AGENCY, 23 E. 14th Street, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—We requested the Chief of the Fire Department of Denver to send a representative to this office to inspect the Simplex machine. He complied with our request, and the examiner reported to the Chief that the Simplex machine was the ideal device for projecting motion pictures. Fire Chief Owens stated that he would recommend to the City Council that the various picture shows in Denver adopt this machine. We have been advised by the Chief's representatives that he would request the Insurance Company officials to call at this office and pass their opinion on the Simplex as a safety, fireproof machine.

Yours truly,
WM. H. SWANSON FILM CO.,
By H. T. Nolan, Manager, 145 W. 45th Street, New York.

PRECISION MACHINE CO. SALES AGENCY, 23 E. 14th Street, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—The Simplex machine was inspected by the Canadian authorities, and they pronounced it absolutely fireproof. They stated that on account of the fireproof construction of the machine they may recommend that the booth be dispensed with entirely, and that the machine be installed on a platform so that the operator will be in full view of the audience at all times, and any one can see whether he is violating any fire regulations.

Yours truly,
E. H. MOZART, Monopole Film Company.

"Just the machine this department has been looking for."
N. Y. City Official Inspector, Bureau Water, Gas and Electricity.

SIMPLEX OFFICE, 23 E. 14th Street, New York City.

Gentlemen:—Since we first exploited the moving picture as an amusement attraction sixteen years ago, at the Eden Musee, we have used many projecting machines. Money has been no object to procure the best results, and, as a consequence, we have the reputation of showing the clearest, steadiest and most satisfactory pictures in the country. The new "Simplex Projector," the first one of which was operated here, and has been steadily used for the last three months, is undoubtedly the best machine we have ever operated.

EDEN MUSEE AMERICAN CO.,
E. J. Crane, Manager.

SIMPLEX SALES AGENCY, 23 E. 14th Street, New York City.

Gentlemen:—We have just installed one of your "Simplex" Projecting machines, choosing it after an exhaustive examination of all other makes. For absolute perfection and precision, coupled with extreme simplicity, it is everything that can be desired—a fact when TESTING films to determine the accuracy of perforation and printing machines of the UTMOST importance.

Yours truly,
THE "REX" MOTION PICTURE MFG. CO.,
573 Eleventh Ave., New York.

New York, Boro of Brooklyn, Oct. 3, 1911.

MANHATTAN SLIDE CO., 124 E. 14th Street, New York City.

Gentlemen:—The "Simplex" Moving Picture Machine that I bought through you is undoubtedly the best projector we have ever had in Prospect Hall. After using the other machines, I cheerfully state that the "Simplex" is decidedly the best and gives us entire satisfaction.

Yours very truly,
WM. D. KOLLE, Prop.

NO MORE TROUBLE WITH THE DEPARTMENTS IF YOU USE THE SIMPLEX

Sales Agency, 23 E. 14th St., New York

DEC 9 1911

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

Volume IV
No. 47

November 25
1911

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DEC 9 1911

PRICE
TEN CENTS

Scene from
"Gathering of the Council of the Six Nations"
REPUBLIC FILM CO. Release of Dec. 16th

Will You Let Them ALL In If They Promise to be GOOD!

Great Scot! Why SHOULDN'T we break our necks, if necessary, to make good pictures? The encouragement you've given us in the past few weeks is wonderful. Orders from exchanges for our 2,000-foot submarine picture (released Monday, November 20) have shattered all records for films made in America. And the orders for our regular "Saturday Split Imp" are beginning to pile in already! Thousands of exhibitors have written us, saying they'll be glad to get three Imps every week, and will feature them as long as they are good. How about YOU? Three Imps are knocking at YOUR door. Will YOU let them ALL in if they promise to be GOOD? Answer!

"THE DUMB MESSENGER"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Films Co.)

A cleverly concocted story of a gentleman burglar, a wealthy woman and a crooked butler. Staged and enacted in the Imp's best manner. Released Monday, Dec. 4th. Do you suppose you'll get it?

"TONY AND THE STORK"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Films Co.)

Your favorite King Baggott assumes the rôle of "Tony," and helps put over one of the most delightful little stories we've ever sprung. Released Thursday, Dec. 7th. Do you suppose you'll get it?

"OUR SATURDAY SPLIT!"

(RELEASED SATURDAY, DEC. 9)

The first 600 feet are devoted to "Her Birthday" (copyright, 1911), the kind of comedy that has helped build up the Imp to its unquestioned leadership. The other 400 feet are devoted to remarkably interesting views of the Interscholastic Cross Country Road Run held Saturday, November 18th, under the auspices of Columbia University. The two together form The Ideal Split Reel, the kind you have been clamoring for. Do you suppose you'll get it?

IMP FILMS COMPANY

102 West 101st Street, New York, N. Y.

Carl Laemmle, Pres.

CHRISTMAS HINT!—Why not give away a lot of those clever Imp A. B. C. Books to your patrons at Christmas time? Will make a hit, and won't cost enough to talk about. Write at once for reduced price proposition!

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

The MAJESTIC

¶ Will make its initial release to the moving picture public Sunday, Nov. 26th, and earnestly solicits intelligent criticism from discriminating exhibitors that it may improve its product, if improvement is necessary.

¶ THE MAJESTIC COMPANY again wishes to thank the exchanges for their increased orders, and to state that no effort whatever will be spared to make MAJESTIC PICTURES the best produced.

¶ THE MANAGEMENT is prepared to announce its date for the release of TWO MAJESTICS A WEEK, the moment the exhibitors place their stamp of approval upon its efforts to improve the quality of the Independent pictures.

¶ THE PRODUCTION of Majestic pictures is in the capable hands of OWEN MOORE and DAVID MILES, who are surrounded by a most carefully selected company—Little Mary Pickford, Mabel Trunnelle, Anita Hendrie, Amy Oliver, Edna Rogeta, Herbert Prior, George Loane Tucker, C. De Cordeba, Paul Scardon and Chas. Craig.

A Handsome Photo of Little Mary

¶ The most beautiful photograph ever taken of your favorite, Little Mary Pickford, will appear on the front cover of THE NEW YORK DRAMATIC MIRROR, December 5th. This photograph was taken by Bangs, of New York, and is a work of Art. We recommend to every exhibitor in the country that a liberal display of these pictures on the day Majestic Pictures are shown, will add greatly to the receipts.

We have been obliged to change the release dates of two of our subjects—transferring "THE ULTIMATE END" from December 10th to December 24th, and substituting "KEEPING MABEL HOME," a high class comedy, for December 10th

FIRST RELEASE—Nov. 26th, "THE COURTING OF MARY"—High Class Comedy.
SECOND " Dec. 3rd, "LOVE HEEDS NOT SHOWERS"—High Class Comedy.
THIRD " Dec 10th, "KEEPING MABEL HOME"—High Class Comedy.
FOURTH " Dec. 17th, "LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD"—Nursery Rhyme.
FIFTH " Dec. 24th, "THE ULTIMATE END"—Strong Drama.

THE MAJESTIC MOTION PICTURE CO.

TOM D. COCHRANE, General Manager

145 WEST 45th STREET NEW YORK CITY

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

LET US HELP DECORATE YOUR LOBBY FOR THE HOLIDAYS
—MAIL US THE COUPON IN THE LOWER LEFT-HAND CORNER

THE THANHOUSER

"GREATEST DECEMBER"

Say "THANHOUSER" to the Exchange Man NOW for

The LADY from the SEA
Ibsen Psychological Study
(Released Tuesday, Dec. 12)

CINDERELLA
Greatest Film Fairy Story
(Released Friday, Dec. 22)

"SHE"
Rider Haggard's Mystery Masterpiece in Two Gorgeous, Mystifying Reels
(Released Tuesday, Dec. 26. No. 2, following Tuesday)

THREE ONE-A-MONTH FEATURES RELEASED ALL IN ONE MONTH

AN ALL-COMEDY WEEK IN THE "GREATEST DECEMBER!"

RELEASED TUESDAY, DEC. 5—COMEDY!

The Newsy and the Tramp

became fast friends and the friendship was of mutual benefit. The tramp put forth a protecting hand in behalf of tbe newsboy, who needed it, and the newsboy reciprocated by joining his protector's hands with those of the prettiest, wittiest little schoolma'am in all the county. This tbe newsy largely brought about by introducing a new version of The Handwriting On the Wall! The version is given in a way that makes you laugh.

"THE NEWSY AND THE TRAMP"

RELEASED FRIDAY, DEC. 8—COMEDY!

Brother Bob's Baby

wants the milk bottle. Poor Billy Batch has to lay down a good band at the club to go and feed his brother's baby on a Pennsylvania Railroad train—wbile the mother, who has missed the train, frantically telegrapbs instructions on how bachelors should take care of children. Can you beat it? The brother does! He flees while the fleeing is good, and his gyrations entertain you mightily.

AN ALL-COMEDY WEEK IN THE "GREATEST DECEMBER!"

To Boost YOUR Business

We bunched our best and biggest features in one month and made possible our GREATEST

DECEMBER 12 (TUES.) LADY FROM SEA, (IBSEN)
22 (FRI.) CINDERELLA
26 (TUES.) "SHE"—2 Reels
(No. 2, Following Tuesday)

THANHOUSER CO., NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.:—Send me FREE Lobby Decorations for your "Greatest December" features. I am not getting "The Thanhouser News." I am

(NAME).....
(ADDRESS).....
(EXCHANGE).....

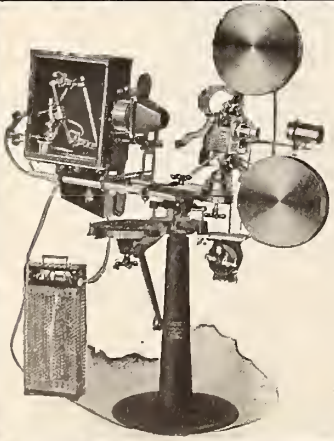
CLIP AND MAIL THIS DAY

THANHOUSER CO.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

Sales Company agents for U. S. and Canada.



A FULLY EQUIPPED 1912 MOTOR-DRIVEN MOTIOGRAPH FOR $268.50 UP

THE LATEST ADDITION TO THE MOTIOGRAPH LINE

A snappy, up to the minute, 1912 model machine, that for grace of design, perfection in construction, "and picture," cannot be equalled.

Naturally you wonder how we can give such astonishing value for the money. The reason is simple—we have been building machines for years. Have a splendidly equipped factory, and the wonderful success of the MOTIOGRAPH has done away with heavy experimental expense.

Dependable Service is what you are after, and every MOTIOGRAPH sold is our silent salesman. When you buy a MOTIOGRAPH and like it you tell your friends, and when they are in the market their decision is influenced by the wonderful results you have obtained.

We are always glad to demonstrate our line. Call at the factory and learn more about us and the MOTIOGRAPH.

Good MOTIOGRAPH operators: Get in touch with us.

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO., 564 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO

For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

© CLB249998

"The contents of this issue are copyrighted"

The Moving Picture News

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

Sole Agent and Correspondent for advertisements in Great Britain
B. Allan, 8 Sherwood St., Piccadilly Circus, W., London

Chicago Representative: Warner Kennedy.
844 Waveland Ave. 'Phone 3818 Lake View

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor.

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President; John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City.
ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Volume IV November 25, 1911 Number 47

THAT SMOKER AGAIN

WE wonder how many more times our columns are to put out the warning against the cigarette or cigar smoker in a film exchange. The Moving Picture News has been the only paper that has raised a warning voice against smoking. We have repeatedly called attention to exchangemen, operators, and proprietors on the folly of smoking around the unloading of films in an exchange. We have been in exchanges when operators have been changing their film, smoking a cigarette and have expressed our opinion pretty strongly in person to the men. If we could we would pass a law in every city of the land, making it a criminal offense for a smoker to be admitted into a film exchange. We would make it so stringent that any operator seen carrying a lighted cigarette alongside of his box of film, could be at once taken to prison without the option of a fine, and every proprietor of an exchange setting the bad example of smoking in his own film room we would jail and make it impossible for him to open an exchange again except under heavy bonds. It is a well-known saying that "familiarity breeds contempt," and so it seems to be the case with the film man. If it were not for the smoker we do not think there would be more than one or two fires in the whole year caused by cinematography.

We have been in manufactories where the films have been, or being, assembled, and have seen the directors and the managers and the office boy all smoking cigarettes together. We have been in assemblies of manufacturers where films were being examined and have noted the carelessness in which they reeled out foot after foot of film loosely onto a table on which stood or were laid three or four cigar ends, and have almost shivered in our boots at what might have happened, and all this in spite of warning after warning that has been given in these columns on the folly, the idiocy, or whatever term they like to apply to the act of smoking in the midst of films.

Our readers may ask what brings forth this indictment of the smoker at the present time. Our reason for this is that at their exchange, 19 East 21st street, on Sunday, November 19th, at 11.20 a.m., were foolish enough to allow one of these irresponsibles to start a fire for which there was absolutely no excuse, and which reflects a great deal of blame on General Flimco. It seems to be a regular thing at this exchange for smokers to be allowed full freedom, and it was a usual occurrence for operators after receiving their reels to place the same upon a table in the office and commence to unwind the film to examine them, letting the celluloid run loose in considerable quantities upon the floor, and while examining this film, smoking cigarettes, at the same time putting the cigarettes on the table, and even half burnt matches amongst the loose celluloid. This is just what occurred on Sunday, at the place we speak of, resulting in the damage of about 28 reels of film which the operators were examining, and a loss of something like $2,000 to the interior of the offices. The monetary loss entailed in the film and the damage to the offices is comparatively small compared to the damage in the eyes of the public, so again we raise a warning voice and ask that stringent rules concerning everybody in the film business should be made, to absolutely prohibit smoking everywhere, where films are being manufactured, examined or used in any way.

The General Film Company

WILD WEST PICTURES

QUITE an avalanche of letters and comments have come in to us this week in response to our editorial on the above subject in last week's issue, and not a single one has anything to say in favor of some of the Wild West pictures. One correspondent specially writes, "We think every exhibitor throughout the country ought to pass you a vote of thanks at their meetings for the action you have taken regarding these Wild West pictures. We hope you will continue the good work."

It was not, nor is it now, our intention to place every Wild West picture under the ban. There are a few that come up to wonderfully good power both in dramatic and photographic art. Our readers will be able to specialize these for themselves; in a recent report from Chicago we find that some ten Wild West pictures were refused in that city. This fact turers pause, and to ask themselves if they cannot put ought to be sufficient in itself to make the manufactheir energies to better use than flooding the market with goods the people of Nickelodia do not want. While thanking our correspondents for their kind remarks, we want them to fully understand that we like a little Western drama, and have no intention of condemning all and sundry, because it is more than possible that good, remarkably good subjects can be made showing Western life as it is to-day. The only elimination we ask is the degrading influence that the bad cowboys have upon the younger element. If Western pictures must be given, let them be of an elevating educative trend, something that the people will look forward to and receive with delight, something that will teach a good lesson and not leave a bad taste in the mouth with so many hold-ups, murders, and shootings; then we feel sure they will be received with pleasure and all objections will be removed from these films in the future.

MORE PECULIAR TACTICS

IT has become well known by this time to the whole trade, that the Independents are making such headway in gaining the confidence of the cinematograph public, and that those who have commissions to give out, prefer to give them to some well-known manufacturer in the Independent ranks in preference to going to the Licensed. Along these lines the Savannah Automobile Club gave their contract to the Republic Film Company to Cinematograph the races that will take place at Savannah and which will, no doubt, be the most unique series of races in the history of automobiling. As soon as it was known that the Republic had secured this contract, Messrs. Patentees tried to upset the contract and break down the arrangement. They sent representative after representative, all to no avail. Ultimately they said they were going to take the races from various points of public vantage. The people of Savannah immediately checkmated this by informing the Licensed people that they would Cinematograph at their own peril, ordering a squad of mounted police round the course with instructions to smash every camera found pirating or poaching upon the preserves of the Republic.

November 20 the Trust representatives appeared before the Automobile Club offering a big bonus if they would cancel the contract. Savannah gentlemen —are gentlemen—Southern gentlemen whose word is their bond, and so they turned down the offer of the Trust as is shown in the following night letter:

Copy of Night Letter Received November 21st, 10 A. M., From Savannah, Ga.

Savannah, Ga., Nov. 20th, 1911.

To Herbert Melis, Republic Film Co.:

Trust representatives appeared before Savannah Automobile Club at to-night's meeting offering big bonus to cancel Republic's contract and give them exclusive right to take race pictures. All were informed Republic had exclusive contract to produce these events and that no change would be made.

A. M. LUCAS, JR.

We congratulate the Republic upon securing so great a concession and being able to hold to it, and congratulate the Savannah Automobile Club on their principle, holding to right in preference to might.

While on the subject of Trust tactics, we received a letter in response to one we published in our last week's issue from Mr. Mohr of California. The following speaks for itself:

Editor Moving Picture News:

In your issue of November 18th I noticed a letter from a certain Mr. Mohr regarding cameras. I have reason to believe that within a short time the Motion Picture Patents Company will again begin an attack on the Independent makers. Not long ago I resigned my position with an Independent manufacturer and made application to the Biograph for a position. I was asked into the office, shown a chair, and then the gentleman in charge endeavored to learn from me the movement of the camera my former employer used.

Perhaps the present freedom of the Independents is but a scheme by which the Trust will get "the drop" on the so-called "pirates" at an unexpected moment.

We wonder how much longer such tactics will be allowed to exist. We love a fight, honest, fair and above board, but we do detest underhand scheming and intimidation, and we trust the people of Nickelodia and all concerned therein will soon see that right is better than might, and wins the day.

SIMPLEX MACHINE

This machine has only been on the market for a period of three months, and sales have been made in districts covering every large city in the States. It has extended in a wonderful manner to Canada, where it has been hailed with acclaim. South Africa also numbers the Simplex among the best imports, and even in faraway Australia the Simplex is well represented. The sales in the European market are stepping up by leaps and bounds. The machine is particularly adapted to fill a long-felt want in the field of the new educational movement, owing to the fact that with this machine the heavy restrictions of fire regulations are not needed. Its fireproof attributes are so quickly seen. It commends itself to the public school interest that is now beginning to look to cinematography in many educational studies.

WILLIAM E. SMITH, E.E.

Our quondam electrical engineer writer, now with H. Mackie Company, is on his way to the West Indies, Jamaica, South America, and a general run around the localities in the neighborhood of the above, which is very little covered by the American manufacturers. We feel sure good will accrue from this trip of benefit to the Mackie Company.

THE DURBAR IN "KINEMACOLOR"

Mr. Charles Urban, who has been graciously appointed by his Majesty to record the Coronation Durbar at Delhi, in kinemacolor, left England on Monday, last, for India, and, with seven of his most expert operators, will film in natural colors the magnificent ceremonial of King George being crowned in person and proclaimed monarch of our Eastern Empire. Mr. Urban, who travels to Bombay by the "Maloja," the "Medina's" sister ship, is a guest of the Indian government, and in addition to being granted exclusive privileges for securing life-motion scenes of every important incident in connection with their Majesties' high mission, has also a large number of invitations from ruling princes to visit and take pictures of all the most gorgeous and imposing palaces and estates in the great peninsula.

Possessed of a prerogative never previously granted to any kinematographer, Mr. Urban will certainly bring back to England a pictorial history of the unexampled splendors of the King-Emperor's unique visit, the vividness and realism of which mere words cannot anticipate.

STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE

In speaking of the matter of having a variety of twenty-eight reels for the customers of the Standard Film Exchange to select their daily programs from, Mr. Hopp states that he realizes there are some skeptics and says, "The proof of the pudding is in the eating" He says in this case he is really in position to exclaim "Eureka," meaning "I have it." Mr. Hopp's sincere expressions should impress all doubters.

The representative of the News in making his rounds among the film exchanges and film interests in general finds Mr. Hopp about as busy a man as can be found in any place of business. The satisfied look on Mr. Hopp's face indicates the substantial gain in business claimed.

MOVING PICTURE TALES

It is very gratifying to us to read the large number of letters that have come to us since our announcement of our forthcoming monthly supplement to The Moving Picture News, the Moving Picture Tales. We want to hear from every exhibitor and exchange man throughout the States, as from all appearances this is going to be a larger issue than we anticipated. We are pleased to receive the subscriptions and advertisements that have come in practically unsolicited. We want our readers to fully understand the Moving Picture Tales are not going to take the place of The Moving Picture News. It is an additional venture, and will cover an entirely different field to what The News does, making its appeal direct to the homes of the people of Nickelodia. This will make it a valuable advertising medium, and we want to hear from all exhibitors so that we may know how many to publish for our first issue.

FROM THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA

Our readers will notice that the stories written in The News are adapted from the synopsis of the various manufacturers. We understand that a little misinterpretation has taken place regarding the authorship of the above scenario. We do not claim the writers of moving picture tales are the originators, or authors, of the scenarios adapted from the synopsis selected. The scenario, "From the Bottom of the Sea," was written by our friend, Jack Reed, Jr., and we want to give him full publicity for the admirable manner in which he designed, and the Imp people the way they carried out the various actions. Miss West wrote the story from the synopsis, and we want our readers to fully understand that in all future issues where her name may appear that she is not the originator, but the story writer as the sypnosis appeals to her.

THE WAR IN TRIPOLI

The Cines Company, of Rome, are putting on the American market a series of the finest war pictures of Tripoli it is possible to obtain. The first issue is completely exhausted, and orders are being rapidly booked for the second series, which will be here within the next two weeks. If all reports are correct they will be far superior to the first series. They have also adopted a unique method of combining truth with fiction, issuing "The Searchlight," a story of the war in Tripoli. This will be released early in December, with a length of 1,050 feet. To be specific, the story is an up-to-date dramatic subject, in which an exciting love story, full of fine situations, is combined with a series of thrilling scenes of the great Italian-Turkish war, now raging in Tripoli. The story deals with the adventures of the daughter of an Italian gentleman, who is carried off by a Turkish pasha and subjected to all kinds of indignities, until she is finally rescued by the victorious Italian army, when they enter Tripoli. As most of the scenes are a record of real happenings, they possess more than usual interest at the present time. We are shown the entry of the troops, planting of the guns on the ramparts, the landing of the troops by boat, the fighting in the streets, and many scenes of Turkish cruelty in the streets of Tripoli. The subject is one of great excellence, and is certain to prove a strong attraction.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Schultz & Seeler will erect a $10,000 moving picture theater for David J. Brown at Thomas and Murray avenues.

AN INTERESTING OPINION FROM AN INTERESTING INDIVIDUAL

By M. I. MacDonald

INTO the office of the Moving Picture News wandered a few days ago a most earnest and interesting woman. It may not be exactly right to say that she wandered in either, because her entry there was for a purpose, and a good one. An interest in the welfare of little children and an insight into their little hearts, their wants and desires is always a good omen of what may be expected of the person who exhibits such interest, and it was in the interest of the little ones that Mrs. Jane N. Whaley found her way to the Editor of the Moving Picture News.

Mrs. Whaley is a white-haired, youthful-faced, gentle, Southern woman—a Virginian by birth. She has been making it her business to find out the views of different prominent individuals of the city on the matter of allowing the children to attend the moving picture show.

Says Mrs. Whaley, "The children must be entertained. They will go to picture shows in spite of everything. Why give the children so many don'ts? The poor little things are sometimes at a loss to know if there really is anything that they can do without being afraid of reproof. If the child is restricted from attending the picture show, he is bound to become a lawbreaker, because he is going to sneak in if he can't get there honestly. Also the exhibitor is going to be presented to him as a lawbreaker." Continuing she said, "The moving picture show is going to make better men and women. In many of the congested districts of New York City the little children never see nice-mannered people and pleasant surroundings except through the medium of the moving picture; they know nothing whatever of the beauties of the outside world except through the medium of the moving picture. Many times have I taken children into the picture show, and only once was I refused entrance with them; then I felt so badly that I went home, instead of going in, and those same children came and played around my door."

Mrs. Whaley is one of those women who are longing to throw off the shackles with which custom has so long encumbered their sex—she wants to do things. She is not a club woman, but works alone out of the kindness of her heart and a conviction that she is right in thought. It was interesting to hear her tell of her attempt to get a license to run a projecting machine. Said she, "I went to a man that I knew of who thoroughly understood the manipulation of the machine. When I told him what I wanted, he said, 'Yes, I'll teach you, but have you got a license?' Well, I had never thought of that, of course, so I went immediately to the Gas, Electricity and Water Supply office to obtain the required license. There I was told that they could not grant one to a woman. Why not? I asked. 'Because in case of fire we don't know what a woman might do,' was the answer. Oh, I replied, you think perhaps that a woman might not be able to run as fast as a man if anything went wrong. You should have seen how angry he got at this."

Needless to say, Mrs. Whaley was thwarted in her attempt to gain the desired knowledge. Returning again to the matter of the children she said, "I think there should be a matron in each moving picture theater—a responsible woman—and I am willing to be a matron myself just to show that it really would work."

As she departed I asked her name, initials, etc. She said "My name is Mrs. J. N. Whaley—Jane—just plain, simple Jane, and remember," she said laughing, "five cents represents to me not a loaf of bread, but a picture."

DOT FARLEY AS ACTRESS AND WOMAN

By Margaret I. MacDonald

IS it not true that fame is more often won on merit of talent rather than on merit of character? Only once in a while when accidentally some one fluent with the pen happens to touch upon the outer edges of the halo, and peering through the glamour of a name sees the inward beauty of the polished gem—the character of the individual—do we realize the true meaning of the words of the poet, "A man's a man for a' that."

Miss Dot Farley, of the St. Louis Motion Picture Co., is one of those individuals whose beautiful traits of character have been found by those who know her most intimately, and in fact even casual acquaintances, to be equal in brilliancy to her talents. Miss Farley is a very gifted actress, who, up to three and a half years ago, followed theatrical life. Since then she has been with the Essanay Co., the American Film Manufacturing Co., and the St. Louis Motion Picture Co., where she is to-day. In the Essanay she played character and comedienne roles, with the American she was leading woman in character and comedy roles. She is said to be most versatile and is quite as much at home in one part as in another. Being a magnificent horsewoman, she has made herself indispensable in plays requiring an exhibition of that art.

MISS DOT FARLEY

Miss Farley started out in her theatrical career in "Little Lord Fauntleroy." She started with Noble Bros. and has had wide experience with different well-known companies. I will tell my readers some very interesting stories of the presence of mind and fearlessness which prevails in her nature, as well as incidents where self has been entirely obliterated from her mind by anxiety for other people.

One day since she has been in the employ of the St. Louis Motion Picture Co., a number of the stock were returning on horseback from Forest Park; Miss Farley, Miss Gray, and young Mr. Hamilton were riding ahead. Galloping three abreast something happened which caused Miss Gray's horse to stumble, throwing itself against Miss Farley's horse in such a way that her horse was tripped also. Miss Gray's horse threw her, dragging her some twenty feet; she was rescued by young Mr. Hamilton who, dismounting, leaped rapidly to her aid. Miss Farley, however, during the accident performed rather a remarkable feat, showing with what wonderful presence of mind she is possessed—her horse fell, throwing her, but she actually pulled herself together and remounted again while the horse rose.

At another time she was riding a horse that was very much afraid of the camera. It was necessary for her to come straight for the camera in order that the proper view could be taken; the horse swerving, bolted under a tree twenty-five feet from the camera, whose limbs hung so low that it was expected by all who witnessed the scene that Miss Farley would be swept backward from the frightened horse's back; as she neared the tree, however, and which, by the way, was done in an incredibly short time—scarce time enough to gather one's wits—she swung backward laying flat to the horse's back, and thereby avoiding accident to herself and inconvenience to the company. Eventually she conquered the animal.

The only time Miss Farley has been known to lose her nerve was in connection with an incident where the life of someone else was endangered, when she refused to stay by and witness a very severe test. Always sympathetic, thinking more of the comfort of others than of herself, she has won the love and admiration of all who have had the pleasure to be thrown in her company. In the Essanay Co. she was called "Mother"; if a finger was cut or bruised, it was to Miss Farley the victim ran, for she was ever ready to be helpful; if a button had inopportunely disappeared from the garment of one of the less handy male sex, it was the neat little hand of Miss Farley that hastened to make repairs. In the American Film Co. the same appellation was hers.

It has not always been necessary for Miss Farley to enter the great struggle for life of necessity, but she does it with just the same cheerfulness as though it had always been her lot. The gift of love which is hers is a great gift indeed—it comes to her because she attracts it.

It is good to be privileged to give a word of praise to a character so beautiful, for in this world of hurry and bustle so much is lost sight of that is good, and beautiful, and true.

IMPRESSIONS OF "THE LADY FROM THE SEA"

Ibsen has a strong grip on the human heart. He understands situations which have been and always will be problematic to the masses. He paints a picture of human life such as only the painter's brush can hope to approach in matter of coloring and animated detail.

Of his story of "The Lady From the Sea," Thanhouser has made a very creditable reproduction—in fact, a beautiful reproduction. The opening scene where Ellida is reclining on the rocks by the sea, her beautiful, luxuriant hair blowing in the breeze, stays with one as a gem of motion picture photography—a little, refreshing, artistic bit, that in its beauty has a soothing effect on the senses. The psychological intention of the story is well brought out in the picture, and great credit reflects not only on the director for his beautiful and appropriate setting of the piece, and intelligent conception of the subject, but also on all of those who assisted in the production. The part of Ellida is splendidly portrayed—the struggle of the mental woman to release herself from the spell cast over her by the stronger mind of the man is made quite lucid. The self-assertion of the mental woman when she is thrown back upon herself to choose unhampered between the man whom she respects and the one for whom she can feel no respect, but whose spell is still upon her, is good.

This film is a fine psychological study, and worthy of exhibition throughout the land.

To Whom It May Concern—and It Concerns You!

To all admirers of Art, and those who will be after our first release, to the thousands of my friends and the millions I am going to make, Love and Greetings:

People—I am engaged! Cupid's (not Cupidity's) arrow finally hit the target! Many suitors and wooers I've had—modesty forbids me to specify the number. There's one born every minute, but one particular minute about sixteen years ago (now, stop laughing!) it so happened that one was not born. "Mari" was "on" and did n't want to weight herself with a burden whose greatest asset was its own load. So—I just weighted! Until—a Gem came along!

Yes, everybody, the Gem Motion Picture Co. captured my heart, as it will yours. Its aim was true—and its aim, by the way, is to give the bestest and brightestest in pictorial art. I hope—and predict—you're going to like us!

I'm theirs—and yours

Truly,

Marion Leonard

A PROMISSORY NOTE!

$ to dough-nuts Nov. 25th 1911

On and after date of our first release we Promise to Give to the Order of Any Exhibitor Films with interest

at All Exchanges

No. One. Due Pretty Soon The Gem M. P. Co.

U. Will See.

INFORMAL CHAT OF THE UPLIFT MOVEMENT

Snap Shots of the State Convention of Woman Federation of Clubs in Convention—Hotel Astor, Friday, Nov. 16, New York City—An Afternoon in the Moving Picture Gallery, East Fourteenth Street

By Mary Lawton Metcalfe, D. A. R.

Electra Sparks

Friday 17th—the very last day of this splendid Convention. Twelve hundred women have been in session since Monday from every section of the Empire State, to represent the Women's Clubs of every county. Three hundred thousand registered clubwomen were represented by their delegates and alternates.

Miss Mary Garrett Hay, 2 West 86th street, Manhattan, is president of this extraordinary body of women. Miss Hay is superb. A mind quick as a flash catches the idea of the most wordy resolution and succinctly serves the audience with knowledge condensed. The decisive attitude of the President is beautifully "sugared" with sweetness and tact, that no delegate could possibly feel hurt and take home a bleeding heart.

Felicitations and resolutions of thanks have been poured out with generous hand. The visitors have been royally treated in New York. For five days this beautiful ballroom has been the setting of A Moving Picture of Highest Womanhood. Every paper read; every discussion; every new suggestion is that which emanates for Human Betterment.

The greeting of Mayor Gaynor was severely criticised by Greater New York clubmembers, with whom I spoke.

In presenting the keys of the city, the Mayor opened his mouth metaphorically to "put his foot in it."

He told the women that they were not the whole show in the state and treated the brilliant assembly of women lawyers, teachers, doctors, sisters, cousins and aunts, as if the whole convention were a huge joke.

It is evident that Pere Gaynor does not have the old orthodox opinion that, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." A man cannot be happy with his own "wimmens" when he accepts a social invitation to give astral boxes on the airs and graces of only the Mother of the Race.

Three hundred thousand women—sixty thousand in the City Federation of Greater New York. Ah, gentlemen of the films—they are our best friends in all work for human development and the preservation of health and life.

In fighting diseases moving picture slides are used to emphasize the origin and progress of menacing conditions to health. It is a great joke that women are unpaid guardians of the interests of the poor, the ignorant!

It is a bitter mistake for private or public citizens to attempt to bottle and preserve sentiments of anger, hatred and malice against the educated women of the civilized world.

Vital statistics in New York City show a great decrease in the death list. I know that it is the eternal vigilance of committees and sub-committees, who ferret out conditions and report the same to the paid officials of the city, that prompt measures are taken to conquer death stalking in filth and danger-traps among the haunts of the people.

Only narrow and bigoted country villages will take measures that rule out an innovation or invention without investigating, before action is taken. Among these clubwomen of New York State, I find great readiness to co-operate with work for public good. In conversing with some of the leaders, I find all are ready to praise the power of the moving picture as an accessory of progressive education in schools and for civics.

Mrs. William Cumming Story is the Regent of one of the largest chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution in New York City. On her way to the dining-room for the beautiful luncheon served to a thousand women, I had a chat with this most charming clubwoman.

"Mrs. Story, I have run in to-day particularly to tell you of the most beautiful historical story of the season, which I read from canvas yesterday.

"Through the courtesy of Mr. MacIntyre, of the Motion Picture Distributing Co., 111 East 14th street, I spent yesterday afternoon enjoying the advance release of films called 'Hands Across the Sea.'

"It is the story of many thrilling events and scenes of the American Revolution; and I believe will revolutionize teaching of dry dates and chronological facts served in the classrooms.

"Although pledged for international peace, I never felt so thoroughly aroused to patriotic enthusiasm as in the private gallery of the Distributing Company.

"Now, Mrs. Story, I am sure you will direct the attention of your Chapter to the value of 'Hands Across the Sea.' It should be presented in every public school, that foreign children with their eyes wide open may see the hardships that the first emigrants endured to establish the America, as they enjoy its advantages to-day."

Other women claimed Mrs. Story's attention, but she assured me of her keen interest in the work of presenting illustrated history to the masses in the education for citizenship.

Miss Bertie K. Shipley, of Tennessee, related to Daniel Boone and Abraham Lincoln, was sitting in the corridor; between times of the Convention we had an interesting chat about the South and its needs. This interesting woman is a lecturer of the New York Board of Education. She sings the songs of Dennis Hanks and Abraham Lincoln of the cornfields and a song about Daniel Boone and his six-foot gun. Miss Shipley was a pioneer of teaching the American peasantry in the Tennessee mountains and says that there is work enough to do among the white and black American peasantry to keep clubwomen busy.

Yes, indeed, we agreed that the millions of ignorant white and black men, women and children, who are in rural agricultural and mining America can have the gospel of work preached to them from the moving scenes of skilled laborers and their homes, automobiles, churches, schools, towns, in contrast with conditions of thousands of American citizens who think to work more than four days a week a blooming disgrace. The salvation of the ignorant is to show the Gospel of work.

The principal claim of pictures for Civic Education is that ignorant minds cannot understand ideas any more than children, while the eye of the congregation sees in a minute the truth that talks from the canvas.

Miss Murray, of the Scribblers Club, Buffalo, New York, as a delegate from her club, was given the last copy of the "Moving Picture News," that she could read the article on the psychological value of pictures in every mind. Miss Murray assured me of the interest of herself and club in suggestion for the distribution of knowledge.

The President of the Gotham Club, Mrs. Anita Comfort Brooks, has asked me to read a paper at the November 21st meeting of that club at the Waldorf-Astoria. As the club stands for pure food, pure milk and progressive education, my paper will be, "Psychological Value of Pictures for Bible and Shakespeare Study."

That reminds me of the charming release I saw on Wednesday afternoon in the ten films presented.

"The Tempest" is fascinating. There is no reason why every drama cannot be presented to study-clubs, first with the dramatis personæ in motion, before the text of the play is read.

Nothing will entertain the little folk in the holidays as Mother Goose. The pictures are entirely original ideas of the old rhymes.

I want to come in touch with these men who are meeting a demand for the educational, religious and artistic entertainment of classes and masses. It is my intention to make a list of these films, which can be used in the schools and clubrooms at holiday parties for the home.

Time was when Punch and Judy reigned supreme for Christmas festivals and New Year. Then the Italian organ man and his monkey were engaged to make merry in the rich children's homes; but vastly more interesting to the boys and girls will be such films as "From the Depths of the Sea," also "Hands Across the Sea," Views of Monserrat, Italy, which last seems to take us behind the locomotive over the mountains, through tunnels, along the brink of precipices. One has the pleasure of the real journey without the pangs of seasickness in the winter voyage.

Mrs. Camille Birnbohm, President of the Knickerbocker Relief Club, has three hundred members in her organization. They are angels of mercy to give pleasure and relief. Mrs. Birnbohm declares it inspiring to know of a new way of giving entertainments to get money for club work.

"I am devoted to good pictures," said Mrs. Birnbohm, who is a professional dramatic soprano. "No matter how busy I am shopping, I can never pass a good moving picture theater; and there I sit for hours, forgetting all about even clothes to buy and trains to catch."

It was my own experience, for I was actually four blessed hours looking at those lovely and inspiring films at the Motion Picture Distributing Company, East Fourteenth street, New York.

But it is the Bible pictures I want to get hold of, and a hall on the East Side, or any old place where folk are lonesome on Sunday. I want to read aloud those beautiful Eastern stories of Palestine, as the films show the pictures and help to give the Gospel of love to every man, woman and child.

Ah, my friends, there is no human dirt. Sin is ignorance. There is the beginning for everybody, who sees historical facts to make him think. That's what our mission is with pictures to make you know that you are the son of God, if you want to be and work with our Father to help you live right in this great old world.

A REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE (SOLAX)

Although the revolutionary period in American history is abundantly interwoven with tense drama and colorful romance, it is not an easy task to reproduce on the screen with a large measure of authenticity or fidelity the atmosphere which surrounds those dramas and those romances.

The costuming of the production, the settings, the colonial atmosphere, the striking bearing of those heroic and self-sacrificing figures, defy, by the very nature of things, accurate reproduction. In the work of this character the producer is often tempted to run the risk of over-coloring the work. A sense of proportion and perspective is lost and the finished product looks more like a grotesque assemblage of personages who had never seen the light of day.

"MY FLAG COMES FIRST—GIVE ME THE PLANS"

In the Solax production of "A Revolutionary Romance," which is to be released Friday, December 1st, all important factors which tend to produce an atmosphere and a local color peculiar to the times have been taken into consideration and put into play. The finished work stands out minus all artificialities. A simple story is unreeled. The plot is not overcharged with superfluous complications and a great smudge of over-coloring.

The story hinges about the mental struggles of an American girl who has to decide whether she owes her allegiance to her country or to her lover, who is a British spy.

She decides in favor of her country. At the point of a pistol she gets from her lover plans of American fortifications, and turns them over to the Continental Army. She permits her lover to escape. They are brought together again in a natural way.

Throughout the story there is maintained an atmosphere truly colonial. Dramatic values are made the most of and the interest is sustained from title to trade-mark.

KINEMACOLOR ....

Quite a number of queries have come to us regarding our good friend, R. W. Daly, and his position with Kinemacolor. In conversation with the heads of Kinemacolor we learn that Mr. Daly is not in any way connected with the company, his services having ceased some four to five weeks ago. This will answer the queries of several interested in cinematography and Kinemacolor.

Galesburg, Ill.—Kennedy Bros., proprietors of the Nickelodeon Theater, have sold out, and John B. Mayes will manage same.

THE POWER BEHIND THE THROWN

is a harsh and unpleasant force. Why be chucked?

RUN REX!

The wise all know the value of wealth, but the wealthy do not all know the value of wisdom. Be wise AND rich!

RUN REX!

There's no use in being that kind of an optimist, who, when the rain does come, borrows someone else's umbrella.

RUN REX!

ON THURSDAY, THANKSGIVING DAY,

NOVEMBER 30th

we are giving you one to be thankful for:

"The Stranger"

a picture with GENIUS and GINGER!

It will be a "sauce" of profit. Get the gravy!

REX

REX MOTION PICTURE MASTERPIECE CO.

573 ELEVENTH AVE.,
NEW YORK CITY

Sales Co., Rex ability is strange, but its consistency is "STRANGER."

RECENT ADVANCES IN THE APPLICATION OF ELECTRICITY IN THE MOTION PICTURE FIELD

The following is the result of an interview granted by Mr. J. H. Hallberg, in which he very kindly gave the following interesting information in connection with his work.

"The 14th of December closes the fourth successful year of the Hallberg Electric Economizer for the control of projector arc lamps. This device was patented in 1904, but was not applied to moving picture lamps until December, 1907. Since then more than 2,000 Hallberg Economizers have been put in operation, and the saving on electric bills is enormous when you consider that each one of these devices saves the smallest moving picture theater $300 a year, and has saved in some larger theaters, where many shows are operated a day, as much as $1,500 a year. This reduction in cost for electricity is not the only advantage, but the troublesome rheostat has been dispensed with, which, of course, removes the heat from the operating room, and it is a fact that notwithstanding the current saving of two-thirds the illuminating on the screen is increased anywhere from fifty to one hundred per cent.

"When the Hallberg Economizer was first put out one was made for alternating current only, and Fig. 1 illustrates the

FIG. 1

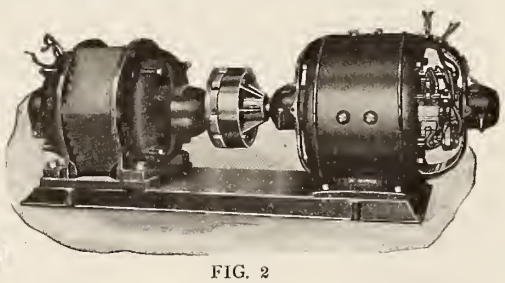

FIG. 2

A C Economizer. This apparatus is now so well known that I do not think it necessary to waste space in making a description of it. About three years ago wideawake exhibitors felt the need of better illumination on the screen than could possibly be had with alternating current applied directly to the arc. They also objected to the excessive noise when operating with the alternating current arc. To satisfy these more critical exhibitors I developed the Hallberg Economizer for changing the alternating current into direct current, which is illustrated in Fig. 2. This machine is made up of an alternating current motor directly connected to a specially constructed direct current generator, both mounted on a common sub-case, as illustrated. The alternating current motor may be wound for any voltage or cycle, either single phase, two-phase, or three-phase current. The direct current then is so constructed that direct current will be delivered to the arc of the moving picture lamp of just the right quality to produce perfect crater formation.

"The Hallberg A C to D C Economizer can be made to operate one or more lamps at the same time and may be made to deliver anywhere from twenty-five to seventy-five amperes to the arc. When only one lamp is to be operated at a time, absolutely no resistance is required for connecting in series with the arc.

"In addition with my Hallberg A C to D C Economizer above described, which is a very heavy and powerful device, more especially recommended where an exceedingly powerful arc is required and where more than one lamp is to be operated at a time I recommend and am a special jobber of the Mercury Arc Rectifier, manufactured by the General Electric Company. This device is made in two sizes; the smaller one to deliver 25 to 30 amperes and the larger one from 30 to 40 amperes direct current to the arc of one moving picture lamp. The Rectifier can be made to be operated on any voltage or cycle, and as it operates on single phase it can, of course, be used for two or three-phase circuits as well. The Mercury Arc Rectifier has been described in the pages of the Moving Picture News and therefore it is unnecessary to go into detail of operation, but simply refer to Fig. 3, which shows Rectifier set up ready for operation.

"Immediately after placing the Hallberg Economizer A C on the market I developed my direct current Hallberg Economizer to take the place of the rheostat for moving picture lamps operating on 110 to 120 or 550 volts D C circuits, effecting a saving of fifty per cent, seventy per cent and ninety per cent respectively.

"The Hallberg E C Economizer is illustrated in Fig. 4, and consists of a suitable direct current motor wound for the proper voltage directly connected to a special design and constructed generator, which furnishes to the moving picture lamp the proper kind of current without the use of a rheostat. The Hallberg D C Economizer is different from any other device ever thought of for this kind of work, and on account of its extremely high efficiency, the above great current savings can be effected. The Hallberg D C Economizer is made in six different sizes and styles to supply anywhere from 25 to 45 amperes to the arc of one moving picture lamp.

"To illustrate the proper method of installing the Hallberg Direct Current Economizer I call attention to the accompanying illustration, Fig. 5, which is a reproduction of a photo taken by Mr. Theodore M. Newman (manager for Clune's Enterprises), of the operating room in one of the Clune theaters at Los Angeles. All of Clune's houses are equipped with Hallberg Economizers, and the illustration is quite interesting in showing the large operating room and its perfect and systematic equipment.

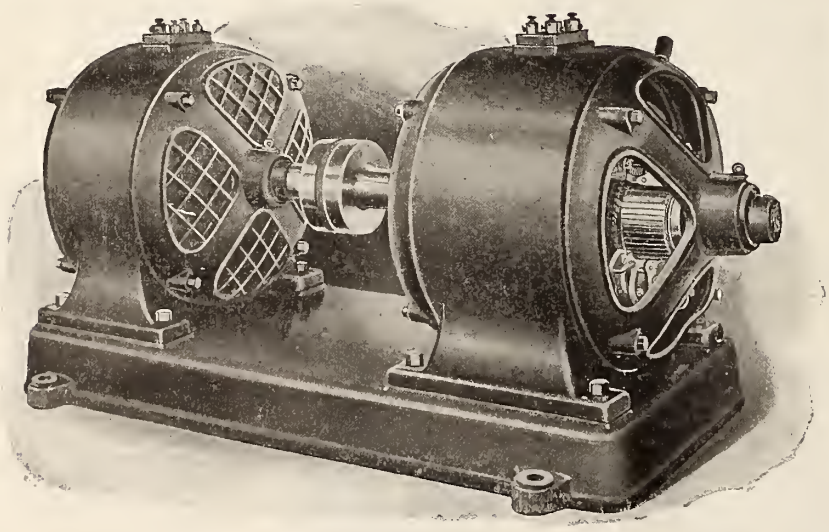

FIG. 3

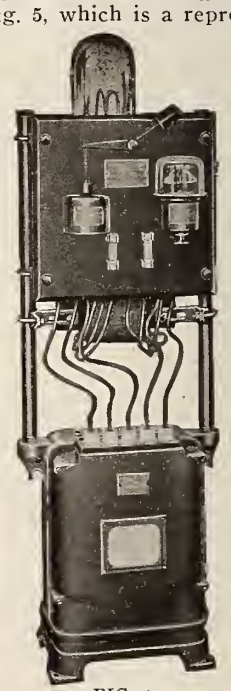

FIG. 4

"Electricity is becoming such a great factor in the matter of picture projection and advertising that every detail of its application must have careful and expert attention in order that the best and most economical results may be realized, and I believe that the line of apparatus which I have referred to above is the best which can possibly be made for the purpose irrespective of cost.

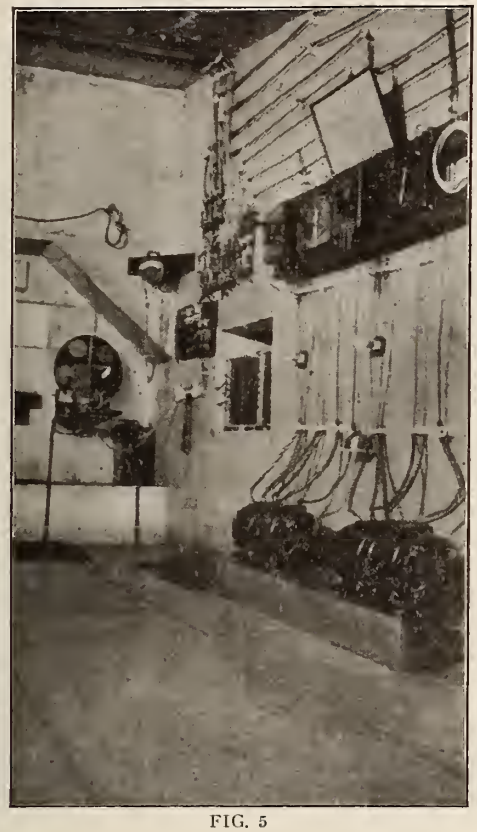

FIG. 5

"I also take pleasure in giving you a photograph of a splendid and most interesting electric sign designed and installed under the supervision of Mr. Newman, manager for Clune's theaters."

CLUNE'S MAGNIFICENT ELECTRIC SIGN

Cleveland, Ohio.—The R. & F. Co., capital $5,000; F. R. Forbes, B. A. Round and L. D. Round.

Chicago, Ill.—Oscar Eiger will erect a new $6,000 theater at 539 West North avenue.

CHICAGO LETTER

During my visitation of the exchanges last week I butted into the H. & H. Exchange and found everyone very busy. Mr. Hutchinson, at this exchange, stated that business was very good and many new exhibitors were arranging for service, including Mr. Crawford, owner of the Marshfield Theater on Marshfield avenue, and Mr. R. Angell, of the Angell Circuit in Iowa. The H. & H. have placed their order for the American Eclair and Majestic productions and are now buying practically the entire output of the Sales Company. All exchanges here report a big increase in business. The Anti-Trust and the Standard have placed their orders for the American Eclair and Majestic productions.

Last week, at Lake Charles, La., Hon. Champ Clark visited the Dreamland Theater and saw himself "as others see him," in a recent Selig release entitled "Trips to Homes of Famous People." Mr. Clark traveled all the way from Dallas, Texas, to accept the invitation of Mr. Laglois, manager of Dreamland Theater. The film in question also shows Hon. Joseph Cannon, Vice-President Sherman and Senator Joseph Bailey. The theater was crowded when Mr. Clark arrived and when this picture was flashed upon the screen the house arose in a body and made great demonstrations. Mr. Clark was so well pleased with the film that he made arrangements to have it shown in his home town so that members of his immediate family might see it.

"Big Otto," the head animal trainer of the Selig Company, and Mr. W. N. Foster, the expert camera operator, left recently for Los Angeles branch of the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Foster goes to take up his new position in connection with the Western productions, while "Big Otto" went to make arrangements for the transportation of the Selig menagerie to their new home, and the Selig Company promises another series of startling animal subjects for future productions.

Upon entering the office of the Western Song Slide Service the other day, I was surprised on seeing Miss Cowles, the stenographer, and Miss Lilly, sister of Mr. Currier, the manager, in one corner of the office earnestly engaged cutting and tearing a copy of the Moving Picture News. Being interested, I summoned up courage enough to venture near them and see why the News should receive such ill treatment by such fair hands. I was indeed surprised when the young ladies showed me the novel idea they were carrying into effect, by clipping the cuts of various players of the different film companies and passepartouting them on cover slides, a piece of glass about three and one-half inches long and two and one-half inches wide.

Over Mr. Currier's desk, the pleasing result of their past efforts could be seen, as, neatly arranged in an ornamental and attractive manner, the pictures of all the leading players already decorated that part of the large office. Before I left the office I had the pleasure to interview Mr. Currier. He stated that business is phenomenal and is getting better every day, as practically all the prominent film exchanges have, or will in the near future, discontinue their song slide departments. It has been thoroughly demonstrated to them that they are not in a position to handle this essential part of their program. The Western is buying the very latest releases of the most prominent manufacturers and have the slides for the most popular and up-to-date songs in stock.

Mr. E. R. Cunningham, proprietor of the Campus Theater at Champaign, Ill., was in the city last week and arranged for Independent service at the National Film Brokers' office. Mr. Cunningham was formerly using licensed films supplied by the General Film Company.

Alfred Hamburger, president of the Louyse Amusement Company, has returned to Chicago, after a pleasant visit to French Lick Springs.

W. R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Film Company, has returned to Chicago, after a very successful business trip in the East.

The Theater Supply Company has added a film rental department and are carrying a large stock of excellent films. The film rental department will be under the management of Mr. F. H. McMillan, who is an old and experienced man in the moving picture business, being formerly with the Unique and Exclusive Film companies. A mail order business of all supplies and machine parts will be carried on.

WARNER KENNEDY.

Llewellyn, Pa.—Chas. Peiffer and Albert Acaley will in the near future start in the moving picture business.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Alhambra Theater here, at 1628-34 Passyunk avenue, has been sold to a syndicate headed by W. W. Miller.

REMARKABLE ENTERPRISE OF THE AMERICAN COMPANY

It is an odd coincidence that the American Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, should celebrate its first anniversary in business by throwing on its factory screen the first and only successful attempt to photograph the submarine gardens of the Pacific Ocean.

This remarkable picture will be released December 14, and, it is believed, will create a profound sensation in motion picture circles. The effort has been made repeatedly by manufacturers realizing the immense value of such a picture. It was not, however, until several weeks ago that the experiment was demonstrated a success.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American, is the man who devised the ingenious scheme, and under whose personal supervision the feat was accomplished. Mr. Hutchinson with a party of experts visited the Santa Catalina Island, just off the coast of Los Angeles, where the water is considered the clearest in the world, and where the famous submarine gardens of the Pacific can best be seen. The party was equipped with every convenience necessary and had chartered a glass-bottomed boat for the purpose.

One of the interesting and novel features of the experiment was some rarely good luck in catching an octopus reclining in its native environment among the rocks. The octopus is clearly shown in the film.

Altogether, it was a day of considerable good fortune as well as good management, for the camera party shortly after came upon a school of more than one hundred seal lying on the rocks off the island. The launch was sent to within a few feet of the seal and a picture obtained that will eclipse anything of the kind ever taken before. It is not possible, ordinarily, to get very close to seal, and the extraordinary results in this instance can be credited to good fortune only. Some residents of the Santa Catalina who have seen the first print, claim that they never before obtained such an intimate view of the Pacific seal

Delighted with their success, the party then pushed on into the interior of the magic isle of Santa Catalina, whose magnificent scenic grandeur is far-famed, but seen by comparatively few Americans. The gorgeous valley, mountain splendor unsurpassed anywhere in this world, and water so wonderfully clear that it has often been pronounced the clearest in existence, were all captured by the camera.

Some charming water-scenes were added. The entire Pacific fleet is seen, riding the undulating waters of San Diego Bay. Later, there is seen the annual maneuvering and parade.

The battle-scarred cruiser Raleigh, which fired the first shot at Manila, is first in the camera's scope, closely followed by the armored cruiser Colorado, the flagship California, the cruiser South Dakota, the historic gunboat Vicksburg, which did such effective work in the Havana blockade, the Oregon, the ship which first performed the marvelous feat of circling the Horn without once stopping for repairs; the transport boat Buffalo, the sea-tug Iroquois, used for target practice; the cruiser Cincinnati, famous for the loss of its mast in the Spanish-American war; the supply boat Glacier, and finally the entire torpedo fleet leaving the harbor of San Diego.

This film is quite without equal in the wide diversity of subjects covered, and the universal appeal of its entire one-thousand feet. It should hold an audience breathless with attention and has the added merit of being composed entirely of American views, which are always popular with Americans.

Commenting on the pictures taken by Mr. Hutchinson, of the famous marine gardens, the Los Angeles Times, under date of October 21, says:

"S. S. Hutchinson, of Chicago, while in a glass-bottomed boat, was successful in taking pictures of over fifty feet of film while the boat passed over the marine gardens. Although many attempts have been made by local photographers and others possessing extensive experience, no one has ever before taken pictures of the marine growth under the water. The feat had been given up as an impossibility, etc."

"When nearing a suitable portion of the gardens under water fifteen feet, the machine was set to work. The camera resembled an ordinary instrument, but had several attachments on both sides, and small magnifying glasses and mirrors set at various angles near the lenses. An octopus was caught and is clearly shown in the film."

It is probable that the picture will be shown in the California schools.

Ft. Madison, Ia.—The erection of a $30,000 opera house here is in prospect for this city.

SOLAX ENGAGES PROMINENT COMEDIAN

Do you remember that tall, handsome and smiling young man, whose subtle work used to make so many millions of people laugh as he twinkled on the screen in the Edison productions? Do you remember him? He recently played the leading role in the feature Eclair productions. His name is Darwin Karr.

There is a great deal of well-ordered bustle at the Solax

Studio these days. The engagement of Darwin Karr is the consummation of only one of the big plans which Madame Alice Blache, the president of the company, at this time has under advisement.

Speaking of Darwin Karr, she said: "Mr. Karr comes to us with a big reputation. He has been successful. He has had fourteen years' experience as an actor and has been with some of the best Broadway productions, besides having made a name for himself in motion picturedom. I am satisfied that he will assist materially in the plans I am making to have SOLAX on the lips of every exhibitor and exchange man. I am confident that SOLAX is now synonymous with 'profit and pleasure' in the lexicon of the moving picture man. I am not trying to be boastful. You just watch."

Mr. Karr is an intelligent artist. He has a way of "Putting over" a comedy situation without resorting to time-honored methods.

In talking about himself, Mr. Karr, who is as modest as he is handsome, said: "I am particularly glad to come to the Solax Company. They are putting on the kind of comedy that I like, and in which the public can see me to advantage."

Asked how he liked being a pantomime actor, he said: "I believe that pantomime acting is much more difficult than acting on the legitimate stage, particularly comedy. A word or two on the legitimate can bring a laugh, but in acting before the camera words are of no avail. Here the comedian is put to the most exacting test."

The Solax Company has made arrangements with a prominent writer of humorous stories to prepare a number of comedies for production in the near future.

Muskegon, Mich.—Lou Somers and Carl Ray have leased the property formerly occupied by the Young Men's Club and will establish the Orpheum playhouse.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Pennsylvania Construction Co. will erect a one-story moving picture house at 2846-48 North 22d street, to cost $10,000.

Kansas City, Mo.—Geo. B. Hanson will erect a moving picture theater at 1508 Spruce street, to cost $4,000.

YANKEE DOODLE AND OUR NAVY

Champion SPLIT REEL

RELEASED MONDAY, DECEMBER 4th, 1911
IN THIS SECOND EDITION OF

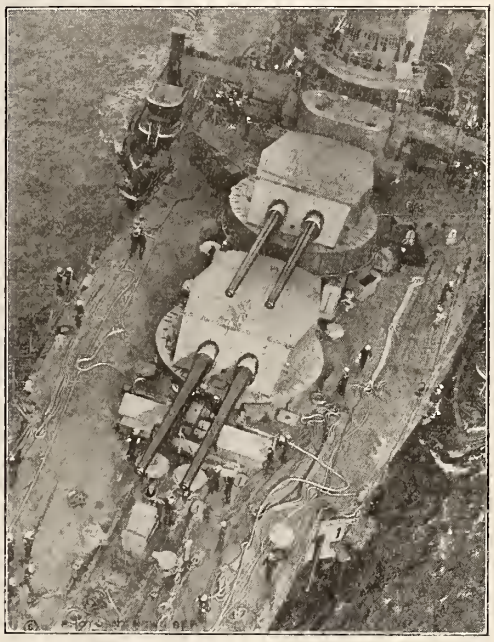
MOTHER GOOSE

the nation's youth are given a brimming measure of a twenty-minute interesting photo study. The study that is being agitated the country-wide by America's foremost educators.

The Indian Fortune Teller

RELEASED DECEMBER 6th
IS A WESTERN
The Story is Western in Theme and Locale

Special and attractive lobby sheets can be obtained free for Mother Goose Features by simply dropping us a card.



FROM "OUR NAVY"

CHAMPION FILM COMPANY

Sold thro Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

MARK M. DINTENFASS, GEN. MGR.,
12 EAST 15TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

MISS MASQUERADER

"Miss Masquerader" is a pretty little comedy which will be presented by the Eclair Company of America on November 28. The leading role is taken by Miss Dorothy Gibson, whose work in this particular instance is worthy of special mention.

The story is that of a pretty young heiress whose life is made miserable by a large and varied assortment of suitors, none of whom in any way approach her ideal. She devises a plan by which she outwits the men and is enabled to mingle among them without being tormented. Making a request of her uncle to take her dressed in male attire to his club, she is allowed after some persuasion to accompany him. The scene at the club, where she is invited to smoke and drink, is very funny. She takes her turn at golf, etc., with the men, finally falling in love with a handsome young chap of the party. After her return home she receives a letter from him telling her that he is going to visit Granddad in the country and regrets that he cannot have her come with him, addressing her as "Jack." Much disappointed she decides to go anyway, and applies for a position as maid with "Granddad," and is accepted. Paul arrives, promptly falls in love with the pretty maid. Uncle comes upon the scene and is discovered by Paul holding the maid upon his knee and kissing her. The young man who is sitting at a window overlooking the auto in which the uncle and niece are seated at once makes up his mind that the maid is a bad character, and leaves immediately for the city. Of course his departure is closely followed by that of the heiress. On his return home she receives a note from Paul addressed to "Jack," asking him to come to see him. She goes undisguised, explains, and all is well.

Miss Gibson's work in this little comedy is very fine, and special mention should be made of the perfectly natural manner which is a feature of her acting. Splendid poise was displayed by Miss Gibson throughout.

We spoke of this particular point because of the tendency in so many of the profession to exaggerate emotional expression to such an extent as to destroy in many instances the general contour of the piece.

Eclair is certainly doing itself proud and we congratulate them.

CATCHY ADVERTISEMENTS

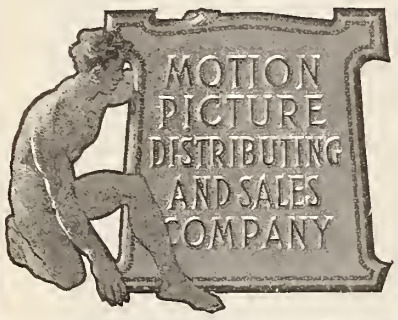
often bring temporary results, but permanent success is achieved only in pursuance of honest business methods, by living up to the words and letters of our advertisements, giving honest values and the best of service to sixty-two exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

The wonderfully increased sales indicate with certainty that hundreds and hundreds of exhibitors are finding out the truth of it every day.

MODESTY IS A VIRTUE

WE DISLIKE TO APPEAR EGOTISTICAL, BUT CANNOT REFRAIN FROM STATING FRANKLY THAT WHAT WE ADVERTISE WE FULFILL.

EVIDENCE OF THIS IS DEMONSTRATED BY A PERSONAL REVIEW OF OUR WEEKLY PROGRAM ON THE SCREEN.



WEEKLY PROGRAM

MONDAY—Imp, Comet, American, Champion, Nestor, Solax starts Dec. 18th.
TUESDAY—Thanhouser, Bison, Powers, Eclair (Amer.).
WEDNESDAY—Champion, Solax, Reliance. Ambrosio, Nestor.
THURSDAY—Rex, American, Itala, Imp, Eclair.
FRIDAY—Bison, Solax, Thanhouser, Lux, Comet.
SATURDAY—Powers, Itala, Great Northern, Nestor, Reliance (Republic starts Dec. 9th); Imp starts Dec. 2nd.
SUNDAY—Majestic, Republic starts Dec. 10th.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

111 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY

WHEN THE GENERAL BLUNDERED

(From Our Pacific Coast Correspondent)

San Francisco is a big town, all right. And it hasn't grown any the less because big "Bill" has started the dirt flying for the 1915 doings. There never was another San Francisco, except perhaps Sydney, Australia. It is made up of districts so essentially different that even New York cannot show the variety of conditions that obtains in the city by the Golden Gate.

All of which was and is fully known by the General Film Company.

There is no fathoming the deep law schemes of the great ones of Fifth avenue, and just what portends the consolidation or purchase of the Patents Company's San Francisco exchanges into one central General Company, it is not for us to say.

It is with another move we are concerned. Just recently a new ruling went into effect which does away with the daily change, the General agreeing only to supply three or four changes weekly, and these of a character that the General decides is best for the house.

I know many houses that did a good business under the daily change system, on Trust reels, and I interviewed the proprietors of several theaters a few weeks after the new ruling had had time to show its advantage or otherwise.

For brevity's sake, I will give the gist of a few of these interviews.

Electric, Church St.: "Yes, we get a better service under the new arrangement, but we were satisfied before, so there was no need to improve the quality. But our patronage is less, and if it doesn't improve soon, we'll go Independent."

Class A Theater, Fillmore St.: This is one of the finest houses in the West, and structurally and every other way is well worthy of the name.

"Well, we have no quarrel with the General Film Company. They run their business, and have always served us well. We, however, run this house, and we think we need a daily change. The General says we can't have it, so we run Independent films. That is all there is to it."

National, Steiner St.: "I have nothing to say except that when the General Film Co. tells me I must charge ten cents, and run three changes, I don't do it. I run the Sales Company's pictures; this house is not run by any New York outfit."

Broadway, Oakland: The biggest theater in the West running Independent films. Mr. Smith, the proprietor, owns another house (The Camera) next door, where "General" service is used.

"No, the doings of the Patents Company don't interest me. We run at the Broadway the best Independent films we can get, and show to about 25,000 people every week. I am quite satisfied."

Best, Polk St.: "Sure, we're running Independent reels. We have a strictly residential trade, with absolutely no transients. Now, wouldn't we be wise to take what the General Film Co. has to give us three times a week, with four other houses on the same street doing the same thing!"

I called on a dozen others, but all told the same tale of woe. One wonders if it is a deep laid plot of the Flimco to grab the theaters as they have swiped the exchanges; it would be "so easy" to get a theater on the wrong side of the expense line, and then buy it out at "losing" prices. We shall see.

Meanwhile, you ought to hear the other side of the story. The Independent exchanges are overrun with business.

Miles Brothers' house always was a place wherein courtesy dwelt, but Jim Sarony's smile and inevitable cigar stub, so well known to Pacific picturedom, have changed of late, the one to a broader, brighter look of satisfaction, and the other in an increased degree of vertical inclination. As usual, however, Jim says little, but I honestly believe he would buy the General a drink if he had the time—and when Jim does buy that commodity, it is the real sparkle water all right.

Mark Markowitz, of the California Film Exchange, also feels kindly to the General; cos why? It has increased his business some $500 per week. More about Mark's exchange later.

No, there is no getting around it, the move of the General Company in the matter of three a week changes has been one stupendous blunder. If the Sales Company ever made such an error of judgment, Herb. Miles would have the order rescinded in a week, and dress even more punctiliously to celebrate his lack of wisdom. But then, you see, Herbert doesn't do those foolish things. That's why the Sales Company is the Sales Company.

GET THESE FACTS DOWN FIRMLY IN YOUR MIND

¶ A man or organization can do no better than his best.

¶ Since my plant at Wakefield burned down I have been doing my best, but that best has been under the most nerve-racking conditions imaginable.

¶ All this time, though, I've been sawing wood. I have long aspired to lead them all, and when the task of building a new plant faced me I determined to do the job so that this ambition would be realized.

¶ I set to work determinedly, forgetting the value of the dollar. I just reached out for the best men and things, and paid the price asked like a major. Then I put in my time to see that I got good value for my money.

¶ I got it—and bigger value than I expected. I'm now in proud possession of the first in the business. My acting and mechanical staff is now complete, and I'll give you details regarding it in a few days.

DUPLEX STUDIO

¶ Then watch Powers' Picture Plays, and if they don't surprise you, write—and roast me; I'll deserve it.

RELEASE FOR TUESDAY, DEC. 5th
A Split Reel

"THE LITTLE THIEF"
(Comedy-drama)

"THE ORDER OF BIG HORNS"
(A fraternity burlesque)

FOR SATURDAY, DEC. 9th
A full reel feature

"TWO MEN AND A GIRL"
It's a drama, and the kind you'll long remember

POWERS MOTION PICTURE CO. 511 West 42nd Street NEW YORK CITY

IMP'S FIRST SATURDAY RELEASE

Percy, the Masher, a Delightful Comedy with Which to Start the New Regime

The first offering of the Imp Company in the way of the third, or Saturday release, will be Percy, the Masher, a comedy that is replete with touch and go from start to finish. It is a well interpreted story with a finale that is very funny.

Percy, a self-opinioned young man, imagines he is a hit with the women. In fact, he is certain of it, and when he sees a handsome woman waving a handkerchief in a window opposite he decides he has made a conquest. He waves back, but gets no response. The woman was only replying to a signal from a lady friend across the street. Percy writes a note to the woman on the third floor and sends it by boy, requesting her to meet him that evening and join him in a stroll. The woman is indignant, and shows the letter to her husband. He explodes and is about to go across the way and avenge the insult, but she has a better plan. Dressed in the garments of his wife and heavily veiled, the husband fills the date and meets the young man. They stroll and the supposed woman becomes hungry. Percy is coaxed into a swell cafe and made to spend his week's salary on a lunch, which the husband enjoys along with the discomfiture of the enamored young man. When they return to the flat the husband suddenly jerks off his veil, and what he does to Percy in the way of a scientific hammering delights the eyes of those attracted to the scene. The story ends with the husband congratulated by his wife on the success of the scheme and Percy in jail, disheveled and downcast.

MOVING PICTURE NEWS IS REAL INDEPENDENT SHEET

What "Flickers" says of us:

The Moving Picture News is getting better every day. We can't help but notice its great improvement in the past year, and from our observation we find it is now being read more widely than ever before. The News has long been known as the one staunch supporter of the Independent cause, and they have stood by their guns when it would have been far more profitable to have deserted the ship. We can speak nothing but praise for Mr. A. H. Saunders, proprietor and editor, as he has done much toward placing the Independents in the exalted position that they now command. If you are an Independent, and don't read the News, there is something the matter. The News deserves the support of every Independent exhibitor, and you'll find it chockfull of live news of the day; in fact, it's the only strictly moving picture publication that prints any real news, to speak of, at all.

THE MAKING OF AN AEROPLANE

Lux has come to the front with a very excellent and up-to-date film—a film such as might be welcomed in any educational institution. It is "The Making of an Aeroplane," and shows the machine in order of construction from start to finish. This film is intensely interesting, and is also a specimen of excellent photography. The making of the framework, wings, etc., the placing of the canvas on the ribs, the testing of the motor, the testing of the propeller, all are explained to the satisfaction of the onlooker.

It is a great satisfaction to see the progress of the different Independent companies in the work. It is an educational work in which the moving picture manufacturer is engaged, and we think from present developments that he is realizing this point.

Lux is to be congratulated upon the bringing forth of such an excellent film.

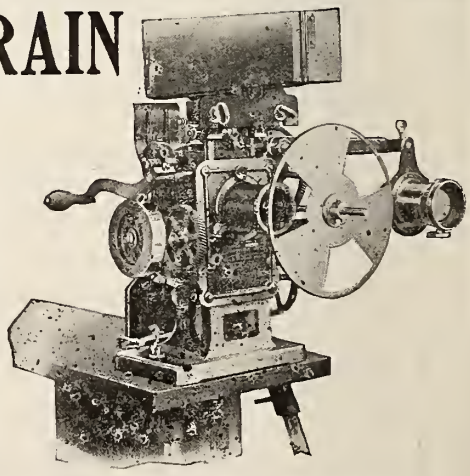
Coalgate, Tex.—Carson & Co., are constructing a moving picture theater on Main street.

IT STANDS THE STRAIN

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6 is built to stand hard usage. It is built to resist knocks; it doesn't "lay down."

Your moving picture machine must be one you can relv on; one which will see you through. POWER'S No. 6 is built with the solidity of a rock. It has the perfect adjustment of the finest constructed watch with almost absolute freedom from noise. It projects a picture without flicker, and will furnish a show which will make friends of your patrons.

POWER'S apparatus has led the Moving Picture world for fourteen years and POWER'S No. 6 heads the procession today. It represents the most advanced thought in the science of Moving Picture Machine manufacture.



Our book, "The Proof of the Pudding," will show you what users think of "POWER'S No. 6" the world over. Write for catalogue D and our special proposition.

THE NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, NEW YORK

For fourteen years the leading manufacturers of moving picture machines.

THE FEEDING OF WILLIE

By T. W. Johnson

Adapted from the Synopsis of A Grandmother's Love—A Solax Release

WILLIE JONES was eight years old. He possessed a grandmother, a mother and a father. Quite sufficient, Willie thought, for one little boy when he had to meet the looks of disapproval when he had made some mistake in his rules of conduct or when he wasn't very well and each one of the three had a different remedy to try.

And now that spring had come there were so many new things to remember. Last year he was only seven—just a very little boy and he stayed in the yard and went for walks with his mother. But this year he was eight—such a big boy now—and he played with the fellows and did such a lot of nice things. But then there was a "mustn't" with every thing a fellow wanted to do; you mustn't sit on the ground 'cause it was damp—and the earth did smell so good in the spring; you mustn't get your feet wet when you went to catch tadpoles—and how could a fellow catch tadpoles without gettin' his feet wet a little bit; and you mustn't take your coat off when you got too warm 'cause you'd catch cold; nor you mustn't climb the trees nor eat green apples nor—well after all it seemed there wasn't much a boy could do in the spring, and yet there were so many delightful things to do.

Once in the spring of the year Willie was eight he forgot about the green apples. He didn't know just how it happened but somehow it did happen and that night—well Willie would rather not think about it.

So, when two weeks later he came in late to supper, with his little trousers lacking a seat and holes torn in his stockings and in his pockets six tell-tale green apples, —well Willie's mamma cried, and Willie's papa was greatly grieved and Willie's grandma just didn't know what to do.

Very solemn and very silent he came into the dining-room and was about to slide into his place at the table with an over-polite "'scuse me for bein' late," hoping his predicament would go unobserved until he had filled his poor empty stomach, when he was stopped short by a "William." He paused with his eyes cast longingly at the bread plate.

"William, stand in the center of the floor," said papa.

William did so very deliberately, but he knew there was corn starch pudding for supper.

"William, you have been climbing a tree. What have you in your pocket? Green apples! Have you eaten any yet?

Willie said he had not, and the castor oil was not administered for they knew he never lied.

Then mamma spoke.

"Billy, how could you disobey? You know the rule for disobedience don't you?"

Willie nodded. He wouldn't get any supper, that was sure, and strawberry jam was his favorite. Oh, well, a fellow must take his medicine.

Then grandma spoke.

"Dear me, I don't believe I'll ever be able to mend those pants. You've left a piece of them somewhere's, Willie."

Willie volunteered no information concerning the whereabouts of the seat of his pants. Silence reigned.

"Go to bed, my son. You shall have no supper. I'm sorry. Good night," said papa in his severest tone.

"Good night, Billyboy. Wash your face and hands good," said mamma huskily.

And grandma could say only "Good night, Willie."

The little boy said good night and walked from the room with great dignity. But he knew there was omelette for supper.

Mr. Jones arose from the table and announced with a remarkable lack of enthusiasm that he thought he would go to the club.

"But you haven't eaten your pudding," said his wife.

"You can just set it in the pantry and I can have it later. I ate too much other supper."

"I can't eat my pudding either," said grandma. "I didn't realize I had eaten so much supper. I think I'll set my pudding over here on the sideboard."

"Yes, it might be nice later," said Mrs. Jones. "I think I'd better put mine in the refrigerator for I've already put cream on it."

Grandma and mamma sat on the porch for a while and walked around the garden a while and locked up the chickens but somehow they didn't have anything to talk about and by nine o'clock they thought they might as well go to bed. Mamma said she had a headache and grandma said she felt a little tired so they went to their respective rooms.

When grandma got to her room she sat down to think. Poor little Willie hadn't had any supper. She couldn't get that fact out of her mind. Maybe he had been punished long enough; she'd tell him he mustn't climb trees any more. Maybe he couldn't go to sleep. It must be awful to go to bed without any supper. Yes, she knew what she would do!

She turned down the light very low so mamma would think she had gone to bed, and with stealthy step and the look of a naughty child she crept silently down the stairs.

Into the dining-room she went, and straight to the corn starch pudding she had left on the sideboard. With the saucer grasped tightly she sped up the stairs as fast as her dear old legs would carry her.

Softly Willie's door was opened and closed again.

"Willie, are you awake," whispered grandma.

"Yes," came the whispered answer. Willie felt instinctively that he was being a party to a conspiracy.

"Could you eat some corn starch pudding?"

"I guess I could."

"Well here it is. Eat it quick and don't say anything about it."

"Thank you, grandma."

All this said in the deadliest of whispers.

When Willie had licked the saucer grandma gave him a kiss and slipped from his room into her's and hid the dish under the bed.

No sooner had she done so than mamma softly opened her door and looked at grandma's transom. All was dark. Cautiously and noiselessly she crept down the stairs and into the dining-room. From there to the refrigerator and corn starch pudding.

"Billy, dear, are you asleep?" said mamma's voice near Willie's bed.

The boy suddenly sat up and rubbed his eyes, "No'm, I ain't asleep."

"Do you think you could eat some corn starch pudding?" said the voice again.

"I guess I could," said Willie a little less sleepily.

"Well, I thought you had been punished long enough perhaps— and if you would promise to be a good boy after this you might have some pudding."

"Where's the puddin'?" Willie wore a slightly bored expression which the darkness veiled. The "good little boy" business was very stale.

When mamma left Willie's room with a well-washed saucer she heard the front door open. Papa had come home. For a moment he stood in the front hall listening. Then he went straight to the pantry, turned on the light, picked up his saucer of corn starch pudding, turned off the light and started from the room on tiptoe.

Willie had just begun to dose off with a comfortable feeling in the inside of him when he heard a noise by his bedside again. This time it was a man's voice and it seemed pretty far away.

"William, my son," it said, "I think perhaps you have been without food long enough. I feel sure you are sorry for what you did so I have brought you some corn starch pudding. Can you eat it?"

"I guess I can," said Willie without noticing the first part of the speech.

As papa received the well-licked saucer from Willie he heard the door of the room open. He quickly slipped the saucer into his coat pocket. He turned and saw grandma standing in the doorway holding a candle. She spoke.

"Is anything the matter? I thought Willie might be sick when I heard you here."

"No, he is all right. I just looked in to see if he was and found him awake," said papa in as unconcerned a voice as he could find.

Mamma heard conversation and was soon in Willie's room. She, too, asked if any thing was wrong and papa again explained matters.

In the meantime Willie was fast traveling away to slumberland. Little cared he what happened now for he was full of pudding.

"Do you know," said grandma, "I think the child might have a little something to eat. He's been awake so long."

"Yes," said mamma, "perhaps it would be best."

And papa said, "Of course it is bad to break rules, but I believe it might be best this time to give him a little something since he has been awake so long." Then laying his hand on Willie's head he said:

"My son, we have decided it is best to give you a little supper, what would you like to have?"

Willie gave a grunt. "I don't want anything."

Mamma thought he must be ill or too hurt to eat. So she urged him, saying, "Couldn't you eat anything at all? Why not, Billy dear?"

Billy dear wanted to be let alone so he could sleep and he thought he might as well settle the whole thing at once. He sat up in bed with determination.

" 'Cause me stummick's full o' corn starch puddin' and I wanta go to sleep," was what fell upon the ears of the astonished family.

Now everybody knew that one dish of corn starch pudding will not come anywhere near filling the stomach of a little boy, so mamma looked at grandma and grandma looked at her, they both looked at papa, and he looked at them. Then mamma laughed and papa grinned foolishly and grandma chuckled.

The next morning when Willie came into the sitting room, after a somewhat late breakfast, he was confronted with enough solemnity of countenances to make up for the night before.

"William, do you wish to tell me that you are sorry for climbing the tree and for the green apples?" said papa in his severest tones.

"No," was Willie's unhesitating reply.

Papa was a bit startled at this turn, but he soon recovered himself and asked, "Son, why did you do it?"

For a fraction of a second Willie hesitated, then he swallowed hard and began:

"Well, you see, Sallie Brown went up the tree and she ain't very big, and she couldn't get down and I had to go up to help her." Another swallow. "And then comin' down I caught me pants on a snag and pulled a piece out of 'em." He was breathing hard as he continued. "And when she got down she put some of her apples in me pockets and—and—I couldn't take 'em out 'cause she wouldn't like it—she give 'em to me."

Mamma was down on her knees with her arms around the boy.

"Why didn't you tell us that before, Billy-boy?" she almost sobbed.

" 'Cause you never asked me," said Willie.

SAINTS AND SINNERS

A Play in One Act by Virginia West—Adapted from Synopsis of Rex Co.

Characters: Jack Dawson, Ned Burton, Mable Burton (his wife), Adele Winthrop, Mrs. Barker (the landlady), Bonny Adams (a friend of Adele).

Scene: Bedroom of Adele Winthrop at the boarding house of Mrs. Barker.

It is nine o'clock at night. Adele, dressed in a loose dressing gown, is half reclining on a couch, reading. She is a woman of about thirty-five, still young looking but with lines in her face which give unmistakable evidence of her past life.

She lets her book fall to her lap for a moment, pushes the hair from her forehead, sighs and returns to her reading.

There is a quick knock at the door. At Adele's "come in" Bonny Adams enters. She is flashily dressed, has blondined hair and an abundant amount of paint.

BONNY: Hello, Adele, old girl. How are you? I haven't seen you for a coon's age.

ADELE: Why, it's Bonny. I hardly knew you. What have you done to your hair?

BONNY: Oh, just changed the color a little. I like a change, don't you? Say, Adele, what in the name of all the gods are you doing here? Why don't you come back to the old neighborhood?

ADELE: I've left there for good. I'm not going back.

BONNY: Well your old friends are there.

ADELE: They were my friends.

BONNY: Well I like that. Say you're gettin' mighty high toned.

ADELE: Look here, Bonny, you know as well as I do what I mean. I've left the old life so I had to leave my old friends. It was very hard in some cases. I hated to leave you, Bon, but you know I had to.

BONNY: No, I don't know! I tell you what, Addie, I don't think it's any use for a woman to try to reform.

She only gets kicked wherever she goes. Ain't it so? Now honest?

ADELE: Well, it is hard sometimes—yes. But what were we getting out of that sort of life? What are you getting that's worth while?

BONNY (crossing quickly and sitting on couch by Adele): Ah, say, old girl, don't philosophize. Say, we did have some good times together, didn't we?

ADELE (softly): Yes, we thought then we were having good times.

BONNY (putting her arm around Adele): Won't you come back, Addie? You remember the nice little flat we had together? We'll have another one. Won't you come?

ADELE (rising and crossing room): Positively no!

BONNY (following her): Say, girlie, don't you ever have any men to come to see you? Have you cut 'em all out? (Adele nods.) Don't you want 'em some times?

ADELE (turning on her fiercely): No, I don't want men! But I do want what I have forfeited the right to—a man who loves me and whom I love; a man who wants me for his children's mother. Every woman wants that. You want it and those other women want it, but you keep stifling the desire and trying to kill it. But I can't do it. It is so strong I can't do it. Yes, I want love! But not the kind of love you know about. I've never had it, I know, but there is something in me that tells me it exists somewhere. (Bonny grins.) Oh, you needn't laugh. I know I can't have it. I'm no better than you are, but I know a few things you don't, that's all.

(Bonny walks around the room in silence, looking at everything. When she speaks it is as if Adele had not been speaking at all.)

BONNY: Say, Adele, who do you suppose told me where you lived?

ADELE (without interest): I don't know.

BONNY: Jack Dawson.

ADELE: Oh, yes, he is living here. I forgot.

BONNY: Yes, I met him on the street. He said he didn't see you very often but you lived here. I saw him as I came in. He's at his old tricks.

ADELE: What do you mean?

BONNY: Oh, he was making violent love to a girl on the front porch. He didn't see me.

ADELE (quickly going toward her and speaking excitedly): Who was it, Bonny? Did you know her? What did she look like?

BONNY: Oh, I see, jealous!

ADELE: Don't say that! You know I hate that man! Tell me what this girl looked like. I think I know and I want to save her.

BONNY: I believe you're telling the truth.

ADELE: Of course I am. You know I never lied, Bonny, no matter what else I did.

BONNY: That's right. Well, she was small and light haired and wore a blue princess dress. That's all I could see.

ADELE: That's enough. It's Mrs. Burton.

BONNY: Married is she?

ADELE: Yes, but she is very young—only eighteen, I believe. Her husband travels and she is left a great deal alone.

BONNY: Well, I guess you better let the matter alone. It's not your pie. She ought to be able to take care of herself.

ADELE: Bonny, we were just as young and inexperienced as this girl once. She has always lived in the country and doesn't know anything about men like this villain.

BONNY: What's he been doing lately? Anything new?

ADELE: No. But he told me two years ago that if I threw him over he would hound my footsteps. He knows how I hate the sight of him so he keeps in my way as much as possible.

BONNY (in a perfectly matter-of-fact voice): Well, I guess he is a dirty dog.

ADELE: Dear, won't you do something for me? When you go down if he is still there tell him I want to speak to him?

BONNY: Yes, I will, but you better take my advice and keep out of the whole thing. I guess I'll go now, it's half past ten.

ADELE: I don't want to hurry you, but I must do this, Bonny. Come to see me again, dear, but don't ask me to come back. Never, never ask me that again.

BONNY (kissing Adele): Good-bye, Addie, I'll come back when I feel like it. Good-bye.

ADELE: Goodby. Don't forget to tell him.

(Bonny exits. Adele goes to couch and sits. She hides her face in her hands for a moment, then goes to dresser, powders her face and arranges her hair a little. There is a knock at the door. Adele admits Jack Dawson. He is about forty-five, tall and well built. He is handsome in spite of having a very dissipated look.)

JACK: Well?

ADELE: I suppose you were surprised to get my message?

JACK: To be frank, I was a bit. Why am I so honored?

ADELE (hesitatingly): When we quarreled two years ago I told you I would never speak to you again. Now I am not only speaking to you but I am going to ask a favor of you.

JACK (an evil twinkle in his eyes): You don't want me back again?

ADELE (starts to speak angrily but remembers her favor and ignores his question): I'll come to the point at once. (Earnestly) I want you to let Mrs. Burton alone.

JACK: You want—— Well I'll be ——. Say, Adele, what the devil you talking about?

ADELE: You know what I'm talking about. I'm not blind and I want to save that little woman from a life of suffering.

JACK: Say, you got a nerve that would fill New York. You throw me over and then two years later you come around trying to take another woman from me. Of all the—What's your game anyhow?

ADELE: It isn't any game. I'm being honest with you. I want you to let her alone.

JACK (sarcastically): So you don't think I'm fit for the girl, don't you? It seems to me you haven't got much room to talk. I guess you've kept pace with me.

ADELE: I don't say I'm better than you are. But I do know innocence when I see it and I have some respect for it. (Going to him and putting her hand on his arm pleadingly.) Oh, Jack, don't, don't do this thing. Mrs. Burton is so young and pure. She loves her husband but he has foolishly left her alone and she is hungry for love. He loves her, too, and you will ruin both their lives without getting any real happiness out of it yourself.

JACK (shrugging his shoulders and walking away from Adele): If a man has such a precious ewe lamb he better stay home and take care of it.

ADELE (crossing to Jack and putting her hand on his shoulder): Jack, in the old days there were not many things I asked of you. Just this once—for the sake of the old days—do what I ask.

JACK (turning quickly toward her and seizing her passionately by the shoulders): The old days! If you'd go back to the way things were then I'd drop this kid in a minute. I want you, Adele, just as much as I ever did. Won't you come?

ADELE (turning wearily away): You say you want me, not that you love me.

JACK (impatiently): Well, I love you then, if that suits you better.

ADELE (in the same weary voice): Yes, I know your kind of love. (As he turns toward the door.) Then you won't do as I ask?

JACK: Why should I? You won't do what I ask.

(Adele sinks on sofa and leans her head back, wearily closing her eyes. Jack opens the door just as a knock sounds. Mrs. Burton is standing outside. She is small and childish looking.)

MRS. BURTON: Oh, I was just coming to ask Miss Winthrop to show me an embroidery stitch. Don't let me interrupt you.

JACK: I was just going. Good night. (Exits.)

Mrs. B. (coming into the room): I didn't know you and Mr. Dawson were acquainted.

ADELE: Yes, we have known each other for some time.

MRS. B.: I never saw you speak to each other.

ADELE (watching her to see the effect of her words): The truth is we had a quarrel some time ago and we were just making it up.

MRS. B.: Oh!

ADELE: Do you know Mr. Dawson very well?

MRS. B. (hesitantly): Why, yes, I—that is we—we haven't known each other so very long, but—but we've become quite good friends.

ADELE: Oh, you said you wanted me to show you a stitch didn't you?

MRS. B.: I did but I don't feel like working any more now. I'll come another time. (Rising to go.)

ADELE: Sit down a while. I want to talk to you a little. You haven't made me a visit for a long time. When is your husband coming back?

MRS. B. (coldly): I don't know. He never tells me.

ADELE: You're very young, aren't you, Mrs. Burton?

MRS. B. (with dignity): Why do you ask me that, Miss Winthrop? Do I act so childish? I am over eighteen.

ADELE (laughing a little sadly): Eighteen. I was once eighteen. Do you know, Mrs. Burton, sometimes you remind me of myself when I was your age. (Thoughtfully.) I came to New York when I was eighteen. It's a pretty big place for a girl to be alone in. You're fortunate to have your husband.

MRS. B. (slowly): He isn't with me very much.

ADELE: Oh, but you have his love and that is a great protection. And your love for him.

(Mrs. Burton drops her eyes and slightly turns her head away.)

ADELE: I feel sort of reminiscent to-night. I've a notion to tell you my story.

MRS. B. (eagerly): Oh, do.

ADELE: It isn't a very pretty story, but I'll make it short. (Adele rises, walks around room and comes back to couch.)

ADELE (in a low voice): I came to the city when I was eighteen and knew nothing of the world. I met a man ten years my senior. He pretended to be a friend and I trusted him. He made love and I listened. He told me lies and I believed them because I loved him. So strongly did he affect me and so little did I know that I was completely overpowered and swept off my feet. He lived with me three months and then he began to neglect me. I asked him if he did not love me any more and he laughed at me. Then he left me and I was thrown aside, a bruised flower for the caress of every passing bee. (Adele pauses. Her face shows that she is suffering greatly but determined to go on.) That man had ruined my life—no, a man cannot really ruin a woman's life in that way if she only knows it. She is just the same if she only wills to be, but I didn't know and so I went under. There isn't any use to tell you of the years as they passed. He came back from time to time but it was always the same thing. Two years ago he came again and wanted to stay. I consented. But he brought me nothing but anguish. I wanted love but he did not give it. He could not for he didn't know what it was. Finally I broke away from him and swore I would never go back. Then I left all my old friends and came here.

(Mrs. B. sits staring in front of her with unseeing eye. Adele reaches over and takes her hand.)

ADELE (tenderly): Dear little girl, you must wonder why I have told you all this. I am going to tell you. I have been watching you and Mr. Dawson and I know what is in your heart. I have heard nothing he has said to you but I am sure that I am right. Don't listen to him, dear. You must not. He does not love you no matter what he says. I know his type. He cannot love any woman. I have known this man and I tell you he is not honest. Won't you listen to me?

MRS. B.: You wrong him. He loves me and would marry me if I were free to marry.

ADELE (softly): And you? Don't you love your husband?

MRS. B.: No. He leaves me alone. He does not love me or he would not do so.

ADELE: He is young and thoughtless. He trusts so completely in your love that he does not think temptation could come to you. You will break his heart and ruin your life.

MRS. B.: I am going with Jack to-morrow.

ADELE (kneeling beside Mrs. Burton with a cry): You must not! You must not! Think what you are doing! Never to have the honest love of a man! Never to be able to say to the whole world, "these are his children and mine." Oh, you don't know what you are doing! I beg you to wait, Mrs. Burton, only wait until you have seen your husband again.

MRS. B. (visibly effected by Adele's pleading but still determined): I am sorry, Miss Winthrop, that you told me your sad story to change me for it can do no good. I cannot believe Jack is not honest.

ADELE (quickly grasping at the last straw of hope): Let me bring him here to talk it over. ; If you trust him you will consent to that.

MRS. B.: Well—very well.

ADELE (going to the door): I'll see if he's in his room.

(Adele exits and Mrs. Burton walks uneasily about the room. Shortly Adele returns with Jack.)

ADELE: I've brought him. Now listen. I've one thing to tell you and then you won't want to talk it over. I wanted you to see him while I——

JACK (angrily): What the devil are you talking about. Mabel, are you going to stay and listen to this insult?

MRS. B. (very slowly): I think I must listen.

ADELE (quickly and with suppressed excitement): Jack Dawson, Mrs. Burton, is the man who came into my life when I was eighteen and who told me not two hours ago that he would throw you over in a minute if I would come to him. Look at his face if you want to see the truth.

(Mabel looks appealingly at Jack but when she sees the look of hatred he gives Adele she realizes the truth.

She throws herself into Adele's arms sobbing. Footsteps are heard in the hall and then a knock at the door. Adele pushes Mabel behind a screen saying "You must not be found in this mix-up." Then she runs to the dresser and puts toilet water on her eyes and goes to the door with her handkerchief held to them. In the meantime the knocking has continued. Adele opens the door and finds the landlady dressed in a wrapper.

MRS. BARKER (angrily): Well, this is a nice way to carry on in a respectable lady's house. I had my suspicions of you two and I guess I was right. A friend told me you had been goin' into each other's rooms. Now then you can just leave the house as soon as it's daylight.

JACK: What the deuce you talking about? You better go back to bed and mind your own business.

MRS. BARKER: See here, Mr. Jack Dawson, you get out of my house this minute, do you hear? (Jack exits, cursing under his breath.) As for you, Miss Winthrop, you will be so kind as to leave in the morning.

ADELE (quietly): I shall leave, Mrs. Barker. (Closes door.)

MRS. B. (coming from behind screen): Oh, Miss Winthrop, I am so sorry! And I am so thankful to you. What will you do now?

ADELE (wearily): Oh, I shall find another boarding place.

(There is a knock at the door. Adele opens it and finds Ned Burton. He has on a hat and traveling coat. He is young and seems excited.)

NED: Is Mrs. Burton in your room?

ADELE: Yes, she was nervous and came in to talk to me. We were so busy talking I am afraid we forgot what time it was. Come in.

(Ned steps into the room. Mabel runs into his arms and clings to him hysterically.)

MABEL: Oh, Ned, promise me you will never go away without me again. Promise me.

NED: Why, little wife, I didn't know you would rather go. Of course I'll take you. You are too precious to lose and somebody might steal you, mightn't they, Miss Winthrop?

ADELE (trying to laugh): Yes, indeed they might. You had better keep her with you.

NED (tenderly): Come, sweetheart, you must have some rest. Good night, Miss Winthrop. I thank you for taking care of her.

ADELE: I'm glad I could. Good night.

(Ned and Mabel go and close the door. She goes slowly to the couch and seats herself, putting back her head and closing her eyes.)

Curtain.

"HAPPY HOBO'S HELP

Nestor is releasing on November 27th a very pretty and amusing comedy, "Happy Hobo's Help." This film is an excellent sample of good photography. The scenes are woven around the love story of a happy young pair. The father of the young lady objects to the union, but firm in their purpose of becoming one, they elope, with the father in hot pursuit on horseback. Meantime, a hobo who has been relieved of coat and hat by another of his kind while sleeping, borrows clothes of a clergyman's wife. The young couple overtaking him on the road mistake him for a clergyman, and quickly alighting from the carriage beseech him in desperation to perform the marriage ceremony. The hobo, quick-witted, takes in the situation at once, and falling in line with his supposed identity does his best for the pair, and does not give away the secret until the father, who has overtaken them, is convinced that the fatal step has been taken, and has remounted his horse, and is on his way home. The hobo then advises the pair to go to the Justice of Peace, which they do. All ending happily. Many funny incidents happen during the unrolling of the picture. For instance, the hobo finds the thief of his clothes, takes them away from him, and gives him the clergyman's suit, which results in Hobo No. 2 getting a thrashing from the old father, who mistakes him for the other one, who worked the deception.

This film is good, clean comedy and a forerunner of the good things one may expect in the future not only from Nestor, but from others who must follow a good example.

Lorain, Ohio.—Lorain Amusement Company, capital $10,000, C. A. Resck, R. C. Horn and J. M. Jones.

Louisville, Ky.—Plans and specifications have been prepared for the Pastime Theater Co., who will erect a new $8,000 theater at 18th and Gallagher streets.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Chas. Alpin Amusement Co. will erect a new theater at Spring and Fifth streets.

McKeesport, Pa.—The Merlin Amusement Co., of Wilkinsburg, will erect a new theater on North First street.

Hanford, Cal.—A new $20,000 theater will be erected on West 7th street.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—Jones, Hill & Hall awarded contract to Pike & Bullard, to erect theater to cost $4,200.

New York, N. Y.—W. H. McElfatrick has prepared plans for a new four-story theater, to be erected at 115th street and St. Nicholas avenue, to cost $125,000.

Streator, Ill.—Chas. Vance has sold the Dreamland to Harry Carroll.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING

The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.

Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

W. E. GREENE
FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE IN NEW ENGLAND

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Start the Season right by using an Independent Service from a Reliable House. We are buying the Output of the Sales Co. and have some choice services open. Write—wire—or call To-Day at

W. E. GREENE FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.
228 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.
Telephone: 2187-3790 Oxford.

WM. LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

LANTERN SLIDES

Just Keep on Going

They kin bray, all th' day, 'bout th' movin' pictur show.
Jump an' rant, an' gallavant, of th' wicked place tu go.
All I've tried, am satisfied with good seats down in front.
Me an' Sal, that there's my gal, likes this here pictur stunt!
They kin howl, rave and scowl, 'bout th' moving pictur plays.
Dance an' shout an' run about, in a hundred different ways.
Right out loud, I say "I'm proud to visit these here scenes."
Every time, rain or shine, me an' Sal we face th' screens.

Jest a tip an' then I'll quit 'bout movin' pictur reels.
Yu begin an' take 'em in, show a fust-class pair o' heels!
Nickelo's air fust-class shows, there's allus somethin' good.
Price is cheap an' yu jest keep on a-goin' as yu should.

* * *

Horace Vinton, scenario editor of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, recently organized, was formerly head of the American Film Co.'s editorial department. He is a prolific and talented writer. Of course, he is a former newspaper man.

* * *

Picture Philosophy

Some men like poker so well that they can't visit a picture theater without thinking of show-downs.

Playing the pictures properly is nearly as difficult as playing the races properly.

Machine operators, like ball players, must be accomplished throwers. It is also the one occupation that is partial to cranks.

Picture theaters are the reel shows nowadays.

* * *

Nursery Jingles

Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
How I wonder what you are!
Hero, villain, in the scene
Flashed upon the picture screen!

* * *

Musicians' Department

Pianist.—You are right. Cease playing "Marching Thro' Georgia" during Civil War dramas.

Pleasant Grove.—We are pleased to hear that your audiences were pleased with your singing of "Just When the Sun Went Down." Try them next with the later song hits: "After the Ball," and "Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage."

Drummer Boy.—The unusual restlessness noticed among your audiences is probably due to the fact that you are overexerting yourself. If possible, refrain from beating the long-roll during death scenes.

Mudsock.—No. "Old Hundred" was not specially written for feature films.

Curious.—The "Turkey Trot" may prove acceptable to Thanksgiving Day.

* * *

Jones' Good Fortune

Box—"Jones has accepted a responsible position with a film manufacturing company."

Cox—"An actor, eh?"

Box—"Yes. He signed up to play the cake of ice in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'"

* * *

Hail to the Operator

It's the picture operator that makes the wheels go round,
In entertainment palaces which everywhere abound.
He turns the crank on the machine bringing forth a story.
And swelters in a little box while others get the glory.

He turns and turns and turns,
And churns and churns and churns.
As off the slides the picture glides,
The spotlight steadily burns.

It's the picture operator that makes the wheels go round,
In entertainment palaces that everywhere abound.
He turns the crank on the machine bringing out the reel;
There would be no picture palaces if he didn't turn the wheel.

He works and works and works,
From labor he never shirks.
Turns and churns, perspires and burns
As the celluloid slip he jerks.

—William Lord Wright.

THE PURE IN HEART

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," is a trite Scriptural quotation. Purity in heart and mind is to be desired above all else with the one exception of charity—which covereth a multitude of sins. The Purity Congress of the United States recently held annual convention at Columbus, Ohio. At that meeting, some well-intentioned delegates, but misguided withal, made the public assertion that moving picture plays and moving picture theaters were the causes of what was asserted to be an alarming increase in juvenile crime and of juvenile criminals.

It is authoritatively stated that the speaker, who was most vehement in his attack upon the animated picture industry, admitted that he rarely entered the moving picture theater. Notwithstanding this fact, the crusader deliberately scored a source of entertainment that is doing more to provide educational amusement for the young to-day than has ever before been even attempted.

Rev. Billy Sunday, the baseball evangelist, recently converted 7,500 persons in Springfield, Ohio, during the course of a six weeks' religious campaign. He attacked the ball room, the card table, church hypocrisy, intemperance, and the legitimate theater. But never once during his many fearless attacks upon wickedness and temptation, as he sees them, did Rev. Sunday mention the moving picture theater, or the moving picture play. Sunday arose from the ranks. He knows what it is to be poor; to have only a few dimes in pocket for innocent diversion. Billy Sunday is close to the C. P., meaning the Common People. Possibly, he appreciates that the boys and the girls who visit the picture shows are led to forget the dance hall, the bar rooms and pool rooms, and those other pitfalls that tend to entrap the feet of the unwary. In the picture show the scenes of profane and sacred history are flashed upon the screen; Shakespeare's and Milton's classic dramas are shown; scenes from our own and from foreign lands are reproduced, together with the work of the world's refined poets. Probably the well-meaning delegates to the Purity Congress did not know of these things; maybe they did not know that the cheap melodrama, once so tempting to the young, has been relegated to the rear through the medium of the picture show; perhaps they were not aware that every picture is carefully inspected by cultured and educated members of a Board of Censorship before being released for distribution. We will be charitable and will prefer to think that the uncautious assertions were made through ignorance and mis-directed zeal.

Apropos of other rash allegations made at this Purity Congress, the Ohio State Journal, of Columbus, O., scene of the convention, has the following editorial comment:

"One speaker at the Purity Congress ought to have been peremptorily squelched, and that was when he insinuated that there was a great deal of waywardness on the part of the girls in the department stores. There is no justice in such reflections; in fact, there is the rankest kind of injustice. The great body, the almost unanimous body of department store girls, live lives of honor and usefulness. Taking a thousand girls in any branch of life, and one will find no more thoughtful, self-respecting, pure-minded girls than he will find in the department stores. There may be exceptions, but there are exceptions anywhere, but so few, however, in this branch of duty, as to warrant no one to cast reproach upon it. All just men and women will be careful not to allow a rare recreancy to awaken a general suspicion, at least, when it touches the sacred borders of a woman's honor."—William Lord Wright.

GIGANTIC FEATURE PRODUCTIONS

TWO GREAT THREE-REEL SUBJECTS ARE NOW READY

STATE AND TERRITORY RIGHTS SELLING FAST. ACT QUICK—DELAY MAY LOSE YOU MONEY.

"LOVE AND AVIATION"

A three-reel subject full of sensational and wonderful aerial feats and one of the most realistic film subjects ever produced.

"ZIGOMAR"

Great French Detective story. Dealing with one of the most desperate criminals ever known. Wonderful transformation scenes. Bound to hold audiences spellbound until the finish.

LITHOGRAPHED POSTERS—PHOTO LOBBY DISPLAY

THESE PICTURES ARE COPYRIGHTED AND WE WILL PROTECT ALL THOSE BUYING STATE OR TERRITORY RIGHTS.

WRITE FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLETS.

THE FEATURE & EDUCATIONAL FILM CO.

SOLE OWNERS—COLUMBIA BLDG., CLEVELAND, O.

IN A MINOR CHORD

Remove your hats, gentlemen, for this is written in recognition of the young man who steps forth and entertains the audience with a vocal selection. I refer to that willing worker, the illustrated song singer. In the smaller theaters throughout the length and breadth of our fair land, his name is legion. It wouldn't be a real-for-sure moving picture show, to the majority, without Percy, or Clarence, or Thomas, or George giving us an up-to-date selection before the real entertainment. The illustrated song singer has been unhonored and unsung long enough. An appreciation is due him. The key of E, please, and join in heartily:

Percy sings in the Nickelo,
Picture songs with first-run show;
Steps to the front, quite debonair,
Hums for a moment the latest air.
Pianist, absently, fingers her "rat,"
Gives side-combs a friendly pat;
Dimpled fingers then strike the key;
It's a gladsome time for gay Percy!
His pretty girl is in parquet row—
Who wouldn't sing at a first-run show?

Percy sings in the Nickelo,
Picture slides the lanterns throw;
Describes pale Luna, with plaintive cry,
Warbles of forests, fields and sky,
Sings of the maiden, all forlorn,
Of dear, old mother, pale and worn;
Pitches his ballad in key of E,
It's a pleasant time for bold Percy!
A certain lass enjoys it, so—
Who wouldn't sing at a first-run show?

Percy sings in the Nickelo,
Sometimes high, sometimes low,
Pictures red, and white and blue
Flash on the screen in front of you.
Scenes are oft-times flecked with "rain,"
But to the songster it's all the same.
He sings of wealth and poverty,
Time of his life for staunch Percy!
Smiles at his "steady" in parquet row—
Who wouldn't sing in a picture show?

It did my heart good to see the likeness of Horace Vinton looming up from a page of the Moving Picture News recently. I last encountered Horace in Little Old New York last Spring. He had severed his connection with the American Film Company, and had come East to consider several flattering offers. I met him in the lobby of the old Continental Hotel, and he was as buxom and debonair as of yore. I venture to predict that Vinton's subtle touches will be readily perceived by the knowing ones when the Shamrock Company starts its releases. A versatile and ready writer and a royal good fellow is Vinton.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

THE WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE

OF NEW YORK

CITY CUSTOMERS ARE ALL SATISFIED

NOW READY TO CATER TO OUT-OF-TOWN BUSINESS

LET US HEAR FROM YOU

Telephone 2892 Bryant 2893

Forty-Fifth St. Ex. Bldg.
145 WEST 45th STREET

GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP

THE REPUBL

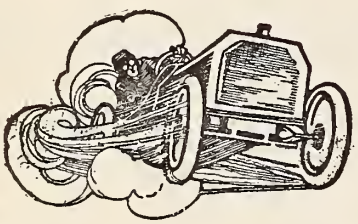
PRES

Tuesday, Dec. 5

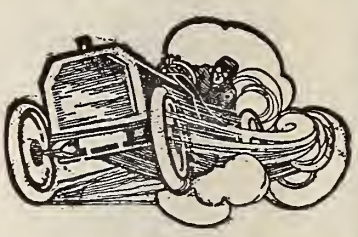
INTERNATIONAL

AUTO RACES

GRAND PRIZE VANDERBILT PRIZE TIEDEMAN TROPHY SAVANNAH CHALLENGE



Every inch a thrill.
Every foot a gasp.
Every scene a marvelous display of death defying, dare devil driving by men of nerves of steel



HERE IS AN OPPORTUNITY TO BEAT YOUR TRUST COMPETITOR WITH AN Exclusive Independent Feature

SAY TO YOUR EXCHANGE:

"GET A REP"

REPUBLIC FILM CO.

GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP

GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP

IC FILM CO.

ENTS

Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 16 and 17

IN THE DAYS OF THE

SIX NATIONS

MOHAWKS ONEIDAS SENECAS CAYUGAS ONONDAGAS TUSCARORAS

A beautiful romance woven into this pictorial version of the greatest event in Indian History.

HISTORICAL EDUCATIONAL ENTRANCING

BOOK IT NOW, LEST YOU FORGET

SAY TO YOURSELF: "I MUST

GET A REP"

Suite 804-812, 145 West 45th Street, N. Y.

THROUGH MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP

GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP GET A REP

OUR MUSIC COLUMN

Ella McD., Indiana, writes: "In my humble way I would like to add a few words of praise for your music department. It has been of greater help to me than any other one thing that I know of. Not long ago, I had the pleasure of playing to the picture "Romeo and Juliet," and followed your suggestions as to how to play to it (published a short time ago), and received quite a good deal of praise for it, and I feel as though I must write you and let you know, for the praise really belongs to you—not me. Viva la music department! Let your good work go on, for I know it is (or should be), appreciated by every reader of The Moving Picture News."

The above letter speaks for itself; we will let it go just as it stands. Come again; we like to receive letters like it, for it makes us feel as though our time had been well spent.

D. J. S., Rhode Island, writes: "I have been reading your articles in the Moving Picture News with much interest. Will you kindly send me a list of Agitatos and Hurrys?"

The list has been forwarded to you.

From Mgr. S. L. S., Kentucky: "In reply to your letter of a short time ago, I must say I agree with you in regard to the music proposition. The list of music you enclosed me was just what I was in need of, and it certainly came in handy for my pianist, in playing for Rex's 'The Dagger and the Rose.' While I have it in mind I desire to ask another favor of you, can you give me the address of the firm or company who are putting out a book of incidental music, with little tags on the pages to turn them by, and that also have the music indexed on these tags, so you can turn readily from one to another. Again thanking you for the interest you have taken in my behalf, I am very truly yours."

Bully for you, it is indeed a pleasure to find a manager who has the interest of his music and musicians enough at heart to try and help out in finding suitable music. It is a safe bet that he has just as good projection, as can be had, and that he is a man worth working for, for a manager who interests himself in his music will as a matter of course be just as exacting of his operator as he is of his musician. No, I do not know of such a book—if any of our readers know of such a book, they will confer a favor on me by informing me of the publisher, so I can let our good friend know of it.

Taylorsville, Ill., writes: "Will you kindly send me a list of heavy music, such as I might use in battle scenes and ancient pictures. Will say I have been using the following and found them very useful: Parts of "Poet and Peasant," "Martha," "Zampa," "Raymond's," etc.

Answer—The above are very good, and I might suggest that you try "Boreas," a northern idyll; "Sirocco," a southern serenade; "Erirus," an eastern dance, and "Zephyr," a western episode; all from the suite of "The Four Winds." In regard to the "heavies" I can only refer you to some of the publishers of dramatic music who may have what you desire. You might write G. A. Frelinger, 1012 Ferry Street, Lafayette, Ind., who issues a book of dramatic music called "Motion Picture Piano Music"; it might be just what you desire.

Drummer, from New Hampshire, writes: "My Dear Mr. Long, I will be plain with you from the start and state that I am very new at the business of playing for pictures and working the effects for them, and as I do not possess an outfit (nor do I know what it is necessary to procure), I write you for information on the subject. What is necessary for me to have and where can I get the best. I do not want anything cheap so long as I must get them. I want only the best and then intend to apply myself, and try to be as good as the best. Any information you will give me on the subject will be a great favor to me. With best wishes for your continued success, I am, yours truly,

Answer.—I am indeed glad to be of as much service to you as possible, and, I herewith append a list of some of the most essential effects for ordinary use. Rooster Crow, Hen Cackle, Cow Bawl, Canary or Mocking Bird Whistle, Baby Cry, Cyclone Whistle, Cuckoo Whistle, Tug Boat Whistle (one tone), Locomotive Whistle (two tones), Steam Boat Whistle (one or three tone), Police Whistle, Auto Horn, Cow Bell, Railroad Imitation, Locomotive Bell Imitation, Anvil Imitation, Horsehoof Imitation, Pair of Sand Blocks, Self-loading Pop Gun, Police Rattle, Tom Tom, Chinese Horn or Musette, Chinese Wood Block, Slap Stick, Sleigh Bells, Castanets, Slide Whistle for Air Brake Imitation, etc. I presume you have drum's, cymbals, etc. The above are all necessary "traps," and if you are in a position to secure them by all means get a set of Cathedral Chimes. Another nice feature in the musical line is a set of Deagan's Electric Saucer Bells, such as you see advertised on the back page of our issue of September 23. They are a real attraction, and are played from a keyboard just the same as a piano, and are indeed a real attraction to any theater. While it is not the purpose or intention of this department to "boost" any manufacturer, we are pleased to give you the following addresses as being manufacturers of as good drums, traps, etc., as it is possible to secure, and if you patronize any of them you will be accorded the most courteous treatment: Leedy Mfg. Co., 1063 East Palmer Street, Indianapolis, Ind.; J. C. Deagan, 3810 North Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.; Jas. H. Ward Mfg. Co., Gary, Ind.

I trust the list of "traps" is what you desired, and know that any purchase you make of the above mentioned firms will meet with your entire approval. If we can be of further service to you let us know.

J. B. K., Tonopah, Nevada, writes: "I would indeed be glad if you will give me a list of music (both popular and classic, as well as melo-dramatic). I am new at the game, but am trying to work so as to be able to take the management of a theater in the near future, and desire to know as

The list is now on its way to you.

M. I. B., Green Bay, Wis., writes: "Please tell me what I am to do under circumstances such as these: Our manager allows the operator to run the pictures so fast that at times it is almost impossible to 'cue' the pictures as they should be. The horses race across the picture until they look like rabbits almost, and the actors themselves, rip and tear through it like they were mad—how can I be expected to give satisfaction playing to pictures, run in such a manner?"

I can only say I am very sorry for you. All you can do is to do your best, but I agree with you, the inducements are not much in a case of this kind. I must differ with you, however, when you say "Our manager" and "the operator"—your employer is not a manager in any sense of the word or he would not under any circumstances allow pictures to be run in such a manner, and the operator is not an operator or he in turn would not do it—do your best, and hope—that's the best advice I can give you.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS

A new independent manufacturing and importing film company entered the field last week in the person of the Feature & Educational Film Company of Cleveland, which plans to handle only feature films of from one to four reels, to be released at the rate of one a week.

Mr. E. Mandelbaum, the president of the concern, also is president of the Lake Shore Film & Supply Company of Cleveland. He has been connected with the film business since its infancy, and is thoroughly versed with all angles of it.

The first two feature subjects released by the F. & E. Company are "Zigomar" and "The Aviator." The first is in three reels, depicting the life of a noted criminal who terrorized every country in Europe by his daring acts. The pictures for this subject were taken in nine different countries. "The Aviator" is a thrilling dramatic story, in which a well-known French aviator, Flarion, performs remarkable aerial feats with a woman in his biplane as a passenger.

These two subjects are being sold by the state and territory system. The F. & E. Company's method of disposing of its products will be by the state and territory rights method, and its plan is to supply exchanges and managers throughout the country with features, for which there is a big demand.

PRESTO

Poster frames, the best poster frame made, $1.75 each in quantities up to five. Six or more $1.50 each, cash with order.

ELECTRA Pink Label Carbons 5/8 x 6 soft cored, $2.00 per 100. $19.00 per 1,000, cash with order.

Swaab Film Service Co.

Pioneer Film Exchange
129 N. EIGHTH STREET PHILADELPHIA
Power's and Motiograph Machines

HAVE YOU WRITTEN YET FOR PARTICULARS CONCERNING THE

MOVING PICTURE TALES

A PERSONAL LETTER FROM ALFRED H. SAUNDERS TO THE EXHIBITOR

MR. EXHIBITOR:

You no doubt have been aware that for some time past some of the small dailies throughout the country, and, sorry to say, one or two of our cosmopolitan dailies, have published editorials denouncing the moving picture exhibitor, his films, his theaters and his business in general. It behooves the moving picture man to protect himself, his business, and his patrons, and it is for this reason that I have started the publishing of a periodical called the "MOVING PICTURE TALES," which will be devoted exclusively to the publishing of short stories of the different films shown on the screens of the moving picture theaters throughout the country.

This paper will enable you to attract a larger and more intelligent audience to your theater and will maintain an interest that cannot be produced in any other way. There will be no cost to you, but rather a profit.

Yours for the Education of the People,

Alfred H. Saunders

Don't delay, write now, as only a limited First Edition of 25,000 will be disposed of

5c

Every Exchange Man Will Need 1000 Copies There Are 61 Exchanges

Let Us Know At Once How Many

COMET

RELEASED MONDAY, DECEMBER 4th

BILLY'S LETTERS

A comedy of stage life well acted and most effectively set.

RELEASED FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8th

THE DEAD CANARY

The Comet's entire stock company is seen to marked advantage in this powerful drama, bucolic life and love.

Through Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

COMET FILM CO., 344 East 32nd Street, NEW YORK

A NEAR TRAGEDY IN THE SIX NATIONS

Apropos of the devotion of moving picture performers to their duty, the heroism of one of the performers in the Six Nations, viz., Miss Fowler, playing the part of Cora, stands very prominently in the foreground.

Monday, November 13, was bitter cold; the wind was blowing a gale, and the scanty-clad Indians were gathered about campfires, their teeth chattering and their naked bodies blue with the cold.

When the director informed them that he was ready for the scene at the cave, their teeth began to chatter anew at a greater rate of speed, for the scene called for most of them to enter the water waist deep.

Hawkeye, the Major, and the two girls were seeking a safe hiding place from the Indians, and the only available spot was a cave at one end of the stream. Intent upon reaching the cave in a hurry, the Major took the younger girl, Alice, in his arms, while Hawkeye took the other one, and waist deep in the freezing water they waded towards the entrance. Jast as Hawkeye was about to enter, his foot slipped and Miss Fowler was thrown into four feet of icy water. The Indians forgot their hatred and the white trappers their fear as several of them leaped into the water and tried to rescue Miss Fowler.

Drenched to the skin and much frightened Miss Fowler was rushed into the waiting automobile, but when she learned that the scene had to be retaken on account of the accident she insisted that it be retaken at once as the light was failing very fast. In spite of all arguments she had her way and the scene was retaken. Not until she was assured that everything was O. K. would she consider changing her wet clothes for dry ones. Fortunately the brave little woman suffered no ill-effects from her cold bath. Here's to the moving picture women, the bravest and most enthusiastic lot that ever amused a public. God bless them.

"Old Man Sprockets"

Sure knows good service.

"It's great to get what you pay for"—
Sez he.

"24 Reels to pick from—well that's sure some class."

"Gee, why didn't I change sooner."

"ME FOR THE"

Anti Trust Film Co.

123 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

THE ENERGETIC H. L. MILES ON THE ROAD TO SAVANNAH

Flanked by an army of expert camera men carrying their rapid fire camera guns and ammunitions, the Napoleonic general manager of the Republic Film Company began his long trip to the seat of the famous automobiles manœuvres, to be held at Savannah, Ga.

Armed with an iron-clad contract, signed by the head officials of the Automobile Club of Savannah, giving the Republic Film Company exclusive rights to film this greatest event of automobile racing history, the energtic H. L. seemed very pleased with himself and the world at large.

Before entering the train Mr. Miles assured the writer that no pains or expense would be spared to produce a reel second to none. "It is my intention to take at least 6,000 feet of film and then boil it down to one reel.

"I shall have my men stationed at every interesting and dangerous point of the course, for each race, and if there are any thrills, you can be sure my camera will be on the job to record them.

"One thing is certain; the Independent exhibitors will be the only ones to show the filming of this great event as my contract gives me exclusive rights and I have the assurance of ample protection against any invaders, as the entire course will be policed by men under order of the Automobile Club of Savannah."

"All aboard," shouted the guardian of the train, and with a rush, the general and his army started on their journey.

Great Northern

THE "KING PIN" OF QUALITY FILMS

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25th

THE THEFT OF MONA LISA

A splendidly enacted comedy with a novel and interesting plot. Length 824 feet.

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2nd

THE PENALTY OF HER AMBITION

A strong and appealing dramatic production depicting how a young couple's domestic happiness was restored to them through the devoted influence of their child.

ALL FIRST-CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT!

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

7 EAST 14TH STREET, NEW YORK

ALL FILMS SOLD THROUGH THE SALES COMPANY

DELAWARE AND THE EAST—MOVING PICTURE OF FRUIT INDUSTRY

The Great Northern Railway has given us a glimpse into the wonderful irrigated territories of the West—territories which not more than ten years ago were barren wastes, through demonstration by moving picture and lantern slide. It has brought the West near to us—it has educated the Eastern people to a knowledge of what can be actually done with the dried up, barren soil of the Western deserts. It seems to me that as such has been the case in the West, why is it that we cannot do likewise in the East with the fertile fruit-bearing districts with which we have been blessed. There is a beautiful, healthy, wholesome atmosphere surrounding the spirit of the soil, and moving pictures of the apple and peach orchards of the East, with their beautiful crimson and gold lusciousness, hanging in tempting abundance among the autumn foliage, would be welcome in every moving picture in the country, especially in the great cities, where the people's idea of the cultivation of fruit is limited in a great many instances to the meagre specimens which the majority of the population of a city like New York are able to buy. It seems to me that it would alleviate to a great extent the privations of the poorer classes who have so little opportunity to wander among the beautiful orchards of the Eastern shores of America.

I was very much impressed in attending the Farm Fair at Madison Square Garden last week with the wonderful produce and development of our Eastern States. As I walked about among the different exhibits I found myself ever and anon stopping short in front of the booths which were filled with beautiful red and golden apples, lured by the tempting scent of the fruit, of otherwise sweet association. Delaware, famed for her luscious peaches, showed herself also as a great apple-growing State, for beautiful was the exhibition which she gave of perfect apple fruit. Won't some of our moving picture specialists go and get us some pictures of the beautiful autumn glory of not only Delaware, but our own State, New York.

A NEW VOLUME BY ROBERT GRAU

"The Stage in the Twentieth Century" is the title of the third of Robert Grau's series of volumes of stage history. The newer work will, however, treat greatly on the vast development of the scientific and mechanical phases of stage progress.

Mr. Grau has been impressed with the advent of various automatic devices, together with the remarkable achievements of the motion picture, the phonograph and the player piano, and his research has uncovered an almost unbelievable encroachment of science and artifice on what for centuries has been the realm of players and singers, who at last seem to realize the situation and are now themselves affiliating with the inventors.

The new volume will be the largest in size of the Grau series, consisting of nearly 500 pages of text and more than 300 portraits, and will be issued early in the new year.

THE CURTIS ADVERTISING COMPANY

Illustrated in the above cut is the cover of a little booklet they are getting out of all the Independent actors of any prominence in the country. It is neatly gotten up and is well worth perusal and is one of those little things that will take with the audiences to whom they may be distributed, in addition to being a good advertisement for every exhibitor by having his own name on the booklet.

AN ALBUQUERQUE CORRESPONDENT WRITES

I want to add while writing that the finest picture theater and orchestra in the Southwest is in Albuquerque, called the "Past Time." It is the cleanest, best that I have visited.

The orchestra is especially very fine.

Lorain, Ohio.—Lorain Amusement Company, capital $10,000, G. A. Resck, R. C. Horn and J. M. Jones.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Fairview Amusement Co., capital $6,000; O. W. Bennett, Henry Siebel and Karl Lueders.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—E. Mehesy, Jr., will erect an addition to theater at 272 South Main street, to cost $4,000.

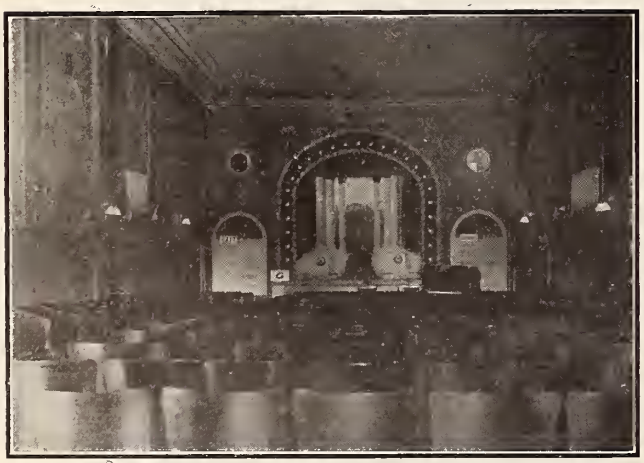
Aurora, N. Y.—Aurora Grand Opera House Co. will erect theater; capital $10,000; John T. Henderson, E. K. Henderson and Chas. Lamb.

PROMINENT INDEPENDENT HOUSES

THE NATIONAL THEATER

Kohl & Heins, Proprietors, Cleveland, Ohio

EXTERIOR VIEW NATIONAL THEATER



INTERIOR VIEW NATIONAL THEATER

Princeton, N. J.—Plans are being formed for the establishment of a new theater at Princeton University, to cost $200,000.

Richmond, Cal.—Turner & Dahken are engineering the plan for the erection of a new moving picture show at Fifth and McDonald streets.

YALE THEATER, CHICAGO, ILL.

Among the Chicago South Side Moving Picture Theaters worthy of special notice, attention is directed to the Yale Theater, at 336 West Sixty-third street, about two blocks west of Wentworth Avenue. It is owned and managed by Mr. P. Lunn, and has a seating capacity of eight hundred persons.

As will be seen by the accompanying engraving of the front, the theater seems to have been built into the lower part of an ordinary apartment building; the front is made attractive by varied colored electric lights on the arch over the entrance. The lobby of the theater is large and spacious and is decorated by attractive posters of coming features. In the interior decorative scheme green and red predominate. Twelve shaded sidelights give ample illumination. Four electric fans regulate the ventilation, providing the abundance of pure air at all times. The operating room is at the rear of the theater, and is situated a little to one side of the center, causing the pictures to be thrown at an angle which made a great deal of difficulty at first in producing a good picture. The operator, Mr. Otis, a member of local No. 2, delivers the goods upon the screen, as the pictures shown are better than the average in Chicago. The machine used is an Edison.

The Yale Theater was formerly a straight vaudeville house, but at present a straight picture program is given, consisting of three reels of first run pictures supplied by the H. & H. Film Exchange. One spot and one illustrated song add to the quality of the evening's program. The price of admission is five cents, which is never raised on account of special features or other extra expense incurred by the manager in giving a better show than usual. A piano player and a man on the stage add to the reality by playing the pictures.

SUBURBAN THEATER
Charles Jacobson, Proprietor, Omaha, Neb.

PHOTO TAKEN JUST BEFORE AN "IMP MATINEE" FOR CHILDREN

To Mr. Lunn belongs the credit of making his house the good paying proposition which it is. By persistent advertising and showing only the best pictures the Yale has steadily advanced to the front, although opposed by strong competition on all sides.

THE GOAT

When that ancient guy, Uncle Si, falls for the three shell game,
Or Johnson's mule, like some pesky fool, stumbles, then goes lame;
And Mrs. Jenkins' chickens prove some bold intruder's pickins'—
The Logansville Tri-Weekly Thrill,
Blossoming in first-page spill;
Has its say in headlines gay:
ALL CAUSED BY THE PICTUREPLAY!

When some small boy, who wants a toy, receives a real, cheap gun;
In all directions, no objections, he fires it off in fun.
And Mrs. Anderson's minor heir, of solid shot received full share—
The Daily Curse, of Lonesomehurst,
Redinks a fresh out-burst.
Sensationally sings its lay:
ALL CAUSED BY THE PICTUREPLAY!

When a dippy girl, with head in curl, reads Bertha M. Mud,
Then in her bean there comes a scene demanding human blood!
And Mrs. Peterson's little child quickly starts running wild—
The Exposition, in special edition,
Feels lofty editorial mission.
Stars a play in pleading way:
ALL CAUSED BY THE PICTUREPLAY!

When good T. R. again is Czar, and rules o'er this broad land;
When great, big Bill receives a gill of Presidential sand;
When old Doc Cook and Peary cease to make the people weary—
Maybe the Daily Yellows
Will be easy on us fellows!
Mildly say, some wondrous day:
ALL CAUSED BY THE PICTUREPLAY!

—William Lord Wright.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH
THE COMEDY FILM

BY LEONARD DONALDSON

A RUMOR is abroad there are not sufficient comedy films. That there is truth in this rumor I do not doubt; but the type of comedy film which the average exhibitor expects perhaps differs from my opinion of humor. There are comedies and comedies; there is the crockery-smashing shave picture, to which I have recently referred; there is the type represented by Foolshead, Max, Tontoline and others, and there is the comedy film which contains a dramatic vein. Should the exhibitor refer to the Foolshead type as the embodiment of humor, he could not have chosen a better one. Foolshead finds friends everywhere, and his antics never fail to touch the risibilities of the most exacting audience. But let us analyze this type of film. At once we find nothing natural or commonplace; everything exaggerated.

The majority of his "stunts" are posed. It is not real humor; it is the ludicrous burlesque, the portrayal of the impossible, which creates the laugh. But Foolshead remains a favorite, and his comedies are justly popular.

Mingled with the stern realities of life there is a lighter vein. There is humor in everyday life—commonplace humor—in the street, the office and the home. This pleases us at the time of its occurrence and under particular circumstances, but thrown upon the silent screen it at once loses its power of humor. It is the burlesque and the impossible which is needed. I agree. But even in the portrayal of the ludicrous it is possible to infuse variety. This is where the comedy film is at fault; this is the reason the public are tiring of the inevitable chase and rough-and-tumble film.

The comedy film helps us to appreciate the more serious side of cinematography, but it should not be allowed to predominate; it should not be allowed to degenerate. Comedies are needed, and are an essential feature in any program, but those are too many. The demand is increasing because many are offered, and the result is that they are becoming weak, pointless and absurd. Exhibitors realize this and so do their patrons. There is too much forced fooling in the comic film. This is laconic and quite unnecessary. Humor has fled from this type of film, if ever it possessed any, long, long ago. The smashing of furniture, knocking over of tip-carts, followed by the chase, appeals only to the imbecilic or the infant. The characters should at least appear to be endowed with a modicum of brains. The chase is funny, I admit, and is capable of many variations. But it is not varied. The infuriated mob on its work of destruction bent always wreaks its fury on the market woman, the painter on the ladder and the unoffending peddler. We have been taught to expect this, and we should be surprised if we did not get it.

All this points to the fact that either the producer's conception of the humorous is extremely limited, or that picture patrons are extremely conservative. This last I do believe. The public want convincing, and perhaps they do not evince an immediate enthusiasm at an innovation, but they soon submit and grow to like the new order of things.

The comedy dramas are not so numerous, but they are increasing in number and improving in quality. Many producers—especially American producers—are making their dramas a feature of their releases. The effect, I am pleased to note, is beneficial, and gradually patrons of the picture playhouse are being educated up to that higher and more enjoyable form of humor which cannot fail to have a lasting benefit.

LUX FILMS SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES

RELEASED FRIDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1911

Bill as a Veterinary Surgeon

A COMEDY Length 488 Feet

The Making of an Aeroplane

INDUSTRIAL Length 419 Feet

A most interesting subject on the making of an Aeroplane, giving in a concise manner the details of the work, while the concluding views are of the Aeroplane soaring higher and higher in the clouds.

R. PRIEUR, 10 East 15th Street, NEW YORK CITY

TELEPHONE 3427 STUYVESANT

Sold only through Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

ONLY EASTMAN RAW STOCK USED.

MOVING PICTURES IN THE PLAYGROUNDS

E. M. Best, Assistant Supervisor of Playgrounds, Winnipeg, Manitoba

The value of motion-pictures for educational purposes has been frequently pointed out. Last year several cities reported that they had given moving-picture entertainments in their recreation centers, with good results. It has remained for the city of Winnipeg, however, to take the first step in using motion pictures as a medium for a definite program of popular education.

In less than twenty-five years Winnipeg has grown from a crude outpost of civilization into a splendid, modern city. Park and school sites are purchased years before they are needed. As a result of this policy the city has nearly forty splendid modern school buildings and nearly everyone of them has a full city block for a playground. Small parks are scattered all over the city and two big recreation parks are in process of making.

Three years ago, the city fathers took over the newly started playground system and provided funds sufficient to equip and maintain five playgrounds during the summer months. This year the city council unanimously voted $12,000 for thirteen playgrounds. As the school grounds are available and are of ample size, the commission is able to devote the yearly appropriation entirely to apparatus and supervision. Each summer a definite program of games, athletics, gymnastics, folk dancing, and swimming is carried through. This year several special features were arranged, such as an exhibition of playground activities on Civic Holiday at the new City Park; a Tooth-Brush Day, as part of a campaign on dental hygiene; an inter-playground competition or play-fest in which nearly two thousand competed; and finally a series of moving-picture entertainments.

These moving-picture entertainments were one of the most successful features and fully demonstrated their value as a means of reaching the people. The programs were put on outdoors every night for over two weeks. Each playground was visited in turn and the children were urged to bring their parents. No admission fee was charged and the attendance was both large and enthusiastic.

The films were carefully selected and the vital points in each were clinched by the use of slides. The use of slides also made it possible to advertise the purpose and ideals of the playgrounds, and to stimulate feelings of social ownership and civic pride. In addition to the pictures a musical program by gramophone was arranged.

One of the motion-picture exchanges made a very favorable rate for the use of the films, screen and machine, and also supplied the operator for the series. The machine was mounted on a truck and placed about 100 feet away from the school building. A heavy stage cable connected the machine to the switchboard in the basement. The eighteen-foot screen was hung from the second story windows of the school, and in less than half an hour the performance was ready to begin.

As soon as it was dark enough, the director had the smaller children sit on the ground in a semi-circle about thirty feet back from the building. In a short speech he welcomed the parents to the playground and made such special announcements as were necessary, and then the performance began. First there were a few slides telling about the playgrounds, such as:

"This playground is conducted by the City Playground Commission. They conduct thirteen playgrounds during July and August."

"These playgrounds are free. They aim to make strong bodies, keen minds, and good citizens."

Then came the first film, entitled, The Man Who Learned. This is an impressive story of the danger from a dirty dairy. The slides following were intended to convey similar lessons; as, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness, but it takes some folks a long time to get wise." The next film, The Red Cross Seal, dealt with the problem of tuberculosis, and was followed by slides such as, "Fresh air and sunlight are the best safeguards against disease. Keep your windows open day and night."

Then followed a comedy film called Tam and Jock, which told of the troubles of two young Scotch farmers when they joined the Gordon Highlanders. This film raised a perfect storm of laughter every time it was shown. After this came slides giving some playground ideals:

"Don't be a grouser—play the game."

"The school buildings and grounds belong to you. Protect your property against injury."

"Trained directors on each ground teach games, athletics, gymnastics, folk dances, and fair play in everything."

Last of all was a double film on the fly question. The first half was the well-known Fly Pest, which gives the life cycle of a fly and how it carries contagion. The second half was the humorous film Swat the Fly, giving the adventures of Mr. McSwat in his individual campaign against flies. The program closed with cheers for the ground and the singing of "God Save the King."

The pictures were quite plain fifty yards away, and not once was there a breakdown of any kind. The order was excellent, and although a policeman was always present, there was no need to call upon him for service. The slides were generally spelled out by the children and frequently interpreted by them to foreign-born parents, and all of the moving pictures, both humorous and serious, were appreciated.

The expense of this plan of public education was small, and the commission was delighted with the success of the innovation. A much more extensive program is being planned for next year, and no doubt many cities will follow the example of Winnipeg.—Survey, New York.

DER KINEMATOGRAPH, DUSSELDORF

The leading Organ for the Motion Picture Trade in Germany.

Special Supplement for Talking Machines, &c.

Published every Wednesday. Annual Subscription 11/- Post Free.

Advertisements (4 columns to page); 2s. 6d. per inch. Situations Wanted, 1½d. per line.

Reduced Price for a Series of Insertions.

Publisher—ED. LINTZ. Chief Editor—EMIL PERLMANN.

FILMORE'S INSIDE FILM FACTS

LIGHT ON THE LIGHT-GIVERS

ACTORS, actresses, directors, managers and all the luminaries of the Independent picture studios—even to the property men—have had their meed of publicity, thanks to the nimble-witted manufacturer's press agent, and now I want to turn the light on the light-giver—same being said press agent, or advertising manager, or publicity man, or whatever you choose to call him. We know all about the folks in every end of the business except the advertising-and-business end, so now we shall hear who are the chaps who caused us to know all. I will give the press man a dose of his own medicine. Below, I shall seek him out and record his identity for all the world to see. I will print what I learn about each but I will not do it in a way that will invite or suggest comparisons. Press men are jealous people. To avoid getting "in bad" with them at the very start of my story, I am careful to say that I am not listing the "snap shots" that follow in an order based on merit; that is, because one man is mentioned further up in my story than some other, he is not the better press man. I will mention people simply as their names come to me. I say this so that no complications arise—I know my press agent. Well, I'll stop kidding him and start to talk seriously of him.

* * * *

Those magnetic Imp ads are the brain-children of "Bob" Cochrane. This gentleman is about the only one of the manufacturer's advertising men who is not headquartered at his employer's studio and who does not spend the major portion of his time at the employer's ad work. In fact, with Cochrane "employer" becomes "client," for he is head of the important Cochrane Advertising Agency of Chicago, and the Imp people are just one of a bunch of prominent concerns that take their ad service from him. Cochrane is conceded to be in a class by himself, and many of the newer press men have made the mistake of trying to copy him. But there is only one Cochrane, and there is only one line of what is known as "Cochrane stuff"—the original. The interesting thing about "Cochrane stuff" is that, new in 1909, it was denounced as "sensational"; established in 1911, it is welcomed as "catchy." Cochrane had to make the natives "catch on"; now that they're caught, he has quite a following.

* * * *

The studio press man of the Imp is Scenario Editor C. B. Hoadley. With Cochrane handling the straight advertising copy, Hoadley "does" the straight news copy—that is, the matter destined for the news columns of the papers. Hoadley is a veteran newspaper man and his press matter shows tone and finish, from the heading down. It is in much call by editors.

* * * *

Hoadley's dual rôle of press man and scenario editor is not an unusual one; in fact, it is usual to find these jobs combined. Even at that a press man's life is a pretty leisurely one; he always seems to find time between reading scripts and writing "dope" to sit in at the little game in the leading man's dressing-room. This, taken into consideration with the fact that when he IS working he's having lots of fun, and that his salary ranges from thirty to fifty dollars a week, inflated occasionally by the sale of a scenario, is the reason that there are rarely changes in press positions—players, directors and the rest come and go but the press man "sticks." He is satisfied, and why not? Of course, there is the reading of countless plots without the locating of even an almost-suggestion for a reward, or the labored grasping for the idea that just won't come, but the wise press man accepts these as minor incidents in an interesting day's work. Again, every press man that I ever knew had a "den" that was pleasanter by far than the boss's. Yes, and almost every press man I ever knew was a personal friend of the boss's, the studio stand-by and the "right hand" of the studio head. I know that every time I want to "get next" to a manufacturer I try to get a note to his press man. He's "close to the throne," as they say around the studio.

* * * *

Close to the "throne" or not, Leon J. Rubenstein, of the Powers Company, is a man of weight among the advertising gentry. Also, he is a veteran among them; perhaps he is the pioneer of them all. He did press work for the Imp when that concern started, and then became editor of Film Reports, the Sales Company organ. Even before he went with the Imp he was editor of Views and Film Index, and acted as sort of unofficial press man for several licensed manufacturers. He will bring his editorial abilities to the preparation of a pretentious house organ that he will shortly launch in the Powers' interests.

* * * *

Omar Doud, the American press man, is way off in Chicago, so I never met him and don't know much about him. I'd rather admit this than fake something through. But I'm not faking when I say that Doud's work is distinguished by a real knowledge of the best advertising methods; he's about the only press chap who was in the regular advertising business before the picture press position came. It is understood that Mr. Doud was publicity director for a large national advertiser before Mr. Hutchinson acquired his services.

* * * *

The versatility of the press man is nicely reflected in Charley Simone, the loyal lieutenant of David Horsley, who in the absence of the latter in California with the Western Nestor Company, is running the business works of the establishment in Jersey. Simone is also versatile in a parental way; he has six of 'em. The latest member, as p'raps you've heard, he named "Nestor." Simone leads his fellow pressers in the offspring race, at least. He has been with the Nestor from almost the inception of the business.

* * * *

Bert Adler, of Thanhouser Company, in point of age is one of the youngest men in the business, and yet he is one of the oldest—this as regards years of service. He was with Thanhouser before the factory was even completed, and his main pride is that from the very first Thanhouser ad to the very latest, there has been no messengers from the trade papers chasing to New Rochelle for it because of the nearness of going-to-press time. He installed system into picture press work at a time when it was unknown, teaching the trade paper printers that they could count on getting the Thanhouser copy on a certain day that was far in advance of "closing" time. Adler founded the Thanhouser News, the first of Independent house organs.

* * * *

H. A. Spanuth, of the Sales Company, is an ex-exchange man (get the X X?) and what he doesn't know about film business isn't worth mentioning. As "the man you see" if you have business with the Sales Company, he has a reputation for considerateness and courtesy that is hard to match, and which is only surpassed by his reputation for writing a good ad. In the exchange business, Spanuth served under Miles and Laemmle, and ran the Dandy Film Exchange of his own. He is one of the few press men who are Benedicts, and on the upper West Side of New York City he boasts the prettiest home of anyone in the craft.

Hector J. Streyckmans, the Bison-Ambrosio-Itala man and editor of Film Fancies, most beautiful of house organs, is likely the most famous of the publicity boys. A few years ago he was almost the head and shoulders of the Independent movement when, affiliated with John J. Murdock, he swung around the country with samples of the only Independent film obtainable, and saved the day for the few weakening Independent exchange men. Except for his Kinemacolor activities General Murdock might be forgotten as the great ex-chief of Independence, but there is no forgetting Streyckmans. He is where he was three years ago, boosting the cause generally and his own Independent firm particularly. Energetic "Strick," as he is known the country over, served as moving picture editor of the Show World when that journal was a very organ of Independence, and some of his broadsides against the "Trust" are still quoted by his Independent admirers.

* * * *

Mr. Engel's coming to the manufacturing end from the exchange, reminds us of another man in the same boots. This is none other than the redoubtable Isadore Bernstein, nationally known as "Bernie," assistant to Mr. Herbert Miles at the Republic office. Bernstein may be described as a very dynamo of human energy, wringing success and satisfaction from every task he undertakes. It is said of him that he could make a "busted" windmill go. Be this as it may, you find "Bernie" a very speedy and a very wise little press man, with just enough touch and go to make you sit up and take notice of him. He is a living example of the truism (hereby created) that to be small is not to be overlooked. Bernstein served with the Yankee and with several New York film renters; like Spanuth, his colleague of the Sales Company, he once had an exchange of his own—the Union, up in Harrisburg, Pa.

* * * *

H. Z. Levine, editor of Solax, is another of the few picture press people who did some newspaper work before locating in the writing branch of the film-producing business. Levine was one of the best reporters on the Brooklyn Daily Eagle until he resolved to sacrifice the real glory of this work for the real coin in some other work—and landed plump in the film business, where the coin always is. Levine is a pretty young press man, having just slid into his majority, but he is a pretty successful press man nevertheless. He wrote the important Thanhouser advertising during Mr. Adler's recent illness, and did nobly.

* * * *

Announcement of the press man for the new American Eclair pictures has not been made yet, but it is understood that he is one of the best known men in the craft, with a record and a value. The splendid preliminary press work has been done by General Manager Harry Raver, an old press man and one of the real veterans of the film business. Raver was exploiting the "Rice-Irwin Kiss" and the rest of the eighty foots before the writer, and many of his readers were out of their jeans. The first great full reel picture, "Great Train Robbery," was shown by Raver from coast to coast in its very first year. Rever knows the business also from the renting end, having managed the Consolidated of Baltimore in the early days of Independence and seeing service under the Swanson banner. Rever's is a big, dominating personality; one of the best dressers in the business and a clever conversationalist, he cuts quite a swath in film Ney York.

He is considered an authority on all film matters, and he doesn't seem to have forgotten a single thing he learned in his fifteen film years. All this must not convey the impression that Raver is some old, gray-beard oracle. Nothing of the sort—he doesn't even flaunt a mustache! The simple fact is that Raver has been a hustler since his youth, and that he rammed into the wonderful life motion pictures (as they said then) business the moment he was tall enough. Hence he has not alone witnessed its magical expansion, but, better, has expanded with it. FILMORE.

LEVINE, PUBLICITY MANAGER FOR SOLAX

H. Z. Levine has been engaged to manage the advertising and publicity department of the Solax Company. Mr. Levine is well known as a publicity promoter and has decided views and original ideas on advertising.

In talking of his appointment, Mr. Levine said: "I am to be congratulated for having secured this post. The Solax Company has under consideration some big and far-reaching plans, besides its plan to put out, beginning Monday, December 18, three reels a week. The hustling up at Flushing is contagious. So much so, that I am working overtime and with my sleeves rolled up. I feel I am in my element."

H. Z. LEVINE

Then Mr. Levine began to tell of the big plans his company had under consideration, and how everyone in filmdom will soon begin swearing—"By the Rising Sun, I want three-Solax-a-week."

"We are making our campaign on quality," he declared, "not quality in paid advertising space, but actual quality in the finished product. Our pictures will make their mute appeal and bring the 'crowded houses.' This isn't 'press agent guff' either. Just come and see our pictures. That is all we ask."

Mr. Levine is a newspaper man of considerable experience. He was on the Brooklyn Eagle and was a special writer and desk man on numerous publications. He was on the staff of a number of theatrical press agents and is the author of several special articles on motion pictures, chief of which are "The Press Agent in Motion Pictures" and "The Octopus and the Cuttle Fish in Motion Pictures." He was on the staff of the Moving Picture News. He organized the Motion Picture Publicity Company, of which he was general manager, and later abandoned this enterprise to assume temporarily the responsibilities of Bertram Adler as the press representative for the Thanhouser Company.

Mr. Levine is not what one would call a "mixer." He is quiet and would rather listen than talk; he puts things tersely, however, when he has something to say. His greatest recreation is hard work.

Congratulations are offered all around.

OPERATORS UNION NOTES

I. A. T. S. New York Auxiliary No. 35

There will be a special meeting of this Union on Monday, November 27th, at the Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street. We want the boys to take special notice that this meeting will be held at 12.30 Monday morning (or Sunday midnight) when some very special matters will come up for their approval or disapproval. We might specially note here that this is in regard to the scale of wages to go in force as soon as the members can agree. Letters were sent out by the Union to every one of the exhibitors in the city, and practically all have responded favorably towards the scale adopted by the Union.

One special point of great import to note here is the fact of the change of the price of initiation, which after January 16th will be $10 in place of $5, as at present. All new members will be taken in on the old rates, so now is the time to rush for membership and save your pennies. Another point to note is the fact that this Union will hold a ball on January 26, 1912, at Tammany Hall. This is certainly going some, and if they get all the Tammany crowd they surely will be in it. More power to their elbow.

The Union regrets to announce the decease of Brother Freda. It will be known that this operator came from San Francisco after losing his parents and relatives in the earthquake, leaving him entirely alone. He was well liked and did all he could to advance the interests of the Union at every possible opportunity. This brother met his death by accident. He was sent out for a one-night show and by some unforeseen oversight on his part, a leak of gas affected him, and on his return home he became ill, from which he died. As soon as the boys knew of his decease, a committee got together, took his body from the morgue, got up a subscription among themselves, and gave him a decent burial according to his faith, and after all expenses were paid, it was discovered that $40 was left of the fund, which will be applied at the proper time in raising a headstone to keep his memory green.

Great credit is due to the members of the committee who so earnestly worked for such admirable services, and it reflects great credit upon the members of the Union for their earnest and fraternal manner in looking after a lonely brother's last needs.

LUX INDUSTRIAL AND SCENIC FILMS

Exibitors will no doubt read with interest the announcement of "Lux" to the effect that in their usual split reel they will release each week about a scenic and industrial, and a comedy and scenic. This is a good move, and the public want it. It is surprising with what interest films of this sort are met.

BEGINNING MONDAY, DECEMBER 18th
SOLAX WILL RELEASE THREE-A-WEEK

A FEATURE WILL BE RELEASED ON THAT DAY—WATCH ADVANCE NOTICES

3 3

Learn to swear three times a week

"By the Rising Sun I Want a Solax"

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, NOV. 29th
(A spilt reel)

A Troublesome Picture

An animated canvas plays havoc with a successful business man.
On the same reel is shown

Fun on Board U.S.S. Vermont

Showing the antics of the tars.

RELEASED FRIDAY, DECEMBER 1st.

A Revolutionary Romance

A picturesque military drama of 1775, reflecting vividly and with fidelity the atmosphere of that romantic period.

Solax

EXHIBITORS and EXCHANGEMEN

Uphold SOLAX with smiles of contentment.
They know the secret of our popularity.

Solax Company CONGRESS AVE. FLUSHING, N. Y.

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

FROM THE OBSERVATORY

By G. F. Blaisdell

The recent teapot tempest over the censorship of pictures, which was precipitated by the Woman's Municipal League of New York, has served to give wide publicity to the fact that the censorship board receives a substantial part of its support from the film manufacturers. There was no secret at any time of this fact, the board's last annual report clearly setting forth the source of its income.

The demand of the league for censorship by the municipal authorities seems to have no particular necessity for its base. Probably an official board would be no more satisfactory to the busybodies than is the present one. Probably, also, the salaries the city would pay would be totally inadequate to procure the calibre of men and women now serving without compensation on the national board.

* * *

Hearing of an impending duel between Charles L. Bargy, a famous stage swordsman, and Malherb, a Paris newspaper writer, a battery of moving picture cameras were gathered at the scene of the "scrap," and their operators were rewarded by being able to record a French duel in which an actor three times wounded a newspaper writer before the seconds called the game. The writer was still peevish when he left the field.

* * *

M. E. Kirkpatrick, Socialist Mayor of Granite City, Mo., answering questions in the German Methodist Church at the close of an address on "Civic Righteousness," before the Civic Righteousness League, declared that he would make no effort to close the picture theaters of the town on Sundays.

* * *

Picture theater proprietors in Quincy, Ill., have eliminated the illustrated song, and with the slides go the singers. The piano and players are retained, although it is possible the former may be replaced later by electrically operated pianos. The proprietors deny that the change has been dictated by any intention to economy, all insisting that good singers are hard to get and still harder to keep.

The picture theater patrons of Quincy are to be congratulated—that is, so far as the elimination of the songs are concerned. As to the substitutes of the mechanical element in the musical instrument for the human, there is a question. The mechanical player has absolute disregard for the particular scene being displayed on the canvas; a good piano player lends effectiveness to and reflects the spirit of a film.

* * *

Things are again happening in the moving picture field in Beatrice, Neb. This from the Sun:

"Gus Stevens, proprietor of a moving picture show at Omaha, fined $25 and costs for exhibiting fight pictures."

* * *

Mayor Mann, of Troy, N. Y., has cancelled all permits given the moving picture theaters for performances Sunday nights for charitable objects, which have been conducted during the past two months. Some complaints have been made that the returns were hardly commensurate with the receipts, one check for $5.15 purporting to cover alleged receipts of $90. The management of one theater has decided to make a fight in the courts.

* * *

President E. G. Lancaster, of Olivet College, Michigan, addressing the first national conference on social civic center development at Madison, Wis., said:

"As a practical means of education the moving picture is the greatest invention which has ever been dreamed of, and I predict that within ten years practically every school in the country will be provided with such facilities. I am going to have a machine and equipment secured for Olivet in the near future, will get on a good circuit and will give shows every night at as small expense to the students as possible."

* * *

The Minnesota Agricultural College faculty has decided to illustrate some of the lecture courses by moving pictures. Principal Mayne will have charge of a series of pictures. The next program will be given Saturday night.

* * *

According to a report by Thomas D. Walsh, superintendent of the Gerry Society of New York City, although the moving picture shows of the Boroughs of Manhattan and Bronx have accommodations for 250,000 people daily, in the last twenty-two months only sixty-two persons were tried for crimes traceable to these houses. Thirty-two men were sent to prison or reformatory. The report contains an interesting sidelight on one phase of the moving picture industry:

"Instead of the motion pictures drawing patronage from the old-fashioned style of performances, theatrical managers say that new theater-goers are created daily by them. People who have never attended theaters seem to have their appetites awakened by the motion pictures, and in this way the theater has profited accordingly. Hence, the motion pictures and the drama are not rivals; they are allies. It is said that one city of 40,000 inhabitants where a theater could not prosper until the motion pictures created a demand for living drama now supports an overwhelmingly successful show-house."

* * *

The Rev. Herbert A. Jump, who has built up a great congregation in the South Congregational Church of New Britain, Conn., through the aid of moving pictures, has jumped his job and gone to Oakland, Cal., where he has assumed charge of one of the largest churches in his denomination.

"I believe in reaching the common people," Mr. Jump said, just before his departure. "The church has no right to content itself with staid respectability. If it is to be an active, progressive force, it must interest everybody. As churches go I have no reason for complaint here, for my church has 1,200 members and was never as strong as now. I wanted to make it the habitual resort of the masses in this city, drawing them here by any proper means and making their welcome so pleasant that they would be glad to join us in religious work. That plan jarred on the sensibilities of some of my conservative parishioners. I am going where the congregation will enter heartily into it and help make it successful.

* * *

The Rev. Robert Gordon, of Topeka, Kan., is using motion pictures in his Sunday evening services in the First Baptist Church.

The Rev. J. W. Cool, pastor of a Minneapolis Congregational church, believes the Sunday night motion picture theater can be nullified by placing motion pictures in churches. "We had little success with biblical pictures," he says, "but have been showing pictures of current events to increased audiences."

Holding services in moving picture show places at noon on Sundays is the new plan of church work which is suggested by Dr. S. R. Frazier, formerly pastor of the Tabernacle U. P. Church of Youngstown, Ohio.

The plan, he says, would not interfere with the work of the various churches of the city, but would supplement them. He proposes to have music and short talks made on advance religious thought.

Many of the churches of St. Paul, Minn., were crowded at the Sunday evening services a fortnight ago, moving pictures furnishing the attraction.

The Rev. Dr. Tllyn K. Foster, of the First Baptist Church of Worcester, Mass., is the pioneer in his city in the introduction of pictures at Sunday evening services.

For over two months the Rev. R. A. George, of Calvary Congregational Church of Cleveland, has illustrated his Sunday evening sermons by moving pictures.

* * *

A. J. McKenzie, a kinemacolor expert, has been in Denver. In an interview in the Post of that city, he said:

"Kinemacolor has fascination like nothing else I have ever experienced in my career. I am visiting America for the purpose of looking over your marvelous country and laying out a series of events which I will picture for your Smithsonian Institution.

"Probably no country in the world presents greater possibilities to the camera artist than your land, with its celebrated Hudson River, Niagara Falls, Yellowstone Park and your famous Rocky Mountains.

"While in Egypt it was my good fortune to be afforded an opportunity of giving the people the most remarkable photograph ever taken, namely, the photograph of the setting sun as it gradually sinks to rest, dyeing the sands of the Sahara a rose-colored carmine. This picture shows the sun gradually descending into the west in the bosom of vari-colored clouds. For days I wandered on the desert watching the orb of day gradually receding from sight, and I wondered how I could get this nature wonder. Finally, overcome by its beauties, I determined to make the experiment, and the people here will very shortly have the opportunity of witnessing, I am glad to say, my complete success.

"Another startling picture that I have had the good fortune to get is a view of the great Zambesi Falls in Central Africa, the only rival in the world to your celebrated Niagara Falls. I was fortunate enough to secure a rainbow effect of these falls that is a marvel in photographic coloring."

* * *

The Board of Education of Brooklyn has decided to give a series of moving picture entertainments in several of the evening recreation centers of the borough, devoting one evening a week at each of the centers to this purpose. The pictures shown will be usually four in number and will be dramatic, geographical, literary and historical.

For this series "Sensational Logging" will be the subject of the dramatic picture. The geographical film will show the digging of the Panama Canal; the literary film will show scenes from "Alice in Wonderland," and the historical subject will be "The Signing of the Declaration of Independence."

OUR WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 22.—It was my pleasure during the week to look at the most wonderful moving picture that has ever been made—five of 'em, in fact. I refer to the reels depicting the great poem of Dante and treating of his Inferno.

These reels were here for two days, appearing at the Auditorium Theater. The show drew a great crowd, for the reason that this is "some" picture town, and they also proved to be all that had been said of them in advance.

The pictures were wonderful in every way. True, they were very gruesome (a nightmare, in fact.—Ed. M. P. N.), and they had more or less effect on the audience, but the lesson that they sought to impart was not lost entirely on even the most hardened sinner. From the time the pictures started, showing the magnificent forest scene, until they closed, revealing all the alleged wonders of Hell and the variegated punishment according to the earthly sins, they held the attention of those present. All eyes, believe me, were riveted on the curtain. As was to be expected, there was a "joker" in the crowd the last night the pictures were here, and when the scene showing Dante infuriated at a former friend for giving him the "cold shoulder" in Hell, was shown, away up in the gallery alloted to "nigger Heaven," some husky black yelled out in the darkened theater:

"Fo Gawd's sake! Will you all look at dat man Dante startin' rough-house in Hell? Say, man, you-all better be careful what you'se doing down there, cause dey sure will slam you in one ob dem bilin pits of tar."

The remainder of the audience screamed with laughter, and the scholarly gentleman who was giving the lecture endeavored to reprimand the "coon," who had "busted up de show," for it sure was busted wide open after that. The show was witnessed by a large number of the city's most prominent people, including ministers of the gospel and educators, and the reels won universal commendation.

As I write this I am wondering if my last week's letter reached the editor in time. I had been invited to join a reception committee that went out in the country to escort into Hot Springs a gentleman who was making a trip from St. Louis to this resort in his auto in the interest of good roads. When nine and one-half miles outside the city, in the cutest, dearest and muddiest stream imaginable, our boat went back on us. Oh, did you ever get stuck in the water with a big touring car? I think that the pendulum on the ding-fog busted. We gave it an injection of prune juice and moral persuasion, inserting the needle between the steering wheel and the batteries, and we pleaded, coaxed and "cussed" the blamed thing until darkness came on apace. Ever get stuck away in the country and have darkness come on "apace?" It can come in any old way, only it's more decided when it comes "apace." Well, the result was that yours merrily hiked on foot back into Hot Springs those nine and one-half miles, and the next time Secretary Belding, of the Business Men's League, says reception committee to "muh" there is going to be something "didding," believe me. I expected to get back in time to write that letter, but never reached town until 10:15 P. M., had to write it and could not mail same until the following morning, so that is why the copy, Mr. Editor, was late.

A party of New Yorkers went "dippy" in the Princess Theater this week when the Imp reel, showing "Steeple Jack," was thrown on the curtain. Also it brought to me a longing for a slant at old Broadway. It was a great picture and we enjoyed it immensely.

Frank Ritter is holding forth at the Photo Play Theater, singing illustrated songs and making good, as usual. The manager of this house is greatly pleased with the Independent service he is getting, and so are his patrons, and when the manager and his following are satisfied that means, you know, success, and that is what this house is meeting with.

Mrs. Leslie Carter was the chief theatrical attraction of the week, appearing in her new emotional drama, "Two Women." The play is great and Mrs. Carter is there with all her old-time force and vim. She is a wonderful actress, and this vehicle gives her a great opportunity for the display of that talent that has made her famous. I kind of think Gotham will sit up and take notice when she "blows in."

Work on the Central Theater, the new house, is being rushed in anticipation of a December opening. I am waiting to see what service Manager Walker is going to install there, whether it will be Independent or Trust films. The former, n my opinion, has out-distanced the "Old General" in more ways than one. They have certainly earned first place in this city.

The Scenic Theater has given up the ghost and gone out of business, not because the returns were bad, but for the reason that their lease ran out and the management could not renew it. A drug store has taken its place.

The Rocky Mountain Hotel Men's Association, fifty strong, accompanied by their ladies, were here this week, and two big theater parties were given in their honor, one at the Princess and the other at the Auditorium.

Among the good pictures of the week were "The Eastern Cowboy," an American, and "The Actor as a Soldier," a Great Northern reel. "Hands Across the Sea," an Eclair reel, was also well liked, and Imp gave us a dramatic treat in "The Wife's Awakening." One, too, must not forget the clever comedy, "The Dress Shirt," also by Imp, which made the crowd at the Princess roar with laughter. "Mutt and Jeff" and their troubles with the lady stenographer came to town and created no end of laughing comment. The musical comedy of the same name was also at the Auditorium. The famous characters were played, the show was handsomely staged and more handsomely gowned, but the chorus—was the limit. Some of the girls when in tights reminded one of a long drink of water, and their voices should have been sent to the manicure parlors and filed. There was a plot to the offering, and, aside from the chorus, including the men, too, who couldn't sing, the show wasn't so very "orful"

Had "Their Burglar," a Thanhouser reel, here this week, and it was a success.

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT

(London Office of the News.)
8 Sherwood St., London, W.

England undoubtedly learns a good deal from America, but it's a pity our business men don't discriminate more carefully when they borrow methods from the other side. As often as not we get the American wheezes that are smart, but not exactly "cricket," rather than those which are clever and straight as well, and it looks as though some of our film people had been casting envious glances at the Trust methods of the States. The average Englishman hates anything in the nature of a corner, and as soon as he scents anything like an arrangement to inflate prices or restrict supply, he has a way of making his power felt, which has surprised more than one monopolist. Ask Sir W. H. Lever, who was suspected of engineering a soap combine at one time; I doubt if "Sunlight" does not still feel the effect of the boycott that followed. I don't think anyone who tries to work a corner in the film game or to make the market other than a free one, is going to fare any better, and yet there are undoubtedly signs that certain people are so ignorant of English sentiment as to try methods perilously akin to those of the Trusts. (Our correspondent ought also to have mentioned the Kodak trust methods, which are still green in the memory of all English photographers, and in which we had a hand helping to bust—Ed. M. P. N.)

* * * *

The practice of advertising to the showmen, so as to, in effect, force the renter's hand, was alluded to in these notes; it is a perfectly legitimate method of business, as is its extension in the advertising of film to the public, to influence the showman in his turn legitimate, that is to say, in so far as its object is merely to obtain for a film its greatest possible sale. But it becomes a very queer procedure when its ultimate object is to build up, with the showman's aid, a reputation for a certain make of film with the public, which is to be used by the manufacturer practically to dictate to the showman what other films he is to show. And if that is not the ultimate object of certain proceedings here, it would be interesting to know why so much money is being spent on publicity, which cannot be immediately productive.

* * * *

There are some deep people selling films, but there are others showing them, who are not quite blind to their own interests. They are not likely to spend their time and energy helping to secure for one or more film brands a reputation which may be used to their disadvantage at any time. I have seen letters, in fact, which show that some exhibitors feel like kicking themselves for already doing so much to boost the names of manufacturers. That game is all right as long as the manufacturer is content to leave the showman a free hand in choosing his films; when he shows signs of wanting to control the program, using the power with the public, which he has obtained through the showman's efforts as a rod for the latter's back, it is time to consider whether one is altogether wise to assist him in his ingenious effort to mislead the public as to the nature of the film output.

* * * *

For a concern only, I believe, a bare twelve month old, the "Flying A" Company seems to be cutting out the pace pretty well. News from Mr. Scott, their London manager, this week, of a new studio in Chicago to supplement the Western studio and of various additions to both the acting and administrative staffs. Glad to note the steady improvement in their quality, which must have helped to the success of "The Water War" (a good one this), and "Three Daughters of the West," but there is still at times a tendency to "panoram," which rather spoils a good scene. None of the buyers miss "Flying A" in their rounds, and the trade-mark is to be seen on the screens of all the leading theaters here.

* * * *

Mr. H. E. Aitken arrived in London Tuesday with a further batch of "Majestic" films, the releases of which will now go on regularly. There are some good examples of the delightful acting of that popular favorite, Miss Pickford, among these subjects and Majestic look to be going to justify the optimistic prophecies of their producers. B. A.

Open to Represent Good American Film Manufacturers for

England, English Colonies and Europe

Cable or Write Terms:

Universal Film Company, Ltd.

5 Denmark St., Charing Cross Rd., London, W. C.

Cable Address, "Ufilmico, London" 'Phone, 13674 Central

English Representation

An English firm of exceptional financial standing is open to negotiate for representation of good American maker. Full particulars on application (which will be treated confidentially) to

Box 6, London Office of The News,
8 Sherwood St., London, England.

JUST OFF THE PRESS—THE NEW
MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14

By far the best book of comedy material I have ever written. Contents include 20 sure-fire parodies, 11 great monologues, 10 fine acts for two males, 6 acts for male and female, a splendid minstrel first part, an original one-act comedy, also brand-new acts for quartettes and sister teams, besides an almost endless assortment of newest gags, jokes, sidewalk patter, etc., etc.

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14 is sold with the guarantee of being absolutely satisfactory in every way or money instantly refunded. Send orders to

JAMES MADISON
1404 Third Avenue, New York

China to the Front

THEATRES

If you wish to draw the crowds order a selection of our new Chinese slides, all from direct photographs. We have over 250 to select from at $4.00 per dozen. High-class coloring. Send for list of this and other subjects. 30,000 slides always in stock.

Riley Optical Instrument Co.

3 EAST 14th ST., NEW YORK CITY

QUICK—CHEAP—GOOD

OPERA CHAIRS

Ask for Catalog 306

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.,
218 So. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

One of the Most Modern European Film Manufacturers

Specialty: { MONOPOLY FILMS
SENSATIONAL FILMS FEATURE FILMS

Will arrive in America about November 15th. All persons interested, write "M. O. R.," Moving Picture News

ECLAIR SCORES

READ AMERICA TICKLED! READ

ECLAIR proudly exhibits the following testimonials, one from an exhibitor and the other from an exchange. They speak for themselves. The former ordered posters and booklets in advance, and the latter purchased two copies of the film, together with the largest quantity of posters ever placed for a regular release in the history of films. Both these men are LIVE to the core, and the exchange man is noted for being extremely critical.

The originals of these communications are on file at the office of the Moving Picture World, and were received by Eclair on Wednesday, November 22, one day after release date.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH

Fort Wayne, Ind., Nov. 22, 1911.

ECLAIR FILM CO., Fort Lee, N. J.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA an immense success; greeted by rounds of applause; hundreds of people turned away.

SPRAGUE GREEN, Mgr. Lyric Theater.

STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE

168-172 W. Washington Street

Chicago, Ill., November 20, 1911.

Eclair Film Co.. Ft. Lee, N. J.

Gentlemen:—I just saw the two reels of HANDS ACROSS THE SEA run off. There were present with me several good picture critics, including one of the official police censors of Chicago. All of us watched the picture closely in its every detail.

I want to compliment you upon this production and no production of the kind that I have ever seen begins to compare favorably with it. I say this with a knowledge of the fact we have had some very excellent productions. You have simply given us that which is most desirable and needed: QUALITY. It is a great picture and I am glad to own a print of same. We are having no trouble in booking it at a fair extra rental above service price.

Hoping you will continue the good work, I remain,

Yours very truly,

STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE,

Joseph Hopp, Pres.

COMING ECLAIR RELEASES

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5
IN HUMANITY'S CAUSE
(American Drama)

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7
1. THERE FELL A FLOWER (Comedy)
2. LIFE IN PIEMOUNT (Educational)

TUESDAY, DEC 12
MUSICIAN'S DAUGHTER
(A Heart Story)

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14
HER ONE DAY'S DREAM
(Japanese Drama)

ECLAIR FILM CO., General Offices and Studios Fort Lee, N. J.

Branches Throughout The World.

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

"YANKEE DOODLE"

Champion, Released Dec. 4

In this story of "Yankee Doodle," Mother Goose plays an important rôle, for with her wand she conjures up from the past, for the benefit of the little ones, and grown-ups, too, some of the august personages of history, whose names and presenee inspire young and old with feelings and sentiments of deep patriotism. Now for the play. There are the little ones with their drums and swords marching about and singing "Yankee Doodle." The mothers of the wee ones are eharmed by their innocent sincerity, but there is another onlooker in the person of Mother Goose.

Mother Goose decides to lend a hand and teach a lesson in patriotism. As the little marehers proceed, beating their drums and blowing their horns, "Yankee Doodle" appears in the form of Unele Sam, riding on a pony, with comic dignity, his long legs reaehing the ground. As the proeession goes on, its numbers are swelled by children of all ages and descriptions. But presently, into the scene eomes the redoubtable Stonewall Jackson, to please admiring Southerners. But Mother Goose has children of the North as well as of the South, and so the next celebrated hero is General U. S. Grant. Then, on. See that tall, majestie charaeter, with snow-white beard and military aspeet. That is Robert E. Lee of Virginia. There now, is Lincoln, the martyr. And this grand assemblage of our eountry's vanguard form a living lesson from history. On the same reel is

"OUR NAVY"

Coming in juxtaposition to "Yankee Doodle's" patriotic ensemble, what more fitting portrayal could be advaneed than the stately grandeur of our navy? The monster proeession of battleships on the Hudson, the greatest assemblage of Uncle Sam's fighting men ever gotten together at one time, are shown in imposing defile. These huge dogs of war, whose bark and bite are dreaded and respeeted by the Foreign Powers, are seen passing before our view in grim war eolor. As we gaze upon the seene, we are made to realize the greatness of our Uncle Samuel. But there is a eharaeteristie touch added to the pieture. High upon the Hudson Palisades stands Uncle Sam, himself, looking down with benign countenance, his hands extended in deferential pose. Seldom has a thousand-foot film been unrolled with two subjects so unlike, and yet so nieely dovetailed, as it is depicted in "Yankee Doodle" and "Our Navy."

"THE INDIAN FORTUNE TELLER"

Champion, Released Dec. 6

This story has to do with an Indian seeress; that is to say, the large part she played in the life of a young Western cowpuncher. Sam Houston was the young fellow in question, and a better puneher of cattle eould not be found. But Sam had his failings. He loved cards and drink, though not excessive for the latter.

On one occasion, Sam had won a little pile. The loser, a fellow named Bud, was a vieious-minded brute, who swore quietly to regain his losings by foul means, knowing naught of fairness. At this juneture, the Indian woman eame into the gambling saloon with a basket, containing trinkets which she was peddling. Her face was engaging. You could see at once she was above the average of her people. She only met with rebuffs from the saloon loungers, until Sam's table was reaehed. His big heart ever kept his purse strings open, and he tossed her a large coin.

In return for his friendly words, the woman offered to foretell his fortune. She then warned him of a grave danger which would beset him upon a contemplated journey of his. Sam admitted the contemplated journey, but did not mind the danger, as he trusted to his gun to defend him against harm. But Bud was plotting hard against him. He interviewed the Indian guide, who was chosen to lead Sam over the mountains, and bribed him into arranging for the betrayal and ambush of Sam, before he could reach his destination.

Traversing his silent way, and trusting his guide implieitly, Sam was surprised to see a form leap from behind a boulder, and recognized the Indian seeress. His guide, divining the woman's objeet, and knowing it would be his undoing, threw himself suddenly upon her, and thrust his knife home. It was all done in a moment; then he was off, but speedy as he was, a bullet from Sam's gun brought him down. He paid the penalty The Indian woman then informed him of Bud's plot, and of his danger, and though wounded, led him from the fatal trail, and thus foiled the dastard plot of Bud.

Her noble task accomplished, the seeress gave up her spirit to the great Manitou, dying with the eonseiousness of having saved the life of her friend. This great sacrifiee lodged deep within Sam's breast. Inscribing a heartfelt inscription on paper, and pinning it with a little pectoral cross on the Indian fortune teller's breast, he interred her in the sod.

"THE DEAD CANARY"

Comet Release, Dec. 8

The heroine of this picture is an aetress. She is ordered to the country at the advice of her physieian, and her only companion is a pet canary. A few days after her arrival the bird dies. Pained and grieved, the woman visits a taxidermist and has the bird stuffed. The taxidermist and the aetress fall in love. They fail to coneeal their affeetion for each other, and this natural thing immediately causes trouble. The seandal mongers get busy. Just because the pair elect to take strolls in shady lanes, remain in eaeh other's company as much as possible and aet in a manner befitting loyal and true sweethearts their names are forthwith linked with all sorts of heinous tales. The first to take action is the sehool board. They meet, and Miss Starr is forthwith condemned and urged to leave the eommunity. When matters assume an uncomfortable view the village parson, a man of broad ideas and common sense, is appealed to. He at once sees the real condition of affairs and immediately starts to point out why some folks ought to be elassed as fools. The pair are in love. Surely there is nothing unusual in that? At any rate, he shames them so effectively they are ready to rally to the defense of the woman whose only crime is that she follows the stage as a profession. To demonstrate that he is in harmony with their love making he invites them to his abode and ties the knot whieh makes them man and wife.

"BILLY'S LETTERS"

Comet Release, Dec. 4

A phonograph acts as an excellent pacifier between man and wife in this picture, which is a series of humorous and fareical complications. Billy Braham decides that his bachelor days are over and betakes himself a wife. He does this secretly, and naturally when his friends hear about it they are very much surprised. Among those who send messages of eongratulation are Gaby de Rose, an old flame. Gaby says that she is engaged to marry Count de Gassac and won't Billy be so kind as to send baek her old love letters, and in return she will send his? Billy does so. He tears the note, as he thinks, and goes to his room upstairs for the missives. Wifey finds the note, and makes two and two, with the result that there is trouble in store for Gaby and her husband. Failing to find the letters, which have already been dispatched to Gaby, Mrs. Graham visits Gaby, who is a vaudeville artist. There is a stormy scene between the pair. It is considerably enhanced when Mrs. Graham discovers the packet of letters couched in most endearing terms, and which were signed by her husband's name. Gaby gets into the plot, too. The Count learns of the letters and is furious. He forthwith calls off his engagement, but comes back the next day and rescinds his decision. During the whole turmoil Billy is at the club. When he comes home his wife refuses to have anything further to do with him and locks herself in her room. Then Billy rushes to the phonograph for aid. He starts the machine, and it plays that pretty ditty, "All Alone." The scene of the situation appeals to Mrs. Graham, who relents, forgives Billy, who seeks refuge in turbulent wifey's outstretched arms.

"IN THE DAYS OF THE SIX NATIONS"

Release by Rep, Dec. 16

Photography's latest invention pays a glowing pictorial tribute to the almost forgotten famous union of six of the noblest of American nations, with detail that is most remarkable. The picture portrays not only all the famous battles participated in by these noble red men individually and collectively, but with painstaking care; it also gives a graphic description of the everyday life led by these semi-savages.

Escorted by a lieutenant of the army, the two daughters of the Major, have no fear as they are about to make a long and tedious journey across a country swarming with war-maddened Indians, and quite a large number of renegades, who are often compared to the poisonous reptiles that infest the region.

Knowing that if they can obtain the two girls as hostage they will hold the winning hand, several of the Indians appoint one of their number to act as escort for the party and betray them into their hands at the first opportunity, but "there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and lip"; the treacherous Indian guide craftily leads the party astray in the woods and but for the fortunate appearance of a famous trapper, the sisters would undoubtedly have become captives of the Indians. The trapper's shrewdness for a time overcomes the craftiness of the red men, but the odds prove too great against him, and in order to save the daughters of the Major and their escort, he leaps into the raging torrent below the cave where the party have sought refuge, and begins a dangerous trip to the fort to seek aid. The party is captured by the Indians in spite of the brave fight made by the lieutenant, and bound hand and foot they are brought to the Indian village. Indian runners are sent forth to notify the chiefs that a special council is to be held, and soon the famous council of the Six Nations is in session.

The lieutenant is condemned to the stake, and after a lengthy pow-wow and war dance, preparations are made to execute the order, when Providence, in the shape of a body of mounted militia led by the trapper, interfere with these plans, and the Indians, in their eagerness to escape from the merciless fire of the army men, forget all about their victims who are rescued and are safely escorted to their destination.

The love of the younger daughter for the brave lieutenant makes an interesting love story in this historical picture of Indian warfare and bloodshed.

THE SAVANNAH AUTO RACES

Republic Release, Dec. 5

The greatest sporting event of the year to be released by the Republic Film Company consists of one reel of the most interesting parts of the Third International Road Race, under the auspices of the Savannah Automobile Club for the Grand Prize of the Automobile Club of America, to be run at Savannah, Ga., Thursday, November 30, 1911.

The Grand Prize

The length of the course is approximately 17 miles, which will be covered 24 times, making the distance of the race about 408 miles. The award of the trophy carries an additional award of $7,000 in cash.

W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr. Cup Race

The length of this race is about 289 miles. To the car covering the required distance in the shortest elapsed time, there will be awarded the William K. Vanderbilt, Jr. Cup. The award of the cup carries an additional award of $2,000 in cash. To the winner of the cup and cash there will be awarded a special "donor's trophy" for permanent ownership.

Tiedman Trophy Race

The length of this race will be about 170 miles. To the car covering the required distance in the shortest elapsed time, there will be awarded the Tiedman Trophy. The award of the trophy carries an additional award of $1,000 in cash.

The Savannah Challenge Trophy

The length of this race is about 221 miles. To the car covering the required distance in the shortest elapsed time, there will be awarded the Savannah Trophy. The award of the cup carries an additional award of $1,000 in cash. To the winner of the cup there will be awarded a special "donor's trophy" for permanent ownership.

Drivers of international fame have pronounced the Savannah course the safest and fastest in the world. The course will be oiled to keep down the dust and make it faster. All previous world's records will be lowered. The course will be patrolled by State troops and special police.

With an army of expert camera men on the job at the most interesting points of the course, the reel will record thrills by the thousand.

THE NEWSY AND THE TRAMP

Thanhouser Release, Dec. 5

Ragsy was a plain newsboy. He wasn't even a newsboy with a house; he had been "sellin' papes" from the day his drunkard father kicked him into the street, and his abiding place was wherever Unkind Providence permitted him to hang his cap. Often it was in the park, where a bench made a bed of a sort, and where he always had lots of company. Tramps were thick in that park that year.

Ragsy came to know the tramps. He even came to like them—to admire their carefree, go-as-you-please style of living. When he grew up, he would be a tramp. How he wished that he were big enough to take to the road along with its knights.

The specimen is a husky, handsome young man who gave up his trade of blacksmith through pure love of travel—Wanderlust! Connors shall be his name. Ragsy gathered to Connors at once. He asked if he couldn't go out on the road with him. Connors laughed, but the newsy persisted. In the end, Connors yielded. The kid came along.

Their wanderings are without adventure until they fall in with some tramps who feel that the newsy is just small enough to squeeze into a neighboring hen-roost and pass out some fowl.

This settles Connors. Ragsy will not become a thief! The tramp takes his little chum away from the men who would make him a criminal, and resolves to resume his blacksmithing and keep Ragsy nearby where he can keep watch over him. He finds work in a smithy and puts the boy to school.

Here is where his attentions to Ragsy began to earn dividends for Connors. The head of the little country school is the prettiest schoolma'am in all the country, and when the blacksmith enters the building with Ragsy he meets—her!

Finally, he weds her. Ragsy, let it be said, spurred him on. Newsy knew a good thing when he saw it, and he took care that Connors got the girl. So, from being his teacher, the girl becomes Ragsy's mother, by legal process at last, and finds that while the boy couldn't "count" correctly as a scholar, he COULD shoot correctly as a Cupid.

BROTHER BOB'S BABY

Thanhouser Release, Dec. 8

A bachelor, with plenty of money and not a care in the world, suddenly finds himself involved in a sea of trouble. It all starts when his brother, who lives in Trenton, wires that his wife and baby are on their way from the mountains and that he will appreciate it if "Brother Jack" will meet them and see them across town.

The bachelor, with a sigh, prepares to be gallant. He meets the woman and child, also much luggage, and escorts them across town to the Pennsylvania station. There he takes them aboard a train, and believes that his task is over.

But the mother suddenly remembers some purchases she must make, and the good-natured bachelor is prevailed upon to stand guard over the child until she returns. The mother forgets the time and misses the train, and the baby and its bachelor uncle start off together.

But the mother is a woman of resource. She wires tips on caring for the baby to various stations along the line, and all would be well were it not for the uncle's awkwardness. But he annoys the other passengers, fights with the conductor when that official remonstrates with him, and is finally thrown off at a little station far from Trenton.

It is a hot day, and that, together with the necessity of singing to the baby, had made uncle thirsty. He sees a saloon nearby, but does not care to take baby there. Furthermore, the baby will not remain quiet all by itself. But finally fortune smiles on the uncle, although, as afterwards develops, it is a hypocritical smile.

A dog is being shipped to Philadelphia in a dog basket, and is left on the platform near the pair of unfortunates. When no one is looking, the thirsty uncle ejects the astonished dog, and places the baby in a place of security. Then he goes off to the cafe and enjoys himself.

Time passes rapidly in joy parlors, and trains do not wait for highballs. The car pulls in, the dogbasket starts on its journey, and uncle is still in blissful ignorance of what is transpiring.

The baggageman finds that instead of a live dog he has a squalling baby on his hands. Being a matter-of-fact individual, he hunts through the train, hoping that some woman will relieve him of his burden. One of the passengers is the baby's mother, and she greets her offspring with glad surprise and delight. And mother and child are reunited.

The uncle sent his apologies by wire and then went for a long trip abroad. Some men find it difficult to make proper explanations in person.

THE PENALTY OF HER AMBITION

Great Northern Release, Dec. 2

Johnson and his wife are happy in the possession of their only child, until Mrs. Johnson aspires to become a prima donna. For the cultivation of her voice, Leoni, an Italian tutor, is procured, and he soon worms his way into the woman's affections. When the pair should be conducting themselves as tutor and pupil they are billing and cooing like turtle doves. The unsuspecting Johnson has introduced a serpent into his paradise. One day whilst the mother and child are in the drawing room, the tutor sends a note asking Mrs. Johnson to come and meet him, and to tell her husband she is going to the theater. The wife consents, and places the note in a book she is reading, where it is found by the husband, who follows her, and finding her clasped in the arms of another, casts her adrift. She attains fame as an opera singer, whilst her child, after a year, missing the loving care of a mother, becomes ill. Leoni, too, has tired of his flame, has transferred his affections to another, and casts his first choice off. In Johnson's home, the little girl is lying at death's door, repeatedly crying for her mother. A kind-hearted nurse pleads with the father to gratify his child's wish. He does so and finds his erring wife. A mother's care conquers the grim angel, Death, the child lives, and by its means husband and wife start a new life together.

THE POISON CUP

Reliance Release, December 2

Mary is married to John Adams and discovers that he is a drug fiend and a thief. She surprises him and his pal dividing their plunder, and in her anger threatens to expose him. He threatens her with a revolver, and in the struggle that follows he is shot. She thinks he is dead and becomes mentally deranged, wandering about till a wealthy woman finds her, who gives her a home. Mary recovers her reason but suffers a loss of memory. The benefactress is taken sick and dies, and Mary marries the doctor who attended her. The first husband discovers her and calls upon her during the doctor's absence. The shock of meeting him brings back her lost memory and a realization of the awful situation she is in. Adams tries to blackmail her, and to get rid of him she makes an appointment for that evening. As the time approaches she loses her self-control and decides to commit suicide by poison. She mixes the draught and goes to say a last good-bye to her child in another room. Adams comes in and after waiting a little while his rum-scorched throat moves him to drink the poison, he thinking it is water. The doctor comes home as the wife enters the room. Brokenly she explains to him the situation. He forgives her and leads her away from the lifeless body of the man who caused her so much woe.

"HAPPY HOBO'S HELP"

Nestor Release, Nov. 27

James Carlington, better known as "Happy Hobo," belongs to the Knights of Trampdom, and in summer spends his nights always under the same spacious roof—the canopy of heaven. It's night and the Knight removes hat and coat and makes himself comfortable in a haystack to sleep, perchance to dream.

"Rolling Pete," also a Knight of the Road, on the watch for a nice berth, does not hesitate in taking Happy's hat and coat and leaves behind two apologies for the sleeper—he who hesitates is lost, and Pete has nothing to lose in the exchange.

When Happy returns from the Land of Nod, he—well, what can he do but put on Pete's ragged garments? Looking like a king of shreds and patches, he pauses before a pretentious mansion, and the lady of the house furnishes the poor man with some discarded clothes of her lord and master, the Rev. Goodson.

Herr Wilhelm Blitzen, the rich grocer, does not like to have Harry Raverly pay court to Fraulein Johanna, and the two enterprising young people quickly elope. "Happy Hobo," looking every inch a minister of the Gospel, is pressed into service by the runaway lovers, and "papa" arrives just as Happy has completed the marriage ceremony. After playing the wedding march in a rather "blitzeny" manner, Herr Blitzen departs vowing punishment, legal and otherwise, to poor Happy, who, like the conscientious fellow that he is, tells the young folks the truth.

Harry and Johanna rush in search of a Justice of the Peace, who promptly reduces two to one. Papa Blitzen received the "glad" tidings over the phone and then goes forth to chastise the pseudo minister. In the meantime, Happy discovers Pete in the arms of Morpheus under a spreading tree, and soon comes into his own (clothes) again. Pete rejoices over the sudden change and admires his new "get-up."

Down the road, mounted on a foaming steed, comes Herr Blitzen. Poor Pete suffers the result of mistaken identity till the Newlyweds come on the scene and set things to rights. Papa is finally induced to say, "Bless you, my children."

"WHEN THE WEST WAS WILD"

Nestor Release, Nov. 29

Young Jack Wheeler was delighted with the settler's family—Fred Newton would make a dandy pal, and as for Miss Newton?—here Jack mentally determined to see as much of Louise as possible.

So, the next day, spying her from an adjoining cliff as she hurried to the spring, Jack quickly urged his horse forward, arriving just as four Indians surrounded Louise, endeavoring to persuade her to part with a long string of beads she was wearing. But the girl, badly frightened, and unable to understand the redskins, screamed for help. Instantly, Jack fired, killing Little Wolf, the chief's son, and scattering the others,—but not until they had wounded Jack.

Helping the young man with the saddle, Louise hurried him to their tent, where, after making him as comfortable as possible, Mrs. Newton mounted Jack's horse and hastened away for Doc. Farley. But in the meantime, Chief Running Water and his braves had gone on the warpath to avenge Little Wolf's death; so as soon as Mrs. Newton appeared on the trail, the Indians gave chase. The woman would have gotten safely away had her horse not gone lame and, therefore, was forced to abandon him. Seeing no other means of escape, Mrs. Newton quickly tied her lariat around a large boulder and let herself down, intending to flee by the ledge below. Unfortunately, the rope was too short, for instead of the forty feet she had imagined, the ledge proved to be at least eighty—and the terrified woman hung dangling in the air—a target for the redskins above.

Taking a firm hold with her left hand, Mrs. Newton reached for her revolver; at the first shot, Arthur Hastings, who was out hunting and had stopped to speak to Hank Martin, looked across the canyon. Sending Hank for the cowboys, the hunter took careful aim, picking off a redskin just as he raised a high rock to throw down upon Mrs. Newton; and so, he kept them at bay during the wild ride of the cowboys to her rescue. Then, while part of the men drew the exhausted and almost unconscious woman up the others gave chase to the Indians, and when they returned with Doc. Farley to escort Mrs. Newton, not one of the attacking redskins had been left to tell the tale.

Jack's wounds proved to be only serious enough to cause Louise anxiety that seemed to please the young man.

"A WESTERN FEUD"

Nestor Release, Dec. 2

John Randell and Bill Canby had been neighbors and close friends since boyhood, so that when the former's son and the latter's daughter announced their intention of being married in June, great was the rejoicing in both families.

It was thus that matters stood when Canby called to see his friend in regard to buying a bay mare, which in Randall's eyes was as perfect a little animal as could be found in the country. In this respect, however, Canby was forced to contradict him, and as a consequence, a heated argument soon arose, which, had the boys not interfered, might have resulted somewhat seriously for both parties, as the high-tempered old gentlemen were both fairly beside themselves with rage.

Hurrying home, Canby surprised his daughter, Nellie, by hustling her into the house, and at the same time ordering her sweetheart, Jack Randell, from the place. Nevertheless, no sooner did she find the coast clear, than the girl mounted her horse and started for the Randell ranch, determined, if possible, to bring about a reconciliation. On the way, however, she met Jack, who had been using every argument in his power with his father, but to no avail. So, after talking the matter over, the young people decided to be married at once, and accordingly set out for the minister's.

It was then that an exciting chase followed, for in the meanwhile, both son and daughter had been missed; so shrewdly guessing their whereabouts, the two angry fathers, accompanied by the boys from both ranches, started in pursuit. But thanks to the swiftness of their horses, the young lovers not only reached the minister's, but had actually been pronounced man and wife before the pursuers burst into the room, to be confronted by two miling faces, before which, after a little coaxing and a few well chosen words on the part of the good clergyman, the father's anger gradually melted, and to the intense relief of the happy bride and groom, they clasped hands. On the same reel is

"MUTT AND JEFF'S SCHEME THAT FAILED"

Broke, as usual, the two friends are wondering where the next meal is coming from. Unable to withstand the pangs of hunger, Jeff goes out to waylay a friend of his and make a touch. He keeps watch and supports himself by leaning against a saloon door.

The "barkeep" receives the tip that fly-cops are watching his place, and tells the bartender to slip some mazuma to the first fly-cop he sees. Jeff is seen first and gathers a crisp ten dollar bill, with which he starts for "home."

The saloon proprietor, believing himself safe from the police, allows the boys to gamble openly. A police inspector comes on the scene, and after some excitingly funny stunts, departs with everybody's cash.

Mutt is anxious to make some easy money, so he repairs to the saloon and does the leaning act. The "boss" spies him. Ha! Here's another pesky fly-cop! Let us fix him! Unsuspecting Mutt is invited to enter the liquid emporium and have a drink—a sort of an appetite tickler. He boldly enters the trap; the "bunch" falls on him and it's "good night" for poor Mutt.

The best that Jeff can do is to visit the hospital, where his partner is temporarily domiciled and take some flowers to the unfortunate fellow. The best that Mutt can do is to eat the flowers, which act he performs with lightning rapidity.

"PERCY, THE MASHER"

Imp Release, Dec. 2

Percy, a self opinionated young man with mashing proclivities, is always on the alert for new conquests. He is looking out of his window one day when he notices a prepossessing looking young woman on the opposite side of the street, waving a handkerchief. He immediately comes to the conclusion that he has attracted her attention and answers to the signal, only to see the window closed and the flirtation ended.

He writes her a note to the effect that he is smitten by her charms and desires to meet her. The woman is indignant and shows the letter to her husband. The spouse evolves a plan and accepts the overture, making an appointment to meet Percy. The husband goes heavily veiled, attired in the clothing of his wife.

Percy is gallant, and spends his money prodigiously, giving his guest a good time. The husband is enjoying the trip very much at the expense of the infatuated young man, but declines to remove the veil.

On the return to the house of Percy's fair charmer, the masher meets with a surprise for the husband suddenly tires of the masquerade and turns on the young man and gives him a sound and beautiful thrashing, much to the amusement of those in the vicinity. Percy whines like a whipped cur and an officer is attracted to the melee. He is about to arrest the husband when he removes the disguise and pours his tale into the ears of the interested officer of the law.

When all is explained the sympathies of the copper are all with the husband, and he turns him loose with an admonition to Percy to cease forcing his attentions on women to whom they are unwelcome. Smarting under the disgrace, Percy seeks his room and meditates on his folly, firmly resolving to discontinue mashing—cured completely. On the same reel is

"PRESIDENT TAFT DEDICATING THE NAVAL TRAINING STATION AT CHICAGO"

This is a very interesting scenic film, preserving in photography one of the important events in the history of the United States.

President Taft, with military pomp and splendor is seen dedicating the splendid naval training station at Chicago, the pride of the West. All the important details of the ceremony were taken with many views of the head of the nation. To students of history this will prove a most entertaining film, and the young and old alike will view the picture with much interest as it enters into the history of the country. The ensemble is a large one, thousands of marines and military, sailors and soldiers, taking part in the elaborate ceremony, solemn and impressive ceremony.

"THE DUMB MESSENGER"

Imp Release, Dec. 4

Hathaway, a gentleman burglar, on the Raffles order, reads that a valuable necklace has been delivered to Mrs. Darrow, a wealthy woman, who is an invalid, and is confined to a wheel chair.

Susie Leslie, the pretty young fiancee of Mrs. Darrow's son, Will, is visiting her. Susie has a dog which is the especial friend of Will.

The butler and the maid at the Darrow home also learn of the costly necklace and they decide to steal it in a bold manner. Hathaway also resolves to become the possessor of the bauble and he strolls out to the house of the invalid in a nonchalant manner.

Mrs. Darrow is wheeled into her room and examines the necklace. Susie is with her and is somewhat apprehensive. The butler binds the maid in a chair just outside the room to make the robbery look genuine and to divert suspicion from himself, and, masked, he makes an onslaught on the door. The women are terrified, but the door is locked and does not yield. In the meantime, Susie ties a note to the collar of the dog and bids him go to Will, her lover. He bounds away and reaches the young man just as he is about to board a train at the station. Darrow reads the note, and is horrified. It tells him of the peril of his sweetheart and his mother. Hastily summoning assistance the rescuing party starts on a run for the house. Before they can reach it the rascally butler has forced the door and springs in and covers the women with his gun.

Just at this juncture, Hathaway, who has gained a point of vantage outside the French window, and sees the burglar terrifying the women, steps through and turns the tables on the servant by getting the drop on him and has him captured when Darrow and his men arrive. The butler is unmasked and turned over to them; the maid is released, but her connection with the attempted burglary is not divulged. Hathaway walks away chuckling to himself well satisfied with his part of it.

"TONY AND THE STORK"

Imp Release, Dec. 7

Tony, a young married Italian, finds his purse depleted at the opening of the story and hunts in vain for a job. He talks imperfect English, and that is a handicap as well as his ignorance of the work he seeks. After many trials, to return home almost distracted, he accosts an agent who is hiring men to work on the construction of a railroad many miles from his home town. Tony insists that he be given work, and is finally taken on. He runs to his home to convey the glad tidings to his wife, who is overjoyed at the prospect. Tony packs his belongings in a bag and joins the gang.

The story reverts to his employment and he receives a letter informing him that his wife is an inmate of a hospital, and that he is a father. The Italian is wild with glee, and draws his wages and hastens home. Arriving, he starts for the hospital all expectation. On the way he childishly invests a goodly portion of his savings in a baby carriage, a doll and other toys to carry to his child. When he reaches the hospital, he rushes in and begs to see his wife. He announces his name and the kind-hearted nurse sorrowfully takes him to the superintendent.

Tony, hat in hand, is ushered in and the man in charge reluctantly tells him his wife has died during an operation. He is wild with grief and throttles the superintendent in his agony. When he has calmed down he begs to look upon the dead form. He is taken to the sheeted figure and gives one look. It is not his wife, a mistake in the name being responsible for his temporary grief. Tony dances about in the exuberance of his joy and is impatient to see his wife. She enters with a baby, and he is beside himself with joy, but he is further surprised when another baby is brought, and he is told he is the father of twins. Then he explodes with merriment and gazes at his perambulator which has a carrying capacity of but one.

The story closes with Tony happy in the possession of two bouncing babies, trying to embrace his whole family at one and the same time.

THE LITTLE THIEF

Powers Release, Dec. 5

It's peculiar how the human brain conforms itself to abnormalities under the influence of abnormal conditions or environment. It simply proves for the millionth time that matter cannot master mind. Take a community that is wrought up over a series of mysterious burglaries; the residents are in a state of continual feverish excitement, the talk is always of burglars and the marvelous human thinkery, conforming, refuses to take its allotted rest at night.

With children it is more so, the brain being more impressionable. We prove it by the case of little Freddie, whose imagination carries him so far that he actually carries a firearm with him, and he blazes away promiscuously. This should earn him a paternal slipper, but the child does actually get the mysterious burglar.

Result, avaunt—slipper! Entree, much kissing and many dainties!

THE SECRET ORDER OF HORNS

You're right on the first guess—we show a real imitation. It is taken from the actual experiences of a novice who joined one of the biggest secret orders in the country. You might be a member of it this very minute. If you know your signs, you'll recognize it immediately, and perhaps you'll remember when you were in the place of the poor fellow whom we show being put over the jumps.

And there's a corking story to it that helps the good work along.

TWO MEN AND A GIRL

Powers Release, December 9

That the evil that men do lives after them, and that the good is oft interred with their bones, we can only prove occasionally, and that by having a fellowman as the example; that is, we must wait for somebody to die to judge whether Shakespeare's axiom applies. To learn it in our own case, we must first die, but then—we can't learn. But there is a way, and that is to pass out of this world by report, only. That's what happened to Ralph Bixby, though, and when the sea cast him up it also gave him a rare opportunity to see the stuff his rival in love was made of; also, he learned something about the woman he took unto himself as a wife before he made the fateful voyage to Australia. He arrives in a home that is his, yet now another's—an interloper within his own threshold. But the two men recognize each other, and a fierce struggle with broadswords relieves the situation—it's a dress-suit against a wanderer's rags, and the field of combat is a magnificent drawing-room.

Yet—it's all in life, true as gospel.

A TROUBLESOME PICTURE

Solax Release, November 29

Psychologists say that dreams are the reaction of one's thoughts during the day. This is strikingly true in the case of the hero in "A Troublesome Picture." He is an ordinary business man, is successful in his enterprises, and as a recreation he dabbles in art.

He buys a life-size painting of a reclining Egyptian Princess. The pose of the Princess arouses the displeasure of his wife and mother-in-law. In spite of their protestations, however, the picture remains in the household, much to the chagrin of our hero's wife and her mother. He gets tempting offers from a friend to sell the picture, but he brushes them aside.

One evening our hero comes home from a trying day at his office. He sits on the lounge and soon falls asleep. He dreams that the Egyptian painting has assumed life. The Princess comes out of the picture and disturbs him with embarrassing embraces. While in this predicament his wife and mother-in-law enter, and they are scandalized. His mother-in-law goes after him with the result that he is minus a good part of his hair.

A great number of complications arise, but it all terminates with our hero's awakening; he finds himself struggling with the house cat, which had found a perch on top of his bald spot. On the same reel

FUN ON BOARD THE U. S. S. VERMONT

The pastimes of Uncle Sam's tars are always interesting. These rovers of the sea have their own peculiar way of killing time, which usually does not hang as heavily on their hands as it does on the hands of landlubbers.

The picture shows the deck of the Vermont with the sailors at a boxing match and other sports.

THE REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE

Solax Release, December 1

This story hinges about the mental struggles of a Colonial girl, who has to decide whether she owes her allegiance to her country or to her lover, who is a British spy.

A young girl visits at the home of friends, where she meets a dashing young man, who falls in love with her. Shortly after his proposal to her she receives word from her father in Trenton that he had met with reverses, and that her immediate return home was imperative. She leaves her friends and returns to her father to help him start life anew.

In the meanwhile Congress declares war on England. Her lover joins the British ranks as an officer. He is dispatched by his general to spy on the American forces entrenched near Trenton, and, if possible, get plans of their entrenchments. A sentinel overhears the instruction given to the spy. He is punished for his curiosity, and later deserts and makes his way to the American lines.

The spy on the road to the American encampment meets and holds up a courier of the American army and takes from him his dispatches.

The spy rides off after strapping the courier to a tree. The spy goes to a tavern and here, to his surprise, he meets his sweetheart and her father, they having decided to earn a living by running a wayside inn.

American soldiers are soon in pursuit of the assailant of their courier and trace the spy to the tavern. The spy makes his escape with the connivance of his sweetheart, but before she lets him go, she demands at the point of a revolver the return of the papers.

There is an interesting counterplot interwoven with the action which graphically brings out the atmosphere of the times. The deserter in the counterplot is both the undoing of himself and the spy. The British spy and his sweetheart are happily reunited, however, and presumably live in bliss ever afterward.

ZIGOMAR

Independent F. & E. Film, Released September 20

A sensational detective story founded on the romance of Leon Sazie. A wonderful feature of this production is the "Will o the Wisp" dance by the noted dancer, Esmee, who performs it at a ball in the Moulin Rouge, Paris. The festival begins by a magnificent procession in which the dancer is carried in a litter, bedecked with jewels. In the succeeding darkness, tiny flames light up and Esmee appears, clad in white veils. She appears in the semi-darkness as a white apparition. Then the dance becomes gayer, the dancer turns faster, like a flower with changing colors and finally sinks exhausted to the floor. There are effects of color lights in this picture that never have been seen before. Immediately following there is a scene of great contrast, when Zigomar sets fire to the place and the scene ends in wild disorder.

The story is about the noted criminal Zigomar, who terrorized all Europe and runs through three reels. Throughout it is a struggle for supremacy between Zigomar and Paulin Broquet, the celebrated detective.

LOVE AND AVIATION

Independent F. & S. Film, Released November 20

A thrilling dramatic story in the course of which there is a series of aerial feats by a noted French aviator and a woman in his biplane.

The story revolves around the aviator and the wife of a well-known French journalist, who becomes infatuated with the air man at their first meeting. Her husband, discovering this, plans the death of the aviator by damaging certain parts of his biplane. In the meantime his wife alone goes to the aviation field and makes a flight with the aviator, who had previously discovered the defect and repaired it. The journalist, learning that his wife was making the flight and fearing that through his act, both would be dashed to death, becomes frenzied and finally collapses. The fliers, however, come to the ground safe and the aviator, realizing that the journalist truly loves his wife, brings about a reconciliation.

This film is in three reels and is being sold through the exclusive territory system.

LOVE HEEDS NOT SHOWERS

Majestic Release, December 3

Mary has been invited by friends to officiate at a charity bazaar as fortune-teller. Her brother invites his artist friend, Jack, to pay them a visit, with covert match-making intentions regarding him and his sister. On the way home from the bazaar the auto breaks down and Mary, in her gypsy costume, decides to walk on; Jack, arriving by train, also decides to walk. On the way he spies a gypsy camp. Farther on he encounters Mary, who has hurt her ankle. He is smitten by her beauty and asks her if she belongs to the gypsy camp he has just seen. She says no and escapes, dropping a side comb. He picks it up and decides to find her again. He comes to the house and meets the family, including Mary, but does not recognize her in her ordinary costume. He goes in search of the camp, but it has obeyed the calling of the highway and flown. Mary by this time learns to love this handsome guest, but cannot understand his strange conduct. By accident she finds her comb in his pocket and divines the delightful truth. She, therefore, plans a masquerade party. He attends and on a seat under an ancient tree pops the ancient question, in a deluge of rain.

BILL AS A VETERINARY SURGEON

Lux Release, December 1

Bill sets up in business as a "Vet." He cures horses, he cures cats, and in fact, is endowed with the power to sustain life or revive the departing spirit of every imaginable animal. His operation upon a rabbit, which he massages back to life, causes much merriment, and in the capacity of a dentist to a big brown bear, he comes off very lucky, and does not require the attention of a doctor. On the same reel is

THE MAKING OF AN AEROPLANE

The interest which the science of aviation has aroused has given the Lux Company an opportunity to produce a most interesting subject on the making of an aeroplane, giving in a concise manner the details of the work. A good opening view of the huge workshops is followed by pictures of the cutting, mounting, and the covering of the "ribs." The process of regulating and improving the various parts of the machine, the finding of a defect, testing the motor, are all shown, while the concluding views are of the aeroplane soaring higher and higher in the clouds.

"THE STRANGER"

Rex Release, November 30

When the unsearchable abysses of man's destiny are finally explored, when we make our last pilgrimage, commit our last act, speak our last word, and enter the Supreme Court for the Verdict, we will have a mighty counselor to plead our defence—that which in life we call Conscience. By a man's deeds alone, one cannot always know that which lies in the depths of him. Our thoughts, our desires, our impulses, are but the vagabond habits of the centuries. Folly is human, and sin is often but the result of folly. Originally, we are all innocent.

Other men have wandered, others have found the trail, lost it again, and crawled back, worn and wearied, to find it a path of thorns, as did Phil Stanton, the Stranger. He meets Nell, and the little Western town which was before a huge monument of loneliness becomes home to him. Nell is the pianist at the cafe, and the music her fingers create steals into his soul, steals his heart, stills the tumult of his brain. Timidly he asks the old question, tenderly she gives the answer and herself; and in their happiness they find the solace and the song.

Dear reader, did you ever ponder why some things that shouldn't happen? Perhaps it is that we really have not much to do with this world, except commit follies and omit duties, betray truth and traduce virtue, repent, and leave it. —But we must write it! Phil becomes infatuated with another girl in the town —temptation and the treason if truth. Her lover becomes aware of the situation, meets the man, and compels him to leave the town at once.

Dazed, in despair, the trusting wife hears and realizes; just another aching heart, just another sundered soul passing into the night, once again man's ruthless hand, and the destruction and devastation resultant.

Deserted, destitute, the woman seeks her old position, but the place is taken. At last, through the Salvation Army she obtains a position in a near-by town. The months go by; she meets another. It is now two years since Phil's departure. She is certain he has met with disaster, death. The man asks her to marry him; she consents.

The months go by; and one night a heavy storm forces a wanderer to seek shelter. Phil comes to the home of Nell, entreats lodging for the night. The woman looks at the man—and knows! Her mind conjures up a grim shadow, like a child painting phantoms upon the darkness. The man looks at the woman, and recognition dawns.

And with recognition, the privilege he had owned and forfeited, the desire for his own returns. She tells him of the other man, and weeps in the telling. In his fury, he attempts to push her away from him, and a little white ruffled thing falls to the ground. He stoops to pick it up, and finds it to be a child's dress. A moment stares, looks quickly at the woman, and in her blanched face he sees the answer. An unborn child, his wife's child, whose father he is not! And in the death struggle of vengeance and despair, the right of things triumps. Slowly he turns and walks from the room, into the storm and the night.

A few days later Nell and her husband come across a frozen body on the silent, snowy wastes, the man dead with his secret, the silent heart as white at last as the driven snow was his tomb!

BLANK LEADER

from $7.50 per 1,000 feet. Shipments subject to approval.

WASTE UTILIZATION CO.
500 Fifth Avenue NEW YORK

FILM EXCHANGES and PHOTOPLAY HOUSES

NOTICE: We have ready to deliver to you at $4.00 per set, music free, two beautiful sets of slides, for songs, "If I Knew" and "A Knight of the Road." "If I Knew" is a beautiful love ballad, and the slides are first class in every respect, being posed by a nice looking couple, artistic scenery and coloring. The other, "A Knight of the Road," tramp number. The most original song published in years, giving the happy-go-lucky side of a tramp's life, and posed by a genuine tramp. In case you would like to see music of either or both songs, send 2c postage for same. 200 Announcement slides. Advertising slides a specialty. If you want the best, write

NIAGARA SLIDE CO., Lockport, N.Y.
Catalog mailed free.

OUR NEW METAL COATED SCREENS on Linaura cloth are the best screens ever made for the money. Every Moving Picture house should use them. Be sure to send for price list and sample of this screen.

SPECIAL REFLECTING SCREEN for outdoor exhibitions. Any size made to order.

If you wish any lantern slides, remember that we have the largest stock and are one of the oldest manufacturers in the United States.

WILLIAMS, BROWN & EARLE, Inc.,
Stereopticons, Kinetoscopes and Moving Pictures. Supplies of every description.
Box 63—918 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SALES COMPANY

The following films have been released during the week of November 27th by the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company:

Monday, November 27th

Jolly Bill of Rollicking R	American
First Edition of Mother Goose	Champion
Uncle's Visit	Imp
Happy Hobo's Health	Nestor
Grandma's Toofache	Comet

Tuesday, November 28th

A Western One-Night Stand	Bison
Too Much Injun	Powers
Lineman and the Girl	Powers
The Tempest	Thanhouser
Miss Masquerader	Eclair

Wednesday, November 29th

The Two Browns	Champion
When the West was Wild	Nestor
A Happy Thanksgiving	Reliance
Troublesome Picture	Solax
U. S. Battleship Vermont	Solax
The Little Duke	Ambrosio

Thursday, November 30th

The Sheriff's Sisters	American
Over the Hills	Imp
The Five Daughters of Mr. Durand	Eclair
Gussie's Congratulations	Eclair
The Stranger	Rex

Friday, December 1st

The Late Mrs. Early	Comet
An Easterner's Peril	Bison
Beneath the Veil	Thanhouser
Revolutionary Romance	Solax
Bill as a Veterinary Surgeon	Lux
The Making of an Aeroplane	Lux

Saturday, December 2d

Western Feud	Nestor
Mutt and Jeff and the Scheme that Failed	Nestor
Wanderer's Return	Powers
Lake Como	Powers
The Penalty of Her Ambition	Great Northern
The Poison Cup	Reliance
Severed from the World	Itala

Sunday, December 3d

Love Heeds Not Showers	Majestic

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

Our price is right and the service is right, that's why you ought to write right now for our Film List.

Two Reels, 6 times per week.....$14.00
Two Reels, 7 times per week..... 15.00
Three Reels, 6 times per week..... 16.00
Three Reels, 7 times per week..... 17.00

NATIONAL FILM BROKERS :: 186 N. LaSalle St., Chicago

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

STATE YOUR WANTS.
We'll make the RIGHT PRICE and give the RIGHT SERVICE.
Have little used Powers No. 6 fitted with new 1912 Model Motiograph Lamp House to sell. Low price.
BARGAINS IN TICKETS AND CARBONS.
ALL KINDS OF MACHINES AND SUPPLIES.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY CO. :: 109 N. Dearborn St., Chicago

BARGAINS—BARGAINS.

Motion Picture Machines $35.00 up. Powers Cameragraph No. 5 for $110. Edison Model B, only $140. Lubin Cinéograph $65.
Also 20th Century Marvel $100. All fully equipped. Model B Gas Outfit $25.
Powers Cameragraph No. 6, Edison Model B and Standard. Send for Sup. 33 Bargain List. Motion Picture Machines Wanted.
HARBACH & CO., 809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

Theatre Sales Co.

211 Dearborn Street, opposite Post Office
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
Long Distance Phone, Harrison 341
Dealers in Theatres anywhere in the United States and especially Chicago. Write or Call.
Make Known your Wants

IT IS WONDERFUL!

The improvement in the quality of films produced by the Independent manufacturers during the past few weeks is simply wonderful. If you haven't seen any Independent films lately, for the love of Mike look them up. The manufacturers have simply gone bugs on the subject of quality, quality, quality—and you'll get the benefit of the whole thing if you get your films from THE BIGGEST AND BEST FILM RENTER IN THE WORLD.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters:
New number 204 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.
Sykes Block, Minneapolis, Minn.
1312 Farman St., Omaha, Neb.
1110 Wyandotte St., Kansas City, Mo.
515 Mulberry St., Des Moines, Iowa.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

(My Free Employment Bureau is for YOU. Go ahead and USE IT!)

LOOK OUT FOR MOVING PICTURE TALES EARLY IN DECEMBER

THE WORLD'S GREATEST THEATRE CHAIR

Sanitary, Space-Saving, Life-Saving, Money-Saving.
To Use This Chair Is to Make Your Business Grow.
Write Today for Circular W.

HARDESTY MFG. CO.
Canal Dover, Ohio.

25c IN STAMPS GIVES YOU ONE COPY OF

HALLBERG'S

1912 MOTION PICTURE CATALOGUE AND REFERENCE BOOK

Special Jobber of

EDISON
POWERS
MOTIOGRAPH

Moving Picture Machines

The "Hallberg Economizer"

Used in connection with any of the above moving picture machines, produces the finest results on your screen that money can buy.

I Equip Theatres Completely

And carry in stock only the highest grade goods required for your theater.
Free catalogues, circulars and pamphlets furnished of individual items you require.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Free Catalogue No. 2.

The way to increase your patronage is to show them something better than your competitor.

MIRROROIDE

Screens and Curtains

Will do this for you. Mirroroide has done it for hundreds of other exhibitors. Why not for you? We can produce hundreds of original testimonials proving that has increased business 100 per cent in every theatre where it is used.

MIRROROIDE

MIRROROIDE

is highly endorsed by the clergy who know that with its use you can keep your theatre fully illuminated during projection.

MIRROROIDE

will give you better detail, more depth, brighter and clearer pictures. 100 per cent. improvement over any other screen or curtain.

MIRROROIDE

is a mercury foil coating of pure silver brilliancy that will never fade, crack, peel or lose its lustre.

MIRROROIDE

will cut your juice bill 1-3. Besides it's the best, the world's best, by actual tests.

MIRROROIDE

is the only curtain and screen that will not lose or distortionize the picture close up or at a great angle to screen.

Rev. Dr. Stockwell, 1st Presbyterian Church, Newburgh, N. Y., claims Mirroroide produces the brightest, clearest and best pictures he ever saw projected.

Get our samples.

Demonstration size 1-3 yard 50 cents. Ordinary free circulars, testimonials, etc., for the asking.

BENJAMIN GENTER CO.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

Data from Manufacturers' List of Releases

MEMBERS OF SALES CO.

AMBROSIO

(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

		Feet
Oct.	4—Wrestlers and Wrestling
Oct.	11—The Little Chimney Sweeper
Oct.	14—Tweedledum's Monkey
Oct.	14—One of Tweedledum's Tricks (Com.)
Oct.	18—The Conversion of St. Anthony
Oct.	25—Salambo
Nov.	1—Judas (Dr.)
Nov.	8—Dolly's Doll
Nov.	8—Tweedledum's Motor Car
Nov.	15—The Convict's Song (Dr.)
Nov.	22—The Golden Wedding

AMERICAN

		Feet
Oct.	16—Three Daughters of the West (Dr.)	850
Oct.	16—The Caves of LaJolla (Sc.)	150
Oct.	19—The Lonely Range (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	23—The Horse Thief's Bigamy (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	26—The Trail of the Eucalyptus (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	30—The Stronger Man (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	2—The Water War (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	6—The Three Shell Game (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	9—The Mexican (W. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	13—The Eastern Cowboy (W. Com.)	1000
Nov.	16—The Way of the West (Com.)	1000
Nov.	20—The Test (Dr.)	1000
Nov.	23—The Master of the Vineyard
Nov.	27—Jolly Bill of the Rollicking R
Nov.	30—The Sheriff's Sisters
Dec.	4—The Angel of Paradise Ranch (Dr.)	1000

CHAMPION

		Feet
Oct.	25—Law or the Lady	950
Oct.	30—Field Day Sports at Ft. Riley, Kansas	950
Nov.	1—The Cowboy's Pies	950
Nov.	6—Folks of Old Virginia	950
Nov.	8—The Moonshiner's Trail	950
Nov.	13—The Redemption of a Coward	950
Nov.	15—The Passing of Sal	950
Nov.	20—National Guardsmen and Regulars at Fort Riley, Kansas (Top.)	950
Nov.	22—When the Sheriff Got His Man (Dr.)	950
Nov.	27—The Mother Goose Series (1st Reel)	950
Nov.	29—The Two Browns	950
Dec.	4—Yankee Doodle and Our Navy

COMET

		Feet
Nov.	20—The Office Boy's Dream (Com.)	960
Nov.	24—The Diamond Locket (Dr.)	1000
Nov.	27—Grandma's Toothache (Com.)	955
Dec.	1—The Late Mrs. Early (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	4—Billy's Letters (Com.)	1000
Dec.	8—The Dead Canary (Dr.)	1000

ECLAIR

		Feet
Oct.	16—Lake Garda (Scenic)	185
Oct.	23—Youth! Queen of Hearts" (Com.)	740
Oct.	23—Percy Gets Tired of the Theater (Com.)	260
Oct.	30—A Father's Heart (Dr.)	920
Nov.	6—Willie Challenges Jim Jackson (Com.)
Nov.	6—Life Under the Sea (Educational)
Nov.	13—The Legend of the Eagle (Dr.)	925
Nov.	21—Hands Across the Sea
Nov.	23—Portuguese Centaurs (Mil.)	600
Nov.	23—The Automatic Lighter (Com.)	400
Nov.	28—Miss Masquerader (Com.)	1000
Nov.	30—The Five Daughters of Mr. Durand (Com.)
Nov.	30—Gussy's Congratulations (Com.)

GREAT NORTHERN

Sept.	9—A Dream with a Lesson
Sept.	16—The Conspirators (Dr.)
Sept.	23—Caught in His Own Net (Dr.)
Sept.	30—The Conspirators (Dr.)
Oct.	7—The White Tulip (Com.)
Oct.	7—Barcelona (Scenic)
Oct.	14—Secret of the Underground Passage (Dr.)
Oct.	21—His Fidelity Investigated (Com.)
Oct.	28—The Vicissitudes of Fate (Dr.)
Nov.	4—The Actor as Soldier (Com.)
Nov.	11—A Woman's Wit (Com.)
Nov.	18—A Rendezvous in Hyde Park (Com. Dr.)
Nov.	18—High Scotland (Scenic)
Nov.	25—The Theft of Mona Lisa (Com.)

IMP

Independent Moving Picture Co. of America.

		Feet
Sept.	14—The Brothers (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	18—The Bicycle Bug's Dream
Sept.	21—By Registered Mail
Sept.	25—The Co-Ed. Professor (Com.)	750
Sept.	25—Through the Dells of the Wisconsin in a Motor Boat (Sc.)	250
Sept.	28—'Tween Two Loves (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	2—The Rose's Story (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	5—Through the Air (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	9—The Sentinel Asleep
Oct.	12—The Better Way
Oct.	16—Uncle Pete's Ruse
Oct.	19—The Aggressor
Oct.	23—The Biting Business
Oct.	26—The Waif
Oct.	30—His Dress Shirt
Oct.	30—A Few Minutes with Steeplejack Lindholm
Nov.	2—King, the Detective
Nov.	6—Waiting at the Church (Com.)	1000
Nov.	9—The Wife's Awakening (Dr.)	1000
Nov.	13—The Fallin' Out
Nov.	16—Breaking the Seventh Commandment
Nov.	20—From the Bottom of the Sea
Nov.	23—Executive Clemency
Nov.	27—Uncle's Visit
Nov.	30—Over the Hills

ITALA

Aug.	19—Foolshead—Manikin
Aug.	19—The Blunt Sword
Aug.	24—Modern School of Italian Cavalry
Aug.	26—Foolshead—Chauffeur
Aug.	26—For a Straw
Sept.	2—Clio and Phyletes
Sept.	7—The Infinitive Ways of Providence (Dr.)
Sept.	9—Foolshead Hypnotizer (Com.)
Sept.	9—Toto Has a Purse
Sept.	16—The Horse of the Regiment (Com.)
Sept.	16—Foolshead Charges Himself with Removal (Com.)
Sept.	23—The Mask of the Red Death
Sept.	23—The Hornet
Oct.	7—Foolshead a Model Guest
Oct.	21—Foolshead Quarrels With His Sweetheart
Oct.	28—Toto and the Dummy (Com.)
Oct.	28—The Rearing of Pheasants (Dr.)
Nov.	4—Foolshead's Holiday (Com.)
Nov.	11—A Woman's Wit (Com.)
Nov.	11—A Victim of Competition
Nov.	28—Second Dr. Crippen

LUX

By Prieur.

		Feet
Oct.	6—Bill Has a Bath (Com.)	452
Oct.	6—Neighbors (Com.)	488
Oct.	13—A Dog in a Coiner's Den (Dr.)	593
Oct.	13—Bill, Police Cyclist (Com.)	390
Oct.	20—Bill Pays His Debts (Com.)	442
Oct.	20—Henpecked Bertie Goes Fishing (Com.)	514
Oct.	27—Bill, His Wife and the Water (Com.)	455
Oct.	27—Bertie and His Rivals (Com.)	472
Nov.	3—Bill and the Bear (Com.)	554
Nov.	3—Tommy's Camera (Com.)	393
Nov.	10—Bill Taken for a Ghost (Com.)	426
Nov.	10—The Diversions of a Nursemaid (Com.)	495
Nov.	17—Saas Grund, a Village in the Alps (Sc.)	295
Nov.	17—The Mystery of Beaufort Grange (Dr.)	695
Nov.	24—Bill and Bertie Get Married (Com.)	325
Nov.	24—A Passing Cloud (Dr.)	658

MAJESTIC

Nov.	26—The Courting of Mary (Com.)
Dec.	3—Love Heeds not Showers (Com.)
Dec.	10—The Ultimate End (Dr.)
Dec.	17—Little Red Driving Hood

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Oct.	28—Dippy Advertises for a Pup (Com.)
Nov.	1—Big Noise Hank (W. Com.)
Nov.	4—Mutt and Jeff and the Lady Stenographer (Com.)
Nov.	4—The Suit Case Mystery (Com.)
Nov.	8—A True Westerner (Dr.)
Nov.	11—Desperate Desmond Almost Succeeds
Nov.	18—Mutt and Jeff and the Unlucky Stars (Com.)
Nov.	15—The White Medicine Man (Dr.)
Nov.	18—That Kid from the East (Com.)
Nov.	20—His Vacation
Nov.	22—The Cowboy Pugilist (W. Dr.)
Nov.	25—Desperate Desmond Pursued by Claude Eclaire (Com. Dr.)
Nov.	27—Happy Hobo's Help
Nov.	29—When the West Was Wild
Dec.	2—Western Feud
Dec.	2—Mutt and Jeff and the Scheme that Failed

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

("Bison")

Oct.	10—The Pioneer's Mistake
Oct.	13—The Indian Rustlers
Oct.	17—A Western Bride
Oct.	20—A Warrior's Treachery
Oct.	24—A Noble Red Man
Oct.	27—An Indian Hero
Oct.	31—The Cattlemen's War
Nov.	3—A Young Squaw's Bravery
Nov.	7—A Race for a Bride
Nov.	10—Wenona's Broken Promise
Nov.	14—The Winning of Wonega
Nov.	17—The Ranchman's Mother-in-Law (Com. Dr.)
Nov.	21—The Broken Trap
Nov.	24—White Fawn's Escape
Nov.	24—A Bad Man
Nov.	28—A Western One-Night Stand
Dec.	1—An Easterner's Peril

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

		Feet
Oct.	14—Running Fawn's Chief (Dr.)	990
Oct.	17—Yarn of a Baby's Shirt (Com.)
Oct.	17—First Mail by Aeroplane (Topical)
Oct.	17—Headline Acrobats (Com.)
Oct.	21—The Awakening of John Clark (Dr.)
Oct.	24—John Baxter's Ward (Dr.)
Oct.	24—The Little Brown Calf (Dr.)
Oct.	28—The Revenue Officer's Last Case (Dr.)
Oct.	31—Apples and Destiny (Com.)
Oct.	31—The Progressive Book Agent (Com.)
Nov.	4—The Pride of the West (Dr.)
Nov.	7—Mobilization of the American Fleet
Nov.	11—For the Tribe (Dr.)
Nov.	14—When First We Met (Dr.)
Nov.	14—The Tell-Tale Parasol (Com.)
Nov.	18—The Old Leader (Dr.)
Nov.	21—Rivals (Com.)
Nov.	21—Views of Montserrat, Italy (Sc.)
Nov.	25—Jug o' Rum (Dr.)
Nov.	28—Too Much Injun (Com.)
Nov.	28—The Lineman and the Girl
Dec.	2—The Wanderer's Return (Dr.)
Dec.	2—Views of Lake Como (Scenic)

RELIANCE

Nov.	4—The Greater Love
Nov.	8—Marriage
Nov.	11—The Track Walker
Nov.	15—The Moonshiners
Nov.	18—The Injustice of Man
Nov.	22—Helpless Man
Nov.	25—A Daughter of Italy
Nov.	29—Happy Thanksgiving
Dec.	2—The Poison Cup

REX

Sept.	28—The Derelict (Dr.)
Oct.	5—Lost Illusions (Dr.)
Oct.	12—Chasing a Rainbow
Oct.	19—Her Sister
Oct.	26—A Breach of Faith (Dr.)
Nov.	2—The Tale of a Cat
Nov.	9—Saints and Sinners
Nov.	16—The Return
Nov.	23—The Price (Dr.)

SOLAX COMPANY

Nov.	1—Following Cousin's Footsteps (Com.)
Nov.	3—A Heroine of the Revolution (Dr.)
Nov.	8—An Interrupted Elopement (Com.)
Nov.	10—Grandmother Love (Dr.)
Nov.	15—Baby Needs Medicine (Com.)
Nov.	17—Only a Squaw (Dr.)
Nov.	22—Husbands Wanted (Com.)
Nov.	24—The Will of Providence (Com. Dr.)
Nov.	29—A Troublesome Picture (Com.)
Nov.	29—Life on Board a Battleship (Com.)
Dec.	1—A Revolutionary Romance (Mil.)

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept.	12—The Buddhist Priestess (Dr.)
Sept.	15—In the Chorus (Dr.)
Sept.	19—The Lie (Dr.)
Sept.	22—The Honeymooners (Dr.)
Sept.	26—Lochinvar (Dr.)
Sept.	29—Love's Sacrifice (Dr.)
Oct.	3—The Five Rose Sisters (Dr.)
Oct.	6—The East and the West (Dr.)
Oct.	9—The Higher Law (Dr.)
Oct.	13—The Tempter and Dan Cupid (Dr.)
Oct.	17—The Early Life of David Copperfield
Oct.	24—Little Em'ly and David Copperfield
Oct.	31—The Loves of David Copperfield
Oct.	20—The Satyr and the Lady (Dr.)
Oct.	27—The Jewels of Allah (Dr.)
Nov.	3—Their Burglar
Nov.	7—The Missing Heir (Dr.)
Nov.	10—The Last of the Mohicans (Dr.)
Nov.	14—The Higher—the Fewer (Com.)
Nov.	17—A Mother's Faith (Dr.)

YANKEE FILM COMPANY

Sept.	8—Mesmerizing Moe (Com.)
Sept.	8—Faded Roses (Dr.)
Sept.	11—Tangled Heartstrings
Sept.	15—Woman
Sept.	18—The Star Reporter
Sept.	22—The Girl and the Chauffeur (Dr.)
Sept.	25—For the Wearing of the Green (Dr.)
Sept.	29—Man (Dr.)
Oct.	2—She Never Knew (Dr.)
Oct.	6—The Goose Girl (Dr.)
Oct.	9—His Second Wife
Oct.	13—Society Hobos
Oct.	16—The Lost Handkerchief (Com.)
Oct.	20—The Man Who Came Back (Dr.)
Oct.	23—The Drummer Boy of Shiloh (Dr.)
Oct.	27—Flower of the Forest (Dr.)
Oct.	30—The Van Osten Jewels (Dr.)
Nov.	3—At Daisy Farm (Dr.)
Nov.	6—A Coward's Regeneration (Dr.)
Nov.	10—He Didn't Like the Tune (Com.)
Nov.	13—Into the Light (Dr.)
Nov.	17—The Two Rooms (Dr.)
Nov.	21—A Master of Millions
Nov.	24—The Baseball Bug (Com. Dr.)
Nov.	28—The Tempest (Dr.)
Dec.	1—Beneath the Veil (Dr.)

DON'T BE MISLED BY A FAKE

READ THIS AND THEN THIS

"ORIGINAL ITALIAN-TURKISH WAR PICTURES"
'—Nov. 6.

No one seems to assume responsibility for this film, but there is little danger that any one will believe it depicts any scenes of the present conflict. The film starts off with views of Rome, giving the usual scenes of the ancient part of the city; then follows a view of the Sultan's troops at Constantinople, with Turkish soldiers arriving in Tripoli, as this next scene is labelled; next we see a large body of Arab troops "preparing for war," with a subsequent view of supposed Turkish troops "preparing to flee from Tripoli," each of the latter being merely scenes of some military review in which Turkish and Arabian soldiers participated. The next view is one of the most amusing, for it is supposed to show the Turkish troops in actual flight from Tripoli and is, in reality, nothing but another portion of the same maneuvers wherein a light battery unlimbers on the run and goes through a regular fast artillery drill, which, by stretch of the imagination, could be misconstrued into a scene of retreat. The last is the biggest fake of all, and is enough to condemn the entire subject. It is subtitled, "Town Ruined and Deserted." And we are shown views of ruins of some ancient city! The Sales Company claim no knowledge of the film or responsibility for its showing, though it was seen in an Independent house on Fourteenth street. It is, we are told, being offered for private leasing, direct through its owners, to the Independent exhibitors.

Reprinted from M. Tel., Sunday, Nov. 12.

WRITE FOR PARTICULARS OF SPECIAL FILMS

SERIES No. 2

RELEASED ABOUT END OF NOVEMBER

BETTER THAN No. 1

"GENUINE TRIPOLI WAR FILMS"
Cines—Nov. 15.

The first American release made by the Cines Company of Rome and Padua, Italy, is presented in a film no one can afford to miss, not alone because of its undoubted historical value, but because of the intensely interesting views it presents. It begins with a view of the harbor of Tripoli and shows the steamship Derna and the first newspaper reporters landing in the besieged city. Then is shown the Hanudee fort after it had been shelled by the Italian fleet, with Italian guards mounting its captured works. Then Admiral Travelle is shown reviewing the Italian troops, who have been landed, while the first Italian governor enters the city and the first official Italian flag is hoisted over the town. Other Turkish fortifications are shown, with another review of Italian troops by the commanding generals and naval officers, sailors being included in the landing forces. The film closes with a near view of officers receiving news from the front, and signal men wig-wagging to the fleet in the bay. Secure the film. It is a special release, and will be well worth showing.

Reprinted from M. Tel., Sunday, Nov. 19.

SEVERAL ENORMOUS PRODUCTIONS IN PREPARATION

GET THE GENUINE ARTICLE

FROM THE FIRM WITH A REPUTATION

CINES OF ROME

445 BROOME STREET, NEW YORK

Telephone, 9232 Spring Telegram, Cines, New York

THE FLYING A

We Did the

"IMPOSSIBLE!"

A negative was made October 27th, 1911, under personal direction of S. S. Hutchinson, President The American Film Mfg. Company, of the Famous Submarine Gardens of the Pacific Ocean

Considered impossible heretofore! Commenting on this extraordinary feat, the Los Angeles Times, under date of October 28, says:

> "Despite the efforts of many well known local photographers and the repeated experiments of other motion-picture camera experts it remained for S. S. Hutchinson, of Chicago, to actually photograph the world-famous submarine gardens of Santa Catalina Island, etc., etc."

Just imagine! That wonderland under the ocean—and photographed through a solid inch of glass and FIFTEEN FEET OF WATER! And the camera caught an octopus and a number of fish, too.

This magnificent spectacle forms part of a 1,000 feet reel to be released December 14, along with a beautiful scenic on containing some delightful glimpses of mountain grandeur unsurpassed, the gorgeous valley and the clearest water in the world. A close-up view of 100 seal, basking on the rocks, was obtained.

SANTA CATALINA—"Magic Isle of the Pacific"

There are some charming water scenes, too. The entire Pacific Fleet is seen in annual maneuvering off Los Angeles.

A thousand feet of epoch-making film! Remember the date is December 14. Demand this picture. Don't let it pass.

THE AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO.
Bank Floor, Ashland Block
CHICAGO

THE FLYING A

"REMEMBER THE MAINE"

Mr. State Right Buyer, and wire in your bid for the

SUREST SUCCESS

since the birth of Moving Pictures

The Awe Inspiring Two Reel Historical Feature

1898

Taken by Special Permission of United States Government ! ! !

"THE MYSTERY OF THE MAINE"

Read what one of the many Endorsements of the New York press says of these wonderful pictures

NEW YORK TIMES

Motion Pictures of Raising the Maine.

Mayor Gaynor, Admiral Lutz, Gen. Grant, and other prominent officials who composed the committee for the raising of the Maine have been invited to witness the first motion-picture production showing the progress in lifting the sunken battleship, to be exhibited at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre this morning at 10:30 o'clock. The pictures, to be shown in two reels, are the result of nine months' tedious work, and they will be shown first, according to the agreement between the Government and the motion-picture company, to the members of the committee which prosecuted the work of raising the Maine.

A Motion Picture Spectacle that will thrill every Man, Woman and Child in America

Do not let this golden opportunity to secure the biggest money maker in the Film World get by YOU. The only films in existence appealing to all classes from newsboy to millionaire. We are getting offers EVERY HOUR!

Write or Wire to the

RAISING-THE-MAINE FILM COMPANY

145 West 45th Street Suite 804 NEW YORK CITY

DEC 9 1911

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

Volume IV
No 48

December 2
1911

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DEC

PRICE
TEN CENTS

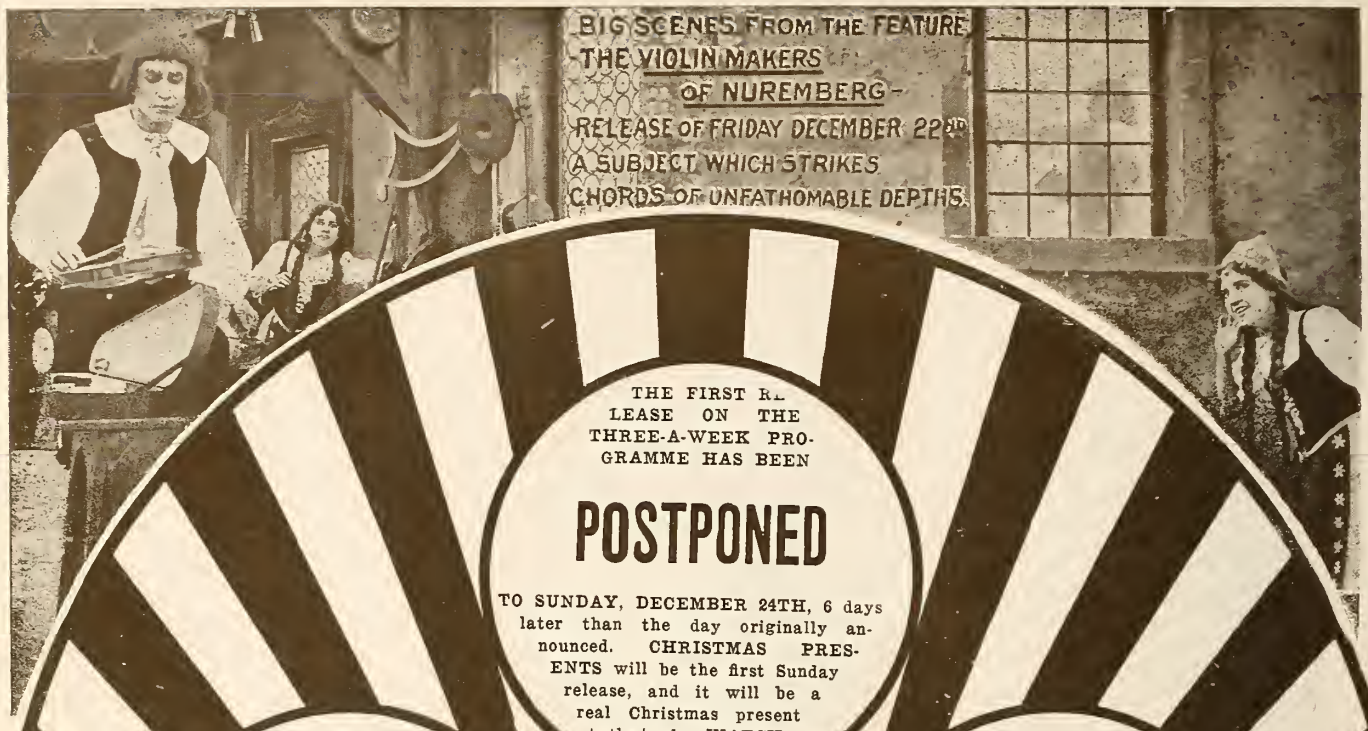
Scene from

A Mail Bag Romance

A COMING POWERS PICTURE PLAY



THE FIRST RELEASE ON THE THREE-A-WEEK PROGRAMME HAS BEEN

POSTPONED

TO SUNDAY, DECEMBER 24TH, 6 days later than the day originally announced. CHRISTMAS PRESENTS will be the first Sunday release, and it will be a real Christmas present to the trade. WATCH FOR IT.

RELEASED
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 6th
(A Split Reel)

BABY'S CHOICE

An impressionable child picks out the husband for her sister. She ingeniously eliminates all other suitors.

And on the same reel

The PAPER MAKING INDUSTRY

The picture not only shows interesting interiors in a Glens Falls paper mill but shows also how the powerful falls have been harnessed

RELEASED
FRIDAY, DEC. 8th

THE LITTLE SHOE

A grief-crazed mother in an absent-minded moment steals a baby to replace her own who died.

The story reaches unusual moments of dramatic intensity. When the real mother and her child are reunited after seventeen years of separation, one feels an exhilaration difficult to describe

Solax

The EXHIBITORS and EXCHANGEMEN who uphold SOLAX will continue to wear a pleased smile after running THE VIOLIN MAKERS OF NUREMBERG, the release of FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22ND.

Solax Company CONGRESS AVE. FLUSHING, N. Y.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

SALES COMPANY Agents in U. S. A. and Canada

The MAJESTIC

¶ Has made its first release and it was a SUCCESS. The second, third, fourth and all following releases will likewise be SUCCESSES, because we shall give the exchanges the class of pictures they need to inspire confidence in the exhibitors, who in turn must satisfy the public.

¶ THE EXHIBITORS now have the greatest opportunity of their lives to increase their profits—this is due to the combined efforts of Independent exchanges and manufacturers, who have entered the field at great cost and made it possible for the exhibitor to choose his own service.

¶ THE INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES are commencing to reap the benefits of this improved condition, and they are to be congratulated for loyally supporting the manufacturers to the extent of making possible a healthy existence all around.

¶ THE INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURERS have reaped benefits but must not fall short of proper recognition of this splendid support—they must continue to improve their product—each and every one of them—and they will reap further reward.

¶ THE MAJESTIC WILL PRACTICE EVERYTHING IT WILL PREACH.

¶ WE HAVE THE BEST COMPANY of favorite actors and actresses in the business. We have the best plots and we know how to make pictures with that essential combination.

MAJESTIC RELEASES

Nov. 26, "THE COURTING OF MARY"—High Class Comedy.
Dec. 3, "LOVE HEEDS NOT SHOWERS"—High Class Comedy.
Dec. 10, "KEEPING MABEL HOME"—High Class Comedy.

BY SPECIAL REQUEST

Dec. 17, "LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD"—Nursery Rhyme.
Dec. 24, "THE ACTRESS"—Strong Drama.

¶ THE MAJESTIC will release two subjects each week commencing early in January—definite date to be announced later.

DECEMBER 17th—BY SPECIAL REQUEST

Little Mary Pickford in "Little Red Riding Hood"

THE MAJESTIC MOTION PICTURE CO.

TOM D. COCHRANE, General Manager

145 WEST 45th STREET NEW YORK CITY

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

LET US HELP DECORATE YOUR LOBBY FOR THE HOLIDAYS
—MAIL US THE COUPON IN THE LOWER LEFT-HAND CORNER

THE THANHOUSER

"GREATEST DECEMBER"

"SHE"

Put In Your Request NOW for the "Greatest December's" GREATEST Picture!

IN 2 REELS
RIDER HAGGARD'S MYSTERY MASTERPIECE
TUESDAY, DEC. 26

A Special and a Feature Issued as a Regular Thanhouser Release

RELEASED TUESDAY, DEC. 12
First of the "Greatest December" Features

The Lady from the Sea

By HENRIK IBSEN

While Society is seeing this production at high admissions at a fashionable New York playhouse, the Great American Middle Class will he enabled to enjoy it for a nickel or a dime, thanks to you! That is, if you are real showman enough you can have the reel. It's all in the asking. Ask! Ask! Ask! Every critic has said this production surpasses the stage one in point of realism.

"THE LADY FROM THE SEA"

RELEASED FRIDAY, DEC. 15
A Comedy that You NEED

Deacon Debbs

is that kind of "Thanhouser Funny-film" that you'd expect in our "Greatest Decemher," and if you're one of the folks who say good comedy is lacking and then somehow can't book this reel, you have our sympathy. "There's no such word as 'Can't' in the dictionary," goes the phrase. But there is, as a matter of fact; you'll find it right after "Can." "Can" comes first; and it comes first, too, with the wise exhibitor who shows every comedy reel worth showing.

To Boost YOUR Business

We bunched our best and biggest features in one month and made possible our

GREATEST

DECEMBER
12 (TUES.) LADY FROM SEA, (IBSEN)
22 (FRI.) CINDERELLA
26 (TUES.) "SHE"—2 Reels

THANHOUSER CO., NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.:—Send me FREE Lobby Decorations for your "Greatest December" features.
I am not getting "The Thanhouser News."
I am

(NAME).....
(ADDRESS).....
(EXCHANGE).....

CLIP AND MAIL THIS DAY

THANHOUSER CO.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

Sales Company agents for U. S. and Canada.

A FULLY EQUIPPED 1912 MOTOR-DRIVEN MOTIOGRAPH FOR $268.50 UP

THE LATEST ADDITION TO THE MOTIOGRAPH LINE

A snappy, up to the minute, 1912 model machine, that for grace of design, perfection in construction, "and picture," cannot be equalled.

Naturally you wonder how we can give such astonishing value for the money. The reason is simple—we have heen huilding machines for years. Have a splendidly equipped factory, and the wonderful success of the MOTIOGRAPH has done away with heavy experimental expense.

Dependable Service is what you are after, and every MOTIOGRAPH sold is our silent salesman. When you huy a MOTIOGRAPH and like it you tell your friends, and when they are in the market their decision is influenced hy the wonderful results you have obtained.

We are always glad to demonstrate our line. Call at the factory and learn more about us and the MOTIOGRAPH.

Good MOTIOGRAPH operators: Get in touch with us.

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO., 564 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO

For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

©Cl.B249999

"The contents of this issue are copyrighted"

The Moving Picture News

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

Sole Agent and Correspondent for advertisements in Great Britain
B. Allan, 8 Sherwood St., Piccadilly Circus, W., London

Chicago Representative: Warner Kennedy.
844 Waveland Ave. 'Phone 3818 Lake View

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor.

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President; John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City.
ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Volume IV December 2, 1911 Number 48

EDUCATIONAL PICTURES

IT is very gratifying to us to learn that the seed we have been so persistently sowing, watering, rolling, and weeding, is now springing up with wonderful strength to a rich harvest. It has taken us considerable time, thought, and hard work, to get our views before the educationalists of the country, but, as constant dropping wears the stone, so the constant reiteration that moving pictures will become the real educators of the race is bearing fruit in Brooklyn, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, New York, and other large cities, of which our columns bear record. It makes us take heart and rejoice that the MOVING PICTURE NEWS is becoming the true educational medium by which educators and manufacturers are brought closely together. Copies of the NEWS, with our educational articles in, have been sent to every real educationalist in the country. Interviews have appeared in our columns with Henry Leipziger, and Dr. Maxwell of New York, who are acknowledged to be the most prominent educationalists in the country and whose words carry immense weight with other boards of education.

We have said, and again repeat, that moving pictures have only just put their foot on the second step of the stairs of progress; the world is now beginning to appreciate more fully that the eye is a superior medium for reaching the mind as compared with the ear. The eye sees and records on the sensitiveness of the brain the impressions received, like the image impinged on a photographic plate by the lens of a camera, and once this impression is fully developed it can always be called upon to give a positive; and to impress the children through the eye is much more superior than the sound given through the ear, because it is a well-known fact that a lecture bare of illustrations is heard and forgotten, but the boy, or girl, or adult, is impressed with pictures clearly placed before them and these facts have been received through the medium of the eye instead of the ear. The reason for this is very plain. The mind is always more capable of obtaining what it sees than what it hears, as can be tested any time in our kindergarten or other educational centers for the young.

The cosmopolitan characters of the inhabitants of New York and other large centers are more easily reached through the pictures than they are through what they hear, owing to the fact that pictures are the same everywhere, but language is entirely a polyglot matter. It is exceedingly hard to blend all languages into one that is understandable, although the Esperanto people are trying to perform this herculean task. Not so the pictures. A picture is the same in every language the world over. We have visited the galleries of London, Paris, Glasgow, Dublin, New York, and the same artist's pictures appeal to us upon the walls and tell the same story; so it is with the moving picture. They appeal to the Aborigines of Australia, the Indians on the Reservation, people of South Mexico, the Yucatan, as well as the European nations; let them come from whence they will, it has been our contention that as an educational power the moving picture has come to stay and we have only just touched the fringe of the industry. We want to rouse the manufacturers' sense of their duty and get them to realize that they are losing the opportunity of their lives, that they do not get the flood-tide of universal demand, and produce stories that appeal to the hearts of the populace giving homely dramas, educational travels, little snatches of history, dramatizing the poets, etc., ad lib. Take the following, clipped from the Washington Star:

"Why not give us a few moving pictures of the girl who helps mother? They are worth more than the Nan Pattersons, the Evelyn Thaws and the Beulah Binfords, who appeal to nothing but morbid curiosity and a taste for tragedy or depravity. Why don't the film makers pay big prices to the real heroines to pose for human interest pictures?"

We have in our possession such scenarios as the Star wishes produced. Some of these scenarios have been submitted to the manufacturers and returned as being too namby-pamby, too simple to be easily understood by the people. "Rather pretty, but people don't want homely stories like these," etc., through a whole gamut of excuses. Gentlemen of the film industry, these are the films that the people want, these are the stories that appeal to the hearts and understandings, and these you should produce instead of many that you are now manufacturing.

Exhibitors from all over the country are writing in, asking us to use our columns to express their wishes for clean films, cutting out the Wild West pictures, the silly Indian subjects, in which white men have tried to disguise as Indians and fail ignominiously to produce a semblance of the stoical Indian. We saw a picture the other day where an Irishman with his strong cast of Irish features made the silliest Indian we have ever seen. No wonder the Indian cries out from his heart against such caricatures which are nothing but a libel upon his race and people. Can we wonder that we have heard so much of the denouncing of picture shows without reserve in the press? The whole art of cinematography is held to perdition because in its past days some evil-minded people have brought out films of a blase character and fattened upon the ill-gotten gains therefrom. Is it only the moving picture that helps evil work? We might by the same sense of reasoning condemn the telephone, the automobile, and almost every other invention and device that has been brought forward for human comfort and efficiency because all these have been put to evil uses. The penny dreadful, the yellow journalism, have all pandered to the prurient and have produced evil. We have always contended that that which helps the good may also aid the evil. The use of certain useful articles may become of use by the way they are used and it is the utmost folly to renounce that which in itself is good because it is possible to put it to evil uses; so with the moving pictures. The only wisdom of the manufacturer lies in him rescuing the good things of cinematography from misuse and pandering to that which does not elevate. Indiscriminate denunciation of moving pictures is so narrow, so prejudiced that it hurts the cause. It is meant to help; thousands upon thousands of our readers, and others who have found good in the films, are resentful, and even critical of the general cause of which such wholesale denunciation forms a part.

The people of Nickelodia refuse to draw the line against moving pictures, as moving pictures, because a few of them have been of doubtful or even harmful influence, for they know that with the manufacturers reform is easily possible. We have stated in these columns, and again repeat, that within the next ten years moving pictures will be a valuable adjunct to every schoolroom, university, college and every other educational center the world over. Even now, as our columns testify, they have found their way in these centers and even the churches are taking them up as the best influence to draw their flocks to meeting houses. We all acknowledge the fact, everyone in the trade acknowledges the fact that there is need for reform, need for reformers in the picture world who are able to draw the line right, putting all the good on one side and all the bad on the other, rejecting the bad and none of the good thrown away because it has been used for bad purposes. We feel sure that if the manufacturers will only take to heart the truths that we are trying to preach to them every week, that they will find in us a guide, a philosopher, and a friend because we have our finger on the pulse of the whole educational part of the industry. We want them to realize the possibilities that they have in their hands and act accordingly.

MOVING PICTURE TALES EARLY IN DECEMBER

ONE SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM

How to Keep Young People Satisfied in Country Homes—The Healthy Mind Is the Growing Mind—There Is No Age Limit—Education Is the Ladder to Success

By Mary Lawton Metcalfe

AN EARLY breakfast in New York City, last week, found me ready to go into the shopping district at that half-past eight hour when thousands of girls and young women under twenty are scurrying along the streets to get in at the department stores on time. They swarm in by hundreds and are ready in a few minutes to take their places as salespersons behind the counters.

The Committee of Women's Work of the Russell Sage Foundation has been making valuable investigations, which have been given out in its reports.

Miss Mary Van Kleeck is the Secretary of the Committee, which makes the announcement:

Out of every ten women in the city of New York one works in a factory. Women who live in the tenements must work twelve and fifteen hours a day to earn enough even to keep body and soul together. The owners of sweat shops force these creatures to bid against each other for work they take to their wretched rooms. No matter how rich a manufacturer, ten thousand women and children are making him richer by coining flesh and blood to save him from paying living rates for sewing.

Such are facts. The thoughtful mind will ask if all these women were born and raised in New York?

By no means; like a Great Light it has been the amusements of the city which have lured country girls to scratch together the price of a ticket by boat or train, and as they tell me: "Beat it for the city."

The story of disappointments, downfalls, ruin and death are the daily news of too many wrecked young hopes. The unknown graves in a suburban cemetery where the unclaimed bodies of girls and women who perished in the shirtwaist factory fire prove that many families lose sight of their loved ones when they are swept on in the great tide of human life which flows from the country.

How do you account for the distaste to farm and village life of young women who were born and raised among the ducks and geese and who milked the cows with crumpled horns?

The question answers itself. A healthy mind is a growing mind. The boy or girl, young man or maiden, when they get to the adolescent age, is not satisfied to remain like a "bump on a log." The country school-books set in action the current of individual thought. It is the monotony of humdrum farm work and kitchen chores, day in and out, year in and out, which send farmers' wives and daughters to the insane asylums.

Among women's clubs we hear incessantly papers on civics deploring the depopulation of farms, villages and country towns. What shall be done to stop the tide of eager young blood for the crowded dark rooms of New York, Chicago, Boston, and great cities?

Simply make the country more interesting with life in phases which divert, educate and employ and cultivate human minds.

Instead of sending away men, who will put up a moving picture show in the town hall, or any old barn, why, appoint a committee and meet the picture man with a torchlight procession, the village band and strew his pathway with dimes to keep him. Set the chimes going; chain the dogs.

Mr. Picture Man will be glad to show the best films in the market and will guarantee to change every week.

That is one good thing guaranteed to make the country endurable in the long winter evenings for young people, and everybody else.

The Second Proposition is to start a first-class social reading-room and library. There are usually one or two live women in the country village; if they can be induced to be "roasted and burned" at the village store for making things get on with a jump, why the woman's club in the country can do more to interest young people in the acres of their fathers than all home-talk served with supper.

The Agricultural Department at Washington prints illustrated bulletins. Before me is a copy of County Schools of Agriculture and Domestic Economy of Wisconsin. The pictures in this pamphlet at once suggest to the eye the interesting training that the Western youth of both sexes are getting in the school curriculum to realize that the actual joy of living is to know the science of bringing from the lap of Mother Nature her treasures from woods and fields.

Again, there are millions of men and women in the large cities simply dying to get out of garrets, but do not know where to go and how to begin to make the move.

Here again is the moving picture the most valuable agent for the distribution of knowledge in life-saving.

Within city limits of Greater New York alone there is enough cleared land to plant and to feed the whole population of Manhattan.

People don't know it and will not know it until real estate men and owners get busy and have films of territory manufactured, which will show the eye of the non-English speaking fathers where they can take their families, as in Italy or Switzerland, and raise their produce from their half-acre farm.

At the Land Show recently, an Englishman who was born in South Africa was talking to me of the wonderful resources of the gulf states.

Said he: "Alabama and Louisiana contain billions of dollars in undeveloped fields, oil wells, mines, etc. Land lies idle because people do not know about it."

Picture men must get busy and go down there. The South Pacific Steamship lines sell round-trip tickets for sixty dollars. Owners will make every concession to visiting photographers to get views of these golden sub-tropical lands. The natural scenes among the peasantry in their humble lives, as children of the soil, will show that labor is to be had outside of Union Labels.

The moving picture industry then comes to the front as a means of helping to distribute the constantly increasing population of the United States, the greater part of which steps off at Ellis Island, New York Harbor, and crowds in the dark rooms of an already overcrowded city.

Here now are some suggestive facts for young people or middle aged. There are no old persons, if the human mind keeps busy. A mentally dead mind walks around as a living corpse, and that is not supposed to care where it works.

An earnest young man can learn the details of a picture machine and with a stylish new winter suit, Belmont collar and knitted tie can unload himself from overcrowded New York and go right down to Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, "Old Virginny" and Louisiana and get his "copy" for films, which will be new geography for the thousands of boys and girls that are going to see moving pictures in the public schools of Greater New York.

Here is a clipping on this interesting subject from the New York Herald, November 19, 1911:

AMUSEMENTS IN NEW YORK

While the Moving Picture News is not a theatrical paper, yet there are some events we would like now and then to touch upon for the benefit of those out-of-town visitors among the film men, who make excursions to the "hub of the universe of filmdom," New York. To those musically inclined, wanting to be amused, there is nothing we can recommend better than that satirical piece now being staged at the Broadway Theater, "The Never Homes." It is one of the keenest satires and humorous skits on the suffragettes we think it is possible to bring out. All of us men folk are not, by any means, in favor of the sugragette movement. Some of us are, but neither of the ti's or the anti's will object to a good laugh, such as can be obtained by this musical comedy. It is a roar from start to finish. It is not our province to make invidious distinctions. All the actors fill their parts exceedingly well in our humble opinion, and all we can say in conclusion is, go and judge for yourselves. The lighting shows remarkable care and forethought, and to the electrician in charge of the spot light, which is more in our province, we can accord a hearty meed of praise.

The same may be said of the beautiful effects at the Hippodrome, another place we can heartily recommend to out-of-town visitors, as well as to the citizens and residents of the city. To "an old hand" the effects as worked out are good, and it has been exceedingly difficult to get the very clever effects produced. It took us back to our old days of dioramic exhibitions, when with the triple lantern we made some very pretty effects from the beautiful slides made by Childe, Hill, Wilson, Bamforth and others, especially mentioning our good friend Wilkie, some of whose effects we have in our possession to-day. To anyone who likes a spectacular—a magnificently spectacular—exhibition, showing beautiful sunrise and sunset scenes. brilliant effects of the sand storm in the desert, storm on the sea and such like effects they should take in "The Tour of the World" at the Hippodrome. It was specially requested of us that we would not give away the secrets of the production of the effects, otherwise we would like to have written a technical article on the subject. All praise is due to the management for giving us beauties such as they have accomplished.

Nestor Releases Reflect Credit on Company

One of the best enacted stories that have appeared in filmdom recently was seen by us in a review of Nestor releases. It is entitled "Just Two Little Girls," and is most touching in incident and detail. In this film Mr. Cooksey has done excellent work as "the great doctor." The story is intense, and the way in which this Nestor production holds the spectator, bringing tears to the eyes, is indicative of great success for the film. The scene where for twelve long hours "the great doctor" struggles for the life of the child, while the parents await the result without, is wonderful. This production was staged by Mr. Thomas Ricketts.

Another good Nestor is seen in "Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond." The fertile brain of Harry Hershfield, the creator of Desperate Desmond, is responsible f or this very humorous and very novel scenario, which has been so splendidly produced by the Nestor Co. under the masterly direction of Thomas Ricketts. The acting in this film is very excellent, and Mrs. Ford makes a very clever and fascinating Beautiful Rosamond.

To look at the escapades of Desperate Desmond, Claude Eclaire and beautiful Rosamond, as portrayed by Nestor, is to have a feeling of huge and refreshing enjoyment. Nothing of this sort has ever been attempted in filmdom, and no wonder, for many of the startling "stunts" performed by these characters are so seemingly impossible as to place them almost beyond the ken of comprehension.

In this witching picture Desmond plays the role of a hypnotist and successfully tries his mesmeric powers upon the luckless lovers. With the aid of his chief lieutenant, the redoubtable Gomgotz, he carries off the "gal" and tightly ties the hapless Claude to a pole in the water, leaving him to the mercy of the rising tide. A swordfish, more humane than most human beings, brings his sword into play and frees the hero.

The lovers are scarcely reunited when Desmond again captures and separates them. The dungeon for Rosamond and the saw table for Claude. Things look very black for the persecuted pair, when, through some rare twist (the film is liberally sprinkled with surprises), the girl succeeds in freeing herself, saves her sweetheart and foils the villain.

The action throughout is rapid and delightful and the photography could not be improved upon. "Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond" will be released Saturday, December 9th.

Mackie Has It

This time it is the high-grade sidewalk reflector which is manufactured by the Mackie Company and sold direct to the consumer, thereby saving a middle profit which is the case if bought through a jobbing house. In their advertising space this week they announce a cut price of this $15.00 reflector to $8.50 which is worthy of consideration. It is strictly high grade and being sold by the manufacturer enables them to make this unusual offer.

Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc.

A new advertiser is using our columns this week to call attention to their slides and the servic ethey are offering to exhibitors. Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., who have offices in the Marbridge Building, offer a service that will appeal to all managers who desire to give their patrons the benefit of pictures of timely topics. Investigate this service and get in communication with them.

PUPILS FLOCK TO SCHOOL PICTURES

Children Rush to Enroll at Places Where Educational Experiments of Films Shows Are On Things have changed. The Board of Education has decided to put motion pictures into certain schools to play the part of an educational element, and, as a result, the schools have become suddenly popular.

"And then the whining schoolboy with his satchel
And shining morning face, creeping like a snail
Unwilling to school."

Shakespeare ought to see the same schoolboy now since this motion picture idea percolated into the Board of Education. All sorts of applicants for an education have been

(Continued on page 11)

THE TILLING OF THE SOIL AND THE MOVING PICTURE POSTER

By Margaret I. MacDonald

STAGNATION causes ferment and decay. The periodical stirring up of the soil permits not only the removal of impervious substances, but the escape of pernicious gases, making way for outside influences, and providing for the penetrating of the sun's rays to the life germ which may be implanted there.

Just so has it been with the moving picture industry; there has been a stirring up of the soil, a laying bare of unwholesome conditions, and in consequence there has also occurred a budding forth of the finer influences of the moving picture, and a disposition to champion the cause of the educational and artistic element. The uncovering of what is bad has also attracted attention to the unlimited use of the motion picture in depicting what is good—its value in the education of the human race, and especially those whose opportunities for education and travel are limited.

It is surprising what an amount of ignorance is displayed with regard to this wonderful vehicle of education by some of the more educated and privileged of our civilization. Only the other day I entered the office of one of our prominent weeklies, and in conversation with a member of the editorial staff I happened to refer to the educational side of the moving picture. The gentleman answered with a blank stare, "The education side of the moving picture—what do you mean?" I answered the question with as much grace as I could, for I felt it would be talking against a blank wall to further discuss the subject.

Although the stirring up, or tilling of the soil has attracted attention and invited investigation which has satisfied a great many as to the educational value of the moving picture, and brought to the notice of many others the good work which has been going on with regard to the elevating of the industry, still there are many things which require to be done to add the tone of refinement which will bring not only the poorer classes of the population but also the refined rich to the moving picture house. One of the things which needs eliminating is the glaring poster display which is presented to the eye at the doors of most of the smaller and some of the larger moving picture houses. The effect in its entirety upon those uneducated to the values of the moving picture is not unlike the flaunting of a red flag before an angry bull. I cannot understand exhibitors painting up their entrances to such glaring and unsightly colors to fan the flame of prejudice against them. And I would like to say right here that the display of angry red posters which glare at one, and which can be seen fully a block away, are no criterion of what is to be seen within. For if one but has the courage to venture past the unsightly display, within you will find many things to delight the eye, and you will come out wondering why both manufacturer and exhibitor are so near-sighted as to suppose that these ugly posters can or will attract a refined, intelligent audience.

Manufacturers, do you not think that the name of your article, if you have paid attention to the production of a good article, is enough to lure the public in to see your pictures? The Rex Company gave you a good example in the recent poster issued by them. It is costly, no doubt, but it has the dignity that you all should strive for, in order to elevate the tone of the industry, and in order to escape unfair criticism and censure. The welfare of the industry and the success of the manufacturers is of very great moment to me, because the industry and the manufacturer are destined to play a very large part in the developments in education and civilization of the future.

There is a grave and serious importance attached to the manufacture of the moving picture. The manufacturer of the moving picture is an important individual in the civilization of not only our race, but of all the races of the earth.

MISS GRACE CUNARD

The Heroine in "Before Yorktown"

Miss Cunard was practically born on the stage; her earliest recollections are of the footlights and stage fairies. When only fifteen years of age she played leading juvenile parts with stock companies in Cleveland, Columbus and St. Louis. During the season of 1910 she starred in "College Days."

She made her debut into moving pictures with the Kalem Company and from the beginning was a pronounced success. She later was affiliated with Pathe, Edison, Lubin and the Biograph Company.

Miss Cunard, in addition to being pretty and possessing a magnetic personality, is an expert rider and swimmer, and has proven herself a valued addition to the Republic family of beautiful and accomplished performers.

MOVING PICTURE TALES
EARLY IN DECEMBER

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY:

A Declaration of Intentions:

THERE has come among your ranks a paradox, the enigmatical advent of a newcomer, sponsored by a group whose connection with and knowledge of the motion picture industry are as old and varied as that industry itself. It comes to you in the form of a new brand of film, or a brand of new film, for the word "new" means fresh, modern, recent, and this film of tomorrow will be all these, and a trifle more.

Good intentions are an important factor in any undertaking; but of far more consequence are the means to promote them to materialization. Not alone have we these intentions and these means, but we have as well another and still a greater incentive, the necessity and imperative desire of the trade.

That it is natural to anticipate the most favorable results is attested by these facts: We have the necessary fundamental and familiar knowledge of the wants and needs of the trade; we have the ambition and the agencies to correct the common evils and the general faults in the manufacturing field; we have the courage of sincere convictions, and the money to back them up!

Experience, Determination, and a respectable amount of Money--a triumphant trinity! With them we are going to cause a revolution and a revelation in film circles. These are not mere extravagant and presumptious speculations; they are practical principles, paramount propositions, valid expressions--they are a Prophecy!

Architecture, sculpture, painting, music, poetry--these may be called the strongest synonym of civilized life and mental accomplishment. Add to the list The Gem Motion Picture Co.

Convincing?

.....Thank you! We hope you share it with us!

THE GEM MOTION PICTURE CO.

SIDE LIGHT ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

By Leonard Donaldson

MONOTONY IN FILM PRODUCTION AND PRESENTATION

The gallant de'-ma'-care cowboy who appears to have nothing else to do except love the Sheriff's daughter, and race across country in woolly breeches on an untamed mustang; the tame Indian in fights, whose make-up alone gives him any semblance to his supposed nationality, and the clean-shaven long-haired financier's clerk, with peg-top trousers, who persistently wooes his employer's typist—have they not become a trifle wearisome? No matter what character the hero plays, you realize that you have seen him on quite a number of occasions. It is really time he altered his appearance. There is a monotony about the stereotyped features. The bald-headed banker; the man with the aggressive eyeglasses; the pronounced face fine, are film characters we well know, and have now learned to expect. Small matters—yes; but it is these things which add to or detract from the public popularity of a photoplay.

There is need for greater discrimination in make-up and for more variety. The hero who performs deeds of derring-do; who sacrifices his all for an abnormally youthful heroine, are types we are all acquainted with. Should we see them in any other guise, in another rôle, we might not recognize our old friends. We should wonder who they were and what they were going to do.

What is needed, then, is a departure from the stereotyped in the matter of make-up, and more variety in film plots. In striving to deviate from the commonplace, many producers have a tendency to merge into the impossible. This is at once monotonous and meaningless. In England, Cousin America, there is a preponderance of the American film—it is well that there is. The percentage of foreign films is about 95 per cent., and the most important are American and French. They receive preference because they are mechanically much better than the English. There is more skill exercised in the production generally, and they are taken more skillfully. The consequence is that they are presented more clearly to the spectators. A flickering film tries the eyes and very soon creates a feeling of monotony; even if the subject of the film is good. Now the question arises: Why are there so many Western American films entering the English market? Because the younger patrons of the picture theater—the boys in particular—have an inbred love of adventure; especially when laid in the Wild West. These subjects could not be produced effectively in England. It should be remembered also that the American climate is more favorable to picture making than the English. English producers can find the actors and the plays, but insufficient capital has been put into the actual film-producing business. The primary consideration seems to be the supply of palatial theaters. If we want more British films, and thus eliminate a measure of the monotony of the present picture theater program, the capital should be put into the proper channels.

Again, of course, there is still the necessity for more educational films. Battle, murder and sudden death and impossible knockabout humor are tiring when too abundant. There should be never more than two cowboy subjects in one program—repetition evokes the worst form of monotony, and enough is truly as good as a feast.

The number of picture theaters is day by day increasing. That the number is likely to be in excess of public requirements, provided those in authority keep in view the necessity for variety, I do not believe. But we must avoid falling into that fatal groove and refrain from giving the public what I have heard so many picture patrons term "the same old thing."

LEARNING BY WAY OF THE EYE-GATE

The motion picture record of human activity is a form of chronicle as varied in possibilities as it is modern in method. Seldom has a new device found as swift and universal acceptance both because of its pecuniary profits and its educational and recreational service. Each week records a new type of its employment, another discovery as to its utility. Thus it has been stated recently that the Great Northern Railroad, wishing to inform a wider constituency than is now reached by present modes of publicity of the nature of its property, of the kind of territory it taps and the quality of its transportation service, has been engaged in a wholesale task of photography. A film record, aggregating 20,000 feet, we are told, has been taken this summer, and is now being prepared for duplication and wide use wherever spectators can be gathered to gain knowledge by way of the eye-gate.

In this quick seizure of a popular and effective new form of publicity President Hill has shown characteristic enterprise. Whether a pioneer in the scheme or not, his indorsement of it will give it prestige. There are many things about railroading, home-seeking, home-making, mining, forestry and all the multitudinous activities of a region like the American Northwest that no wizard with a pen or typewriter can depict on the printed page, but which a camera can record graphically and faithfully. Moreover, the living aspect, the illusion of motion, the dynamic rather than the static content of the new-form record give it primacy with many persons seeking for truth. The cheaper grades of illustrated journalism are finding this out as the motion picture business develops.—Christian Science Monitor.

THE SOLAX PRODUCTION OF THE VIOLIN MAKERS OF NUREMBERG

"The Violin Makers of Nuremberg," which is to be released Friday, December 22, was written and produced by Madame Alice Blaché, the president of the Solax Company. She personally supervised every detail of the production, with the result that in point of artistic ratio of values this release is a distinct triumph.

When the work was in the process of construction, it was difficult for the producer to limit such a big task within the confines of one reel; and to make the production a two-reel release was inadvisable because of business exigencies, so it was finally decided to incorporate in the 1,000-foot limit a 2,000-foot production without weakening the plot. Thus the exhibitors and the exchanges are practically given a two-reel feature in one reel, at a one-reel figure.

The admirable features of the production are its exquisite simplicity, its sympathetic chords, its cleanliness of theme and its unfathomable depth of imaginative creation. Only the delicate mind of a woman with a highly-developed aesthetic sense could have staged such a theme with success.

"The Violin Makers of Nuremberg," strike chords which thrill the imagination. Indeed, it makes its appeal to one's finer sensibilities.

The story revolves about two pupils and comrades who are apprenticed to an old and successful violin maker of paternal and sympathetic inclinations. He hears that the king of his country has announced to the townspeople of Nuremberg that the maker of the best violin would be titled the Violin Maker to the Court and pensioned on an annuity. The old man apprises his pupils of the king's proclamation.

The old teacher is anxious to have his pupils enter the competition, so as an incentive to both of them he promises the hand of his beautiful daughter to the winner. The old man does not know, however, that both of his pupils are already in love with his daughter and that the younger of the two is the one she prefers.

The older of the pupils is a better violin maker than the younger one. They all know this and, of course, the younger man is unhappy and disconsolate. But he does not figure on the generous nature of his comrade, who, knowing that it would be useless for him to try to win the fair maiden's hand, secretly exchanges violins on the night before the tournament.

The rest, naturally, is apparent. The younger pupil wins both the title and the girl. The older one retires and gives up his thoughts to his art and lives with the satisfaction of knowing that he has made the prize-winning violin.

MOVING PICTURE TALES EARLY IN DECEMBER

Pupils Flock to School Pictures

(Continued from page 7)

showing up to enroll, and the schools have been swamped with pursuers of the sheepskin. Several new students were interviewed after the first motion picture demonstration on Thursday evening at some of the schools.

"They are all right," declared a boy of ten who said that he was Arthur Cole, referring to the pictures. "But why don't they have a piano player and some one to push out a song now and then? I don't care for those pictures of history that they were showing toward the end there, but I guess they'll be able to get by with the show all right."

Other school children who had not been brought up on such thrilling motion picture diet as Arthur Cole evidently had been have found the pictures to be very entertaining and instructive. The pictures are divided into four groups—dramatic, literary, geographical and historical, but the dramatic series seeems to "go" the best.

"If the motion pictures become a regular feature of the school curriculum," asserted one teacher after the first evening's experiment, "we'll be standing them in the aisles. A lot of students want to enroll who look more to me as if they were balancing on the precipice of the aged folks' home."

"I wish they had more cowboys and things like that," said a little girl after she had watched a show. She was about eight years old. Then after a picture of Washington crossing the Delaware had been thrown on the screen she added: "Why, I don't think that trip was so bad."

"I am heartily in sympathy with the idea," said William H. Maxwell, city superintendent. "I believe that the children can be taught an idea of customs and habits in foreign countries in this way, and that it is highly educational. It is very much more graphic than getting the knowledge from a book and leaves a more lasting impression on the mind. Many things of educational value can be shown in this way that cannot be impressed on the school child's mind as forcefully in any other."

MAKER OF FILMS LAUDS MOVE FOR CLEAN PICTURES

Edwin Thanhouser Says Their Side Has Never Been Properly Presented

Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Company, made this statement to the New York World correspondent when seen at his studio in New Rochelle yesterday.

"The manufacturers' side of this matter has never been properly presented," Mr. Thanhouser said. "Our main grievance is that we have been badly treated by some of our critics, many of whom gravely discuss conditions of which they know absolutely nothing.

"For example, they are quoted as saying that 'Films showing train hold-ups, murders and seductions are responsible for a great crime wave.

Large Percentage of Clean Films

"Why do they fail to specify the films? If improper pictures are presented it is easy to have them removed. The real reason is that these critics are either talking of conditions that existed some years ago or else they are commenting on things that do not exist. I can assert with absolute confidence that the percentage of clean films is far higher than that of clean plays or clean books.

"The moving picture of to-day is a strong educational force. It is particularly well adapted to make very real to the youthful mind the great deeds of history; to acquaint him with the best in literature; to make familiar to him the various scenes; to show him graphically the wonders of nature throughout the world.

"Is this not the strongest kind of argument why children should be encouraged to see good pictures and why the authorities should not bend their energies to prohibiting children under a certain age seeing them, or unless accompanied by their guardian?

"There should be the freest kind of access to this educational force. I agree with the purpose of regulation, but regulation should not mean prohibition. This one fact should be recognized: good moving picture plays should be placed within the reach of children, just the same as good books; and bad picture plays and books should be suppressed.

"An evil picture will contaminate a child whether accompanied by a guardian or not. Therefore there should be no evil pictures and likewise no restrictions on seeing good pictures.

"Every week the Trust and the Independent producers release about sixty-five photoplays. Perhaps here and there will like the picture mentioned below, because it is so clean and quaint, so picturesque and homelike. It's old-fashioned, yet up-to-date. It's very, very real, and very, very human. It's a picture parents can take their children to see, a picture to which children can take their parents. All who see it will see the measure of a man.

YOUR MOTHER

"THE MEASURE OF A MAN"

RELEASED THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6th, is a whimsical and winsome drama, with just that touch of comedy to make it fascinating.

Fate is a great kidder. It's the greatest practical joker the human race, which comprises you and ourselves and all our other neighbors on this old mud-ball of an earth, ever knew. But this is a story where Fate makes a fumble!

IT'S A PICTURE THAT WILL LONG BE REMEMBERED FOR ITS CHARACTER DELINEATION

SIZE UP

"THE MEASURE OF A MAN"

REX

REX MOTION PICTURE MASTERPIECE CO.

573 ELEVENTH AVE., NEW YORK CITY

Sales Co. says the Measure of a Man is some dime-mention!

there may be a plot or a scene that some one can take objections to, but how many plays are there on Broadway now of which the same can be said?

"I have been a theatrical manager for a number of years, but my first experience with a censor was two years ago when I entered the moving picture field. Then I found that all manufacturers sent copies of every release they made to the National Board of Censors, which is a patriotic organization, whose members work without pay, to improve conditions, while certain outsiders simply criticise ignorantly but make no helpful suggestions.

"Every picture that is sent out of this factory is shown to the censors, and any suggestion that they make is unhesitatingly carried out. The censors have made it very clear to the manufacturers that they will not stand for pictures of crimes or anything that is in the least way suggestive. Their regulations exactly met my views, and our relations have always been most agreeable.

"I read a statement by a certain gentleman the other day in which he asserted that moving pictures incite boys to emulate criminals, and that they 're-enact the hold-ups and robberies that they have seen.'

"Of course, boys plays at robbers. Every youngster, at some time or another, wants to be a pirate or an Indian hunter. It was that way in my boyhood days, but nobody blamed the moving pictures. One reason was that they had not been invented.

"I do not hold that the halls in this city are, in all instances, what they should be, nor do I contend that the city should permit children to visit them until they are proved safe and clean and the pictures there have been properly censored. This is a matter which concerns every parent, and it would be well to have the proposed ordinance, now pending, include these recommendations before the city authorizes the young to visit these places.

"Does it incite children to train robbery or murder to see the masterpieces of Shakespeare, such as 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'The Tempest,' or 'The Merchant of Venice?' Or to learn about Charles Dickens by watching David Copperfield, his friends and his enemies, and to look at brave 'Little Nell?' Or to become posted on such books as 'Vicar' of Wakefield,' 'Lorna Doone' and 'Silas Marner?' Or to witness the plays of Ibsen, 'The Doll's House,' 'The Pillars of Society,' and 'The Lady From the Sea?'

"If it does, I must plead guilty, for I have shown all of them, and many more of the same class.

"I favor a strict rational censorship of the films, and a strict rational regulation of the moving picture theaters. If any manufacturer or exhibitor is doing anything that is injuring the morals of the young or the old, let him be punished, and punished severely. But the men who are doing right should be encouraged, and not unjustly condemned by persons who are talking on a subject they do not understand."

FOR REVIEWS OF NOTABLE FILMS

Tony and the Stork—Imp

One of the most praiseworthy efforts of the Imp Company is embodied in the filming of "Tony and the Stork." The scenes are laid among the lowly, Tony being a common laborer, an Italian with an imperfect knowledge of the English language. The story is a wholesome one and will bring to memory incidents of like character in the main. The drama is intelligently interpreted by King Baggot and Lucille Young. It is a bit of character work that suits Mr. Baggot to perfection and shows that that sterling actor is versatile and is endowed with a keen perception of parts. Tony finds difficulty in obtaining work and is desperate. An event of more than usual importance is about to happen in the household and that means an added demand for money. He searches anxiously and is turned away. His peculiar dress and unintelligent manner of making himself understood mitigates against him. Desperately he searches to return home crestfallen. His loving wife bids him be of good cheer and he is buoyed up with renewed courage. The next day he notices an advertisement for men wanted to work on a railroad construction job. He hurries to the office of the superintendent to be told they have nothing for him. In his desperation he pleads pitifully for a chance to earn money. The heart of the superintendent is softened and Tony is signed on. He rushes home, wild with joy, but reflects that the work is out of town and he will be separated from his wife. This matter is discussed and the wife bids him go. He hastily packs his few belongings for immediate needs and races for the car after kissing his wife. He is delighted and his joy knows no bounds. He is off to earn money to be used in time of need.

Tony is shown working with a construction gang, toiling for the wife and the expected little one, when he receives a letter from a superintendent of a hospital informing him he is a father. He is obsessed by a desire to see his wife and child. He cannot wait. He goes to the time keeper, draws his wages and starts for his home town. Upon arrival he stops at a toy store and makes purchases in anticipation of seeing his wife and little one. He buys a baby carriage, a doll and other toys carrying all he can lug. He hastens to the hospital and, hat in hand, asks to see the superintendent.

Ushered in by a kind nurse he gives his name to the man in charge who scans a register and then sorrowfully turns to the strangely garbed Italian. He tells Tony that his wife is dead—died during an operation. Tony is at first too dazed to speak and then he leaps on the superintendent and is about to throttle him when the nurse interposes and leads him away. The Italian begs to see the dead body of his wife and is taken to a room in which a sheeted figure reposes on a bed. Tony approaches, despair and sorrow written in every line of his face. His grief is pitiful and the nurse—accustomed to such scenes—is forced to turn away. The sheet is raised and he looks upon the form only to give way to a season of uncontrollable joy. He is childist in his exuberation and the nurse is certain he has lost his reason. Tony announces it is not his wife. A mistake has been made in the deciphering of the names with which the clerical force is not familiar. Seizing the nurse Tony forces her from the room and begs to see his wife. A nurse soon appears carrying a child followed by Tony's wife. She rushes to his arms and there is a season of unalloyed bliss. Tony crushes the baby in his strong arms only to turn and see another baby. He is told he is the father of twins and is correspondingly happy. He looks at his baby carriage built for one and announces that he must exchange it for one of greater carrying capacity. Then he is given both babies to hold and the nurses walk away leaving the father and mother and twins alone in their joy. Miss Young does some of the best work of her career in this picture which is replete with pathos of the sort that is satisfying.

New Chicago Office

The Feature and Educational Film Co., of Cleveland, has opened an office in Chicago, Delaware Building, Randolph and Dearborn streets. It is in charge of Jerome Abrams and all F. & E. releases will be on display there as well as in Cleveland.

The executive officials of the F. & E. Company are: Martin E. Mandelbaum, president and general manager; Martin Malaney, in charge of business offices, and Ben Abrams, special representative for booking and state rights sales.

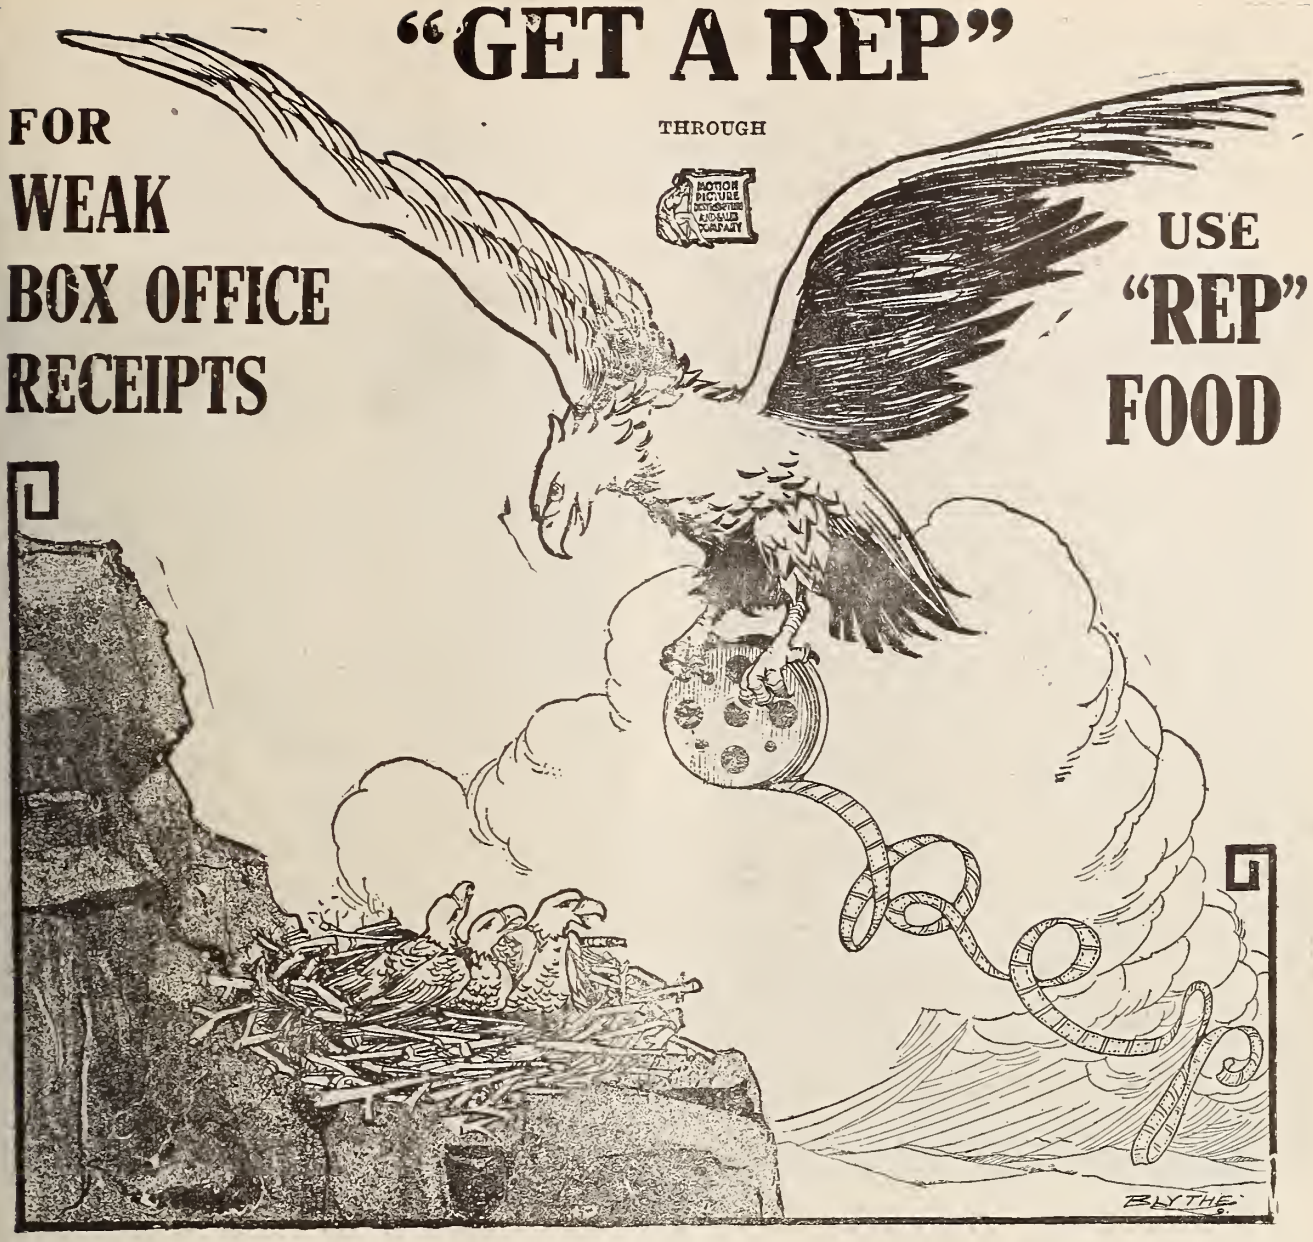
"GET A REP"

THROUGH

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

FOR WEAK BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS

USE "REP" FOOD



BEFORE YORKTOWN

MAGNIFICENT MILITARY MASTERPIECE

RELEASE DAYS

SATURDAY, DEC. 23
SUNDAY, DEC. 24

REALISTIC BATTLE SCENES

"GET A REP"

SUPERB SETTING

Washington Leading His Troops to Victory

The Brave Defense of the English

Republic Film Co.,

Suite 804-812, 145 West 45th St., New York City

BISON COMPANY GETS 101 RANCH WILD WEST

Miller Brothers' Famous Organization Added to the Stock Company of the N. Y. Motion Picture Co. in California

The surprise of the week is the announcement that the New York Motion Picture Co. is abandoning the regular style of Indian and cowboy pictures it has been making for the past several years, and will hereafter produce nothing but sensational, spectacular Western subjects, with enormous casts, and that it has leased the Miller Brothers 101 Ranch Wild West Show, which is now installed at Bear Valley, Cal., having been consolidated with the regular reorganized Bison Company of sixty people.

ADAM KESSEL

CHARLES O. BAUMANN

To a representative of this publication Mr. A. Kessel, president of the New York Motion Picture Co., made the following statement:

"We intend to make, and are making at the present time, what I predict will be the most sensational subjects ever produced. We have been working very quietly until we were in a position to make the proper announcement.

"The company we now have is the largest stock company in the whole world, comprising more than 400 people employed daily. It includes the reorganized regular stock company of sixty people and the Miller Brothers 101 Ranch Wild West Show Company of 350 people. We have been fortunate in securing this famous aggregation, all of them being seasoned show people, equipped with splendid horses and necessary paraphernalia.

"Among them are the world's most daring riders—men and women who think nothing of taking their lives in their hands when giving an exhibition of their skill. Scenarios have been written around them which feature sensational deeds of daring.

"I predict that this marks the passing of the 'done-to-death' Western picture. The Bison company was the first in the field of Western pictures and has had many imitators. If anybody tries to follow in our footsteps now they will have to gamble a big bank-roll.

"We are in perfect shape. Before making any announcement we wanted to be sure we were right. We installed new cameras, new people and new directors, and Mr. Baumann went West to personally supervise the production of the thirty-odd scenarios we had specially written.

"Instead of shoving out three reels of ordinary quality we believe we are doing the exhibitor more good by turning out two reels which will stand supreme as the king of Western pictures. These two reels will be features in every sense of the word which could be handled as specials and State rights sold.

"Three sheet posters will be put out with every release. We want every exhibitor to make a 'clean-up' and we're going to give him the film and the poster to advertise it.

"The first release of the big pictures will be made in a few weeks."

"GREAT"

SAYS "SPROCKETS"

"The squarest house I ever done business with"

24 REELS AND ORDERS FOR ECLAIR AND MAJESTIC, MAKING 26.

WRITE FOR PRICES ON ANY KIND OF SERVICE.

ANTI-TRUST FILM CO.

128 W. Lake St., Chicago.

Branch office, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Important Announcement

Realizing that the day of the ordinary Cowboy and Indian picture has passed from public favor, a radical change has been made in the BISON COMPANY, and in the future nothing but will be released. To this end the entire stock company has been reorganized and new directors employed, the regular company now numbering sixty people. In addition we have leased from the Miller Brothers their

SENSATIONAL—SPECTACULAR—WESTERN—HISTORICAL—MILITARY PRODUCTIONS

Famous 101 Ranch Wild West Show

Including the entire company of 350 people (riders, actors and Indians), together with their horses, equipment and paraphernalia. The BISON COMPANY is unquestionably.

The Largest Stock Company IN THE WORLD

SOME OF THE ADDITIONS TO THE BISON STOCK COMPANY

The massive productions now being made will create a sensation wherever shown. We will begin releasing them in a few weeks.

WATCH FOR RELEASE DATES!

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO., 1 Union Sq., New York City

REINCARNATION OF THE POWERS CO.

By Our "Roving Commissioner"

WHAT the exact extent of the effect for good of the reincarnation of the Powers Motion Picture Co. will be upon the industry in general has not yet become known, but it promises good things—things of great moment. The writer, in an interview with Mr. Leon J. Rubenstein, general publicity and manager of productions for the Powers

MR. P. A. POWERS

Co., gained a great deal of interesting data in connection with the intended future tactics of the company that will no doubt prove of interest to the public.

It will be remembered that in June last the Powers Motion Picture Co. suffered severe loss through the ravages of fire. And it is well known that since that time they have struggled bravely to keep the machinery of the business moving while a permanent place of abode was being prepared for them. The public will be glad to know that they are now well equipped to do things in a creditable manner, and in a manner which should set a good example to others in the trade wishing to succeed. An entire breaking up of an old dynasty leaves a foundation for a new one on the experiences of the old, and it is with renewed energy, high ideals and a determination to win a road to success that the reincarnated Powers Co. is starting out on venture No. 2 in motion picture business.

TOM EVANS

The new Powers studios, of which there are two, are the most modernly built of motion picture shops. Mr. P. A. Powers, head of the firm, and a fine and energetic business man, cast about for a central location, and found it at 511 West 42nd street, in a big, new, fireproof building of the latest pattern. Ten thousand square feet of floor space, coated, glossy concrete, was his adequate if costly selection, and the next step was to begin work. After dozens of plans were submitted he decided to have two stages with portable lights. Then, as fast as the machines could begin to work

LEON J. RUBENSTEIN

WM. S. WILLIAMS

WINTERBERT ST. LOUP

GENERAL VIEW OF RECEPTION OFFICE

CASHIER'S OFFICE

on them, the casting of the steel frames for the light installation was begun. The stages are one at either end of a large floor space, and the light being portable it is only necessary for the plugs to be pulled out of the switch boxes of one stage and transferred to those of the other, and the giant steel frames that held the arcs, being on rollers, the entire transfer of light may be effected in one minute. Thus while a director is working on a scene, the set for the next is being prepared on the other stage, so that no time at all is lost in scene setting.

But the factory is a separate chapter. At 216th street and Broadway was found a group of brick buildings which proved just the thing; with a spacious courtyard out of view of the street. These he connected into a series of rooms, with a huge nether floor. As it now stands complete, it is one of the most perfectly equipped and fastest moving picture plants to be found. The courtyard Mr. Powers capped with a roof of ground glass and steel, and under this the 8,000 square feet of floor space is being used as another studio, by natural light. Here, too, is a double stage, but on a pivot platform.

The executive staff of the Powers Co. consists of Mr. Powers himself, Mr. Tom Evans, secretary-treasurer for the company, and Mr. Rubenstein, who as we have said before takes care of the publicity department. Mr. Rubenstein also prepares the scenarios for the directors, who, by the way, are Mr. Winterbert St. Loup, Mr. Pierce Kingsley and Mr. John F. O'Brien, who is now on his way to New Mexico with one of the companies. The scenarios are sent in to them in such

HERBERT BARRY

MURIEL POWERS—"PETITE MURIEL"

DAVID V. WALL

SCENIC DEPARTMENT

STAGE CARPENTER'S SHOP

A CLOSE VIEW OF THE PORTABLE LIGHT EQUIPMENT

DIRECTOR KINGSLEY AND A FEW OF HIS COMPANY, PICKING A LOCATION

OFF TO NEW MEXIXO, UNDER DIRECTOR J. J. O'BRIEN

shape by this able and painstaking young man that all they have to worry about is the setting and action of the scenes. Just here I would like to say that the system of dealing with rejected scenarios at the studio of the Powers Co. is one worthy of special mention. There has been a great hue and cry among scenario writers with regard not only to the careless practice of long delays in returning them, but the utter failure in some cases to return them at all. I was shown the book at the Powers Co. where a list of scenarios is kept with their date of entry and the date on which they are returned, and by looking carefully over it I found that many of them were returned the same day on which they made their appearance there, and not in any case had they been kept over two or three days. As Mr. Rubenstein remarked, "The fact that scenarios are returned is no sign that they are lacking in merit, but merely that they are not suited to our particular needs at the time, and we want to give scenario writers a chance to market their material somewhere else instead of hindering them by keeping their work here for months.

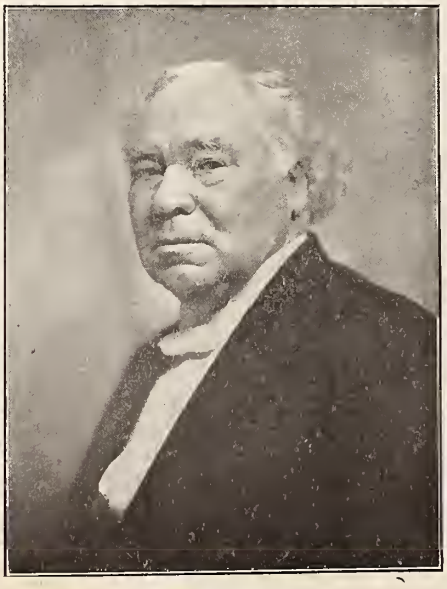
They have also a very unique method of registering applicants for their stock companies; this is done by photographing them. A large book is kept wherein repose the

(Continued on page 37.)

FRITZI BRUNETTE

BEN LODGE

E. P. SULLIVAN



JOHN MANLEY

PIERCE KINGSLEY AND BABY CHARLOTTE
The Youngest Member of the Powers Picture Play Co.

BENEATH THE VEIL

BY S. J. COTTON

Adapted from the Synopsis. A Thanhouser release

LATE in the afternoon of a dark, rainy day in October Dana Howard and Jim Randolph lounged in the former's studio. As it grew darker outside the fire grew brighter and threw more mysterious shadows among Dana's "junk," as Jim insisted upon calling it.

The friends were equally content to talk or sit in silence. Jim arose from a pile of rugs and, having lighted his cigarette at the fire, stood warming his back as he puffed.

"Do you know who I saw yesterday?" he asked between puffs.

"No."

"That model you had for the Madonna you made last Christmas. She looks pretty seedy."

"What's the matter with her?"

"Oh, down on her luck. She wanted to know if I thought you could use her now."

"Has she lost any of her beauty?"

"Well——" Jim hesitated, "Well, to tell you the truth, she looked pretty ratty. I think she's been hittin' the bottle a bit too frequent. Her figure's all right, though."

"Don't want her," said Dana with finality.

"She's just the thing for one of the figures in your new group," continued Jim.

"Don't want her," repeated Dana quietly. Then he sat up on the couch and looked at Jim.

"You said she looked as if she'd been drinking hard. I know what you mean. Her face is red, her eyelids are swollen and her eyes are bloodshot and dull, and her mouth—ugh! I know what her mouth looks like. You needn't talk to me."

"But you don't need to paint her face, use somebody else for that," pleaded Jim.

Dana sprang to his feet, "But I've got to look at her face, haven't I? and that I won't do! If she needs money I'd rather give her ten dollars to stay out of my studio."

Dana walked up and down the room with one hand deep in his pocket and the other running wildly through his hair.

"Calm yourself, calm yourself, you idiot," said Jim, with a laugh. "Nobody's going to thrust the girl on you."

"What do you want to talk that way for? You know how I feel about such things." Dana threw himself onto the couch. He was irritated and didn't try to conceal the fact.

Jim took a turn around the room, looked through the window at the rain-soaked streets, kicked over a log in the fireplace, then went and stood by Dana's side. He loved his friend more than most men ever love another man, but his love did not prevent his seeing the artist's faults—rather it made him try to see them and to help him to correct them.

"Old man," he said quietly, "you're making a fool of yourself with your everlasting prejudices."

In a moment Dana was on his feet exclaiming, "They're not prejudices—I tell you they're not! You don't understand, Jimmie."

"Well, don't get so excited about it," answered Jim. "There's no use being an ass if you are an artist."

Dana sat down on the couch and stared into the fire for a few minutes. Then he turned to Jim.

"Jimmie, I know I must seem all kinds of an ass, but this passion for beauty in everything is so strong—so deep down in me that I cannot help it. I simply cannot stand ugly things. If you hadn't been good to look at I wouldn't have cared for you and we would never have become friends." He paused for a moment. "And I tell you, Jimmie, I think I'm the luckiest fellow alive to have such a beautiful sweetheart as Elsie. Think of looking at her exquisite face all one's life."

Jim looked at him almost with pity. "But, my dear old friend, you fail to take anything into consideration but external beauty. How about beauty of soul?"

"Oh, that's all very well if it accompanies beauty of form and feature, but if it doesn't, I don't want to see it—I don't know anything about it." Dana was speaking with absolute sincerity.

Jim sighed and lighted a cigarette. "What will you do if, after you are married, Elsie should become ill and lose her beauty?" he said.

"Oh, don't say such a thing! I'm afraid I'd——" He stopped.

"No, I wouldn't say it if I were you. You'd better get over this feeling, Dana, for it has the power to bring you terrible sorrow."

There was a knock at the door. Jim opened it and found standing there a young girl huddled in an automobile coat. The light in the hall threw her face into shadow and for a moment Jim stood looking at her. She laughed and stepped past him into the room.

"Jimmie, you wicked boy, you don't know me," she said.

"Why, of course, it's Elsie," said Jim, "but you looked so outlandish in that coat I thought I might be mistaken."

She had gone straight to Dana, where he sat on the couch, and taken both his hands in hers. Laying her cheek against them she said, "I knew you boys were sitting here in the dark gossiping and I made father leave me here while he went down town. He said I really shouldn't come alone, but I told him Jimmie would chaperone us. Won't you, Jimmie?" She looked up at Jim with the frankness of a child.

"You bet I will do anything you say," he answered.

"Then get the tea things. I'm going to make you boys some tea. What do you say to that?"

"I say 'bully,'" said Jim, as he scurried around collecting the things for the tea.

"You're an angel, Elsie," said Dana, but the girl looked at him questioningly.

"What's the matter, dear?" she asked.

"I've been calling him names," broke in Jim, before Dana had time to answer.

"Jimmie!" cried the girl, "you must not call him names. You must be kind to him always, or I won't like you."

The young fellow came over to the couch where the girl sat tightly clasping her sweetheart's hand.

"Remember," he said to her, quite seriously, "remember that I love him and could do nothing but what is for his good."

"I know that, Jimmie. Forgive me," said Elsie, simply.

While Jim busied himself with heating the water for the tea Dana took the girl's head between his hands.

"You'll always be as beautiful as you are now, won't you, dear?" he said softly.

"I'll always be as beautiful as I can for you," she answered.

* * * * * *

Elsie Morris was the only daughter of Dr. Andrew Morris, a man who had won both wealth and fame, and now, past his middle life, he had attained his heart's desire—a private laboratory in his own third floor and plenty of time to dabble in chemical experiments.

Elsie had been her father's almost constant companion since her mother's death and frequently spent much time in the laboratory. She washed his retorts and beakers and test-tubes for him, and sometimes he permitted her to measure liquids. Recently he had taught her to weigh some very small amounts of precipitate, and so careful was she in handling the delicate scales and so sharp were her eyes to read the tiny figures correctly that there was always work for her whenever she was ready to do it.

One morning, about two weeks after her visit to Dana Howard's studio, she was standing in front of the little scales looking intently through the glass door at the indicator. Dr. Morris was standing near her heating some mixture in a retort. All seemed to be going well when she was startled by a low cry from her father. She turned and instinctively sprang forward. Her only thought was to shield him. She threw herself in front of him just as the retort burst. He flung her out of the way but it was too late. With a cry of agony she throw herself into her father's arms.

Many and long were the hours of physical suffering, and when they were past many more and very, very dark were the hours of mental anguish when Elsie realized that she would be disfigured for life.

When she was well enough to talk to any one, she sent for her father. Satisfied by her own eyes that he was uninjured, she asked concerning Dana. They told her he had called every day.

Then she told her father what was nearest her heart. She must release her lover. "He cannot live without beauty. He could not bear to see me now."

So Dana was sent for and the girl met him with her face veiled. The man stood looking at her as if paralyzed and then, almost imperceptibly, drew back.

The action was not so slight that the girl did not see it. And then she spoke:

"Dana, I am no longer beautiful. My face is scarred and the doctors give me no hope of its ever being any better. I wish to release you. Here is your ring."

She drew from her finger the ring that meant to her the happiness of her life.

Dana did not move for a moment. Then he took the ring from her outstretched hand and left the room without a word.

When the nurse came into the room a half hour later she found Elsie lying on the floor unconscious.

When Dana returned to his rooms Jim was waiting for him. He knew what had happened as soon as he looked at his friend's face. Long they sat without a word. It was Dana who broke the silence.

"I suppose you think me a cur," he said brokenly.

"No, I only think you are deceiving yourself." Jim put his arm around his friend's shoulder. "I know that you are suffering and I am ready to do all in my power to help you."

"Thank you, old friend." Dana clung to Jim's hand and spoke to him in a low voice. "Jimmie, I couldn't help it. I could imagine so much; and then she said there was no hope, and with her beauty gone I don't see how I could love her any more, do you?" He asked the question as a child might ask it.

Jim bowed his head and did not answer.

"Oh, if I could only forget how beautiful she was!" cried Dana. "I must go away and then I can forget. Will you go with me?"

"Yes, I will go," answered Jim; and they began to talk of where they would go.

Finally they decided on Paris. Dana was exhibiting pictures there a little later on anyway, and so they might as well go now.

Will men never learn that they cannot get away from themselves by traveling? No matter where they went always Dana asked his friend the same question, Why could he not forget Elsie? She was not the same person now that her beauty was gone. Why could he not forget her? And always Jim was silent, thinking the time was not yet ripe to speak.

But one day when they were sitting together in silence Dana suddenly said, "Do you know, Jim, I have never known a girl with such a sweet disposition as Elsie had. She was so gracious and so sweet to every one. Oh, she was beautiful! Her eyes seemed so different from other women's eyes. They seemed—well, they seemed to be Elsie, somehow."

Jim knew the time had come and he said very softly, "That was her beautiful soul looking through those eyes, Dana, and that soul is still there in that dear body. You speak of her as dead, but she is not—unless—unless you have wounded her to death."

With a great cry of anguish Dana sprang to his feet.

"No, no," he said, "she must not be dead! I am going back to her and ask her forgiveness. I love her and I don't care what she looks like! Oh, Jim, why didn't you make me see this before?"

"Because, dear friend, I knew you must know it from your own heart and not because I told you. Come, now, brace up and do the packing while I go and see about the tickets. We are going to her as soon as we can."

* * * * * *

When Elsie was told that Dana was downstairs waiting to see her she didn't know whether to rejoice or not. She had suffered so that it seemed immaterial what happened now. But when she had thought for a moment she realized that this might be a crisis in her life.

She went to her mirror and looked at herself very carefully. Then she took from a drawer a heavy veil and adjusted it over her head and face.

Her heart beat very rapidly when she entered the parlor, but she gave Dana her hand and told him very calmly that she was glad to see him.

His impulsive nature could not be restrained. In a moment he was on his knees with his face buried in the folds of her gown.

"Forgive me, forgive me," he cried, "forgive me and take me back. I am not the same man now. I love you with the love of a man, not only with the love of an artist."

Very gently she took his hand and raised him to his feet. "You see the veil and still say that?" she asked.

"Yes, you may lift the veil and my love will not change! Tell me that you forgive me, Elsie, and that you will marry me."

"I do forgive you, and I will be your wife on one condition—that you consent to my wearing the veil until after the wedding."

"I agree to anything you ask, dear; only come to me as soon as you can."

So they were married in two weeks, with only Dr. Morris and Jimmie and the household servants as witnesses.

It was Elsie's wish that they go at once to the studio rooms. Jim took them there and left them with a big heart full of loving wishes.

"Dana, dear," said Elsie, when they had heard Jim's footsteps die away.

"Yes."

"I am going to lift my veil now, and you must be prepared."

"It can make no difference," he said, and she knew that he spoke the truth.

In a moment the veil was off, and Dana gave a cry of joy. There stood before him the beautiful Elsie of two years ago.

He gathered her into his arms and held her close while she told him how she had not been so badly burned as was at first thought, and how a year ago she had regained her beauty.

"It was a cruel test," he sobbed, "but you have made a man of me."

"I had to do it for the sake of our future happiness. I had to know," she answered. "And now I give to you all the beauty that I have. Keep it always."

"I shall. And I shall treasure it as a jewel without price, knowing that the beauty I see is only a reflection of the divine beauty of spirit."

MOVING PICTURE OUTRAGES

Special emphasis was given to last week's protest of some benevolent societies against moving picture iniquities by a piece of news which, through an interesting coincidence appeared in the same day's papers. This news came from Hoboken, and was to the effect that showmen had placed on exhibition films representing an alleged "high school elopement." The actual high school building itself was used as the background of the pictures, and two girls dressed to represent high school pupils—with just a dash of "fastness"—were shown coming slyly out of its door, throwing themselves into the arms of two fashionable young men—with a dash of the "sport"—and hastening away, supposedly to some "marrying parson." The films were advertised as a "high school elopement" and were exhibited in places where they would most appeal to the patronage of the pupils of the high school and other schools.

It would be difficult to characterize without strong language the obvious evil of this performance, and it is not surprising that the Mayor of the city promptly sought police aid in suppressing the outrage. It was, of course, a libel upon the school to use it for such a purpose and to intimate that it had been the scene of such an occurrence, and an insulting libel to the pupils. It was, worst of all, a direct incitement to waywardness among them.

It seems to be a law of nature that whatever is of greatest usefulness is also capable of being perverted to the greatest misuse. There are few more interesting, entertaining and instructive devices of modern inventive genius than the moving picture; and there are few if any which are more abominably misused. As in the case of the automobile, the misuse is confined to a minority, but that minority is large enough to do almost incalculable mischief. It is necessary, for the welfare of society, that the authorities shall exercise a strict and unrelenting censorship over such shows, perhaps to the legitimate extent of prohibiting any portrayal of unlawful acts. It is also eminently desirable, for their own sake, as well as for that of the public, that reputable makers and exhibitors of films should discountenance the making and showing of the pictorial outrages to which we have referred and lend their potent influence for their entire suppression.—New York Tribune.

New York, N. Y.—Shampan & Shampan have plans for the construction of a new moving picture house at 153-5 Monroe street, for George G. Segal, to cost $10,000.

Chicago, Ill.—Stockholm Amusement Co., capital $8,000, will erect a theater. J. M. Delaney, R. W. Delaney and A. L. Heald.

Detroit, Mich.—Burton & Hoffman, of the Home Bank, will erect a new moving picture show at Chene & Grandy streets, to cost $5,700.

Denison, Ia.—A new opera house, to cost $25,000, will be erected here.

La Crosse, Wis.—Plans are being made for the erection of a new $25,000 theater here, to be called The Orpheum.

Chicago, Ill.—Levy Sugman, 1350 South Halsted street, will erect a new theater, to cost $10,000.

You Can Double Your Income

By intelligent study of your audience. Ask their preference INDIVIDUALLY —then give them what they want.

A canvas of your patrons will show that nine of every ten prefer AMERICAN PICTURES—want to see that magnificent West with its billowy prairies, vast mountain ranges and awe-inspiring canyons. Add a Touch of Business—The Monster Irrigation projects and great Fruit Farms —The combination is invincible!

We welcome such investigations—They show American film supremacy, always indicate an ever-increasing popularity for the only brand of picture that both educates and interests.

THE STORY
PHOTOGRAPHIC TECHNIQUE
PANTOMINE

Are three essentials never overlooked in American Films. You can't go wrong if brains, cash and experience spell "quality."

"The Man Hunt"

(Release Date, Dec. 11th, Approx. Length 1000 feet)

A tired outlaw, pursued by a posse, is given shelter by the ranchman's wife. He promises to reform and does so. The time comes when she, beset by temptation, is about to fall. The former outlaw is a sheriff then, and he saves her. How—is a revelation reserved for 1000 feet of soul-stirring film. The kind that packs a house and leaves an echo!

"Santa Catalina"

MAGIC ISLE OF THE PACIFIC

(Release Date, Dec. 14th. Approx. Length 1000 feet)

A scenic that already has created a furore in picture circles. Contains the first and only pictures of the famous submarine gardens of the Pacific Ocean. Associated Press and Chicago Dailies have published columns about this feat.

On the same reel is the Mobilization of the Pacific Fleet, showing the Cruisers Raleigh, Colorado, Flagship California, the South Dakota, Gunboat Vicksburg, the Oregon, the Buffalo, Iroquois, the Cincinnati and the entire torpedo fleet in annual maneuverings. A masterstroke in the art of picture-craft.

American Film Mfg. Co.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK CHICAGO

FRANK CRANE A COMET DIRECTOR

Frank Crane, who became one of the best known of Independent leading men in the course of his year and a half connection with the Thanhouser Company, has joined the Comet forces as director. Crane's face was perhaps more familiar to theater-goers during his long term with the Thanhouser Company than any other Independent actor, as he appeared in the New Rochelle pictures from their very first issue, and was the first Independent leading man to lecture on the pictures he appeared in. Directing is not a new business to Mr. Crane, who has prepared many vaudeville and stage productions and acted as temporary director for Thanhouser last summer. But he becomes a permanent director with the Comet, and most of this brand of film will be from his hands. The first is "The Late Mrs. Early," released December 1st, and the second, "Just In Time For Dinner." Mr. Crane has conceived some new ideas relative to producing of The-Picture-As-It-Ought-to-Be, and his Comet work is being watched with interest by his many admirers amongst the Independent theater men. Crane distinguished himself in the leading roles of such of the Thanhouser "classics" as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Ten Nights in a Bar Room, "Rip Van Winkle," "John Halifax, Gentleman," "Old Curiosity Shop," and "Silas Marner."

FRANK CRANE

Kansas City, Mo—George B. Hanson will erect a moving picture theater at a cost of $4,000.

WANTED PATHE'S "PASSION PLAY"

I want to buy a perfect copy of Pathe's three-reel hand-colored Passion Play. Reels must be in perfect condition. Unless you have the right copy save postage. Willing to pay right price for the right stuff. Reels must be shipped C. O. D. subject to examination. Will guarantee express charges if refused. References, First National Bank, Minneapolis, Minn.

JAMES V. BRYSON, 256 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

SLANDERING THE PICTURE

It seems to be quite the popular thing in these times to say all sorts of things about the picture whether they are true or not. Perhaps it is a fact that they are bad enough. Almost everything is, and it would be strange if motion pictures escaped. They are made by men, and men being human, are likely to err, or even to produce something which may not be quite up to the best standard, with intention. But, however that may be, a surprisingly small portion of that phase of human endeavor has crept into motion pictures. As a whole they are produced upon a high plane and the manufacturers have maintained a high standard of morality in all their output.

Maybe there is reason for the criticism of the subjects. All cowboys and Indians in pictures are undesirable, yet there seems to be a disposition on the part of some producers to offer little else. Indeed, so great is the output of Western matter now that it is difficult to escape its presence. Another equally dangerous subject is following close after it—the sleuth. A few of each would add piquancy to any program, but to have so many of them presented is a mistake and will sooner or later lead to a more or less well-developed case of disgust upon the part of the public.

But that wasn't exactly what this article started out to say. The thing that was to be mentioned was this everlasting attempt upon the part of busybodies, many of whom never saw the interior of a motion picture show, to defame the character of the picture and the theater in which it is shown by declaring that it is a place where the vilest occurrences constantly menace the morals of young people.

It is quite easy to say such things. It would not be so easy to prove the case. It is about time that exhibitors banded together and forced some of these slanderers to prove their assertions. It is about time that this talk ceased unless there is some ground for the declarations, and everyone who ever goes to motion picture shows knows quite well that the moving picture theater is not a panderer to vice.

Exhibitors have been silent too long under such unjust strictures. The time has passed when anybody who ever saw a motion picture will believe what is said, yet there is a certain degree of injury which results from such reckless and altogether untrue statements. Frequently irresponsible women and equally irresponsible men break out in a mass of vituperation which has no basis in fact and is as injurious as it is untrue. Such abuse from short-haired women and long-haired men should cease. They have no knowledge of their subjects and their criticisms are so wild and unreasonable that no one will believe them.

The motion picture has become an institution which must be reckoned with, but it must be done in a reasonable way. When it is bad there are ways to improve it. When it is good, as it is most of the time, the producers should be encouraged instead of criticised. Make your declarations reasonable and those who have the interest of the young people in view will listen to you and will add their influence to yours in the effort to improve whatever appeals to young people. That effort is right and just. To condemn motion pictures in one fell swoop is an outrage—an injury to a legitimate business which should be tested in some court. Make the detractors prove their case. After that they will be more careful what they say. It is one thing to make a general assertion. It is quite another to offer the proof in specific cases such as would be required in a court of law.

The COMET

MISTER UP-AND-AT-'EM EXHIBITOR, get busy with your exchange man RIGHT AWAY and demand the COMET'S split-reel release of MONDAY, DEC. 4th. IT'S A PIPPIN.

The Ups and Downs of Rafferty

600 Feet of Screams.
The Funniest Thing Since the Runaway Horse.
—In Conjunction With—

The slapbangdest, rough and tumblest knock down and drag outest FOOTBALL SCRAMBLE ever witnessed by an American gathering.

400 Feet of the
CARLISLE (Indian)—JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY FOOTBALL GAME decided last Saturday at Baltimore, Md. Every important play of the famous REDSKIN WARRIORS and the pale-face College boys is faithfully reproduced. THORPE, the great Indian half back, was at his best. LONESTAR (the Sioux chief) electrified the crowd with his repeated daredevil breaks through the HOPKINS line. See MORTON'S (Hopkins' end) successful attack of the Indian defense for a touchdown after a sixty-yard run which turned twenty thousand normally safe and sane citizens into a mob of howling maniacs. The players of each team are shown in parade before the camera. Order this film at once and pack your theatre with the elite of the town.

RELEASED FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8th

Just in Time for Dinner

is our big Christmas number, and you will make no mistake in ordering same at once. A beautifully staged and excellently photographed story of the Christmas home-coming of the son whom the family mourned as dead. The Comet Company is seen at its best in this picture. One thousand feet. Through Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co.

THE COMET FILM CO.
344 East 32nd Street NEW YORK CITY

WM. LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

I have been officially appointed by some of the winsome lassies who "play the pictures" to express their sentiments. Many of the girls, like those s-a-d pieces and in the words of one, "I could just die playing 'Hearts and Flowers,' and if I had my way there would be no comics at all." With apologies to the News musical critic, I propose to express Madgie's sentiments on the subject. Here is a four-line prologue and then the soliloquy:

Madgie "plays the pictures" in the Aerdrome.
She thumps on the piano, day by day.
"Hearts and Flowers," "Call Me Thine Own,"
Alas, these standbys are passe!

"Listen to me, Kid, what you goin' to do,
When playin' three thousand feet of reel?
Th' boss looks to me to beat it through,
And say, Kiddo, how'd YOU feel,
If th' Boss came tearin' down in front
Hollerin'; 'Nix on "Hearts and Flowers" stunt;
Vamp up somethin' lively; what you mean?
We've flashed a comedy on th' screen!'

"Believe me, Kid, it's enough to drive one loony,
Playing several thousand feet of reel.
There comes a film, the scenes are spoony,
You know that makes YOU feel
All tender-like; and you play somethin' low,
Forgettin' th' Boss and his picture show.
Then he hollers: 'Liven up; watch that scene;
We've flashed a comedy on th' screen!'

"Honestly, Kid, I'm a-goin' to save my money!
I'll beg, an' borrow, and even steal
Till I own my show; then it's funny
If I can't play what I feel.
As th' purty heiress is drove from home,
I'll touch 'em up on 'Call Me Thine Own,'
There'll be no holler: 'Out of your dream!
We'll flash no comedy on MY screen!'"

I must take serious exceptions to an article I read not long ago in which the writer urged all picture theater proprietors to leave complimentary tickets with newspaper editors, and to advertise more or less extensively, in order that the daily press stop alleged attacks on the moving picture industry. In other words, the writer intimated that if tickets were left at the editorial offices of any newspaper, and picture show proprietors advertised, that all news concerning picture shows, other than laudatory utterances, would be barred from the news columns of any newspaper. This is rot. Just because certain newspapers of saffron hue have a policy of appealing to prejudice, and seek sensationalism by attacking picture shows, good and bad, it is no criterion that all newspapers follow the identical policy. There are good and bad pictures. There are good and bad newspapers. The same rule will apply to the owners of both theaters and newspapers. We know of many newspapers where "complimentary" tickets are not permitted in the office and where it means discharge to any staff man who seeks free entrance to any theater. Newspapers are more and more favoring the moving picture play. Many of them are devoting much free space to gossip and news of the moving picture realm. To those interested, I can name one daily newspaper in a city of 500,000 inhabitants, which devotes an entire page every Sunday to news of the moving pictures. In one issue there was not a line of paid advertising from a single moving picture theater in the city where the newspaper is published. So the theory that it is theatrical advertising and complimentary tickets that are longingly sought for by all editors is proven a fallacy in this case, and there are many others, although not so notable. Because the Yellows persist in scoring the animated picture industry is no reason that the entire newspaper craft should be assaulted. Such a theory is both unwise and unjust.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

AROUND THE EDGES

Warden Jones, of the Ohio penitentiary, completed a deal with a moving picture theater proprietor and gave a picture show to the prisoners in the State prison chapel the morning of Thanksgiving Day. There are several men in the prison who never before gazed on the pictures and the exhibition was a revelation to them of the progress made by the world since they have been cut off from it. Warden Jones gave three reels, one a comedy, one a Thanksgiving story, and the third an educational film. In the past, it has been customary to put on a vaudeville show in the prison on Thanksgiving Day. This season the inmates chose the pictures by a popular vote.

* * * *

Bones—Hello! Where have you been for so long?"
Jones—"Who, me? Why, I'm doing a turn down at the 'Little Jem' theater."
"The Dickens! I didn't know you were an actor!"
"I'm not; I operate a moving picture machine."

* * * *

Sing with expression, please:
Ba, Ba, Black Sheep,
Have you any wool?
Yes, sir; yes, sir; three bags full.
One for the master,
One for the dame,
But none for the man in the M. P. game!

* * * *

The very latest stunt to draw patronage has been devised by the proprietor of a picture theater in a small city in the Middle West. But it is dangerous.

Every once in a while, the management advertises as follows:

"A Pair of Gumboots," in two reels will be presented at our theater to-morrow evening. The scenario for this magnificent production was written by our popular head usher, Mr. James Johnson Jenkins.

All the friends of Mr. J. J. J. are, of course, anxious to see this photoplay. The theater is crowded to the doors. Mr. James Johnson Jenkins receives the plaudits of his friends with becoming modesty.

The ducats roll into the box office and all is lovely. Great scheme!

However, one gladsome day the advertising of Mr. Jenkins caught the eye of the REAL author of the Scenario, then being exploited by the management of the theater. The benighted author complained to the film manufacturers.

Result: The theatrical enterprise was rudely checked, and now other ways and means are being sought to catch new business.

If the author's name was presented with the films such little items would be impossible.

I wonder if picture play directors ever slip into the audience to try and overhear expressions made when their productions are flashed upon the screen? I wish the director who "put on" "The Express Envelope" could have been seated near me not so long ago in the midst of a rural audience. The Kalem railroad playlet reached the stage where the brave girl had enticed the bandit to the coal-box. Bang! The lid went down and the bold bandit was a prisoner!

"Ah-h-h-h! she's GOT him!" Involuntarily, the words burst forth from the lips of a lady seated in front of me.

Not a person smiled; nor was a head turned.

It was an unconscious tribute to the play, the acting and the producer. In other words, the play "went over."

* * * *

Take the editorial department of the House of Cinematography. The gentleman in charge thereof must work full seven days. He delves beneath the flow of words for a diamond in the rough, and from break of dawn till eventide he wades through tons of stuff. There's words of praise for writers, for directors and for casts, but in this commendation stunt, the poor editor comes last. He takes a likely-looking script and reads it closely o'er, and discovers to his sorrow it's been used three times before. Poems, books and magazines, bales of classic text; the editor, he reads 'em all, and no wonder he is vexed!

ECLAIR

You Name the Day for the SECOND ECLAIR RELEASE

Another ECLAIR will be issued very shortly, and you are just as much interested in its success as we are. WHAT DAY DO YOU WANT for its issue?

We will be guided entirely by the decision of the trade. BEAR IN MIND: We are now issuing THE AMERICAN ECLAIR on TUESDAY and the PARIS-AMERICANIZED ECLAIR on THURSDAY.

High Class Comedy will characterize the Second Release and many two-subject reels will be offered.

We value your opinion and will appreciate an expression from you at once.

HANDSOME SOUVENIR FOR YOUR TROUBLE

To every exhibitor or renter who writes, we will mail with our compliments a handsome New Photo of THE HARRISON-FISHER GIRL, all ready for framing.

COMING RELEASES

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7

There Fell a Flower

(Comedy)

LIFE IN HAUTE PIEMONT (Educational)

An Interesting Split Reel

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12

The Musician's Daughter

American Heart Tale

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14

Japanese Drama

Her One Day's Dream

With artists from the Imperial Theatre, Tokio, Japan

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19

A Tragic Joke

Unusual American Drama

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 26

The Wrong Bottle

Or a Drug Clerk's Mistake

GET ON OUR MAIL LIST

ECLAIR FILM CO., STUDIO AND OFFICES FORT LEE, N. J.

BRANCHES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Cheer up, my editorial friend, in Pandora's box is hope. Maybe, beyond those pearly gates there'll be no picture dope!

* * * *

L. B. Duncan, secretary and treasurer of the Toledo (Ohio) Moving Picture Operatives' Protective Union, was arrested on complaint of B. F. Holmes, vice-president of the union, who accuses the defendant of embezzling $30.50 of the funds of the organization. The new union at Toledo was organized less than a month ago and is said to have nearly fifty members. The purpose of the organization is to endeavor to secure higher wages and better working conditions for the moving picture operators in Toledo.

* * * *

After four experiments with stock companies and vaudeville, the new Lyceum Theater, Cincinnati, Ohio, has installed moving pictures and expects to continue this final change of policy throughout the season.

Our Questions and Answers Department, printed in a recent issue, has become so popular that space is devoted to it again this week. Read closely and avoid the rush:

Violet Mossback wants to know
How to act in a picture show.
Our reply to Violet's wishes:
"Stay at home and wash the dishes."

Rev. Highbrow writes us long,
Says picture films are "reely" wrong.
Our reply to this divine:
"Visit the shows and spend a dime."

Hiram Johnson has a scream,
Comic scrip for picture screen.
Our reply to Hiram's hope:
"Follow the plow; cut out th' dope."

Reporter asks if it's the mode
For fires to start when films explode.
No reply to this fool question,
Such queries give us indigestion!

THE OPERATOR IN ENGLAND

His Status and Condition of Work—By Our London Correspondent

By B. Allan

The operator is just now engaging a good deal of the attention of members of the trade. In a previous letter I gave you some particulars going to show that the wages and conditions of work of many operators—particularly those in charge of the living picture "turns" at music halls—were by no means all they should be. As a matter of fact, the operators in this country have had serious grievances for many years, which have not appeared any the less oppressive from their contrast to the conditions which prevailed in the very early days of the industry, when, good operators being few and far between and the prices paid for exhibitions large, many men received from £5 up to even £12, possibly more, per week. Of later years the operator's remuneration sunk to a ridiculous figure, and though it has improved with the opening of high class theaters by men who appreciate the fact that the important work of operating should only be entrusted to a competent and well paid man, the average wage is not in accordance with the skill and experience called for.

The reason for this fact is, in my opinion, not far to seek. Unfortunately operating, of a style, can be undertaken by any Tom, Dick, or Harry, who has sufficient intelligence to learn how to thread the film and turn the handle. There is no test which the operator must pass before he is allowed to perform in public, and the result is that economical but shortsighted employers, rather than pay the fair wage asked by a competent man, entrusts the projector to any sort of an operator, so long as he can get a picture of some sort. This is particularly so in the case of music hall proprietors, with whom it is becoming a regular custom to pay the electrician or his assistant to do the operating for a few shillings extra weekly. As a result, the living picture at many of our music halls are the worst it is possible to imagine; in a building costing perhaps £50,000, the effect on the screen is often worse than in a penny show fitted up in an empty shop—all to save perhaps 30 shillings in wages.

Now, if this were all, little could be said, for the proprietors have the right to kill interest in their pictures by bad operating if they are foolish enough to do so. But the question of public safety comes in; the operator occupies a position of quite unusual responsibility, for although the regulations under the Cinematograph Bill make an accident almost impossible, a break in a film may cause it to fire, and unless got under control, a panic, though senseless enough, may arise in a moment, as we have only too many instances to prove. An untried, ignorant operator may set the whole spool of film blazing by his inexperienced efforts to remedy matters or he may neglect to drop the shell over the aperture in the box, allowing the audience to see what is going on, and so possibly turn into a serious disaster what in reality is only a trifling mishap, to be put right by a competent man in a few seconds.

I think it is quite clear then that the safety of the public demands an adequate amount of skill in the operator; admit that, and you are compelled to conclude that a measure for testing the proficiency of the operator and refusing permission to work in public to those who do not reach the required standard, is necessary. Without any direct knowledge of the American trade, I gather from the Moving Picture News that America is far ahead of us on this point, but undoubtedly examination and certificates of the operator will soon be in force in this country, and I have every belief that once it is in force, the operator's position will be altered considerably for the better, for the main factor in keeping down wages and in keeping alive other conditions unfavorable to the operator, is undoubtedly the competition of unskilled, untrained men who obtain positions by taking less than a fair wage.

At the present time, wages and conditions of employment vary greatly in England. A "continuous" show, opening at 2 or 3 in the afternoon and going on until 11 at night without a break, usually has two operators—a chief and an assistant, and two machines, which are usually run by motor. The assistant can thread up one machine while his chief is attending to the other, and can generally make the work of the latter easier, while in many cases he is sufficiently competent to take charge of the whole outfit if necessary to allow his companion time for a meal. These conditions obtain in most of the best theaters, such as those on the Pyke circuit in London, and those in the provinces directed by Mr. R. T. Jupp; but, of course, there are numerous shows of a more modest kind where one operator may have sole charge of a continuous show, sometimes with only one machine, and that possibly hand driven. There are also many shows, particularly in the provinces, where two distinct performances are given nightly instead of a continuous programme; in which cases, the operators have to be on the premises from 6 o'clock till 11 with a break between the shows. Wages vary almost as much as hours; there are operators getting £2/10 a week, and others getting 35/-, 30/-, and 25/- per week. There are also operators so-called, who accept less than 20/- per week.

So much for the present conditions, now for the suggestions made by the National Association of Cinematograph Operators to improve the conditions of the operators. The essence of their policy is that operators should be required to pass an examination and receive a certificate of proficiency before they are allowed to work a machine in public. A bill has been drawn up and is even now undergoing revision which will accomplish this end if it passes Parliament, and as a measure having the support of film-makers and renters as well as operators it is practically non-contentious and therefore, it may be expected to become law in due course.

The programme of the N. A. C. O., which is affiliated to the National Association of Theatrical Employees, also includes the establishment of a standard scale of wages. From a booklet entitled, "Get Off the Fence," by Mr. E. H. Mason, an official of the association, which is well worth reading by anyone interested in the position of the English operator (it can be obtained on application to the N. A. C. O. at 1 Broad Court Chambers, Bow street, London), and which gives a succinct account of the operator's programme, I take the following scale of wages which it is suggested shall be recognized as a minimum for different classes of work:

1. Small Music Halls—£2 5s, to include all services rendered to artistes by way of illustrated songs, etc.
2. Music Halls—£2 2s., the operator to make his own terms for services to artistes.
   Both above to be inclusive of one matinee, but exclusive of Sunday work.
3. Electric Theaters and Continuous Shows—£2. Operators to work in two shifts of not more than five hours per day, with an assistant.
   Assistant operator, working full time, £1.
4. Picture Palaces—£2 10s per week. Two houses nightly and one matinee, exclusive of Sunday work.
5. Picture Palaces—With Shop Work, and including one matinee, £3.
6. Touring—With complete show, excluding traveling expenses, £3.
7. Traveling Shows, Fairs, etc.—£2 per week.
8. Day Work—Hours 10 to 6 o'clock p.m., with occasional shows, £1 15s.
   All the above exclusive of Sunday work.
9. Sunday Shows—Not exceeding four hours, 10s 6d; 2s 6d per hour, or any part thereof beyond four hours. No man to be expected to work more than five hours.

In comparing with American rates it should be remembered that the purchaser's power of money here is greater than with you.

By its association with the N. A. T. S., the N. A. C. O. is in a position strong enough to enable it to if necessary put up a strong fight for the recognition of this scale, but I doubt if there will be any need, as the figures are reasonable in every case. As to the position of qualified operators who do not join the association, they may find themselves experiencing the same difficulties in obtaining jobs which I understand obtains in America, if the two unions become strong enough in the living picture world to call out the employees from a theater employing non-union labor. At present they could not do so, but I look to see the bill when it passes, lead to a considerable accretion to the membership and power of the N. A. C. O. The properly qualified man would, in fact, be well advised to join and help to make the association as strong as I understand the Theatrical Employees' Association of America is. It is by combination only that the operators can get the improvement in conditions they are after, and the good workman has nothing to gain by standing aloof from his fellows; rather will he be classed with those "operators" who are not considered competent enough to be admitted to the N. A. C. O.

Seymour, Ind.—J. H. Hopewell & Co. have bought the Nickelo show from E. R. Bennett.

Glendale, Cal.—Paul V. Tuttle will erect a theater building on Fourth street, for J. W. Lawson & Assoc.

Portland, Ore.—R. L. Glisan will erect a picture theater at First and Grant streets, to cost $3,000.

"THE LITTLE STOCKING"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Film Co.)

The illustration shown herein is a striking scene from our Christmas picture "The Little Stocking." It is a totally different sort of CHRISTMAS story. Released Thursday, Dec. 14th. Book it just as early as you possibly can.

"WHY THE CHECK WAS GOOD"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Film Co.)

A drama that goes straight to the heart. It illustrates the reward of kindness. Released Monday, Dec. 11th. Will YOU get it?

OUR DANDY "SATURDAY SPLIT"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Film Co.)

This time it's TWO BULLY COMEDIES on the one reel—the kind you have ordered us to produce. One is called "Billy's Seance" and the other "Bungalow Burglars" with a laugh in every inch. RELEASED SATURDAY, DEC. 16th. Don't forget that THREE IMPS A WEEK will bring AT LEAST THREE GOOD HOUSES A WEEK. That's what hundreds of wise exhibitors tell us.

NOTICE:—Stunning picture post cards of KING BAGGOTT for sale at ridiculously low prices. Send for sample and terms at once.

NOTICE:—The Imp A. B. C. Books will make fine Christmas souvenirs for your patrons. Write for special prices immediately, or wire.

NOTICE:—Photos of leading "Imp" performers for sale separately or in magnificent lobby frame. Write for particulars today.

NOTICE:—Be sure of at least THREE PACKED HOUSES EVERY WEEK by using THREE-IMPS-EVERY-WEEK. Arrange it with your exchange NOW!

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURE CO.
102 West 101st Street—New York—Carl Laemmle, President.

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

THE SONG

To have a song or not to have a song. That is the question that agitates many managers. Of course, not those who include vaudeville in their programmes, but those who believe in the picture, yet feel that an illustrated song will assist in making the programme attractive.

There is no longer any question about the quality of the slides used to illustrate the songs. Any number of reputable houses are bringing out slides every day suitable to illustrate the songs that are offered. Most of them are artistic productions, containing much of merit technically and interpreting the song satisfactorily.

The improvement in slides has been faster than the improvement in singing. It is harder to obtain a good singer than it is to obtain a set of good slides, yet the singer is, after all, the important factor in a song. Be the music never so good and the words and sentiment beyond criticism, if the pictures which go with them are the best that can be produced, unless the singer does his or her part the whole effect is spoiled and the audience will leave the theater when the song begins.

The writer has in mind an independent theater in a small town that has had an experience of that sort which has probably been duplicated many times over. For a long time the management employed a man singer. He was good. It was impossible to say wherein he was not good, yet he never got a hand and the song number was the nightmare of the programme.

A change was made. A woman was employed, who, technically, is not as good a singer as the man, yet she wins abundant applause whenever she appears, and many persons go just to hear her sing. No one can explain the difference, yet the difference was there and the audience knew it.

Perhaps this experience is unique in some of its manifestations, but it represents the point which is aimed at—the necessity of choosing a singer who can please the crowd. He or she may be technically poor, yet have that subtle, unexplained something which makes the whole difference.

The character of the songs is important, though probably the best thing to do is to use only the popular ones, those which everybody is whistling, or can shortly learn to whistle. Occasionally one of the old-time favorites with appropriate illustrations will be found effective. The main point is to give your miscellaneous audiences something they like, not necessarily what you like or what you think would be desirable. The motion picture theater is not a conservatory of music. It is a place where people may go to hear the latest popular songs for one thing. And it is for the management to see that they are gratified in their desires.

If a little more attention was given to this particular subject in some theaters the effect would be much better and the song, instead of being a season of movement, as it is in many, and formerly was in all, will be one of the principal attractions and your box office will profit proportionately.

Kansas City, Mo.—R. T. Swofford will erect a moving picture theater at 2515-19 Independence Blvd., to cost $11,000.

Chicago, Ill.—M. Ruttlegins will erect an $8,000 theater building at 945 Polk street.

Minden, Neb.—The Gem Theater, owned by R. Ringnell, J. A. and F. L. Haws, has been sold to James Orr, of Denver.

Ishpeming, Mich.—Charles Skiff has purchased the Royal Theater from C. S. Sullivan.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The Kozy Theatrical Co. will erect a new theater building at 730 Madison avenue, to cost $10,000.

MOVING-PICTURE SHOWS

The following letter was received by the manager of the Plaza Theater of Port Richmond, and as it serves to clear away misapprehensions it is given in full. It is from the pen of a worthy lady and is printed as a simple matter of justice:

"Mr. Willoughby: Dear Sir—I have passed your moving-picture place a great many times and have wanted to come in, but on account of what I heard about it I did not, for I felt that if it were as rough as it was pictured to me my life would be in danger. But I found out for myself that your place has been falsely misrepresented.

"If you will allow me I would like to tell you in what way I found it out. I was passing your place one night and I stopped to look at the pictures on the boards near the door, and as I was looking at them I noticed the people that were going in, and to my surprise I found them a nice lot of people, and as I felt that they were as good as myself I went in also and have been coming for the last four or five weeks. In all this time I have found a well-behaved lot of people, so I was satisfied that it was not the rough people that they had to condemn your place for.

"Then I thought that it might be the pictures that were not right, but after seeing them I was satisfied that there could be nothing said about them, for your pictures are perfect, and I felt that if the President of the United States were to come in he could find no fault with them. They are so clear and educational that even the children that were there could have found something in them that would have stayed in their minds and do them some good in the future. So you see I think that the pictures are all right.

"Then I thought that it might be the manager that they were talking about, so I have watched you in the length of time I have been coming here and have found you to be a perfect gentleman, attending to the comforts of your people and doing all in your power to give the place a good name according to your duty. I thought that you certainly needed a great deal of credit, as it is no easy task to manage so many different kinds of people and do it in the cheerful way in which I noticed you did. So this part of the show is certainly all right.

"Now, as to the music, I found out also that it was all right, and I thought that it ought to have reached the most dissatisfied persons and pleased them, for your piano player certainly can do his part, and there is nothing in his playing that can condemn your place. I think he deserves much credit in trying to please the people.

Then the band player—what can they say about him—surely nothing. And I think that he should also have, and deserves, a great deal of credit for playing all the different instruments that he has to play, for it must be a hard task to play all these and suit everybody at the same time. Allow me to say I think he ought to suit the hardest cranks and please them, for he certainly is a good musician.

"Now, you see, I think that from the beginning to the end, everything is perfect in your show, and I will not let any one say anything against it again to me, as they cannot convince me anything is wrong that I know to be all right. Respectfully,

"MRS CHAS. NEWTON."
—Richmond (S. I.) Advocate.

THE WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE
OF NEW YORK

CITY CUSTOMERS ARE ALL SATISFIED

NOW READY TO CATER TO OUT-OF-TOWN BUSINESS

LET US HEAR FROM YOU

Telephone 2892 Bryant 2893

Forty-Fifth St. Ex. Bldg.
145 WEST 45th STREET

SUCCESS ASSURED! READ THE EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS BELOW—Many Others on File

MOVING PICTURE TALES

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS RECEIVED BY ALFRED H. SAUNDERS FROM MANY EXHIBITORS

THIS EXHIBITOR WILL ORDER 1500 COPIES.

Mr. Saunders:

I know your magazine will be in great demand and will fill a long-felt want of the Exhibitor. Forward me sample copies immediately and I shall make a house-to-house canvass of this city. I readily see the more I can sell the better my business will be, and you just bet at the price I shall sell them.

Yours for business,
OLYMPIC THEATER.

Cinematograph Publishing Co.,

I will want a large number of copies. This is just the kind of a magazine I have been waiting for.

THE ELITE THEATRE,
THE ELITE THEATER.

EXTRACTS OF PERSONAL INSTRUCTIONS—SAUNDERS TO PETINGALE

Impress strongly upon the Exhibitors the necessity of instant action in sending in their orders as early as possible. So rapidly are we meeting with success that early orders will insure prompt deliveries and save confusion. Rush first issue with all possible speed. Yours fraternally,

Alfred H. Saunders.

Don't delay, write now, as only a limited First Edition of 25,000 will be disposed of

5c

Every Exhibitor Will Need 1000 Copies

Let Us Know At Once How Many

THE FIRST PERMANENT MOVING PICTURE THEATER IN THE THEATER ZONE OF NEW YORK

By Robert Grau

In a previous article by the writer it was predicted that the tendency to improve the auditoriums where moving pictures are exhibited would gradually result in the advent of "The Theater of Cinematography," where by reason of the caliber of the offerings on the screen, the high-grade methods prevailing in its conduct, and the adoption of a scale of admission prices, materially higher than those now in order, the distinction heretofore existing as between the regular theater where the player in the flesh holds sway and the motion picture playhouse will be almost wholly removed.

And now comes the definite announcement of the lease or purchase—I am not certain which—of Mendelssohn Hall, on West Fortieth street, by the officers of the Kinemacolor Company. Thus comes into being the first permanent structure in the theater zone of New York where an entertainment consisting exclusively of the motion picture is to be presented and where the prices of admission will range from twenty-five cents to one dollar.

In selecting Mendelssohn Hall the officers of the Kinemacolor Company have shown clearly that it is their intention to cater to a high-grade patronage, and undoubtedly upon the outcome of this enterprise will depend the construction of a chain of Kinemacolor theaters all over the country, but it is not only the Kinemacolor Company who are endeavoring to solve the problem of a greater motion picture industry, for the reception accorded to several special-feature films such as "Dante's Inferno," for instance, in the best theaters of the country, has been such that the Messrs. Shubert, who control theaters in every important centre, have opened their houses to the film owners, and it may be just as well to record the truth in this matter—the Shuberts found that the receipts at the box offices where these special films were exhibited were so much larger than those drawn by even the best Broadway attractions that they proceeded to book the Kinemacolor Coronation pictures for extended runs in nearly all of their theaters, and in doing this they have succeeded for the first time in solving a problem of their own—one that has kept them awake nights, at that—that of finding an attraction that would attract the public to their theaters outside of New York.

Until the advent of these special-feature films, it was the custom to keep the Shubert theaters "dark" for more than half of the season, but all this is changed now.

Inasmuch as the great success of such feature productions as the Kinemacolor "Dante's Inferno" and others represent merely the infancy period in an advanced phase of cinematography, one must not be regarded as an optimist in predicting that the day is not far off when the high-grade theaters, where two dollars is charged for seats, will be brought into direct competition with such theaters as the Kinemacolor Company are now inaugurating.

A year ago the writer called attention to the fact that the Coquelins, the Jane Hadings and the Gabrielle Rejanes of Paris were induced to become photo-players, and that Sarah Bernhardt's capitulation should be the greatest event in the history of the motion picture, for she would be the first of the five or six great figures of the stage of the nineteenth century whose sublime artistry will have been perpetuated for posterity through the means of the greatest invention the world has ever known.

The motion picture fortunately can record the art of a Bernhardt in all its verity and leave nothing to be regretted—in contrast with the phonograph, a device that has often been called upon to preserve for future generations the voice of a great diva, when that diva's voice no longer was what it was in her prime, as was the case when in 1904 Adelina Patti, who, for thirty-five years was indisputably queen of song, permitted a phonograph company to "take" her in the two simple ballads, "Home, Sweet Home" and "The Last Rose of Summer," with which she once enthralled audiences all over the world. But at the age of sixty-seven, when her fortune was already in the millions and her voice a mere shadow of its former purity, for the sake of a sum said to have been $50,000 the divine Patti proved that the phonograph is as merciless as it is true, and the tears that Patti was wont to draw from her hearers by her exquisite phrasing and her remarkable coloratura singing together with the feeling she always expressed, are still forthcoming but alas, not from the same impulse.

It's All Here

Why go into grandiloquent ecstacies about our own work? We don't need to. Read the synopses and then bang at your exchange for it. Your decision is ours. For TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12th, a split reel:

"THE LITTLE CHAPERONE"

(Farce Comedy)

and

"VIEWS IN GENOA, ITALY"

For SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16th, a big farce feature:

"WHEN HEART WIRES CROSS"

(It's real, wholesome fun)

NOW—Get ready for the bulletins from the "Boost Dept."—Are you on the list for them?

POWERS MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

511 West 42d Street NEW YORK CITY

Bernhardt, however, was also approaching her seventieth year when it became her mission to act before the camera for the benefit of posterity, but here we have an illustration of the efficacy of the motion picture, for the art of the divine Sarah will be seen at its best. There was no evidence whatever of any deterioration in this extraordinary woman's acting on her last American tour, and the day that the screen reveals her as Marguerite Gautien will be the red-letter day in the history of the motion picture.

But we are now just evolving into the "star" phase of the motion picture industry—just the same as vaudeville evolved from "variety." It does not seem so long ago that such stars as Lillian Russell, Virginia Harned, James K. Hackett, Henry Miller and others would have felt insulted if any one would suggest their appearance in vaudeville, and it is true that there are celebrities now actually seeking an audience of the producers of photoplays who even five years ago would have denied an audience to Mr. Edison himself if they thought he wanted them to pose for moving pictures.

And yet—the writer was figuring the other day the salary list of a prominent film company's stock company. Of course the only means of arriving at an estimate was the writer's knowledge of the salaries the photo-players were wont to receive in theatrical companies. However, the task was an impossible one because of the complicated system of organization, but it will be interesting here to state that in this particular company—the Vitagraph—seven players were recognized whose combined weekly salaries, based on their standard quotations for several years, amounted to exactly $1,200, therefore one can only conjecture as to what the "budget" of the entire roster would be estimated at.

And still we are unwilling to believe that the prophecies of future marvels are justifiable, but in another year the wonders of to-day will seem insignificant.

Missoula, Mont.—E. J. Myrick has sold the Bijou Theater to Hagens & Bedard.

CHAMPION

INTERESTING SUBJECTS
EVERY MONDAY AND WEDNESDAY

The Right Opportunity is a Rare One. Champ Films are Choice Opportunities to Every Exhibitor and Exchange, as the Subjects are Rich in Variety and Theme

RELEASED DECEMBER 11th

A Traitor on the Staff

Suffers disgrace in a malicious attempt to dishonor his military rival for the hand of the General's daughter.

RELEASED DECEMBER 13th

The Saving of Dan

All the beauty of the West in its natural scenic setting forms the background of this clean Western story.

WE'VE SOMETHING NEW ALL THE TIME

CHAMPION FILM COMPANY

Sold thro Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

MARK M. DINTENFASS, GEN. MGR.,
12 EAST 15TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

MOVING PICTURES FOR ADVERTISING PURPOSES

While the leading transcontinental railways have for several years used motion pictures to advertise the sections along their lines which they desired to develop, the Arcadia Orchards Company, of Spokane, Washington, owners of the largest irrigated apple orchard in the world, enjoy the distinction of being the first private company to use motion pictures in showing views of the development and surroundings of the proposition in which they are interesting buyers, many of whom are located over 3,000 miles from the orchards. They have 1,800 feet of films showing views of the business and residence sections of Spokane, showing a visit of a delegation of one hundred members from the Spokane Chamber of Commerce, showing scenes at the formal opening of the irrigation canals (incidentally, this is a very important event, the Arcadia Valley being one of the three largest irrigation projects in the world in addition to being the largest apple orchard in the world, 18,000 acres). After taking the delegation to the opening of the canals, the film takes them over the orchard property in its various stages of development, showing the blasting of stumps, the pulling of them up by the horse power, showing the gathering of them into large piles by means of a derrick. The film also shows the various processes of preparing the land for the planting of the tree; ploughing, discing, harrowing, leveling and raking, and, finally, the tree planting itself. Following this comes a panoramic view of the orchards, showing trees ranging from 2 to 15 years old, also showing the nursery. Following this comes a panorama of the most developed section, giving a very comprehensive idea of home life as it is in the apple growing community. This film has been shown before various State universities as well as in Chicago and Baltimore, and has elicited great interest on each occasion.

The Arcadia Orchards Company in advertising its apple lands is certainly in the foreground when it comes to progressiveness. Take, for instance, the apple elephant which they built at the recent Land Show in Madison Square Garden, and which one of the biggest department stores in New York City is now exhibiting. The idea of the Apple Elephant was to symbolize the size of the Arcadia orchards.

AMERICAN INDUSTRIES

Anything pertaining to the industry of one's country is always interesting and helpful and, as the American public seeks for knowledge of the things with which they are not familiar, Mr. Carl Laemmle, the president of the Imp Company, has in mind the filming of interesting subjects for the benefit of those ambitious to improve their minds. Two of these pictures have already been taken and are awaiting early releases. One is taken on an American tea farm, where the beverage in the raw is grown in large quantities. From the immature plants to the can is shown in a series of pictures in which all stages are shown, much attention being given to the mode of cultivation, harvesting and packing. The picture will certainly prove a revelation to those who are ignorant of the growth of tea. Another picture shows the growing and marketing of cotton, the scenes being taken on a large Southern plantation, the process of hoeing, picking, packing and marketing being shown. Scenes around the gin and the transatlantic steamer are very interesting. The colored people who work in the cotton fields, haul the bags to the gin and to the steamer are types typical of the land of cotton. Their crude conveyances are a study in themselves and this picture will at once prove both entertaining and instructive. This film is for release Saturday, December 9.

NEW THEATER FOR SAVANNAH, GA.

One of the finest and most up-to-date picture theaters in the South is the Arcadia Theater, owned and operated by the Savannah Picture Plays Company, of Savannah. It shows the latest pictures. The seating capacity of this house is 750, and the cost of construction is estimated at $40,000. It opened on October 3d, and has been enjoying capacity shows since that date. A six-piece orchestra is employed, and the admission is ten cents.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING

The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.

Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

A SAMPLE OUTBREAK

Paterson, N. J., has a number of moving picture shows. A dozen or so, perhaps, most of them excellent places of amusement and thronged daily with appreciative audiences. Recently a member of the Board of Aldermen asked for a license for another. He was opposed by one minister, backed up by some cranks, and the license was refused. It might be proper to say that this was just previous to election, and the church vote was an essential feature on the day when the American goes to the ballot box and attempts to exercise his right of suffrage.

This minister said he represented a large number of people who thought as he did. Perhaps he did. It isn't worth while to dispute him, nor is it necessary to undertake to disprove his declarations. They have disproved themselves too many times heretofore.

He bore down pretty hard, harder than the average critic, perhaps because he was more eloquent. Or maybe because he felt such a high moral purpose running through his personality that he couldn't help it. Anyhow, he talked for an hour before the Aldermen, and when the matter was put to a vote the applicant lost.

Now, what was this objection of his? Anything new? Nothing. Merely a rehash of the old argument that the motion picture theater is a panderer to vice. He declared that the motion picture theaters are used as centers of operations by vicious men who seek to ruin the young. Maybe he believed it. It is well to hope he did, because what would become of a minister who would publicly tell such a barefaced lie. Let's put this thing into plain English. It was a barefaced lie. And because a minister uttered it does not mitigate the offense. Indeed, by all the canons of good taste, it ought to make the offense worse. A minister who will deliberately tell a lie, and that, too, when he knows it may injure a man's business, deserves little consideration.

He was asked if he had ever attended a motion picture show, and if so, how many? He replied somewhat vehemently that he never had, that he never would, and that he included all motion picture shows in his range of criticism.

The only avenue of escape for this unfortunate man is to allow that he is so constantly talking about matters from his pulpit, of which he has no knowledge. that he has fallen into the same way in talking of motion pictures. In this case, however, he hasn't the excuse which he could offer about the other. He can go see the motion picture and satisfy himself of the decency of the Paterson theaters. But he can't enter those places about which he preaches so glibly.

Before he undertakes to find fault with such a universal and beneficial amusement enterprise as the motion picture, he should make a thorough examination of the thing about which he speaks. He ought to do this at home, at least, and elsewhere if possible. Then if he finds the method of conducting the theaters wrong, and the influence injurious, he would be justified in uttering the most powerful invectives he could command against them, and he can rest assured that the people would support him in his arguments. They won't do it now, and they will continue to patronize the first amusement ever invented which a poor man could afford to enjoy. The minister who undertakes to curtail this perfectly legitimate enjoyment and instruction deserves to be characterized for exactly what he is, a plain liar.

M. P. LEAGUE OF AMERICA NOTES

I am pleased to announce that Senator J. B. Foraker, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has agreed to act as counsel for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which organization has been duly incorporated under the laws of Ohio.

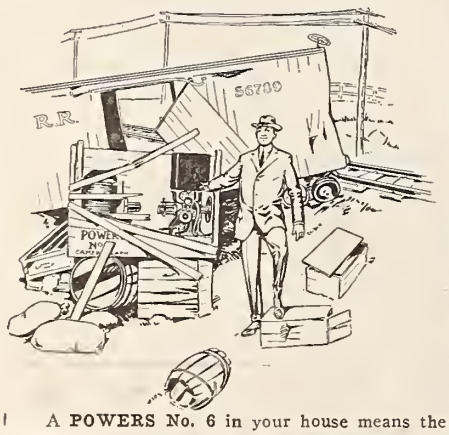
In securing the services of Senator Foraker we have a guarantee for every exhibitor that his legal rights will be fully protected. I think I should further announce that Senator Foraker has accepted this employment, not alone from a monetary consideration, but also because he realizes the great good that can be accomplished through a league that is organized for the purpose of securing a higher standard of pictures and placing the business on a higher plane.

Senator Foraker and the president of the League have been friends for many years.

Cleveland, Ohio.—L. A. Griffin has been awarded the contract for the erection of a new theater at West 25th and Archwood avenue.

DER KINEMATOGRAPH, DUSSELDORF
The leading Organ for the Motion Picture Trade in Germany.
Special Supplement for Talking Machines, &c.
Published every Wednesday. Annual Subscription 11/- Post Free.
Advertisements (4 columns to page); 2s. 6d. per inch. Situations Wanted, 1½d. per line.
Reduced Price for a Series of Insertions.
Publisher—ED. LINTZ. Chief Editor—EMIL PERLMANN.

IT ALWAYS GETS THERE!



POWERS CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6. ALWAYS "DELIVERS THE GOODS" EVEN IN THE FACE OF ACCIDENT.

The picture tells a true story of wreck which a POWERS survived without injury. Mr. J. J. Dashington, a traveling exhibitor, writes us: "I was in a railroad accident last season and the machine was struck by a freight train, when it was in a common wooden box all set up ready for use, and thrown 30 feet. The wreck smashed up trunks and trucks but never hurt the machine in any way." This demonstrates POWERS great stability, hut it does not speak for its other virtues —perfect adjustment, ease of operation, lack of noise, pictures without flicker, clear and steady.

POWERS CAMERAGRAPH No. 6 has made friends everywhere. Give it a chance; it will be a good friend to you. It will work hard for you and it won't go back on you. It will send your patrons away satisfied, it will increase your business and bring you money.

A POWERS No. 6 in your house means the S. R. O. sign out in front. Our book, "The Proof of the Pudding," will show you why POWERS is preferred to all other machines. Catalogue D is yours for the asking.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, NEW YORK

For fourteen years the leading manufacturers of moving picture machines.

Great Northern

THE "KING PIN" OF QUALITY FILMS

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2ND

THE PENALTY OF HER AMBITION

A strong and appealing dramatic production, depicting how a young couple's domestic happiness was restored to them through the devoting influence of their child.

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9TH

BUTTONS AND HOOKS

A comedy of an entirely new kind. One that compels hilarity. A real rib-tickler. Enacted by star performers. On the same reel:

WINTER IN SWITZERLAND

An exceedingly charming picture of Alpine scenery. Snowbound villages nestle in the valleys with the superb peaks forming a wonderful and impressive background.

ALL FIRST-CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

7 EAST 14TH STREET, NEW YORK

ALL FILMS SOLD THROUGH THE SALES COMPANY

THE KICKER'S BOOST

Some of the manufacturers, both Trust and Independent, care about as much for the exhibitor, his success in business or his opinion as does the Czar of Russia for a democratic voter in California.

What we exhibitors cannot understand is the manufacturers' apparent desire to play that old-time game of follow the leader. What I mean by that is, if one of the manufacturers produces a subject, for instance, featuring or using an airship, then for the next week or ten days one sees nothing but airships. Some long time ago a manufacturer conceived the idea of making nothing but Indian pictures and stories of the West; now about all you can see in picture houses is cowboys and Indians. It would be a good thing if some of the manufacturers would read extracts from some of the sermons and lectures which are being delivered all over the country against the picture show. Their claim is that the boys who visit the show become so enthusiastic over the Western and Indian pictures that they try and do all the things they see in the pictures, such as hold-ups, scalping bees, etc. A case has been mentioned to me of some boys who actually tried to hang one of their companions and when they were asked what caused them to attempt such a thing they at once replied, "We saw it at the picture show." Already there are persons who claim that the 5-cent picture show is the successor to the dime novel, and that it is even more demoralizing than were the yellow-back journals.

The manufacturer is the one who can make and mould public opinion, and he can only do that in the right way by producing the right kind and class of pictures. The writer of this article believes that if the manufacturer would take a week off and visit the theaters, sit in the audiences and hear the expressions and remarks that he would get pointers that would be invaluable to his business.

Our customers will say to us, "Why don't you get this or that kind of a picture?" and "Why do you show so many Western pictures?" and what can we say or do to change conditions?

We go to our film exchange for service, we tell them we want so and so many changes of film per week and so and so many each change. We write to them and complain about receiving too many of a certain kind or class of pictures and they tell us they cannot help it—they are the renters only—they do not make the film and they have to take what the manufacturer makes, so if it's mostly Indians, why Indians it will be all over the country, and, by the way, have you noticed some of the make-ups they are using for Indians—some look about as much like an Indian as a piece of pie looks like Brooklyn Bridge.

Another great fault that I have noticed in some of the pictures is their neglect to carefully work out all the details that the story is intended to bring out; for instance, some short time ago I had a picture showing an interior scene and there was flashed on the canvas the words reading "ten years later," and there on the table stood a glass of water containing the same amount of water that it did ten years before, the window was raised to exactly the same height it was ten years ago, and the actors in the picture wore exactly the same clothes even to the neckties that they did ten years before; a corner of the stand cloth was doubled up under the lamp same as it was ten years before, and even the plant in the window had not changed any. I could mention numerous other things equally as ridiculous as this, that I have noticed in other pictures, but just give this as an illustration of the things that a manufacturer should not do.

The exhibitor is the man who is in direct line with the patron of the nickel show and is, therefore, in a better position to know what the public wants and should have than is the manufacturer. I want to offer a suggestion to exhibitors, and that is as follows: Whenever they see anything that is not as it should be then they should call the attention of the manufacturer of that film to such parts as they may think need criticism.

The manufacturer in turn should pay some real attention to these suggestions and, if that will be done, there will be less kicking and more pleased patrons, and the more we can please our patrons, the more new patrons we will get; and after all is it not the moving picture bug with the little V that we are all after?

Respectfully yours,
CARL F. MILLER.

Fremont, Ohio.

PRESTO

Poster frames, the best poster frame made, $1.75 each in quantities up to five. Six or more $1.50 each, cash with order.

ELECTRA Pink Label Carbons 5/8 x 6 soft cored, $2.00 per 100. $19.00 per 1,000, cash with order.

Swaab Film Service Co.

Pioneer Film Exchange
129 N. EIGHTH STREET PHILADELPHIA
Power's and Motiograph Machines

The Bioscope

The Leading Journal of the Moving Picture Business in Europe. Has the largest circulation and is the best Advertising Medium, bar none.

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 A YEAR. SAMPLE COPY MAILED FREE.

85, Shaftesbury Ave., London, W., England

LUX FILMS

The Acme of Perfection

Released Friday, Dec. 8, 1911

The Man in the Auto

DRAMA—Approximate Length, 650 feet

The Adventures of an Amateur Hypnotist

COMEDY—Approximate Length, 334 feet

R. PRIEUR, 10 East 15th Street, NEW YORK CITY

TELEPHONE 3427 STUYVESANT

Sold only through Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

ONLY EASTMAN RAW STOCK USED.

THE TURMOIL—A PLAY IN ONE ACT

By Lindsay Bancroft

TIME—The Present.

Scene—Any Hotel Club Room within easy reach of the "General" offices on Fifth Avenue.

(ENTER—Everybody of Importance, meaning the MPPCO, Attorneys, Servitors, Dummy Patentees, Henchmen and Captive Exhibitors.)

FIRST "EVERYBODY," a dyer of yarns—
What ho, my comrades, greetings to you all,
Beshrew me, but our ranks are wondrous small;
Let us to-night review our present state,
And formulate new plans ere 'tis too late.

A CAPTIVE—
Good sirs, I humbly ask your char-i-tee,
God send you may remove the royaltee——

CHORUS OF "EVERYBODIES"—
Out upon thee, varlet, where didst learn
That all the filthy lucre thou dost earn
Should not be ours who gave thee licensed right
To take in for us sacks of dimes each night.
Let not thy scurvy tongue be heard again,
Or out thou go'st where th' Independents reign.

FIRST "EVERYBODY"—
Tut, tut, dismiss this showman and his brood,
What care we what befalls the multitood?
More pressing matters we must quick discuss,
Or it will soon be "twenty-three" for us.

ANOTHER "EVERYBODY"—
What think ye of the output up to date?
They seem (the films I mean) just simply great.

ANOTHER "EVERYBODY" (wearing much expanse of shirt front with a diamond pattern in red)—
Why pratest thou such stuff? What do we here?
Heap flatteries on ourselves, when we should fear
The moments as they fly beyond our reach.
Let us now learn what signs and portents teach,
"Up guards and at 'em, cut out all this rot,
Let's put good plans in th' common fusion pot.

FIRST "EVERYBODY"—
Well spoken, Bill, we'll obey thy behest.

"EVERYBODY" (as before with diamond)—
Shut up, thou talk'st more piffle than the rest.

A WESTERN "EVERYBODY"—
Perchance, my fellow schemers, ye have heard
How progress in the West is much deterred
By scraps and cavilings within the ranks
And how th' exhibitors give us poor thanks
For the fine programs of the General's best,
And how the Independents are a pest
No law can scarce, no vaunting terrify;
So we have slipped one over on the sly
By cutting out that needless daily change,
Thus to defeat their ends . . .

A CAPTIVE—
Why not arrange
A truce between the PATCO and the SALES
For where war loses, friendship oft prevails.

FIRST "EVERYBODY"—
Let the film service of this churl be stopped.

CAPTIVE—
Too late, a week ago the trust I dropped,
No terrors hath the "License" for me, more,
I'm wiser now than e'er I was before.
(Noise Without).

A SMALL "EVERYBODY"—
What noise is that? Methinks it bodes us ill
For list, 'tis music sung with right goodwill.

FIRST "EVERYBODY"—
Ha, 'tis some loyal licensees I guess
Come to express their thankfulness
For good film service. Hark, they do serenade,
Cheer up, my friends, of what are ye afraid?

(Independent Carol Singers Without)—
God rest ye merry gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay;
For ye have fought and we have won
Each battle to this day;
We bow with rev'rence to the bluff
That in your ranks holds sway,
Yet ye shall hear us more and more;
We're in the field to stay.
One year agone 'twas your proud boast
We soon should be no more,
The world would then be yours, and all
Your troubles would be o'er.

(Solo by Carl the Caroller)—
We thank you for the actors you have trained,
We thank you for the lesson you have taught,
You've shown the difference 'twixt the cam and loop,
And we are really glad you're "in the soup."

FIRST "EVERYBODY"—
Curses, I know that voice, who'll volunteer
To kill that IMP of darkness, or I fear
More mischief will he work and causes win,
For where our lawyers end doth he begin.

WIZARDRY "EVERYBODY"—
Not I will try to slay this wicked elf,
For of his shrewdness I have proof myself.
Let Bill go at him, with his fighting horse.

BILL, Diamond-Shirt—
NOT MUCH—He'd turn his advertising force
Full loose on me and Polly, let him be,
A foe who fights like Carl does should go free.

(To be continued.)

E. St. Louis, Mo.—The States Theater Co., capital $1,500; W. F. Zuerwelle, W. H. Becker and R. B. Hendricks.

Seattle, Wash.—A new two-story playhouse will be erected at South and Washington streets, to cost $35,000.

Kent, Ohio.—Alex. Marchand has sold the Fairy Theater on East Main street, to W. G. Costley.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank P. Smith will erect a new theater at 11th and McGee, for the Pantages Vaudeville Circuit, to cost $600,000.

THE OLD VIOLIN MAKER AND HIS DAUGHTER.

HIS TWO APPRENTICES

THE HERALD ANNOUNCES THE PRIZE OFFER FOR THE BEST MADE VIOLIN.

SOOTHING HER FATHERS PUPIL AFTER SHE TELLS HIM SHE IS IN LOVE WITH THE OTHER PUPIL

THE SOUL OF THE VIOLIN HAS TAKEN POSSESION OF THE MUSICIANS BODY AND MIND TO THE EXCLUSION OF ALL ELSE.

EXCHANGING HIS OWN VIOLIN FOR AN INFERIOR ONE, THUS SACRIFICING THE HONOR OF A TITLE FOR THE HAPPINESS OF THE ONE HE LOVES.

HE GETS CREDIT FOR MAKING THE BEST VIOLIN THROUGH THE SACRIFICE OF HIS FRIEND

EXPERIENCING THE PAIN OF AN UNREQUITED LOVE

SCENES FROM THE SOLAX PRODUCTION OF "THE VIOLINMAKERS OF NUREMBERG." RELEASE OF DEC. 22nd

SCENES FROM "GATHERING OF THE COUNCIL OF THE SIX NATIONS"

REPUBLIC FILM COMPANY

In the above Republic production we are told over 200 men, women and horses participate. It is a beautiful romance woven into a pictorial version of the greatest event in Indian history. This film will be both educational and historical, and all are expecting great things from the "Rep" on the occasion of its release.

The history of the red man is always interesting. There is a romantic dignity following in the wake of the American Indian that fascinates—not the Indian as he is to-day, for he has already partaken of the fruit of civilization, which relieves him to a great extent of many curious characteristics, but the Indian of yesterday in his original primitive state.

In the "Rep" production of "The Gathering of the Council of the Six Nations," that atmosphere of rustic and primitive romanticism which is so rapidly fading from the face of the earth as its people are becoming civilized is, we hope, kept intact in this production, and judging from the efficient management that is otherwise characterizing the Republic Film Co. we feel sure that this production will be all and more than it is expected to be.

This film is in two reels and release dates will be Saturday and Sunday, December 16th and 17th, respectively.

Increase Your Box Office Receipts

BY USING

The Greatest Educational Feature of the Day

4 DAILY

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD'S SLIDES OF CURRENT EVENTS
THIS SERVICE COVERS
EVERY EVENT THAT IS INTERESTING
EVERY OCCURRENCE THAT THRILLS

24 WEEKLY

News pictures of Wars, Sports and all National and International happenings by Underwood & Underwood, the World famed news photographers. Flash these events daily while they are news and public interest is keenest. Everyone is interested in the news of the day, and this is a service of news pictures. COSTS NOTHING WHEN COMPARED WITH RESULTS.

4 SLIDES DAILY—24 PER WEEK, RATE $12.00 PER WEEK

3 current event photos 14" x 17" for outside display with printed news titles, rate $5.00 per week.
WRITE TODAY FOR THREE, SIX OR TWELVE MONTHS' CONTRACTS

HUNTON-FELL-ELLIOTT, Inc., 1328 Broadway, NEW YORK

REINCARNATION OF THE POWERS CO.

(Continued from page 18.)

photographs of the many applicants, and if not accepted at the time of application and there is necessity to look around for a certain type which might be required at some later date it is an easy matter to turn to the book, or books, for I remember they are divided off into different series, such as "heavies," "character," etc., and find the type required. Also addresses of same are kept in another book, and when necessary they can be looked over.

Just recently the Powers Co. made a "find," a really valuable one, I may state; the "find" is in the shape of a clever and extremely sweet looking little girl who shall be known hereafter as "Petite Muriel." This little girl will figure hereafter in Powers productions and is destined to become a popular favorite. Two other valuable additions to the Powers Stock Companies are Miss Lurline Lyons and Mr. Wm. A. Williams.

It is the intention of the Powers Co. to star certain well-known Broadway favorites in up-to-date productions. For instance, Violet Shelby, who is starring in the "Littlest Rebel," will be one of the first chosen. Mildred Holland will appear on the screen in "The Power Behind the Throne." This is a good departure, and one to be copied by others.

There will be a special "Boost Bulletin" issued by the Powers Co. for the use of the exhibitor. In fact, they intend to play to the xhibitor, and to do everything possible to make their produce and services indispensable to the exhibitor. Another innovation that will be introduced by the Powers Co. will be the use of photographs in the lobbies of the moving picture houses to try to establish a reason for dispensing with the objectionable poster. This, it seems to us, is a much needed innovation, and we are glad to welcome it.

Costume plays of the Louis & Rennaisance period, and we are glad to know that they are discarding the Western picture, taking the sensible view of the matter that without genuine Western atmosphere the Western picture is not satisfactory.

One of their first releases under their new regime will be "When Heart Strings Cross," which will be released December 16th. This picture will be a significant forerunner of what will follow. It is a farce comedy of a high order.

The Powers Co. are about to start in a fourth stock company. The accompanying illustrations will give our readers an idea of some of the fine material to be employed by them in their coming productions.

Remember, exhibitors, the Powers Co. intend to play to you. Your interests will be theirs.

SALES COMPANY

The following films have been released during the week of December 4th by the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.:

Monday, December 4th

Angel of Paradise Ranch.....American
Yankee Doodle and Our Navy.....Champion
Billy's Letters.....Comet
The Dumb Messenger.....Imp
Just Two Little Girls.....Nestor

Tuesday, December 5th

The Empty Tepee.....Bison
The Little Thief.....Powers
The Order of Big Horns.....Powers
The Newsy and the Tramp.....Thanhouser
In Humanity's Cause.....Eclair

Wednesday, December 6th

The Indian Fortune Teller.....Champion
Struck Gold.....Nestor
Turn of the Wheel.....Reliance
Baby's Choice.....Solax
The Majestic Hudson.....Solax
Jorio's Daughter.....Ambrosio

Thursday, December 7th

The Smoke of Forty-Five.....American
Tony and the Stork.....Imp
There Fell a Flower Piermont.....Eclair
The Measure of a Man.....Rex

Friday, December 8th

The Dead Canary.....Comet
A Range Romance.....Bison
Brother Bob's Baby.....Thanhouser
The Little Shoe.....Solax
The Man in the Auto.....Lux
The Adventures of an Amateur Hypnotist.....Lux

Saturday, December 9th

Cross Country Run.....Imp
The Birthday.....Imp
Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond.....Nestor
Two Men and a Girl.....Powers
The Turnstile.....Reliance
Buttons and Hooks.....Great Northern Winter in Switzerland.....Great Northern

Sunday, December 10th

Keeping Mabel Home.....Majestic

NOTES OF THE WEEK

FROM THE OBSERVATORY

By G. F. Blaisdell

MOVING picture news of the week runs to churches and schools. It is a noticeable and a notable fact that the attention being paid to pictures by church and school authorities is continually increasing. Great progress has been made in the past few months.

* * * *

The Rev. William F. Grace, of St. Ann's Church, of Lenox, Mass., is to install moving picture apparatus in his edifice. Father Grace is the first Catholic rector in the Springfield diocese to introduce pictures into church work.

The Rev. Robert Gordon, of the First Baptist Church, of Topeka, Kan., has encountered a new difficulty in his program of Sunday evening picture shows. Although his church is filled at these illustrated lectures, the same distinctly cannot be said of the contribution basket. There is a deficit. The pastor announces that if the donations are not sufficient to meet the expense of the pictures the church will have to revert to the old routine, and, it may likewise naturally be assumed, as a corollary, empty pews.

The Rev. James W. Cool, of Lynnhurst Congregational Church, of Minneapolis, Minn., has encountered no such setback in his church. He states that since the inauguration of his Sunday evening picture program his audience invariably contains between 100 and 150 additional persons.

The Rev. William M. Hess, of Trinity Congregational Church, New York City, is to display religious pictures at his church on Saturday evenings.

The Rev. Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, of the Temple Baptist Church, of Los Angeles, Cal., in a recent Sunday evening talk to his congregation took for his theme "Sidelights on the Footlights." Among other things he said:

"Just as soon as the officers of Temple Baptist Church can see their way financially to do it, I hope that we can put a moving picture machine into the temple, that can be used in connection with our Sunday school and educational work. Already there are films produced that present in the most attractive, interesting, instructive and entertaining way the scenes of Bible times. There are other pictures of great moral and educational value that could be used to great advantage in connection with the church's social life."

* * * *

The initial experiment of showing moving pictures in Brooklyn public schools was a decided success. While the expense of the pictures was assumed by a citizens committee, officials of the Board of Education actively cooperated in their presentation. E. W. Ordway, chairman of the committee, advocated the use of pictures in school work, especially in geography, history and literature. City Superintendent Maxwell said he was in hearty sympathy with the idea.

Principal Gilbert N. Brink, of the Berkeley (Cal.) high school, referring to the forthcoming report of a member of the local Board of Education who was delegated to investigate the subject, said.

"I understand that an equipment of the class wanted for the auditorium runs all the way from $400 to $1,500, but such an equipment will be secured at some time and we might as well have it now.

"In producing films it is not our idea to compete with the theaters by any means. We are out for the films that will show methods of commerce and trade in other countries in contrast with methods employed here. We want to give the students an opportunity to break away from their own world through this medium."

City Superintendent McLane, of Fresno, Cal., proposes the adoption of moving pictures as a part of the school curriculum of his city. His plan is sanctioned by the local school board. It is hoped that the movement in Fresno will result in the establishment of a state-wide educational circuit.

Superintendent of Schools Andrews, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has declared in favor of the use of pictures in schools.

Superintendent D. H. Christensen, of Salt Lake City, has laid before the school board of his city plans for the equipment of the high school with a moving picture apparatus, with the ultimate aim of extending the experiment to other grades. His proposal has met with a favorable response.

* * * *

Governor Eberhart, of Minnesota, declined an invitation to see the pictures showing the routine life of the boys at the Red Wing State Training School, and declared that if complaint was made to him that the pictures were clear enough to reveal the identity of the boys under restraint at the school, he would take steps to prevent the exhibition of the pictures. There was more than a little justification for the governor's indignation when he said:

"Films showing boys that are sent there for correction, if spread broadcast, when few outside their families know they are there, would work hard against the boys. Such pictures are not interesting, but harmful and should never have been taken."

* * * *

Moline, Ill., has had its cigarette blaze. Two operators were winding a film when it caught fire. One of them is said to have been smoking. Three Independent reels were destroyed. The fire was confined to the booth. The theater was filled, and naturally there was excitement. The operator who was not doing the smoking was burned.

Why should it not be at least a misdemeanor for a smoking man to handle a film in an occupied theater?

* * * *

Rochester, N. Y., is to have a hundred thousand dollar picture house.

* * * *

The Washington Film Exchange has been incorporated in Virginia. Its officers are J. W. Miles, of New York, and Arthur Lucas and John G. Marenette, of Washington.

* * * *

The Louisville Photoplay Association, with no capital stock, has been incorporated. The object is to promote legislation in the interest of the motion picture business.

OUR WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 29.—There was one feature in the amusement line this week that still has the entire town talking. It was a return engagement of "The College Boys' Minstrels," an organization of local boys, and this time they held forth at the Auditorium Theater. They had the Thanksgiving date and the house was packed. As their guests, the junior and senior members of the high school occupied the two lower boxes and they made things merry with their school and class yells. It was the show, however, that caught the crowd, and the feature of the show was the afterpiece, "In Dear Old Galrald," which treated of political events that have recently transpired in this county. The appointment of the new reform sheriff was touched on and the many things, politically, that have stirred the old town were burlesqued in a riotous manner. The satirical offering was staged as a courtroom scene and all the candidates now in the race were supposed to have written letters to the judge. These letters were explana-

MACKIE HAS IT

Sidewalk Advertiser

This Week Price Cut to $8.50 Former Price $15.00

Buy from the Manufacturer

H. A. MACKIE, Inc., 853 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

Write for Dealers and Jobbers' Proposition

tions of recent official acts, and when they were read in court the audience howled. Aside from this the show was a great hit, there being any number of excellent solos and no end of up-to-the-minute "gags," while in the olio there were six excellent vaudeville features. The entire show went off with snap and ginger and was a most pronounced success, but some of those who were featured in the afterpiece are casting all kinds of sour looks at the ones responsible for the same.

It won't be long now before the regular season opens up and things are already beginning to take on a busy appearance. Money is liable to be a little slack, owing to the approach of the Christmas and holiday period, but at that none of the managers are kicking. Al G. Fields was here with his minstrel show and made a killing, but "Madame Sherry," who followed the Field's attraction the following night, played to a poor house, though the show was immense. The girls were especially pretty and the singing and dancing has not been surpassed. "The Chocolate Soldier" packed them to the doors this week and was even better than on its first appearance, while business at the Princess, with an excellent vaudeville show on each night, has been of the capacity variety. The Princess is working a "split week" with San Antonio, Tex., and this enables the house to get in some very big acts. Had the pleasure the past week of seeing once more Miss May Hurst, who was playing the "heavies" with the Murray & Mackey Stock Company some four seasons ago when I was with that attraction. She was here with Dan Mason's sketch, "The New Chauffeur," which made a big hit.

American sent us a good reel in "The Master of the Vineyard," which was thoroughly enjoyed, and Bison's "Race for a Bride" brought us to our seats. The race was sure an illustration of speed and daring and the plot was also worthy of attention. "The Actor as a Soldier" got a good many laughs at the Photo Play Theater, but the audience seemed to prefer that the actor stick to grease paint and let things in the martial line alone. The reel, however, all things considered, was worth while.

Imp gave us an excellent reel in "The Wife's Awakening" and Itala provided the study of the week in their subject, "The Raising of Pheasants," which was one of the best educational films here this season. The gunning season is on in this county and many of those who have gone out in the woods to knock over quail came in to see this reel. I know more about the pheasants now than I ever did before. Nestor gave us a good comedy in "The Kid from the East" and "Their First Divorce," which gave the Biograph comedians of "sleuthing" characteristics, was one fine scream. As a burlesque on the detective agency these two are immense. Edison, we liked your "Young Men's Christian Association," even though we are not members; it was indeed worth while. And I mustn't forget to state that through the courtesy of Essanay we beheld some excellent San Francisco views and President Taft at one and the same time. Well, here's hoping all of you enjoyed your Thanksgiving turkey.

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

CINCINNATI NOTES

The picture business in Cincinnati is very quiet at the present time, there has only been a very few changes in the picture houses. M. A. Neff bought the Unique Theater on Walnut Hills, and changed the name to The Queen Theater. Since the change the theater seems to be doing a nice business.

Mr. Beck, of Indianapolis, Ind., is expected in Cincinnati in a day or two. Mr. Will Cohn, of the General Film Co., of Columbus, was in Cincinnati this week. The Exhibitors' League will start their state organizer on the road next Monday. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be represented by an able organizer, who will take the field in a very few days.

Mr. C. A. Dashner, of Huntington, W. Va., has opened up the Queen Theater at Versailles, Ky. Mr. Ralph Lafeever, of Lebanon, Ohio, formerly manager for M. A. Neff, has bought the Queen Theater at Lebanon, and after remodeling and decorating will open it up on the 25th. Mr. Staup, of Delphos, Ohio, will soon move into the new theater which he is now building. Delphos is to be congratulated in having so efficient a picture man as Mr. Staup.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE

The Imperial, the latest of playhouses, opened its doors last night to the Washington public. Flowers and plaudits rule. The interior, exterior and bill, both in the high-class vaudeville and motiograph pictures provided for the opening week, proved satisfactory.

Nowhere will you find a more contented gathering of the operators of the motion pictures than the boys of Washington, D. C., No. 224, I. A. T. S. E. (International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees). Having concluded that for the welfare of the public and for the protection of their own high standard of proficiency, they found that a local organization was necessary, they have gotten together and, under their charter and by-laws, now assure the theater owners only the highest standard of protection.

This local organization asks the co-operation of the managers and requests them to report any faulty projection, negligence, etc., on the part of the operators belonging to this local organization to the business agent, who will investigate and rectify the matter at once.

The officers are: B. A. Spelbring, president; J. A. Gobel, vice-president; G. Horton, treasurer; V. Dutch, financial secretary.

THE SOLAX EDUCATIONAL CONTEST

It will be the policy of the Solax Company to release periodically an educational picture intended for exhibition before school children. The pictures will be so planned and directed that their usefulness as sources of knowledge will be apparent. It is the intention of the company to consult experts for suggestions and for facts.

The great demand at this time for educational subjects has encouraged us to take the lead in this direction. We feel confident that our efforts toward supplying this demand will be received with enthusiasm. We are certain that the plan will be heralded across the country, not only as the beginning of a great movement for the betterment of the moving picture product, but as the opening of a new era in the history of education.

In order to arouse and keep alive the interest of school children in this educational movement, prizes will be offered for the best compositions on the themes exhibited. In all cases the student will be requested to answer the question: What have you been taught by the Solax production of ————? Announcement of the conditions governing the contest, as well as what the prizes will be, the number of prizes to be distributed and the personnel of the contest committee will be made in the near future. It will also be announced later on what merits the contest will be decided. It has definitely been decided, however, that the first educational subject to be released will be "The Majestic Hudson." The river will be shown from its source to its mouth. All the points, both historical and geographical interest, will be shown. The state capitol, Washington's headquarters near Newburgh, West Point, Storm King, the different institutions such as Matteawan and Sing Sing, industrial places, wharves and shipping points, all these and more will be included in the picture.

NOVEL THEATER SCHEME IN "THE MUSICIAN'S DAUGHTER"

A striking illustration of motion picture detail is found in the Eclair release of Tuesday, December 12, "The Musician's Daughter." One of the many interesting scenes is laid in an opera house, the principal characters appearing on the stage while portions of the audience, orchestra and boxes are simultaneously shown. For the purpose a stage of standard proportions was built with adequate scenic equipment. The proscenium opening, or frame of the stage, was actually modeled in plaster of paris with scroll work and ornaments in bold relief. A massive box, regulation size, was next attached, the front of same being elaborated with heavy brass railings and decorative designs in papier mache. Heavy velvet draperies, suspended by golden cords, added to the realism.

Even the members of the orchestra, and the audience, were carefully selected. A very touching story is illustrated in "The Musician's Daughter," and each character is important, Grayce Scott, the popular stock leading woman, interprets the title role, while Will S. Rising, the dean of moving picture artists in America, portrays the old Musician. Messrs. Applegate and Adelfi are seen to advantage as the opera house manager and city dude, respectively.

Dorothy Gibson plays the part of a dissatisfied prima donna to a nicety. Other members of the extremely large cast share in the honors of the production. Mr. Jay Hunt is responsible for the scenario and staging.

Exchanges and exhibitors will welcome this excllent Eclair subject.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF PENNSYLVANIA

3d Floor, Roberts Building, 233 Fifth Avenue
Pittsburgh, Pa., November 27, 1911.

To the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Pennsylvania:

At the meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held at their headquarters, No. 233 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, on Sunday, November 26, 1911, it was decided to issue a call for a State Convention to be held at Harrisburg, on Monday, May 6, 1912.

We also are pleased to say that we had with us at this meeting our National President, Mr. N. A. Neff, who gave us a good talk along the lines of organization, and from his report we assure you that the future for our league looks very bright.

We are also making arrangements to place a State organizer on the road, for the purpose of organizing locals, and bringing the exhibitor into the league, and we ask the assistance of all the exhibitors throughout the State to aid us in our work, so that when the next National Convention is held in Chicago the old Keystone State will be second to none.

Now let our slogan be "ORGANIZE," "ORGANIZE," and on to Harrisburg to the State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors. For any information write to our State Headquarters, as we will be only too glad to hear from you.

We remain yours truly,

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE
OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Per Fred. J. Herrington, President.

THE CARL BARCKHOFF CO.

BUILDERS OF PIPE ORGANS

With or Without Self Playing Attachment
POMEROY, OHIO, U. S. A.
Established 1819

Over 3000 Barckhoff Organs in use, which testify to their superiority and durability in construction, workmanship and sweetness of tone.

We make a specialty of Organ Chimes, made by no other builder.

You are dealing with the Manufacturer, no commission.

CINES CO.

OF ROME

ITALIAN-TURKISH WAR

No. 2

The SECOND SERIES containing the aviators, etc., will be RELEASED ABOUT DECEMBER 7. In preparation, the "SEARCHLIGHT," a war story taken in Tripoli. SEND FOR SYNOPSIS.

445 BROOME ST.
NEW YORK

Telegraphs, Cines New York Telephone, Spring 9232

SCENE FROM "SHE"—THANHOUSER RELEASE

WHO RIDER HAGGARD IS

Brief Facts About the Celebrated Creator of "She," Which Has Become a Film

The announcement by the Thanhouser Company of the presentation of Rider Haggard's "She," in two reels, brings attention to the wonderful mind that created this mystifying character. Synonymous with the Thanhouser announcement is one in the New York Times of still another book from this unusual veteran.

H. Rider Haggard wrote "She" a quarter of a century ago. Its sale in English-speaking countries almost matched that of "David Harum." Active as when in the late eighties he conceived "She," Haggard devotes himself to his writings, his flowers and his crops. The vigorous action of "She" and his early romances may be explained by the fact that among his many activities he was a good soldier, having been lieutenant and adjutant of the Pretoria Horse in 1879, while two years before, with Col. Brooke, R.E., he formally hoisted the British flag over the South African Republic at Pretoria, on the Queen's birthday. In addition to his military achievements, Adjt. Haggard has been on many committees, including one on investigating agriculture, member and Chairman of Reclamation and Unemployed Labor Committee of the Royal Commission on Coast Erosion and Afforestation, in England, and Salvation Army settlements in our United States. His books are very numerous, a few of the better known being "King Solomon's Mines," "Allen Quartermain," "Cleopatra," "People of the Mist," "Heart of the World" and with Andrew Lang, "The World's Desire." He is also a member of the British bar.

The two-reel "She" is released Tuesday, December 26th, as a holiday feature.

Open to Represent Good American Film Manufacturers for

England, English Colonies and Europe

Cable or Write Terms:

Universal Film Company, Ltd.

5 Denmark St., Charing Cross Rd., London, W. C.

Cable Address, "Ufilmico, London" 'Phone, 13674 Central

W. E. GREENE

FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE IN NEW ENGLAND

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Start the Season right by using an Independent Service from a Reliable House. We are buying the Output of the Sales Co. and have some choice services open. Write—wire—or call To-Day at

W. E. GREENE FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

228 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.

Telephone: 2187-3790 Oxford.

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

HER BIRTHDAY

Imp Release, December 9

Mr. and Mrs. Rollins are newly married, still in the "spooning" stage, and the wife is inclined to be exacting and unreasonable. This extends to jealousy. Rollins is the most indulgent of husbands, devoted to his wife and inclined to humor her whims, which at times are near the limit mark.

The crisis is reached one morning when he receives a note at the breakfast table and declines to allow her to see the contents. She notes the occurrence with rapidly increasing wrath and bides her time. The letter is from Rollins' young married friend, whom he has commissioned to purchase a saddle horse for his wife's use, intending to make her a present of the animal on her birthday and it relates to the transaction. Of course, it is to be kept a profound secret and Rollins is in a predicament. He cannot explain and knows he has aroused the jealousy of his wife.

She rummages his pockets and finds the note which is terse and refers to a "little beauty" the friend has discovered and urges Rollins to come down and look her over. Mrs. Rollins immediately connects this with an affair with a woman and she goes on the warpath, finishing up by sousing her husband in a bath tub and packing up to return to her mother. Rollins endeavors to placate her to no avail. She demands explanations which he cannot give. He is convulsed with laughter the while, well knowing that everything will be explained to the satisfaction of the wife in the end.

Mrs. Rollins completes all preparations to leave her husband and is giving a final look at the house when her attention is attracted to the street. Rollins, his friend and the wife of his friend appear leading a handsome saddle horse. Mrs. Rollins sees the woman and explodes. The idea of his bringing the brazen thing to their home increases her wrath against the husband. She flounces out to be detained by Rollins and, against her will, she listens to the plot, being reminded that it is her birthday and the horse is intended for the present.

It is unnecessary to remark that the explanation is eminently satisfactory and the wife relents and begs the pardon of the husband, while the friends enjoy the situation immensely. Mrs. Rollins is completely cured of her predilection to jealousy. On the same reel is:

COLUMBIA'S INTERSCHOLASTIC CHASE

This will prove to be a very interesting film to all lovers of athletics or those even remotely interested in matters educational. The camera men caught the athletes at various portions of the long and arduous cross-country run of about five miles.

The start was at the university in New York, across to Morningside avenue, to 123rd street, across to Riverside, around Grant's Tomb to 96th street and back over the same course.

Many scenes of interest in New York were caught by the camera and enhances the interest in the picture. Fourteen schools were represented in the endurance race and prizes worth competing for were hung up.

WHY THE CHECK WAS GOOD

Imp Release, December 11

A drama illustrating the reward of kindness.

Oliver Stetson, the son of Walter Stetson, is a typical young man who is fond of pleasure without vicious habits. His father has strict Puritanical notions and endeavors to hold a tight rein on his escapades. One night Oliver lingers too long at the pool table and on going home is turned adrift by his father.

He goes from his home without money and gradually assumes the dress and habits of a nomad, roaming around the country. Footsore and weary, he reaches a small village. He enters a shoe store to steal a pair of shoes and is apprehended by the proprietor, Alanson Erwin. Instead of turning the unfortunate over to the law, the shoe dealer equips Oliver with a presentable suit of clothing, shoes, etc., and gives him a small sum of money. He writes Oliver's name on a card, bids him good-bye and the tramp is encouraged to battle with the world on equal terms.

Oliver flourishes, but his benefactor meets with business reverses and is at last forced to forge a name to a check to obtain money to buy the necessaries of life. He finds the name of Oliver on the card and resolves to use same. Presenting the check at the bank, it is at once recognized by the paying teller as a forgery. The old man is detained until Oliver, now a successful business man, is summoned and the matter explained. He seeks an interview with the suspected man and discovers it is his benefactor. He announces that the signature is genuine and then relates his story to the bank officials.

The old man is taken to the home of Oliver and cared for for the remainder of his days, the reward of extending kindness to a young man who was on his uppers and who was forced to steal by circumstances.

THE LITTLE STOCKING

Imp Release, December 14

John Allen leaves his wife and child and goes to the gold country in search of the yellow metal. As his wife finishes packing his grip his little girl slips in one of her little white stockings and the father kisses her and leaves for the West.

On arriving at his destination, he finds a congenial companion in Dan Bartlett, an honest, robust miner. While unpacking his effects the little stocking falls to the floor and Allen, in the exuberance of his joy, announces that he will not return until he has filled the stocking with nuggets.

Allen and Bartlett go prospecting and, losing their way, their water is exhausted, and they suffer on the desert. Bartlett sees his companion die and is about to succumb when assistance arrives and he is saved from torture and death.

Reaching the camp Bartlett tells the miners the circumstances, how Allen braved death for the sake of his wife and child. The narration awakens the right sort of emotion in the hearts of the lonely miners, and they chip in, fill the stocking with nuggets, and give Bartlett a substantial sum to carry to the bereaved woman.

Bartlett arrives in the East on Christmas eve and seeks out the widow of his dead companion. She is being harassed by a grasping landlord and Bartlett pays the scoundrel and throws him out of the house together with his process server.

Christmas morning the little girl arises and discovers that Santa Claus has indeed paid their humble cottage a most welcome visit for Bartlett has been prodigal in his purchases. The widow thanks him and bids him take her thanks to his partners and Bartlett returns to the mountains sad, but with a knowledge that he has performed his bounden duty to the widow and her child.

THE LADY FROM THE SEA

Thanhouser Release, December 12

In Ibsen's play of "The Lady From the Sea" he tells a powerful story of how a young and imaginative girl can be strongly affected by a really meaningless ceremony.

Ellida was the daughter of a lighthouse keeper, and spent many hours near the water's edge, dreaming of the great ships that she could see daily sailing by her home.

While she was still scarcely more than a child, one of these ships put in for repairs at a fishing village near the lighthouse, and its second officer, while on a day's outing to kill time, visited the lighthouse. He there met Ellida, whose youth and beauty he admired. His stories of the sea and "the great beyond" won the immediate interest of Ellida. He paid frequent visits to the lonely lighthouse, and the girl's interest in him soon developed into a fascination which almost amounted to a spell which he cast upon her when he was in her presence.

While his ship was still undergoing repairs, the second officer quarreled with his captain, and a fight ensued in which the captain was killed. The guilty man escaped from the ship, and, making his way to the lighthouse, forced Ellida to assist in his flight. Before going he compelled her to plight her troth with him, inventing a strange ceremony to impress her, by fastening a ring which she wore to one of his, and casting them both into the sea. As soon as he had gone, Ellida realized that to engage herself to this fierce dominant man was sheer madness. And she wrote as soon as she could obtain his address, telling him that she would not consider the engagement binding, and that she would expect him to release and forget her, as she intended to release and forget him.

The sailor paid no attention to her letter, and simply wrote that some day he would return to claim her and that she must wait for him.

Being left alone by the death of her father, Ellida finally consented to become the wife of Dr. Wangel, a friend of her father's, who had long admired her. The doctor was a widower with two grown daughters, and Ellida found herself a stranger in her new home, and spent much of her time alone. Her loneliness naturally led to a mental depression, and as the years passed an awful dread grew in her mind of what her fate should be if her sailor lover ever returned to claim her.

Her imaginings had so strongly worked upon her that when the sailor did finally return from the sea she entreated her husband to allow her to go to him, although she feared and had grown to hate the strange man. Dr. Wangel tried to show her that her duty and happiness lay with her husband and her home, but feeling that she would never be perfectly content with any fear darkening her life he decided to tell her that she was absolutely free; he would not hold her to her marriage vows.

When Ellida found that she was free to choose between the sailor and her husband she realized that this man who had been a fearful mystery, whose very existence she concealed from everyone, including her husband, was simply a man whom she disliked, and whom she could freely marry or dismiss at her pleasure. Of her own free will she ordered the sailor to leave her, telling him that he no longer had power to intimidate or mystify her.

With perfect trust and no secrets between them, Dr. Wangel and his Ellida started life anew, with no bar to their complete love and understanding.

DEACON DEBBS

Thanhouser Release, December 15

A young New Yorker has "expectations," the same being a wealthy uncle who lives in the country, and who has signified his intentions of making the young man his heir. The nephew is naturally anxious to keep in the graces of the elder man, and does so at long distance.

While he and his wife are entertaining some friends at a bridge party in their home one evening, they are shocked on receiving a telegram from a friend in the country informing them that uncle is on his way to town, intending to visit the young man and find how he is withstanding the temptations of a great city. The nephew is a well-behaved young man, but he realizes that his law-abiding speed might look like a criminal spurt to a man fresh from the simple life of the country. He sees that something must be done at once, and having little time at his disposal hastily adjourns the bridge party, and organizes his laughing friends into a literary society, so as to make "a front" with uncle.

The elder man arrives and is thoroughly impressed with the fact that his nephew is a serious minded youth, possessed of all the virtues we read about. As the days pass this conviction becomes deeper, for the nephew and his wife take the uncle on a round of sightseeing, seeing the most solemn things and hearing the most high-browed of high-brow lectures.

Uncle does not know what they are suffering for his sake, for they hide their feelings. Finally, when they go to a particularly deep discourse, they get away by a ruse, leaving uncle alone to enjoy the lecture while they run off to have a real "City Time" by themselves. Having spent a jolly afternoon, they return and take uncle home again, pleased with the thought that he had not been neglected.

Then, with renewed energy, they plunge into the work of entertaining uncle. He is kept busy with a perfect round of books and edifying conversation. It palls on them but they do not show it.

One evening after uncle has gone to bed, carrying an encyclopedia to read if he should awake during the night, the young couple steal into the sitting room. From its hiding place behind a row of books the nephew produces a decanter and a box of cigars. Chatting gaily with his wife, he prepares for a drink and a smoke. Suddenly there is an interruption. Like an avenging angel, his uncle stands glaring behind him. He takes the glass of strong liquor from the young man's trembling hand, the cigar from his left. The young man tries to explain; the elder with a nod indicates a note on the table. It is from the uncle to his would-be heir, and contains the information that he, uncle, has had the most dreary time in the world. He had come to the city for a good time, but all that came his way were lectures no person could or would want to understand. And he wound up by telling his nephew that he was a mutt and was disinherited.

The uncle watched the young folks while they read this letter. Then he winked and drank the liquor prepared for the nephew. He next lighted the cigar and, finding it good, forgave the culprits. Then they took uncle out to "see the town."

JUST TWO LITTLE GIRLS

Nestor Release, December 4

Wesley Burke, M. D., is referred to as "the Great Doctor Burke." Wherever and whenever others fail, he, by some feat of magic, performs veritable miracles and foils the Grim Reaper.

Notwithstanding his great gift, Dr. Burke, try as he might, could not save his dear wife's life; and, had it not been for little Gladys, his only child, he might have gone mad. Living as he does, for his child alone, he is unhappy when the wistful little face is out of sight.

In the squalid home of Frank and Margaret Morse, little Nell lies still on her death-bed. The good old doctor, Davey, gives up all hope, but tells the grief-stricken couple that Doctor Burke alone might save the little one. Frank promptly rushes out in search of the great physician.

Little Gladys indulges in a game of hide-and-scek with her governess, and, while attempting to cross the road, would have been struck by an automobile but for the heroic act of Frank Morse, who, though knocked unconscious, is but slightly hurt. Governess, girl and the brave man are bundled into the auto and rapidly driven to the doctor's home.

On regaining consciousness, Frank learns that he is in the very home of Dr. Burke, whose child he had saved. The doctor soon hears of the little girl hovering between life and death, and goes to the Morse abode. Here, after twelve hours of work and constant watch, he declares little Nell out of danger and the Morses weep for very joy.

Little Gladys pays frequent visits to little Nell, bringing her dollies, teddy bears and innumerable toys. The two little girls make even the great Doctor Burke share the happiness pervading the Burke and Morse households.

DESPERATE DESMOND ABDUCTS ROSAMOND

Nestor Release, December 9

Claude Eclaire is in a happy frame of mind, not because he has just bidden au revoir to beautiful Rosamond but because he is to see her again soon. Contentedly he stretches himself upon a couch to sleep, perchance to dream. He does dream, and of his beloved one. He is about to embrace her when Desperate Desmond and his minions capture him, carry him to a deserted wharf and leave him securely tied to a post with only his head above the water. When the tide rises, it will be all over with Claude.

Safe at home, Rosamond abandons herself into an easy chair and is soon feasting upon a vision of her hero. But, alas! Desperate Desmond and Gomgotz scale the steep wall of the house, quietly enter through a window, bundle up the sleepy beauty and then all three gain the street by a spectacular descent down the sides of the building. They hasten with the precious burden to an isolated shack, wherein they lock her up for future reference.

Meantime, the rising waters have reached up to Claude's mouth and—a swordfish comes to the rescue by sawing off the cord and our hero swims safely away to the aid of his dear one.

The sweethearts are into each other's arms when the king of villains and his heelers unexpectedly return and again make them prisoners. Rosamond is put under lock and key, while Claude is rushed over to the saw-mill, strapped to the saw-table, and "Saw, you bunk hero, saw!"

The beautiful one, in her dungeon, is hit with a telepathic wavelet; smashes the door into a heap of kindling wood and, gun in hand, saves her noble Claude, who in turn lashes Desmond to the saw-table, bids him a grinding finish, and proceeds to bask in the light of Rosamond's eyes. The Desperate chap, however, is not so easily gotten rid of. He cleverly fools the buzz-saw and vows to get "hunk" on Claude.

STRUCK GOLD

Nestor Release, December 6

After many weary months of hard labor, Ben Dudley had at last struck gold—free gold, which would make little daughter Lucy and himself rich beyond their wildest dreams. But worn out with privation and ceaseless work, and with their grubstake already low, Ben determined to secure help from his friends in an adjoining camp.

Unfortunately, ere they started out, the old man, while showing the map of his mine to Tom Moore, an old friend, had been overheard by the claim-jumpers, Bill and Pete Sloan, who straightway resolved to obtain the map at any cost.

Hurrying along the trail, the two men secreted themselves at a point which they knew the Dudleys must pass. But by the appearance of the Sheriff and his men, and later by John and Roy Stivers coming to the miner's aid, the plans of the claim-jumpers were frustrated. Determined, however, to learn the whereabouts of the mine, as soon as Ben and John with a number of friends, started for the spot, the claim-jumpers, who had also strengthened their party, crept stealthily after them, and when night fell, opened fire, only to be forced to retreat after losing one of their men.

The next morning as Ben's party were finishing breakfast, a half-breed appeared with the terrifying message that a band of outlaws had attacked John's cabin. Leaving two of their men on guard, the others set out with all possible speed for the cabin, only to find on their arrival, the women, for Lucy had remained with John's wife, chatting gayly over their work. The men then realized that it had been merely a means of getting them away from the mine. Sending Roy for the Sheriff, the others hurried back and found, as they had expected, that the claim-jumpers were in possession.

But that night, when Sheriff Raymond and his men arrived, they crept cautiously upon the overhanging rock, and by means of a rope let themselves down to the mine below—a move so unexpected by the enemy that the claim-jumpers were handcuffed and led away 'ere they had time to realize what had happened.

BABY'S CHOICE

Solax Release, December 6

It is said that children are as impressionable as animals. Once they decide on a dislike, it is difficult to shake their position. On the other hand they are always ready to manifest their pleasure and use unique ways of demonstrating their affection.

In this production baby has decided which of the two of her sister's callers is the most eligible. Her decision is final. As soon as she makes up her mind she lays out her plans of attack.

When the suitor who in some way has incurred her displeasure, calls to see her sister, she makes it as hard for him as possible. Indeed, when he is about to leave, she writes in his hat that he is persona non grata, or words to that effect. He tries to do his best by her, but the baby is as relentless as fate.

One day the unfortunate lover calls when the favorite one is on the premises. The favorite is very attentive to the child and allows her to play rough-house with him. When the child spys the ineligible one she makes for him and waylays him to another part of the house. She locks him up in a room and then runs off in delight.

The imprisoned suitor is furious, and becomes incensed when he sees from the window the object of his affections in the embrace of his rival. A counter-plot is prettily interwoven. It shows that the baby's dislikes were well-founded and shows that the man whom she disliked was really a villain. And on the same reel is shown

THE PAPER-MAKING INDUSTRY

Modern methods of paper-making present fine educational opportunities. How many know how paper is made? Have they any idea of the number of processes the wood must undergo before the paper is ready for actual commercial purposes.

The picture shows how Glen Falls has been harnessed for its motive power.

THE LITTLE SHOE

Solax Release, December 8

A little shoe is the means of identifying a girl who had been stolen from her parents by a grief-crazed mother who had lost her own child. Rich and happy parents of a baby girl leave their baby in a carriage on the curb and enter a store to make a small purchase. A sorrow-laden mother, who had just lost her own child, comes along. The child begins to cry and the lady walks over to comfort her. In an absent-minded moment she takes the baby in her arms and carries her off, forgetting temporarily that the baby is not her own.

Seventeen years elapse before the mother and child are reunited. They are brought together in a very natural way. When the baby was stolen the only clue left in her carriage was her little shoe. The woman who had stolen the baby locked up in a small box the child's trinkets together with the other little shoe. These shoes are matched and the identity of the girl is established. A delicate love story runs through the plot. It is full of pathos and some remarkable situations. All is very interestingly worked out.

BUTTONS AND HOOKS

Great Northern Release, December 9.

Mr. Durand, a solicitor, is preparing for his participation in a dinner party. His toilet is almost complete, but the fastening of his collar gives him some trouble. He cannot button it. Bursting into his wife's room, he finds his better half in the clutches of her maid, who is experiencing trouble with the bodice hooks. He promptly annexes Jeannette to his dressing-room. Thither comes the irate Mrs. Durand and a tussle ensues for the possession of the maid. Jeannette is eventually pushed out of the room by her mistress, and in disgust leaves the house. Husband and wife eventually overcome their difficulties, and are on their way to the dinner party. Here hubby is paired off with a charming young damsel, whilst his wife is handed over to the tender mercies of a specimen of humanity whose dial appears to have passed through the perils of a landslide. At table, Mr. Durand showers attentions upon his fair partner, much to the chagrin of his better half, who creates a scene, and the pair eventually leave for home. Here they encounter a repetition of their former difficulties. He will not undo her hooks as she will not unbutton his collar. Hubby repairs to the street and solicits the aid of passersby, but without avail until two young ladies come along. They perform the necessary operation, and the trio go off to a night cafe, where, after refreshing the inner man, they indulge in terpischorean exercise. In the small hours of the morning, Durand repairs to his home and is astonished to find the Life Saving Corps motor car outside his domicile. His wife, as a last resort, has telephoned for their assistance to enable her to remove her apparel. Our familiar friend Smith is at the head of this corps, and his susceptibilities for the morals of his confreres enable him to once more demonstrate his capabilities as the comic member of the company. He is in the midst of his duties as lady's maid when Durand bursts into the room. Explanations follow, and it is made apparent to hubby that 'tis not his to reason why, he's but to do and pay, and after he has satisfied the corps' demands, he and Mrs. Durand are reconciled, and, let us hope, live happily ever after, as the story books say.

WINTER IN SWITZERLAND

This is an exceedingly successful picture of Alpine scenery, taken for the most part from the Via Mala—a road that has been blasted along the mountain sides and passes through the most beautiful and impressive scenery. Snow-bound villages nestle in the valleys, the superb peaks forming a wonderful background.

BEFORE YORKTOWN

Republic Release, Part 1, December 23; Part 2, December 24

Jerome S. Beresford, a lieutenant in His Majesty's army during the Revolution, was a conspicuous figure in the war that made famous the name of Washington. His bravery was lauded so often that both armies spoke with admiration of the young Britisher.

Wounded in a skirmish while far away from headquarters, his comrades ask for assistance at the home of Dr. Adams. Beatrice, the only daughter of the aged doctor, although hating the English, for the sake of humanity permits the English soldiers to bring their wounded leader into her home. In spite of her antipathy, the tender-hearted girl volunteers to act as nurse and in the close companionship of the sick-room, the two enemies fall in love with one another.

Beatrice's young brother, a loyal Colonist, is very much displeased at the sight of a hated Britisher in his home. Lieutenant Beresford, almost in perfect health, is about to return to his army when he receives a visit from Major Fitzgerald, the head of the British army in the vicinity. The major in a pompous and authoritative manner, demands refreshments for himself and soldiers and becomes insulting when the old doctor and his daughter refuse to drink to the health of King George. He insists upon kissing Beatrice, who throws the contents of a wine glass into his face. During his absence from headquarters the plans of the Yorktown fortifications are stolen from his room by Beatrice's young brother, who is seriously wounded while escaping.

After the Britishers leave the home Beatrice finds her brother and receives his dying command to deliver the plans to General Washington. Disguising herself in her brother's clothes, the young girl starts on her perilous undertaking. She is captured and brought before Major Fitzgerald, who recognizes her and demands the kiss she had refused him at her home. In desperation the girl seizes a heavy brass candlestick and knocks the major senseless. She is about to escape through the window when Lieutenant Beresford intercepts her and demands the plans which she reluctantly surrenders, and the lieutenant aids her to escape. Upon regaining consciousness the major sees the open window and the lieutenant leaning from it, and draws his own conclusions. He threatens Beresford with court martial, but is killed by a stray bullet before he can execute his threat.

Lieutenant Beresford is compelled to surrender to Washington, and when Beatrice, who has found protection in Washington's camp, hears of Beresford being a prisoner of war she pleads for his pardon so effectively that General Washington cheerfully grants it and a happy reunion follows. The war is ended, two lovers are made happy and Yorktown becomes a matter of history.

A TRAITOR ON THE STAFF

Champion Release, December 11

Lieutenant Gorman was passionately fond of Alice Rambeau, the daughter of his general. Walter Cranston, however, the handsome young subaltern of the same regiment, had already won that deep favor in the eyes of the sweet-faced Alice, and which favor we denominate—love. Gorman saw the growing intimacy, and looked on with eyes aslant, and curvings of the lips that boded no good to this subordinate.

It came about that the general had decided to promote Cranston for bravery on the field of battle. Gorman was against this—the only officer on the staff to oppose the selection. Shortly after this, while the general and daughter were in deep conversation with Cranston, Gorman managed to secrete a valuable document in the hatband of his rival. This document was missed shortly after, and the general instituted a rigorous search. Everything was knocked topsy-turvy, but to no avail.

Then it was that Lieutenant Gorman threw suspicion on young Cranston, and when the subaltern appeared, Gorman knocked off his hat and thus disclosed the missing paper. But Alice had been in a position to observe the actions of Gorman, unperceived by him. A large mirror in the room had been so situated as to give her this unlooked-for opportunity. Alice then and there denounced Gorman, and he, having been taken to task by the general and latterly by Alice herself, acknowledged his guilt and was led away in disgrace, while the young lieutenant, restored to place and honor, found a recompense in the warm embrace of the woman he loved.

From the start to the finish, the actions of the participants in this photo drama are full of that vitalizing principle which is the result of the greatest mainspring of human action—jealousy, and thus we have a strong martial drama.

THE SAVING OF DAN

Champion Release, December 13

In this story, the moving picture fan will be at sea as to the ending, even though he be generally wise to a picture's conclusion. Here we have just such a construction of plot, that the denoument is as surprising as pleasing.

Ulan Blake is a cowboy with many good qualities, but he has an ungovernable temper, and we find as a result that all his other traits are submerged by his fearful outbreaks of passion, which are injurious to his welfare. Beating his horse one day, because the animal had annoyed him and was now resting, he was surprised by the ranch owner's daughter, who roundly berated him and caused his discharge. Humiliated, he took his leave, vowing dire vengeance.

A little later, fate played into his hands. He was sitting by the side of the road, rolling a cigarette, when the girl came along—all unsuspecting. She was on horseback, but in an instant he had dragged her from the saddle. Her struggles were futile against the powerful efforts of the infuriated cowboy. She was in his power now, and he was resolved to make her pay the full penalty of the deep humiliation she had brought him.

But as the girl prayed to him in her distress, he thought of his sister and his mother, and he drew from his pocket a letter from the former, in which she admonished him to deal with others as he would have her dealt with. A revolution was instantly wrought in his nature. His true manhood asserted itself. He had done more than the conquerors of armies might boast. He had conquered self. Then he led the sorrow-stricken girl back on her way to her friends, and she, seeing the triumph of his better nature, loved him for it; it was the start towards a greater love.

The absence of the girl brought the cowpunchers, led by her father, to the trail. They had found her hat and revolver where the struggle first occurred, and so they suddenly came upon them in a rocky glen as they made their way, and the enraged father shot the kidnapper of his child before she could explain. It then fell to the girl's lot to nurse the now thoroughly repentant cowboy back to life and health. She then crowned him with the mantle of happiness, for she gave herself to him in wedlock. This is the end which you and I would not ordinarily foresee in the beginning.

THE TURN OF THE WHEEL

Reliance Release, December 6

RELIANCE.

James Harrison, seated in his luxurious bachelor apartments, receives a message that his fortune has been swept away in a tight squeeze on Wall Street. Overwhelmed, he writes a farewell letter and takes out his revolver to commit suicide. Brown, a burglar, breaks in at this time and at the point of his pistol relieves Harrison of his watch, wallet, ring, etc. He sees the letter on the table and his inquiries bring forth Harrison's story. Compassion for the man prompts the burglar to return his property, and he then tries to persuade Harrison not to kill himself, but without avail. In despair he overpowers Harrison and ties him firmly to a chair, telling him he will return in the morning, hoping that Harrison will have changed his mind about destroying himself. When Brown comes back he gives Harrison a drink and Harrison tells him he is still of the same mind. At that moment a telegram is received from Harrison's brokers stating that the banks have come to their assistance and that his fortune is saved. The burglar releases him and the two sit down and chat. Harrison discovers that hardship and adversity have driven the man to theft, and he promises him assistance to lead an honest life, which Brown vows to do.

THE LITTLE CHAPERONE

Powers Release, December 12

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS
TRADE MARK

Makes a man feel like a big boob to have his girl's little sister majestically capering around him on every second of his visit, sitting on the sofa when he wants to be spoony and dogging his footsteps at every opportunity. She's not dancing attendance on him, either, mind you, for if that were the case the proffered coins would easily relieve the couple of the curly-headed nuisance; but that is not the case. The little Nemesis has got some "card up her sleeve, and when the couple, in desperation, plan to elope, the chaperonette (copyrighted) is, in the parlance of the day, "on the job." So much so that the sheriff is apprised of the fact, and while he is scratching the moss that covers his brains, in the hope of finding an excuse to interfere in the elopement, it suddenly comes to him in the shape of a document from the authorities of a nearby city.

Then we learn the reason why the kiddie had so persistently dogged sister's beau—it was that indefinable something—intuition. On the same reel:

VIEWS OF GENOA, ITALY

Who hasn't read and dreamed of romantic Genoa? Who has not been thrilled by the tales of weird and grand happenings in the old Italian castles, of the fascinating life 'neath the beating sun that has made "Italian blood" the favorite theme of the poet and the composer? You can almost see it as you read, can't you? But you can really see it all, as in life. That's our release, a series of glorious views.

WHEN HEART WIRES CROSS

Powers Release, December 16

Heart wires are just like electric wires—can't always depend on them. Little Mr. Cupid, the operator, sometimes falls asleep on his job, and then there's real trouble. You'd never expect that there should be any trouble when the parties concerned are two bachelor boys and two sweet young darlings who have sworn never to marry—those kind are supposed not to have any heart wires at all. But it so turns out that Jack and Fred each get sweet on a honey girl, unknown to each other, ditto the girls. Complications arise, from which you'd naturally judge that Operator Cupid's switchboard is the most cantankerous piece of mechanism you ever saw, because the poor bachelor boys almost fall victim to the wiles of each other's girls, and they're both as innocent of any intent as babes. As for that matter, the girls are willing parties, but in their case, too, ignorance is the blister. One of those heart-smashing, breath-grabbing situations is imminent, when the switchboard rights itself again, and there are two bachelor harps and two bachelor girls less in the world; nothing tragic, bless you—just married.

KEEPING MABEL HOME

Majestic Release, December 10

Billy Blake's assiduous courtship of Mabel Martin, a rich young society girl, is brought to a crushing pause by the news that Mabel is to be taken abroad by her parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin have concluded that their daughter is fitted by her beauty and their money to occupy a more exalted position in the social world than can be given her by a simple if hustling young American. Mabel cares for her young hustler, but the trip to London opens up a wonderful vista to her pretty brown eyes and, after all, duchess or countess prefixed to one's name does sound attractive, and "Goodness, think what the girls would say?"

Billy's bitterness is augmented by the manner in which the Martins' haughty English butler ushers him out. "Huh!" he thinks, "that's the kind they breed over there, is it?" and storms home to his lonesome room. A newspaper heading catches his eye, to the effect that the heirs of three of the greatest titles in England are missing. Billy, desperate to "keep Mabel home," conceives a diabolical plot that will accomplish his object and also give a vicious job to the snobbishness of Mabel's parents.

By the aid of a business associate in England and the cables, he convinces the Martins that they have a duke in their midst, and therefore a trip abroad is unnecessary. The butler has ducal honors thrust upon him, and questioning not the source of his good fortunes, his butlership gratefully accepts everything coming to him and reaches for more while the going is good.

Billy's fondest hopes are realized; Mabel's parents try to force the girl to accept the pseudo duke's attentions and the American spirit of scorning to be bossed coming to the surface, the girl takes his amorous lordship into the woods and loses him, picks up the waiting Billy and off they go to—well, where all proper young people should go when they're really, really fond of each other.

In fear and perturbation they repair to the parental roof where, after many weary miles on the hoof, the duke has also arrived, crying aloud at the wrong done him.

A cyclone of fatherly wrath is about to be wreaked upon the youngsters when Billy's last trump opportunely appears, and the parents, aghast at what might have been, gracefully accept their son-in-law. And the duke—alas! To the kitchen for him, where 'tis true he finds some consolation in the caresses of one he spurned in his little week of power.

THE SMOKE OF THE FORTY-FIVE

American Release, December 7

A cattle-rustler's daughter meets the ranger and falls in love with him. She confides her secret to her sister who is in sympathy with her and when her father demands that she marry his lieutenant and places her under restraint to force the marriage, the little sister rides to the ranger and arranges an elopement. They are captured and the revengeful rustlers determine to shoot the ranger. His sweetheart throws herself before her lover and pleads for his life. While this is in progress, the little sister slips away and warns the rangers of their leader's plight.

The crafty father tells the girl that if she will marry the man he has selected they will permit her lover to go free. Refuse, and he will be shot instantly. To save his life, the girl makes a supreme sacrifice and agrees to marry the father's choice. The lover pleads to be shot rather than accept the sacrifice.

In the meantime, the rangers ride to the rescue of their chief. Forcing the girl to make good her promise, the rustlers ride with her to the nearest ministry and hold the ranger until the marriage is solemnized. The rangers then arrive and rescue their leader from the outlaws and in the fight that ensues, the "forty-five" of a ranger speeds the leaden messenger that frees the girl from a distasteful union and returns her to her lover's arms.

A powerful drama, dealing with intense emotions that will grip the interest with the intensity of its portrayal.

THE MAN HUNT

American Release, December 11

Pursued by the sheriff's posse, the outlaw seeks refuge at the home of a young ranchman. The ranchman's wife conceals him from his pursuers and when they are gone she makes him promise to lead an honest life. The influence of womanly sympathy causes the outlaw to reform, and a year later he is leading an exemplary life and is a member of the rangers' organization.

The woman's life at the ranch becomes more and more lonely, as her husband's duties take him away for weeks at a time, and she hungers for romance. A stranger comes to her home, and in her troubled state of mind it is easy for him to convince her that she is abused and neglected and that her husband no longer loves her. He persuades her to elope, and they make hurried preparations for departure.

In the meantime the ranger receives a warrant for the arrest of an outlaw, and the trail leads to the woman's home. He finds his man in the person of the woman's tempter and places him under arrest. He recalls to the woman what part she played in his own reformation, and when the husband returns he forgives his frivolous wife and a close understanding is reached after years of misunderstanding.

THERE FELL A FLOWER

Eclair Release, December 7

Her mother came to spend a fortnight and her husband was compelled to endure almost constant fits of temper and the daily berating usually devoted to noble man by the unconquerable mother-in-law.

At a soiree, given by the Governor, this same fiery feminine was caught making eyes at a sleek, well-groomed old gentleman, and who should interrupt their subsequent tete-a-tete but daughter's husband, who brazenly suggested it was time to go home.

The young man realized his error the following day when a peace offering, in the shape of a fine bouquet of roses, was forthwith hurled from the window by the vigorous mother-in-law.

An innocent passerby receives the basket and its contents exactly on his head, thereby arousing his anger to such a point that he quickly mounts the stairway and rings a bell on the first landing. Mother-in-law alone dares to face the sputtering man outside while the rest of the household await developments.

To their amazement they hear no dispute; only regrets and mutual congratulations. Reassured, husband and wife quietly steal into the room and find the sleek gentleman of the soiree clasping in his arms the once-time woman of trouble but now transformed into a harmless and much-loved "tootsie-wootsie." On the same reel:

MANNERS AND TRADITIONS OF PIERMONT

Depicting Travel in Italy

The spectator is taken on an interesting journey through Italy's most unique atmosphere. Glimpses of mountain life may be seen then through a typical village street with its odd types in close proximity.

An unique Harvest Home is shown, contrasting strongly with our American ideas of our native farm dwellings. We hurry along to a military fete, an annual event in the section, and which the inhabitants for miles around are wont to attend.

One is pleased with this picture on account of the art photography and scenic splendor.

HER ONE DAY'S DREAM

Eclair Release, December 14

'Mid sunshine and flowers, the tragic love of a dainty Japanese maiden for an impulsive American artist and the terrible sacrifice she made when she found this love denied her is told in a succession of wondrous scenes, beautiful in the photographic vale and strong in plot and action.

The ever-flawless camera manipulation, for which Eclair is noted, makes this offering a vluable addition to any program.

THE MEASURE OF A MAN

Rex Release, December 6

Fate is a great kidder. It's the greatest practical joker the human race, which comprises you and ourselves and all our other neighbors on this old mud-ball of an earth, ever knew. For instance, we can't stand prosperity, and we can't bear poverty. We're never happy when we ought to be, and we can't endure misery and can never get used to hardships. And say—it's the only puzzle that plays a continuous performance; it's the everlasting problem, the eternal what-is-it? Yes, Fate is a merry jester, but a grim humorist at that.

Jack Fuller and his sweetheart, Bird, go off for a jaunt through the woods. They sit down on a rock to—well, there's no use telling on them, but—say, you're not old enough to have forgotten. They are so absorbed in their—now, never mind—that it is some time after the actual deed that Bird discovers the theft of her purse. In the distance the thief's figure looms up, and Jack goes off in pursuit.

For a long time Bird waits for the return of her lover. At last she determines to go home, thinking he has lost his way and would return home alone. She finds her way out to the clearing and suddenly remembers that she has no car-fare. She is in despair over her dilemma, and her face clearly shows her distress. Fred Barton, a fashionable clubman, passing by, notes her worried look, and volunteers his assistance. His charm, his polish, his suave manner, conquer her shyness. She tells him of her predicament. He invites her to his home, nearby, for rest and refreshment, and Bird, at first reluctant, is again overpowered by his personality. She accepts.

She comes to a mansion and Bird, humble shopgirl, is awed at the evidences of wealth and refinement. She contrasts the elegance, the gilt and velvet to the poverty of her own squalid home. She compares the handsome, cultured scion of wealth to Jack, rough, poor and unlearned, and the seed of discontent is sown to reap the wild harvest of regret.

He takes her home in his automobile and makes another appointment with her. Jack, who had returned with the purse to find her not yet home, is waiting, anxious for her welfare. Her attitude toward him is strange, strained; he feels an unknown doubt, a deep pang—and wonders.

In the days that follow Jack notices and divines. Broken-hearted, his dream of a summer day shattered, he enters the army.

And the woman—she continues to meet her Prince Charming until he begins to neglect her. Puzzled, pained, she goes to his grounds, and lurking in the shadows, sees him leave the house with another woman—his wife. Disillusioned, she goes her own lone way in sorrow and remorse.

How does it end? Just as we'd all like it to. Five years later she again meets Jack, and the love of the summer day years before is reborn, to live and last through the springs and summers and autumns of many, many years, to the gray of life and the snows of December.

JUST IN TIME FOR DINNER

Comet Release, December 15

War has called John Bartlett to the front. He is the son of an aged couple who has spent all their years on the farm. John has a wife and child, and his leave-taking from his parents and family is not without its tinge of pathos. Before he departs, John calls at the office of Ephraim Fox, the village lawyer. Bartlett tells him that he is about to join the army and that he wishes to pay off the mortgage on the farm, but desires it to be a Christmas present for the old folks. Bartlett receives a receipt for the money and with Fox's promise that he will attend to the matter, goes to face the enemy.

A month later Christmastide arrives. Everyone in the Bartlett household seems to be happy. Soon a cloud of gloom shadows their bliss in the form of a newspaper account of the death of John while leading a charge against the Spaniards near Santiago. Fox, who is a sort of Uriah Heep character, in all humbleness calls at the Bartlett home with expressions of sympathy. No one knows of the compact between himself and John, and now that the boy is dead there is no need of making John's surprise public. The mortgage is due and there is only one alternative—it has to be either paid or the old folks must be cast adrift along with their son's wife and child. But there might be a way, Fox suggests. If John's wife, Mary, will marry him he will call the mortgage off and permit all hands to remain. Mary asks time to consider. It is now Christmas morning. Fox calls for Mary's answer. She repulses him and the family are about to be dispossessed when John, who has not been killed as erroneously reported, arrives on the scene. He takes the situation in at a glance, exposes Fox's perfidy, demands the mortgage and orders the scheming and unscrupulous lawyer out of the house. There is naturally a general rejoicing and John good-naturedly reminds his dear ones that he is very hungry and just in time for that much-awaited dinner. It is needless to say that it is forthwith served.

THE MAN IN THE AUTO

Lux Release, December 8

Mr. Moran had the misfortune to cross some dangerous characters. They therefore wrote him a threatening letter informing him that unless he were prepared to hand over the sum of five thousand dollars, they would take revenge upon his wife and child. The chief of the police advises him to take his wife and child away to a place of safety. Mr. Moran placed them in charge of his trusted chauffeur, who drove them away into the country. The desperadoes heard of their intended departure, and an exciting scene follows when the chauffeur is shot down and the car goes madly careening on without the man at the wheel. The chauffeur is taken to a cottage from which he makes his escape. In spite of a severe wound he manages to make his way back home and to set the police upon the trail of the men, who are captured after an exciting struggle. Meanwhile the car is stopped by some other automobilists before it comes to a disastrous end. Thus the desperadoes are arrested, and all is set right through the brave conduct of the man in the auto. On the same reel:

THE ADVENTURES OF AN AMATEUR HYPNOTIST

A smart young man is invited to display his skill as a hypnotist at a party. He manages to work the influence until he meets a charming young lady who is also a hypnotist. Their powers over other people clash when they meet, and thus instead of exercising an attraction over each other, they are unable to get as near to each other as they would like. The situation becomes serious, as they have fallen in love, but of course, love-making is out of the question when the lovers are unable to approach each other. The spell is at last broken by a professional hypnotist, who hypnotizes them both. Under the spell they are again able to act normally, thus things are set right once more. Take heed ye amateur dabblers in mesmerism, least ye bungle things slightly and meet a similar fate.

THE UPS AND DOWNS OF RAFFERTY

Comet Release, December 11

Pat Rafferty is a ubiquitous and independent Irishman. Just because it is six o'clock and the union insists that it is imeprative to stop work at that hour, Pat refuses to carry the hod any further, descends the ladder and quits work for the day. He is discharged by the foreman.

Then Pat gets a job as bartender. He fails to ring up the requisite amount of purchase on the cash register, is discovered by the proprietor, who makes charges of dishonesty against him and has him arrested. At the station house the ward boss intercedes for Pat, who is immediately vindicated and appointed policeman then and there. Pat flourishes his club, displays his badge of authority and struts out on his beat, monarch of all he surveys. He meets Bridget, maid-of-all-work, employed by a wealthy family in the neighborhood. He makes love to her and she reciprocates by inviting him to a big spread which she has prepared for him. Pat divests himself of his helmet, coat and club and makes himself thoroughly at home. A burglar enters and attempts to rob a huge safe. Pat and Bridget are scared and hide. Pat eventually musters sufficient courage to telephone to police headquarters. In the meantime the burglar dons Pat's helmet, coat, and taking his club, marches off. When the police arrive Pat and Bridget are kneeling before the safe in the attitude of guarding it. The police mistake Pat for the burglar and haul him to the station house. The fake burglarcop, anticipating Pat, is on hand to press the charge against him. The lieutenant, admiring the burglar's nerve in bearding the lion in his den, appoints the burglar as policeman in Pat's place and Rafferty once more resumes the job of carrying the hod.

Data from Manufacturers' List of Releases

MEMBERS OF SALES CO.

AMBROSIO

(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Oct. 11—The Little Chimney Sweeper.....
Oct. 14—Tweedledum's Monkey .....
Oct. 14—One of Tweedledum's Tricks (Com.)
Oct. 18—The Conversion of St. Anthony....
Oct. 25—Salambo .....
Nov. 1—Judas (Dr.) .....
Nov. 8—Dolly's Doll .....
Nov. 8—Tweedledum's Motor Car.....
Nov. 15—The Convict's Song (Dr.).....
Nov. 22—The Golden Wedding.....
Nov. 29—The Little Duke.....

AMERICAN

Oct. 16—Three Daughters of the West (Dr.) 850
Oct. 16—The Caves of LaJolla (Sc.)..... 150
Oct. 19—The Lonely Range (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—The Horse Thief's Bigamy (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 26—The Trail of the Eucalyptus (Dr.).1000
Oct. 30—The Stronger Man (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—The Water War (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 6—The Three Shell Game (W. Dr.)..1000
Nov. 9—The Mexican (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 13—The Eastern Cowboy (W. Com.)..1000
Nov. 16—The Way of the West (Com.).....1000
Nov. 20—The Test (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 23—The Master of the Vineyard.....
Nov. 27—Jolly Bill of the Rollicking R.....
Nov. 30—The Sheriff's Sisters.....
Dec. 4—The Angel of Paradise Ranch (Dr.).1000

CHAMPION

Nov. 1—The Cowboy's Pies..... 950
Nov. 6—Folks of Old Virginia..... 950
Nov. 8—The Moonshiner's Trail..... 950
Nov. 13—The Redemption of a Coward..... 950
Nov. 15—The Passing of Sal..... 950
Nov. 20—National Guardsmen and Regulars at Fort Riley, Kansas (Top.)... 950
Nov. 22—When the Sheriff Got His Man (Dr.) 950
Nov. 27—The Mother Goose Series (1st Reel) 950
Nov. 29—The Two Browns..... 950
Dec. 4—Yankee Doodle and Our Navy.....
Dec. 6—The Indian Fortune Teller (Dr.).. 950
Dec. 11—A Traitor on the Staff..... 950
Dec. 13—The Saving of Dan..... 950

COMET

Nov. 20—The Office Boy's Dream (Com.)... 960
Nov. 24—The Diamond Locket (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 27—Grandma's Toothache (Com.)..... 955
Dec. 1—The Late Mrs. Early (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 4—Billy's Letters (Com.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Dead Canary (Dr.).....1000

ECLAIR

Nov. 6—Life Under the Sea (Educational)..
Nov. 13—The Legend of the Eagle (Dr.).... 925
Nov. 21—Hands Across the Sea.....
Nov. 23—Portuguese Centaurs (Mil.)..... 600
Nov. 23—The Automatic Lighter (Com.).... 400
Nov. 28—Miss Masquerader (Com.).....1000
Nov. 30—The Five Daughters of Mr. Durand (Com.) .....
Nov. 30—Gussy's Congratulations (Com.)...
Dec. 5—In Humanity's Cause (Dr.).....
Dec. 7—There Fell a Flower (Com.)..... 660
Dec. 7—Manners and Traditions of Piemont (Edu.) 660
Dec. 12—The Musician's Daughter.....
Dec. 14—Her One Day's Dream.....

GREAT NORTHERN

Sept. 16—The Conspirators (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—Caught in His Own Net (Dr.)....
Sept. 30—The Conspirators (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—The White Tulip (Com.).....
Oct. 7—Barcelona (Scenic) .....
Oct. 14—Secret of the Underground Passage (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—His Fidelity Investigated (Com.)..
Oct. 28—The Vicissitudes of Fate (Dr.)....
Nov. 4—The Actor as Soldier (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Woman's Wit (Com.).....
Nov. 18—A Rendezvous in Hyde Park (Com. Dr.) .....
Nov. 18—High Scotland (Scenic).....
Nov. 25—The Theft of Mona Lisa (Com.)..
Dec. 2—The Penalty of Her Ambition (Dr.)

IMP

Sept. 25—Through the Dells of the Wisconsin in a Motor Boat (Sc.)..... 250
Sept. 28—'Tween Two Loves (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 2—The Rose's Story (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—Through the Air (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 9—The Sentinel Asleep.....
Oct. 12—The Better Way.....
Oct. 16—Uncle Pete's Ruse.....
Oct. 19—The Aggressor .....
Oct. 23—The Biting Business.....
Oct. 26—The Waif .....
Oct. 30—His Dress Shirt.....
Oct. 30—A Few Minutes with Steeplejack Lindholm .....
Nov. 2—King, the Detective.....
Nov. 6—Waiting at the Church (Com.)...1000
Nov. 9—The Wife's Awakening (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 13—The Fallin' Out.....
Nov. 16—Breaking the Seventh Commandment
Nov. 20—From the Bottom of the Sea.....
Nov. 23—Executive Clemency .....
Nov. 27—Uncle's Visit .....
Nov. 30—Over the Hills.....
Dec. 2—Percy the Masher (Com.)..... 750
Dec. 2—President Taft Dedicating the Naval Training Station at Chicago, Ill. 350
Dec. 4—The Dumb Messenger (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 7—Tony and the Stork.....1000

ITALA

Aug. 19—Foolshead—Manikin .....
Aug. 19—The Blunt Sword.....
Aug. 24—Modern School of Italian Cavalry..
Aug. 26—Foolshead—Chauffeur .....
Aug. 26—For a Straw.....
Sept. 2—Clio and Phyletes.....
Sept. 7—The Infinitive Ways of Providence (Dr.) .....
Sept. 9—Foolshead Hypnotizer (Com.).....
Sept. 9—Toto Has a Purse.....
Sept. 16—The Horse of the Regiment (Com.)
Sept. 16—Foolshead Charges Himself with Removal (Com.) .....
Sept. 23—The Mask of the Red Death.....
Sept. 23—The Hornet .....
Oct. 7—Foolshead a Model Guest.....
Oct. 21—Foolshead Quarrels Witb His Sweetheart .....
Oct. 28—Toto and the Dummy (Com.).....
Oct. 28—The Rearing of Pheasants (Dr.)..
Nov. 4—Foolshead's Holiday (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Woman's Wit (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Victim of Competition.....
Nov. 28—Second Dr. Crippen.....

LUX

By Prieur.

Oct. 6—Bill Has a Bath (Com.)..... 452
Oct. 6—Neighbors (Com.) 488
Oct. 13—A Dog in a Coiner's Den (Dr.).... 593
Oct. 13—Bill, Police Cyclist (Com.)..... 390
Oct. 20—Bill Pays His Debts (Com.)..... 442
Oct. 20—Henpecked Bertie Goes Fishing (Com.) 514
Oct. 27—Bill, His Wife and the Water (Com.) 455
Oct. 27—Bertie and His Rivals (Com.)..... 472
Nov. 3—Bill and the Bear (Com.)..... 554
Nov. 3—Tommy's Camera (Com.)..... 393
Nov. 10—Bill Taken for a Ghost (Com.)..... 426
Nov. 10—The Diversions of a Nursemaid (Com.) 495
Nov. 17—Saas Grund, a Village in the Alps (Sc.) 295
Nov. 17—The Mystery of Beaufort Grange (Dr.) 695
Nov. 24—Bill and Bertie Get Married (Com.) 325
Nov. 24—A Passing Cloud (Dr.)..... 658

MAJESTIC

Dec. 3—Love Heeds not Showers (Com.)...
Dec. 10—The Ultimate End (Dr.).....
Dec. 17—Little Red Driving Hood.....
Dec. 24—The Ultimate End (Dr.).....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Nov. 4—Mutt and Jeff and the Lady Stenographer (Com.) .....
Nov. 8—A True Westerner (Dr.).....
Nov. 11—Desperate Desmond Almost Succeeds
Nov. 18—Mutt and Jeff and the Unlucky Stars (Com.) .....
Nov. 15—The White Medicine Man (Dr.)..
Nov. 18—That Kid from the East (Com.)...
Nov. 20—His Vacation .....
Nov. 22—The Cowboy Pugilist (W. Dr.)....
Nov. 25—Desperate Desmond Pursued by Claude Eclaire (Com. Dr.).....
Nov. 27—Happy Hobo's Help.....
Nov. 29—When the West Was Wild.....
Dec. 2—Western Feud .....
Dec. 2—Mutt and Jeff and the Scheme that Failed .....
Dec. 6—Struck Gold (Dr.).....
Dec. 9—Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond (Com. Dr.).....

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

("Bison")

Oct. 17—A Western Bride.....
Oct. 20—A Warrior's Treachery.....
Oct. 24—A Noble Red Man.....
Oct. 27—An Indian Hero.....
Oct. 31—The Cattlemen's War.....
Nov. 3—A Young Squaw's Bravery.....
Nov. 7—A Race for a Bride.....
Nov. 10—Wenona's Broken Promise.....
Nov. 14—The Winning of Wonega.....
Nov. 17—The Ranchman's Mother-in-Law (Com. Dr.) .....
Nov. 21—The Broken Trap.....
Nov. 24—White Fawn's Escape.....
Nov. 24—A Bad Man.....
Nov. 28—A Western One-Night Stand.....
Dec. 1—An Easterner's Peril.....
Dec. 5—The Empty Tepee.....
Dec. 8—A Range Romance.....

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Oct. 21—The Awakening of John Clark (Dr.) .....
Oct. 24—John Baxter's Ward (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—The Little Brown Calf (Dr.).....
Oct. 28—The Revenue Officer's Last Case (Dr.) .....
Oct. 31—Apples and Destiny (Com.).....
Oct. 31—The Progressive Book Agent (Com.)
Nov. 4—The Pride of the West (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—Mobilization of tbe American Fleet
Nov. 11—For the Tribe (Dr.).....
Nov. 14—When First We Met (Dr.).....
Nov. 14—The Tell-Tale Parasol (Com.).....
Nov. 18—The Old Leader (Dr.).....
Nov. 21—Rivals (Com.) .....
Nov. 21—Views of Montserrat, Italy (Sc.)..
Nov. 25—Jug o' Rum (Dr.).....
Nov. 28—Too Much Injun (Com.).....
Nov. 28—The Lineman and tbe Girl.....
Dec. 2—The Wanderer's Return (Dr.).....
Dec. 2—Views of Lake Como (Scenic).....
Dec. 5—The Little Thief (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 5—The Secret Order of Horns (Com.)
Dec. 9—Two Men and Girl (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Nov. 15—The Moonshiners .....
Nov. 18—The Injustice of Man.....
Nov. 22—Helpless Man .....
Nov. 25—A Daughter of Italy.....
Nov. 29—Happy Thanksgiving .....
Dec. 2—The Poison Cup.....
Dec. 6—The Turn of the Wheel.....
Dec. 9—The Turnstile .....
Dec. 13—Love and Charity.....

REPUBLIC

Dec. 5—Auto Races .....
Dec. 16—Six Nations (Part I) .....
Dec. 17—Six Nations (Part II) .....
Dec. 23—Before Yorktown (Part I) .....
Dec. 24—Before Yorktown (Part II) .....

REX

Oct. 5—Lost Illusions (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Chasing a Rainbow.....
Oct. 19—Her Sister .....
Oct. 26—A Breach of Faith (Dr.).....
Nov. 2—The Tale of a Cat.....
Nov. 9—Saints and Sinners.....
Nov. 16—The Return .....
Nov. 23—The Price (Dr.).....
Nov. 30—The Strangers .....

SOLAX COMPANY

Nov. 3—A Heroine of the Revolution (Dr.)
Nov. 8—An Interrupted Elopement (Com.).
Nov. 10—Grandmother Love (Dr.).....
Nov. 15—Baby Needs Medicine (Com.).....
Nov. 17—Only a Squaw (Dr.).....
Nov. 22—Husbands Wanted (Com.).....
Nov. 24—The Will of Providence (Com. Dr.)
Nov. 29—A Troublesome Picture (Com.)....
Nov. 29—Life on Board a Battleship (Com.)
Dec. 1—A Revolutionary Romance (Mil.)..

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Oct. 13—The Tempter and Dan Cupid (Dr.)
Oct. 17—The Early Life of David Copperfield
Oct. 24—Little Em'ly and David Copperfield
Oct. 31—The Loves of David Copperfield...
Oct. 20—The Satyr and the Lady (Dr.).....
Oct. 27—The Jewels of Allah (Dr.).....
Nov. 3—Their Burglar .....
Nov. 7—The Missing Heir (Dr.).....
Nov. 10—The Last of the Mohicans (Dr.)...
Nov. 14—The Higher—the Fewer (Com.)..
Nov. 17—A Mother's Faith (Dr.).....
Nov. 21—A Master of Millions.....
Nov. 24—The Baseball Bug (Com. Dr.).....
Nov. 28—The Tempest (Dr.).....
Dec. 1—Beneath the Veil (Dr.).....
Dec. 5—The Newsy and the Tramp.....
Dec. 8—Brother Bob's Baby (Com.).....
Dec. 12—The Lady from the Sea.....

YANKEE FILM COMPANY

Sept. 15—Woman .....
Sept. 18—The Star Reporter.....
Sept. 22—The Girl and the Chauffeur (Dr.)..
Sept. 25—For the Wearing of the Green (Dr.)
Sept. 29—Man (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—She Never Knew (Dr.).....
Oct. 6—The Goose Girl (Dr.).....
Oct. 9—His Second Wife.....
Oct. 13—Society Hobos .....
Oct. 16—The Lost Handkerchief (Com.).....
Oct. 20—The Man Who Came Back (Dr.)..
Oct. 23—The Drummer Boy of Shiloh (Dr.)
Oct. 27—Flower of the Forest (Dr.).....
Oct. 30—The Van Osten Jewels (Dr.).....
Nov. 3—At Daisy Farm (Dr.).....
Nov. 6—A Coward's Regeneration (Dr.).....
Nov. 10—He Didn't Like the Tune (Com.).
Nov. 13—Into the Light (Dr.).....
Nov. 17—The Two Rooms (Dr.).....
Nov. 21—A Master of Millions.....
Nov. 24—The Baseball Bug (Com. Dr.).....
Nov. 28—The Tempest (Dr.).....
Dec. 1—Beneath the Veil (Dr.).....

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Nov. 16—Through Darkened Vales (Dr.).... Feet 990
Nov. 20—The Miser's Heart (Dr.).....
Nov. 23—Resourceful Lovers (Com. Dr.)....
Nov. 23—Her Mother Interferes (Com.)....
Nov. 27—Sunshine Through the Dark .(Dr.)
Nov. 30—A Woman Scorned (Dr.).....
Dec. 4—Why He Gave Up (Com.).....
Dec. 4—Ahe Gets Even with Father (Com.)
Dec. 7—The Failure (Dr.).....

EDISON

Nov. 17—The Ghost's Warning (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 18—The Story of the Indian Ledge (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 21—Life in the United States Army...1000
Nov. 22—The Bosun's Watch (Com.).....1000
Nov. 24—Home (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 25—A Perilous Ride (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 28—The Lure of the City (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 29—The Troubles of a Butler (Com.)..1000
Dec. 1—Pull for the Shore, Sailor (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 2—A Man for All That (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 5—The Awakening of John Bond (Dr.).1000
Dec. 6—John Brown's Heir (Com.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Heart of Nichette (Dr.)..... 985
Dec. 9—The Daisy Cowhoys (Com.)..... 990
Dec. 12—Buckskin Jack, the Earl of Glenmore (Dr.) 1000
Dec. 13—An International Heart-Breaker (Com.) 700
Dec. 13—Eskimos in Lahrador..... 300
Dec. 15—Brocton Fair and Horse Show..... 990

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Nov. 16—President Taft at San Francisco..1000
Nov. 17—The Point of View (Com.).....
Nov. 17—Excess Baggage (Com.).....1000
Nov. 18—The Cattle Rustler's Father (W. Dr.) 1000
Nov. 21—Too Much Turkey (Com.).....1000
Nov. 23—Old Fidelity (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 24—At the Stroke of Twelve (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 25—The Desert Claim (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 28—A Football Hero (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 30—Little Red Riding Hood (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 30—'Twas Ever Thus (Com.).....1000
Dec. 1—The Quinceville Raffle (Com.).....1000
Dec. 2—The Mountain Law (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 5—The Madman (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 7—The Long Strike (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 8—Getting Even with Emily (Com.)..
Dec. 8—Stray Bullets (Com.).....1000
Dec. 9—A Frontier Doctor (W. Dr.).....1000

GAUMONT
G. Kleine

Nov. 11—Manresa, a Spanish Town (Travel) 200
Nov. 14—Jimmie and His Country Uncle (Com.) 820
Nov. 14—The Outskirts of Paris (Scenic).. 164
Nov. 18—The Reckoning (Dr.)..... 875
Nov. 18—A Trip to Saxony..... 150
Nov. 21—The Sealed Confession (Dr.)..... 900
Nov. 21—A Stone Quarry in Saxony..... 75
Nov. 25—The Escape from the Dungeon (Dr.) 825
Nov. 25—Cave Homes in the Canary Isles.. 180
Nov. 28—A Busy Cupid..... 758
Nov. 28—Review of the Austrian Army..... 232
Dec. 2—The Promoter (Dr.).....1140
Dec. 5—Jimmie Tricks the Landlady (Com.) 475
Dec. 5—The Challenge (Dr.)..... 525
Dec. 9—Camoens, the Portuguese Shakespeare (Dr.) 610
Dec. 9—Important Scenes in Paris, France (Travel) 320
Dec. 12—Heroism (Dr.) 610
Dec. 12—Arabian Customs (Ind.)..... 366
Dec. 16—A Queen's Treachery (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 19—Through the Enemy's Lines (Dr.). 985

KALEM CO.

Nov. 20—Dan, the Lighthouse Keeper (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 22—How Texas Got Left (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 24—The Temptation of Rodney Vane (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 27—The American Insurrecto (Dr.)...
Nov. 29—Among the Irish Fisher Folk (Edu.)
Nov. 29—The Franciscan Friars of Killarney, Ireland (Top.) .....
Dec. 1—How Betty Captured the Outlaw (Com.) .....
Dec. 1—A Glimpse Into the Yellowstone National Park (Sc.).....
Dec. 4—Arrah-Na-Pogue (3 reels) (Dr.)...3000
Dec. 6—The Long Arm of the Law (Dr.)..1000
Dec. 8—Too Much Realism (Com.).....1000

LUBIN

Nov. 16—A Newshoy's Luck (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 18—A Romance of the '60s (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 20—My Brother Agostino (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 22—The Ranchman's Daughter (Dr.)...1000
Nov. 23—A Blind Deception (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 25—His Brother's Double (Com.).....1000
Nov. 27—The Man in the Taxi (Com. Dr.).1000
Nov. 29—An Actor in a New Rôle (Com.).. 600
Nov. 29—The Crah Industry (Ind.)..... 400
Nov. 30—A Nicotine Conspiracy (Com.)....1000
Dec. 2—Western Chivalry (Com. Dr.).....1000
Dec. 4—A Head for Business (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 6—Sins of the Father (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 7—Love's Lahor Lost (Com.).....1000
Dec. 9—The Teamster (Dr.).....1000

G. MELIES.

Nov. 2—Mexican as It Is Spoken (Com.).. 590
Nov. 9—The Spur of Necessity (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 16—The Miser Miner (Com. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 23—An Oil Country Romance (Dr.)...1000
Nov. 30—The Reason Why (Com.).....1000
Dec. 7—A Western Girl (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 14—The Better Man (Com. Dr.).....1000

PATHE FRERES

Nov. 20—Pathe's Weekly .....
Nov. 21—Cain and Ahel.....
Nov. 21—A Grouch Cure (Com.).....
Nov. 22—A Pinch of Snuff (Com.).....
Nov. 22—The Bari Tribe (Sc.).....
Nov. 23—Cowhoy Life .....
Nov. 23—The Kioday Equilihrists.....
Nov. 24—Two Daughters of Havana (Dr.)..
Nov. 24—Comic New Year Games in Singapore .....
Nov. 25—The Lost Necklace (Dr.).....
Nov. 27—Pathe's Weekly No. 48.....
Nov. 28—Romance of the Mummy (Dr.)....
Nov. 28—Picturesque Hungary (Scenic).....
Nov. 29—The Incendiary Indians (Dr.).....
Nov. 29—Glimpses of San Francisco (Scenic)
Nov. 30—Oh! What a Thanksgiving Day (Com.) .....
Nov. 30—A Life Saving School in Australia (Scenic) .....
Dec. 1—Rover is Jealous (Dr.).....
Dec. 1—Capturing Polar Bear Cuhs (Scenic)
Dec. 1—Examination of the Stomach hy the X Rays (Edu.).....
Dec. 2—A Bear Hunt Romance (Dr.).....
Dec. 4—Pathe's Weekly No. 49 .....
Dec. 5—The Secret of the Confessional (Dr.)
Dec. 6—Hoho Luck (Com.).....
Dec. 6—Fishing in the Ceram Islands (Sc.)
Dec. 7—The Poisoned Arrow (Dr.).....
Dec. 7—French Cuirassier Manoeuvres (Sc.)
Dec. 8—Eva's Faithful Furniture (Com.)..
Dec. 8—Gathering and Preparing Cocoanuts in the Philippines (Scenic).....
Dec. 9—Her Little Slipper (Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Pathe's Weekly No. 50.....
Dec. 12—Youth Versus Age.....
Dec. 12—Small Trades in Malacca (Scenic)..
Dec. 13—The Flower Girl of Las Palmas (Dr.) .....
Dec. 14—An Episode of the Early Mormon Days (Dr.) .....
Dec. 14—The Magic Suit Case.....
Dec. 15—In the Grip of Alcohol (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—A Mother's Remorse (Dr.).....

SELIG

Nov. 16—The New Superintendent (Dr.)...1000
Nov. 17—A Spanish Wooing (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 20—The Convert of San Clemente (Dr.).1000
Nov. 21—The Night Herder (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 23—Blackbeard (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 24—Getting Married (Com.)..... 750
Nov. 24—In Japan (Edu.)..... 250
Nov. 27—The Right Name, but the Wrong Man (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 28—The Telltale Knife (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 30—An Evil Power (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 1—In Japan (Scenic)..... 500
Dec. 1—Seeing Cincinnati (Scenic)..... 500
Dec. 4—A Diamond in the Rough (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 5—A Frontier Girl's Courage (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 7—The Maid at the Helm (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Plumher (Com.)..... 600
Dec. 8—A Day with a Circus..... 400

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

Oct. 4—A Jealous Wife (Com.)..... 338
Oct. 4—The Grand Chartreuse (Trav.).... 292
Oct. 4—Ezra and the Fortune Teller (Com.) 348
Oct. 11—Pardoned hy the Governor (Dr.).. 646
Oct. 11—Making Cheddar Cheese (Ind.)... 342
Oct. 18—Ordered to Move On (Dr.)..... 605
Oct. 18—Madeira, Portugal (Travel)..... 385
Oct. 25—A Woman's Slave (Dr.)..... 950
Nov. 1—Trapped (Dr.) 975
Nov. 8—An Eye for an Eye (His. Dr.)....1000
Nov. 15—The Hindu Jewel Mystery (Dr.)..1015
Nov. 22—Guy Fawkes (Dr.).....1010
Nov. 29—The Mysterious Stranger (Dr.).... 610
Nov. 29—Salt Industry in Sicily..... 372
Dec. 6—The Luckless Banker (Dr.).....1002
Dec. 13—The Tragedy of Old Age (Dr.)... 798
Dec. 13—Harhor of Marseilles, France (Sc.) 215
Dec. 20—The Miracle (Dr.).....1040

VITAGRAPH

Nov. 13—Suffer Little Children (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 14—The Girl and the Sheriff (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 15—Their Charming Mamma (Com. Dr.) 1000
Nov. 17—The Little Spy (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 18—Vitagraph Monthly of Current Events 1000
Nov. 20—Heroes of the Mutiny (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 21—Wistaria (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 22—The Half-Breed's Daughter (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 24—An Innocent Burglar (Com.).....1000
Nov. 25—The Life Boat (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 28—The Freshet 1000
Nov. 29—The Voiceless Message.....1000
Dec. 1—The Last Cent (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 2—The Husking Bee (Com.).....1000
Dec. 4—Saving the Special (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 5—The Hypnotist (Com.).....1000
Dec. 5—A Slight Mistake (Com.).....1000
Dec. 6—The Black Chasm (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Sick Man from the East (Dr.).1000
Dec. 9—His Wife's Secret (Dr.).....1000

STATE RIGHTS! TERRITORY RIGHTS!

Biggest opportunity in years. Men are making a mint of money in the state rights business. We propose to supply them with the gigantic three and four reel productions. Our first two releases:

LOVE AND AVIATION

A thrilling, dramatic story with spectacular aerial feats by a noted French aviator.

ZIGOMAR

Sensational drama, depicting the adventures of a noted European criminal. Absolute limit of realism.

Each subject in three reels, copyrighted and passed by censorship board.
WRITE FOR BOOKLETS FREE. NEW FEATURES COMING.
Our subjects may be seen in our branch office at Chicago, Delaware Bldg., Randolph and Dearborn Streets, or at Cleveland.

THE FEATURE & EDUCATIONAL FILM CO., 710 Columbia Building, CLEVELAND

Look out for "MOVING PICTURE TALES"—Early in December

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

Our price is right and the service is right, that's why you ought to write right now for our Film List.

Two Reels, 6 times per week.....$14.00
Two Reels, 7 times per week..... 15.00
Three Reels, 6 times per week..... 16.00
Three Reels, 7 times per week..... 17.00

NATIONAL FILM BROKERS :: 186 N. LaSalle St., Chicago

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

STATE YOUR WANTS.
We'll make the RIGHT PRICE and give the RIGHT SERVICE.
Have little used Powers No. 6 fitted with new 1912 Model Motiograph Lamp House to sell. Low price.
BARGAINS IN TICKETS AND CARBONS.
ALL KINDS OF MACHINES AND SUPPLIES.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY CO. :: 109 N. Dearborn St., Chicago

China to the Front

THEATRES

If you wish to draw the crowds order a selection of our new Chinese slides, all from direct photographs. We have over 250 to select from at $4.00 per dozen. High-class coloring. Send for list of this and other subjects. 30,000 slides always in stock.

Riley Optical Instrument Co.
3 EAST 14th ST., NEW YORK CITY

MOTION PICTURE MACHINE BARGAINS

Powers Cameragraph No. 5 only $110. Model B Edison Kinetoscope, cost $225, for $140. Standard, cost $225, for $125. Motiograph, $75. Motiograph, $100. Cineograph, $65.

Send for Supplement No. 33 Bargain List.

HARBACH & CO., 809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

Theatre Sales Co.

211 Dearborn Street, opposite Post Office
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
Long Distance Phone, Harrison 341

Dealers in Theatres anywhere in the United States and especially Chicago. Write or Call.
Make Known your Wants

English Representation

An English firm of exceptional financial standing is open to negotiate for representation of good American maker. Full particulars on application (which will be treated confidentially) to

Box 6, London Office of The News,
8 Sherwood St., London, England.

Advertisers want results. When writing to them it is our due that you mention The Moving Picture News

THE WORLD'S GREATEST THEATRE CHAIR

Sanitary, Space-Saving, Life-Saving, Money-Saving.
To Use This Chair Is to Make Your Business Grow.
Write Today for Circular W.

HARDESTY MFG. CO.
Canal Dover, Ohio.

LOOK OUT FOR MOVING PICTURE TALES EARLY IN DECEMBER

QUICK—CHEAP—GOOD

OPERA CHAIRS

Ask for Catalog 306

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.,
218 So. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

WHY—

is the business of the Laemmle Film Service at the high water mark of its history right now? Because the Independent films have improved so wonderfully; because we are buying every good thing produced; because we use brains in making up programs and because our service department is the best on earth. That's the sort of combination YOU ought to hook up with. Write!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters:
New number 204 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.
Sykes Block, Minneapolis, Minn.
1312 Farman St., Omaha, Neb.
1110 Wyandotte St., Kansas City, Mo.
515 Mulberry St., Des Moines, Iowa.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

(Have you used our Free Employment Bureau? It's at your service)

25c IN STAMPS GIVES YOU ONE COPY OF

HALLBERG'S

1912 MOTION PICTURE CATALOGUE AND REFERENCE BOOK

Special Jobber of

EDISON
POWERS
MOTIOGRAPH

Moving Picture Machines

The "Hallberg Economizer"

Used in connection with any of the above moving picture machines, produces the finest results on your screen that money can buy.

I Equip Theatres Completely

And carry in stock only the highest grade goods required for your theater.

Free catalogues, circulars and pamphlets furnished of individual items you require.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Free Catalogue No. 2.

When Writing Advertisers Please Mention Moving Picture News

WANTED TO BUY—"Dante's Inferno," "Tale of Two Cities," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Two Orphans," "Colleen Bawn," "Romeo and Juliet," "Life of Abraham Lincoln," "Enoch Arden," "Johnson-Jeffries Fight," "James Brothers in Missouri," "Life of David Copperfield," "Faust," "Hands Across the Sea" and other two and three-reel features.
FOR SALE—Film $5.00 per reel. Used machines $35 up. New Standard and New Motiograph machines, factory price $225, ours $150.
FOR RENT—Film $1.00 per reel weekly.
H. DAVIS, WATERTOWN, WIS.

BLANK LEADER

from $7.50 per 1,000 feet. Shipments subject to approval.

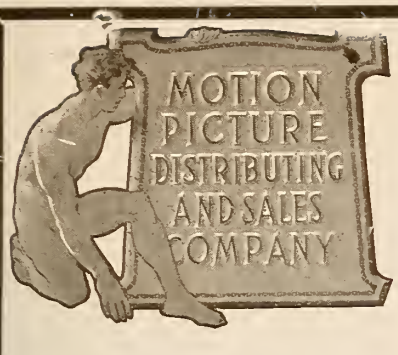
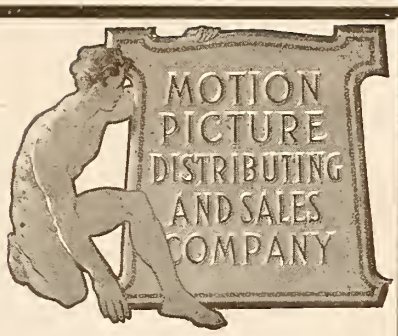
WASTE UTILIZATION CO.
500 Fifth Avenue NEW YORK



THIRTY-FOUR RELEASES



TO SELECT FROM WEEKLY

AVAILABLE THROUGH SIXTY-THREE EXCHANGES IN UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

WEEKLY PROGRAM

MONDAY.....IMP, COMET, AMERICAN, CHAMPION, NESTOR; Tuesday's SOLAX starts December 18th.

TUESDAY.....THANHOUSER, BISON, POWERS, ECLAIR (Amer.)

WEDNESDAY..CHAMPION, SOLAX, RELIANCE, AMBROSIO, NESTOR.

THURSDAY ....REX, AMERICAN, ITALA, IMP, ECLAIR.

FRIDAY.....BISON, SOLAX, THANHOUSER, LUX, COMET.

SATURDAY....POWERS, ITALA, GREAT NORTHERN, NESTOR, RELIANCE; REPUBLIC starts December 16th; IMP starts December 2nd.

SUNDAY.....MAJESTIC; REPUBLIC starts December 17th.

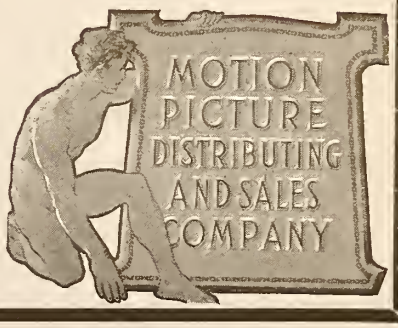
EXHIBITORS THE WORLD OVER

Are showing selections from this program in their theaters to packed houses.

THERE IS A REASON
NONE BETTER

MOTION PICTURE DIST. & SALES CO.

111 E. 14th St. NEW YORK CITY



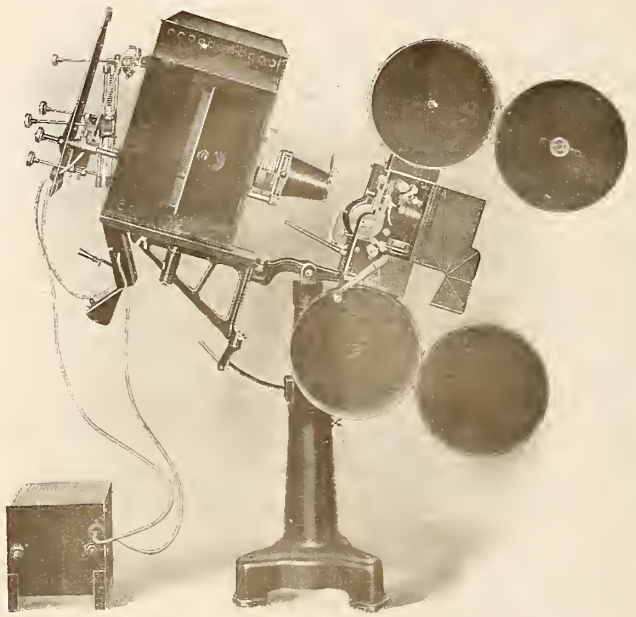
ANNOUNCEMENT NO. 6

Simplex

THE PEER OF ALL

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

The table for lamphouse is provided with a substantial swing movement which instantaneously brings the lamp into optical centre either with the M. P. Projection or Stereopticon lenses, and the Tilting arrangement, giving ample latitude, is governed by the moving of the support through the arc provided at the back of the stand.



The base, at its centre, rests on a device by which the machine can be swung to right or left, and the centre of gravity of this stand, together with its table support, and in conjunction with the Head and lamphouse, owing to careful calculation provides a machine of perfect rigidity and freedom from all vibration.

NO MORE TROUBLE WITH CITY EXAMINERS IF YOU USE THIS

THOROUGHLY FIREPROOF MACHINE

Lyric Amusement Co., Champaign, Ill., Nov. 8.

PRECISION MACHINE CO., New York.

I wish to say that the "Simplex" is the greatest machine on the market, after having used four other makes. If you care to use my judgment as a recommendation you may do so. It is from the heart, and I have had lots of experience with machines. Considering everything it is several years ahead of anything on the market today.

Yours very truly,
H. H. JOHNSON.

"Just the Machine the Department has been looking for."
—N. Y. City Official Inspector

EASIEST OF ALL MACHINES TO HANDLE, THREAD AND OPERATE

Sales Office: 23 East 14th Street, New York

DEC 13 19

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

Volume IV
No. 49

December 9
1911

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DEC
13
1911
PERIODICAL DIV.

PRICE
TEN CENTS

SCENE FROM

The Violin Makers of Nuremberg

SOLAX RELEASE - DECEMBER 22d

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD says: "The VIOLIN MAKERS OF NUREMBERG is a notable film . . . an idyl . . . a delicate subject done in a dainty way . . . holds the interest . . . is an example that we hope to see followed by all independent manufacturers."

The film is released FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22.

GET IT!

ASK YOUR EXCHANGE

GET IT!

WRITE FOR A SPECIAL LIST OF MUSIC

RELEASED
FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15

"THE LITTLE KIDDIE MINE"

Little Toots, the daughter of a prospector, imitates her father at the hardy task of gold-digging. She locates a cache of a highwayman and imagines she has discovered a mine with an unlimited supply of bags of gold.

RELEASED
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 13

FICKLE BRIDGET

This is a satiric comedy dealing with the aspirations and the heart ailings of a cook with an inheritance. A grocer and an iceman are in love with her and her money—and a Count is also in love with her and her money—principally her money. The Count gets her as a result of a duel. The situations are absurdly funny.

RELEASED
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 20

LOVE, WHISKERS AND LETTERS

A jealous lover creates "a tempest in a teapot" because he sees his sweetheart kissing a bewhiskered gentleman—who happens to be a "long-lost brother" of the girl. He sends her a letter breaking off his engagement. After the letter is gone he learns of the relationship between his girl and the bewhiskered gentleman. His attempts to intercept the letter are roarously funny. The climax, however, is the novel feature of the story.

Solax

REMEMBER CHRISTMAS PRESENTS is the first release on the three-a-week programme. Sunday, Dec. 24th, is the day. Send in your orders now. Get booked.

Solax Company CONGRESS AVE. FLUSHING, N. Y.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

SALES COMPANY Agents in U. S. A. and Canada

If You Want to See a Perfect Film

Look at "BAR Z'S NEW COOK"—Released TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12. Other

BISON FEATURES COMING

"COWGIRLS' PRANKS"—Tuesday, December 19, With Lots of Pretty Girls.

"AN INDIAN MARTYR"—Friday, December 22, A Clever Indian Plot.

"THE RUN ON THE BANK"—Tuesday, December 26, A Sensational Story in Which a Man Saves His Employer's Money in a Thrilling Scene in Which the Maddened Mob Fights to Reach the Paying Teller's Window.

"GETTING HIS MAN"—Friday, December 19. The Sheriff Gets His Man, But Before He Does So You Are Treated to Some Thrills. In One Scene Horse and Rider Come Tumbling Down the Precipitous Mountain Side. A Wonderfully Staged and Acted Film.

COMING! COMING!
SPECTACULAR SENSATIONS!
COMING! COMING!

New York Motion Picture Co.

1 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK CITY

A NEW STUDIO

HAS JUST BEEN COMPLETED BY CHAMPION

NEW PLANS FACILITIES SUBJECTS

Have also been introduced into CHAMPION SYSTEM. And why all this, Mr. Exhibitor?

ANSWER:—To Turn Out the Best Pictures Possible in a Modern Plant

RELEASES FOR THIS WEEK

RELEASED DECEMBER 18th

The Coward's Flute

When the tide of battle surged into defeat, Arthur Paget's cowardice fell off, and he heroically led the troops back upon the wave of victory.

RELEASED DECEMBER 20th

By Decree of Fate

A great drama of life's occurrences as wrought by the hand of fate. A real realism.

CHAMPION FILM COMPANY

Sold thro Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

MARK M. DINTENFASS, GEN. MGR.,
12 EAST 15TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

THE THANHOUSER "GREATEST DECEMBER"

Let us help decorate your lobby for the Holidays—Mail us the coupon in the lower left-hand corner.

"SHE"

Request NOW the "Greatest Decemher's" GREATEST Picture!

IN 2 REELS
RIDER HAGGARD'S MYSTERY MASTERPIECE
TUESDAY, DEC. 26

A Special and a Feature Issued as a Regular Thanhouser Release

RELEASED TUESDAY, DEC. 19

"Greatest December's" Human Interest Film

The Tomboy

is a person that is well calculated to corral your admiration, with her brave and independent spirit, characteristic as it is of a Nation of Freemen. Her tiny sister, too, has qualities that will play upon your affections—she it is who finally brings The Tomboy into her own. The picture is quite an oddity in the human interest way and that's why it's found in the "Greatest December" list. Ask for it when you ask for the "Greatest Decemher" features.

"CINDERELLA"

RELEASED FRIDAY, DEC. 22

The Second "Greatest December" Feature

Cinderella

FROM THE MOST FAMOUS FAIRY STORY KNOWN

Just tack up the "Cinderella" Query-Sheet that you get when you mail us the coupon in the lower left-hand corner, and the supreme excellence of the film will do the rest. At some stage of the game we've every one of us read "Cinderella"—or HAD IT READ to us—and the questions on the Query-Sheet will awaken fond recollections—which will draw 'em in. The change of the lizards to horses, the pumpkin to a coach, and the other transitions, are really marvelous.

EXTRA! Plenty of Billing Matter for "SHE!"

Thanhouser Company beg to announce that the exhibitor can secure from his exchange TWO kinds of one-sheet four-color lithos for "SHE," and a THREE-SHEET ARTPOSTER. The supply of the three-sheet Artposters is limited and it is requested that you give your exchange NOW an idea of how many three-sheet Artposters you will require.

THANHOUSER CO., NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.:—Send me FREE Lobby Decorations for your "Greatest December" features. I am getting "The Thanhouser News." I am not (NAME).....

(ADDRESS).....

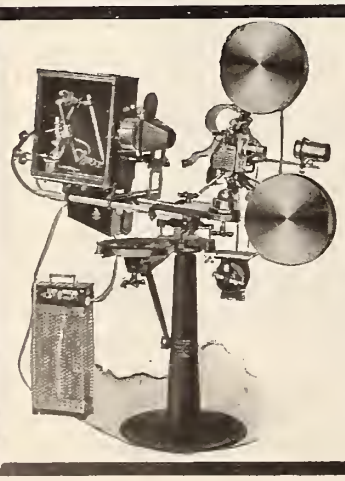
(EXCHANGE).....

CLIP AND MAIL THIS DAY

THANHOUSER CO.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Sales Company agents for U. S. and Canada.



One Hundred and Fifteen Thousand People in the First Fifteen Days

was the attendance at the lectures of the Southern-Union Pacific Railway System at the Land Show, Chicago, November 18th to Decemher 9th, 1911.

This great railway system has given substantial proof of their unhounded faith in the moving picture as an advertising medium by investing over Twenty-five Thousand Dollars for an exhibit of only three weeks. This company had erected for their purpose two complete moving picture theatres seating ahout 500 people in each and conducted alternately one-half hour lectures.

THE MACHINES USED WERE ONE 1908 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH AND ONE 1910 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH—"NUF SED."

1912 MODELS NOW BEING SHIPPED.

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO., 564 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO

For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

"The contents of this issue are copyrighted"

The Moving Picture News

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

Sole Agent and Correspondent for advertisements in Great Britain B. Allan, 8 Sherwood St., Piccadilly Circus, W., London

Chicago Representative: Warner Kennedy, 844 Waveland Avenue. 'Phone 3818 Lake View.

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor.

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President; John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Volume IV December 9, 1911 Number 49

FAIR CRITICISM

WE, in our editorial capacity, have often been taken to task for speaking so plainly, telling so unvarnished a story, calling a spade a spade and a shovel a shovel, threatened with libel actions until we began to wonder whether it was worth while writing as we did to try and tell our readers the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. We felt (in spite of adverse criticism, in spite of giving offense to a few who winced at having the truth told) that we were on the right track and we did not fear, because we have always held that right will eventually win the day. It justifies us and gives us great satisfaction to clip the following from the Editor and Publisher as a vindication of our attitude:

PRESS MUST BE FREE

Important Decision Handed Down in the Cook Case in St. Louis

The Court Upholds the Right of Editors to Criticise Even in Severe Terms a Public Dereliction of Duty—Post-Dispatch Relieved of $50,000 Libel Verdict Awarded Former Secretary of State

The Supreme Court of Missouri last week reversed a judgment of $50,000 obtained by Sam B. Cook, former Secretary of State of Missouri, against the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The suit grew out of an editorial in the Post-Dispatch commenting on the failure of the Salmon & Salmon Bank of Clinton, Mo., in 1905, and criticising Mr. Cook, then Secretary of State, for delaying to close the institution when insolvent.

The decision handed down by the court, lawyers say, is one of the most important returned in a high court in recent years.

"The legal propositions involved—that a newspaper has the right fairly and honestly to comment upon a matter of public interest," says the decision, in which all the Supreme Court judges concur, "and that the official conduct of a public officer is a matter of public interest—are well settled.

Free Speech is Fundamental

"The people are not obliged to speak of the conduct of their officials in whispers or in bated breath in a free government, but only in a despotism. On the contrary, they have the right to speak out in open discussion and criticism thereof, the only test being that they make no false statement. And this is the great safeguard of free government and of pure government. This is fundamental among us.

"It is the duty of a public newspaper to tell the people, its subscribers, its readers, the facts that it may find out about public questions or matters of public interest, and it is its duty and right to draw inference from the facts known—draw them for the people."

After defining the rights and duties of a newspaper, as has been quoted above, the Supreme Court decision added:

"The prevailing or majority opinion is often the wrong one, and for that reason the law gives full latitude to the expression of any and all opinions on things of general concern. It does not matter that the opinions or inferences expressed are not the most charitable or reasonable ones, or that they are the wrong ones, provided they be based on the facts, and the facts are capable of them.

Latitude in Such Criticism

"This is the rule of latitude of discussion and criticism of the conduct of everyone who holds a public office, or writes a book, or does any act by which he invites public attention and criticism.

"In the exercise of the right of criticism in matters of public interest, it necessarily follows that public officers will not always be placed before the people in their true character, but that their official acts will be misconstrued and wrong motives be imputed, even when they are entirely free from blame and no valid basis for unfavorable comment exists. That is the common experience of all who have had public office."

The decision quotes an expression of the noted English jurist, Cockburn, as follows:

"Those who will fill a public position must not be too thin-skinned in reference to comments made upon them. It would often happen that observations would be made upon public men which they knew from the bottom of their hearts were undeserved and unjust; yet they must hear with them, and submit to be misunderstood for a time, because all knew that the criticism of the press was the best security for the proper discharge of public duties."

Sets Broad Precedent for Papers

In conclusion, the decision enunciates a principle which lawyers say is of sweeping importance to newspaper editorial writers, saying:

"Whether the plaintiff, in failing to enforce the law, * * * was or was not actuated by the motives imputed in the article complained of, we are satisfied that such an inference and comment was fully warranted by the facts and circumstances in evidence, and as the facts upon which the comment was made were true, the publication was not defamatory under the law of libel, but was privileged as a criticism and comment upon a matter of public interest.

"In the conclusion arrived at we have not overlooked the principle of law that comment and criticism, to be privileged, must be fair and honest, and not malicious; and that whether it is fair and honest is a question for the jury. While that is the law, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that a comment is unfair and dishonest, and if there is no evidence upon which a rational verdict could be found on the basis that the comment is malicious, as we hold in this case, the case should not be submitted to the jury."—Editor & Publisher.

After reading the above, will some of our critics withdraw their harsh opinion, and give us credit for a little prescience and knowledge of what was due to his readers from the editor in saving them from snags?

A PRACTICAL PLAN OF TEACHING WITHOUT BOOKS

By Mary Lawton Metcalfe

THERE is great displeasure at present among many parents and teachers of New York that text-books of the pupils are used so long as to render them soiled and unfit for handling. The educational authorities say they cannot afford (!) at present to replace them with new!

Himmel! Shall the thousands of boys and girls be exposed to unnecessary germs of disease from handling unclean school books? By no means. Let the grimy volumes, anything but inspiring, be cast by the janitors into the furnaces below stairs. From the ashes let this new thought suggestion go out with mental force: Bring in the picture man. With his help a clever imaginative teacher can work in all kinds of lessons from the films—for instance—which have floated in my memory box to be ready for a "color man" to paint. Some seventy thousand boys and girls, I am told, are only getting half-day sessions. Ah, then, let us have them from 1 p. m. to 3 p. m. for simply reading, writing, composition, and dearly beloved spelling!

May I be teacher, Mr. Picture Man? This is my plan. The Board of Education, or Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Carnegie or Miss Gould, or even a theater proprietor will give us free seats in a showhouse. An assembly room will do splendidly, if we can seat five hundred. Mark ye, ladies and gentlemen, the class is "five" hundred "part-timers," who are sent home to play in the gutters; sew on buttons in the sweatshops; or do any old mischief that destructive energy suggests.

Mr. Picture Man is getting ready for his slides.

Now, as teacher lady, I am telling my big class to watch every picture with both eyes wide open.

Let us take, for instance, the picture story from memory box—"The Captain's Treasure." Then scenes in New York City for home geography. "Hands Across the Sea" for American history. Enough for one day.

Well, girls and boys, you like the pictures! Isn't this a grand way to learn with eyes?

But the pictures cannot do "everything!"

They will only come again, if you show us how much each pupil can do for himself.

I want you to bring me in a written story of the pictures you saw to-day. Write in ink on one side of the paper. Spelling, composition, neatness, will each count 100 per cent. Twenty-five of your stories will be read aloud and all papers handed up for correction. The best work will give champion medals to wear a month. The stories will be read and corrected and the best of them put in The Moving Picture News.

That's home work enough for Tom, Dick, Harry, Sally, Jane and Sue!

And not a ragged book to look at!

Do I think the modus operandi of this new thought practicable? There would be no sense in adding suggestion, if as one of a class and collection I had not had my own pen trained from picture stories.

The great aim of expansive progressive education is to draw out budding ideas of the pupils—hence educio, the cornerstone of education; virtually a drawing-out; and not the one-sided affair of putting-in a glorified hash of dates, reasons and hard nuts to crack!

The picture man gave his lesson in ideas. So much for Lesson I.

Teacher—Lady takes up the job and "draws out," next day or two days after the expression of the mental-films in each child's repository of understanding. However crude the beginning, every effort is valuable in making clear-thinking, a progressive act absolutely necessary in clear, coherent talking and writing.

It is to picture stories that I attribute a hold on English as a press woman. Those in use at our Southern school only moved when we fastened them to the blackboard to get a better view.

With a picture before a class the imagination of each child is aroused and the teacher has just so much insight into the workings of each young thinking-box. It is the daily practice of short, forceful sentences, arranged in paragraphs and topics from the youngest grades of all schools, which develops pure English, grammatical construction and elegance in style and diction.

Again claiming a practical knowledge of picture teaching from my own experience, I assert without apologies or debate that picture stories are the invaluable stepping stones from primary schools upward, ad libitum.

Without effort, boys and girls find themselves taking intelligent notes of lectures in classroom, and are able to expand them into profitable essays and themes for their teachers. This is a bomb I am going to throw right into educational circles.

In spite of the millions of dollars granted for public education in New York City, my recent experience in one borough shows that there is an appalling poverty of ideas and no degree of expression from the pupils of the schools of at least one borough.

In an educational contest which I directed fifteen hundred specimens of pupils' work were submitted; ranging from kindergarten through high school grades.

Not one-fourth per cent were foreigners. That is the excuse for bad spelling in Manhattan—no! here were American girls and boys. All raffia works, in sewing, braiding, etc., carpentering, drawing, etc., were excellent and deserve the highest praise; but English composition; long-hand writing and spelling are a "joke." So entirely primary were the efforts of high school grades in essays for prizes as to be ruled out in competition!

There is great dissatisfaction among parents not only with children at public schools, but that private schools also have followed suit and "trump out" art to take the place of so necessary an educational equipment as English dictation.

One must hide his independent ideas with his chronological birth date behind a mask these days; still, what gives better evidence of education and culture than a good English letter from a stranger!

Young men and women may lead the race in basketball, folk dancing, coloring and braiding, but the back rows are filled with "cutters," when essays and themes are called.

A detailed force of officers with brass buttons are "doing" the house-to-house canvass in Greater New York.

Another census is on foot. And the howl from the Commissioner of Education at the national capital is echoing even in New York.

Not fifty per cent of the American boys and girls stay at school, when they can "cut out!"

"Why? Why? Why?" all states are asking. And we can tell you right here in plain American—because the foundations of common school education are fashionably neglected. Fractions are too common to be hammered. Spelling "occurs," and impressions of educators are deemed more valuable than individual expressions of what pupils really do mentally grip.

Geography is taught generally without the necessary daily "quiz." Is it any wonder that professors way up report a "nebulous condition" of ideas!

Now, then, let the moving picture people come out on both feet and stand up for their convictions. Let them say, "Gentlemen, we guarantee to get the attention of your children; we can teach the eyes, but it is "up to" your teachers to draw out the products of busy young minds that we set a-thinking."

Success to common-sense education!

OPERATORS, LISTEN!

The man behind the gun, who is really the pivot wheel of a moving picture entertainment, is the operator. He is the man, who, to a certain degree, makes or mars the show. It is up to him to focus properly, to illuminate properly, and to unroll the film at a pace designed to properly demonstrate all points of interest in the film.

His is a responsible position. And as the engineer of a railroad train is ever in the front, exposed to the dangers of the head-on collision, so is the operator of a projecting machine in a moving picture theater exposed, and in fact, the only one really exposed to the dangers of fire or explosion.

Of all those connected with the moving picture entertainment he is the one least thought of, and we fear, least appreciated. Who ever stops a moment while viewing the many delightful pictures which are presented to the eye, to think of the man in the gallery, or up in the rafters somewhere, inclosed very often in a miserably ventilated booth, unless perchance, something happens to go wrong on the screen, and then is it not with a grumble that our thoughts travel rafterward? "What is the matter with that man? Why does he make such a mess of that picture?" are our inward and very often our outward comments.

However, there are times. I will admit, when he is deserving of the dissatisfaction displayed toward him. We have sat in theaters when the film whirled round at such a rapid pace that the quickest eye must fail to catch the titles of the different scenes. So, Mr. Operator, though I have infinite respect for you, I would enjoin upon you to work in such a manner as to win commendation from those who know, unmindful of the indifference of the masses to the man who does the work, and without whose services the show cannot go on. The fact that we sometimes come across a poor one only makes us the more appreciate those of you who do conscientious work.

The operator can be the producer's best friend.

"FICKLE BRIDGET" (SOLAX)

Critics unanimously advocate the elimination of burlesque and slap-stick from comedies. Straight comedy, of course, "comes over" stronger with the elimination of these objectionable features. There is, however, a peculiar kind of comedy of which many producers fight shy. In that peculiar style of comedy there is a slight mixture of burlesque and slap-stick, and their application in proper measure without hurting the general scheme is difficult. For this reason manufacturers are usually lukewarm in their reception of scenarios with those apparently objectionable features incorporated. Unless the story is "handled with care" its appearance on the screen is usually received with a storm of protest. If carefully produced, such comedies can come under the head of satiric comedy—or comedy with a keen edge.

Such a comedy, carefully produced, is "Fickle Bridget"—the Solax release of Friday, December 13. It is a comedy with a keen edge—because it picturesquely "shows up" striking frailties of human nature in a pointed way. It, in a subtle manner, interprets the ambitions and the aspirations of a cook from Cork, Ireland, who inherits a fortune. It brings out forcefully the servant problem, and the point of view of foreign nobility and their attitude toward matrimony and the dollar.

The plot of this story concerns a cook, who, after her inheritance of a fortune assumes "airs" which she cannot support by her limited intellect. She has ambitions as a fencer, and engages a count to teach her the art of handling foils. Her former associates and admirers, a grocer and an iceman, are not good enough for her, and she finally accepts the proposal of the count—when the iceman and the grocer show themselves up as liars and unqualified for the tender profession of love.

The situations are absurdly funny and the satire is strongly emphasized.

NEW NAME

The Independent Moving Pictures Company of America —familiarly known as the "Imp"—has called upon the courts to change its name to The Imp Films Company.

"Because," explained Mr. Laemmle, president of the concern, "nobody ever took the trouble to call us the Independent Moving Pictures Company of America. The name was too cumbersome and I considered it folly to keep advertising a name that nobody would use.

"I will venture to say that of the hundreds of letters we receive every day, not one per cent addressed us by our full title. Most of the letters came addressed to the 'Imp Films Co.,' so we adopted that name as the most natural for the people to remember. Others merely addressed us as 'The Imp' or 'The Imp Co.'

"Of course our films will continue to be known as 'Imps' but our new trade-mark, just registered, will contain the name 'Imp Films Company' in the form of a circle, while the little figure of an imp holding a banner bearing the word 'Imp' will still appear in the center.

SO I WENT TO SEE MARION LEONARD

For weeks there had been whisperings and wondering regarding the gifted lady's absence from the screen; rumors and reasons ran riot; conjectures and questions followed fast and followed faster; but the oracle was mute, and there was none who knew the answer. The perplexing puzzle lingered and lengthened.

Exhibitors asked, and a question was their answer. Exchange men inquired, and learned only a mystery. Manufacturers furrowed their brows—and that wasn t the only plowing they did. But the elusive and illusive Miss Leonard became more so. Until—

An announcement came. Miss Leonard was engaged to the Gem Motion Picture Company. A sweet greeting to the legion of her friends cleared the mystery, but put the other manufacturers in a haze. It was all done so quietly, so quickly; and the wonder of the moment before continued and increased? The whisperings and wondering played a return engagement, only now in a much larger role. Chat and comment went the rounds of the new film and the popular star, and the great expectations entertained for both. And then the glee chorus sang a chorus and several encores, with the accent on the glee. Exhibitors were delighted; the moving picture public, via the former gentlemen, were ditto; the exchange men were likewise, and the other manufacturers—well, this is a respectable paper, so we can't repeat their expressions of approval.

. . . So I went to see Marion Leonard.

From the very second she extended her firm little hand to grasp mine that is neither, the gifted goddess had the eight million and ninety friends that are said to admire her—plus one. It is impossible for anyone to know Miss Leonard for five tricks of the clock without really loving her and wishing to know her until the last clock is unwound. She has the prettiest smile in captivity, the sincerest gleam eyes ever held, the sweetest and most sympathetic face God ever put on two feminine shoulders. Every inch of her is winsome charm and appealing personality—and she is five feet five. Besides, she is modest, for which reason I am telling all these truths about her. She couldn't be conceited to pay an election bet—which is not suggesting that she is a suffragette. She's the sweetest bit of femininity that ever strayed away from the angels—and that kind is not suffragetical; we say this even though the statement will prevent your showing this number of the News to your wife.

MARION LEONARD

We talked of many things—except herself. That was impossible. All the agencies of persuasion I attempted to employ with a view of causing her to talk about herself met with dismal and disconcerting failure. She would talk about her work, not about herself. Yet—isn't it the same thing?

For herself is reflected in every gesture and expression of her acting. Her personality pervades the atmosphere of every picture in which she appears. There is a subtle influence that emanates from her, that steals into our hearts and sings its way into our souls. And her eyes—they tell us things—tell us things the human lips could never convey! They flash, and the fires of life and the heat of its battles are translated into our being. They gleam, and courage and the ideals of humankind assume incarnation. They glow, and everything base and banal in our beings depart, leaving only a great tenderness for the things of the earth, and a giant thrill of gladness to be on it. Those eyes mock the world's weakness and triumph in its victories. They speak a message of sweetness and purity, with a suggestion lurking in their depths of things unknown to us and unknowable.

"We are going to make the silent drama eloquent," she said. "We are going to make it speak the things that are in our hearts—yours and mine and the hungry hearts of the rest of us humans. We are going to portray their emotions, their aspirations, their yearnings, and our pictures will have enough realism to make them recognize themselves and their gropings and grapplings. We are not going to have illustrated sermons, but rather 'talking pictures'—pictures that will talk from the shoulder, straight to the heart, and beyond—pictures that will tell the truths we know but can't express, and show the shams and shallows of life. We are going to put into each picture released by us a "still small voice,' but it will be loud enough to be clearly heard.'"

She says these things as though she means even more, as though she would rather underestimate the purposes and prospects of the Gem Motion Picture Company than exaggerate them. We feel as she speaks her own creative genius, her own sublime ideals and lofty aspirations, and a great, uncompassable determination to instill them into her work in telling fashion. Then the wonderful eyes close for a brief instant, and quickly open wide again, and—

"You know," she says, "most actors and actresses make the mistake of acting! There are many motion pictures in which the message of the story is lost, simply because the actors acted! The audience feels, unconsciously, or subconsciously, that the incidents and attitudes being portrayed on the stage are assumed, affected. That's just it—they know they are attitudes. But if one were natural, if one showed the grief of a seared soul, the torture of a wrecked heart, the dismal discovery of disillusionment, the vain yearning for things beyond our reach, the discontent with which we accept Destiny's decisions, in such a manner, by such a means as to cause the audience to dismiss the natural personality of the players from their minds, and see and feel only the characters they assume—if we followed this line more often and more consistently in pictures, I venture the opinion that it would not be long before the daily newspapers would review photo-plays and recognize them as a legitimate branch of the legitimate drama. We are going to try to do just that."

No egotism, no self-complacent conceit, only the expression of a desire and a possibility of success in attaining it are conveyed by the sentence, "We are going to try to do just that." And somehow I feel more confidence in Miss Leonard's ability and that of the Gem Motion Picture Company to accomplish their ambition than Miss Leonard seemed to express herself.

Readers, watch Gem. Watch Miss Leonard. The date of their first release has not yet been decided, but keep track of it when it is. It's going to be worth while. You know, we can just sense some things; we feel just how much and how little we can expect from a venture from the first impression of it; and our impression of the Gem Motion Picture Company, Miss Leonard and their combined efforts would be very, very flattering to all concerned if they were susceptible of flattery.

I'm going to take advantage of Miss Leonard's kind invitation to call again. It's a real inspiration to talk to her. And there's something about the atmosphere of the place that is warm and genial, and inspiring and inspiriting. She seems to cast her radiance over all and everything and—I am going to call again!

Waterloo, Ia.—A new opera house will be erected here to replace the one destroyed by a tornado.

A PROMINENT INDEPENDENT HOUSE

THE LYRIC THEATER, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The Lyric Theater, 130 South Spring street, Los Angeles, Cal., is one of the prettiest and best five-cent houses in the city, and since changing from Trust to Independent service several months ago, business has wonderfully increased.

Four reels of pictures are shown, the program changing twice a week. The seating capacity of this popular theater is 400, and under the judicious management of Messrs. Howell and Skinner, it is always kept filled.

A $1,000 Peerless organ has recently been installed, which adds greatly to the pictures.

Two machines are used, and these, under the charge of Mr. E. Geary, always insure the best of projection.

THE MOVING PICTURE TRADE JOURNAL

What is more convincing of the increasing popularity of the animated picture playlet than the demand for the moving picture trade journal? Nearly every operator, theater proprietor, scenario writer, and critic subscribes for the trade papers. A few years ago, such publications were comparatively unknown. Now copies of the Moving Picture News can be found on every newsstand and the subscription lists are growing larger every week. Nearly every daily newspaper office of any importance has one or more picture trade journals on its exchange list. Not only those interested in the business read these papers but many others, partial to the Nickelodions, subscribe. Everyone, seemingly, wishes to learn the inside gossip of the picture business and the trade journal is rapidly becoming a formidable rival of the popular-priced magazine.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Vaudeville Theater Co. will erect a new moving picture theater at 2312 S. Grand avenue.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Vaudeville Theater Co. will erect a new moving picture theater at 2806 N. Vandeventer avenue.

Trenton, N. J.—The Nicolet Moving Picture Theater on S. Broad street was damaged by fire to the amount of $500.

Sunday

THE first day of the week, the first day of the year; not alone in priority of time, but in priority of principle, in priority of pre-eminence and prominence. It is a day of hallowed memories, of memorable reminiscences; a day of sweetness and serenity, with just a suggestion of solemnity and sadness, yet a sadness that is not sere but soothing. There is never so much peace in the world, never so much peace in our hearts, never so much song and solace in our souls, as on Sunday!

Roses and peace; the lull of strife; calmness and contentment; the happy carolling of carefree creatures of the air! The sea itself is a sermon, the sky a psalm. And everywhere—roses and peace!

Wars and woes; vanity and vaunting; pride and predatory prerogative; crime and cruelty; folly and futility—these are forgotten! We know only the homily and harmony and homage of an humble heart, and a sacred tranquility pervades and permeates all.

Sunday, the first day of the week, the first day of the year, the first day that a new-born world emerged from desperate darkness, from night and blight, and rejoicing, looked upon the light!

Sunday is not only a day of rest, but a day of recreation. We find church unity manifesting itself in such ways as the opening of all art galleries to the public on Sunday.

Minneapolis, Denver, Omaha, San Francisco and other cities have municipal concerts on Sunday, with moving pictures for the instruction and amusement of the people.

THE GEM MOTION PICTURE CO.

OF THE CENSURING OF THE MOTION PICTURE THEATER

By Margaret I. MacDonald

There are apparently and actually two opposing factions hard at work to determine the ultimate fate of the moving picture. The good, healthy minded individuals who are honestly and without prejudice striving for the welfare of the human race, reaching to every corner of the earth for the best and most modern method of conveying knowledge to the human brain, have set their seal of approval upon the motion picture as second to none.

On the other hand, there is a set of individuals who must belong to one of four classes—the ignorant, the short-sighted, the malicious, or the abnormally selfish. These people continue to rail against the motion picture theater as a thing most unsavory and ungodly. To them every motion picture theater doorway is a hideous, yawning chasm, placed on the thoroughfare to entrap the tender young and to debase the morals of the weak-minded individual.

At least this would be our inference from such statements as the following made by Miss Kate Davis, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., in the Old Stone Church. "They are the hotbeds of iniquity," "training schools for criminals," etc. The matter has been under discussion at the Cleveland branch of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America. These gentlemen have promised every assistance that is in their power to give in helping to eradicate the effect on the general public of just such damaging remarks as the above spread broadcast by antiquated calamity howlers, and to bring the public to a better frame of mind in the matter and an understanding of the mission of the motion picture.

All reform movements meet with more or less persecution. And though the advent of the motion picture cannot exactly be called a reform movement, still it is another loophole through which knowledge is striving to force herself to make more definite and lasting her impress upon the brain of man. It is but the old, old story of the old combating the new—the diversity of opinion caused by a difference of viewpoint; the mind fenced in by limitations of conventionality and custom combating the mind that has swung itself out into the open, viewing the laws of God and man with something more of rationality.

Must we repeat so often our belief in the successful and glorious future of the motion picture in the world of education and art? And our faith in the rapid eradication of all that is evil which may have been connected with the motion picture, or with the motion picture theater, until the tongue grows weary of reiterating and the ear of listening?

Only a few days ago I made it my business to question a man who has a family of young children, as to the effect of the motion picture theater on the young members of his flock. Said he: "My children have been in the habit of going every day after school to the motion picture theater, and their great regret now that we are living out of the city in a place where the facilities for seeing pictures are not as good, is that they cannot go to look at the pictures." Said he: "I have one boy sixteen, another of fourteen years, and some smaller, all of whom are more or less different in type. When they come home from the motion picture theater each one makes his criticism, which is sometimes very amusing."

I asked the gentleman what effect he thought scenes of love and courtship would have. Said he: "I do not think that children take very much notice of them. My boy of fourteen will make a criticism of this sort: "The picture's all right, but I don't see why they couldn't cut some of that slushy stuff out—they drew that out too long"—and the girl didn't need to ask her mother; you could see that she was giving her consent without that. Then the sixteen-year-old boy will interrupt him saying that he doesn't see that his brother has any right to criticise a small point like that in a picture, and that the picture in general was good. Then the little chap, the smallest of all, will proceed to get his spoke in in rather a sage way. And so they discuss and criticise the pictures among themselves, and from my own observation among my own children, I do not think that children are nearly as much inclined to reap harm from the motion picture theater as from the street or the regular vaudeville show, and I believe that even the worst picture has some educational value."

As it is with one child as regards the harm to be gathered in the motion picture theater, so it is likely to be with another. The child with naturally criminal tendencies is equally, if not more, in danger on the street than in the motion picture theater. True, there are some theaters and some exhibitors who, there is no doubt, should be wiped off the map. It is for the authorities to deal with them. And it is no more true of the motion picture theater than of any other theater, church, or other place of gathering, that it is a haunt for "white slavers" and others of like obnoxious morals, and it is highly insulting to the many intelligent individuals who frequent the picture theater, to make such statements, not to speak of the harm done to the interests of an educational industry.

Once again, friends, and will you not tell it to some one else, and cause it to be passed along the line of the thinking people that you know the true, unvarnished facts of the case of the motion picture and the motion picture theater. Tel them as it is to-day, free from the prejudice and contamination of the malicious tongue, the motion picture is the educational, the morally useful—or toward this end it is progressing—and the artistic rolled into one.

"LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD"

The Majestic Company has surely scored a success in their release for Sunday, December 10, "Little Red Riding Hood." It is a masterpiece from start to finish. The photography, for which Mr. J. E. Revoire is responsible, is very fine, indeed. From a photographic viewpoint the scene where "Little Red Riding Hood" sits on the edge of the pond feeding the ducks could scarcely be surpassed. A very unique feature of the picture in general is the scene introductory to this latter, where the little girl with her basket of "goodies for granny" is wandering along the edge of the pond, where the picture encompasses only the lower portion of the child's form, but reflects the full figure and the overhanging shrubbery on the surface of the water. There are but seven people taking part in this picture. The part of "Little Red Riding Hood" is taken by Miss Mary Pickford (Little Mary). The character of the father is well portrayed by Mr. Broderick; the mother, by Miss Kelso, and the part of the dear Old Granny by Miss Gilman, a Broadway star. It is needless to make comment on the work of these capable people. To say that the work of action is superfine seems almost a superfluous commentary on artists so well known and so popular. Also great credit reflects on the able director of the Majestic Film Company, Mr. Owen Moore. The settings of the scenes are beautifully chosen and the shade of the forest wonderfully portrayed. The keynote of the picture from which the title is borrowed is the dream of the little girl as she sits down to rest in the forest on her way to bring goodies to Grandma when she dreams that the wolf follows her, and taking a short cut to Granny's, devours the old lady before Little Red Riding Hood reaches her dwelling finding in her place only the wolf beneath the bed clothes. The dream of the child is probably founded on the delight experienced by her when Granny has presented to her the little red cape, such as Red Riding Hood wore. Most of the scenes of this picture were taken by the kind permission of Mr. Ernest Seton Thompson on his beautiful estate in Connecticut.

Moving Picture Tales
5 Cents a Copy

GAS

Is a thing people make light of! And generally it isn't long before it's put out! The wise man knows where the real brilliance is!

On THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14th, this dying year, an industrial film you need is

"The Logging Industry"

There are industrial pictures—and then there are industrial pictures. They're the same, only different. One variety bores, while the other augurs well for the trade. There's the industrial picture that is only a conglomeration of unconnected scenes with the captions the only intelligent and intelligible feature of the whole arrangement; and there's the industrial picture that really teaches a lesson in universal economics. Of this class, conspicuous for its absence, or at best, infrequency, on the exhibitor's program, is

"THE LOGGING INDUSTRY"

The picture shows a great branch of human endeavor, with a sufficiency of human interest. Watching it, one feels the swing of mighty arms, the song of a man's work close to Nature, the inspiration of primeval labor. From the forest to civilization—this is the text of the film.

It's a fast motion motion picture!

Rex Motion Picture Mfg. Co.

573 ELEVENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

RAISING THE MAINE

At the Herald Square Theater, commencing with a matinee on Sunday, December 10, for that day and evening only, the people of New York will have their first opportunity of seeing the pictures of the raising of the U. S. battleship Maine from the water and mud of Havana harbor, where she has lain for the past thirteen years. These pictures were taken for the United States Government, and copies of them will be deposited with the Government and the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, going to make up an historical archive of the most sensational marine engineering feat ever attempted in the world's history.

During the current week the films will be shown to the Government officials at Washington and also to the President. With the showing of these films the answer to the question which has remained in the mud of Havana harbor for the past thirteen years will be forever set at rest. With the raising and towing of the Maine out of the harbor and sinking of her in the deep water beyond, the last trace of the Spanish war will have been obliterated and another page of history will be made.

The Raising the Maine Film Company advise us that they have sold exclusive rights to a good share of the states throughout the United States and have made booking arrangements with the Shubert Theatrical Syndicate to show these films in their playhouses in the most important cities.

A BIG INDEPENDENT SCOOP

We have seen the Republic Film Company's reel of the International Automobile Races at Savannah, and for compelling and holding interest we have rarely seen its equal.

It is perfect photography and shows the Southern scenery with its live oaks and Spanish moss; has magnificent and novel settings for the modern sport of racing with time-eating monsters; hair-raising brushes between these giant racers are shown; blood-freezing dashes around 90 degree curves; scenes at the camps getting the racers ready; millionaire drivers tuning up their cars preparatory to entering these death-defying competitions; skilled mechanicians fretting over and petting their favorite engines; learned professors and aristocratic members of the automobile association acting as committeemen to regulate and keep the events within sportsmanship bounds; immense throngs in the bleachers and masses of beautiful femininity accompanied by their sombre looking escorts; the long line of repair pits where oil, water, gas and tires are taken on at a loss of less than one minute.

All these contribute to make this special exclusive Independent release, one so full of human interest that it will be long in demand.

We predict for this Republic release that it will be a steady worker for many months and then a first-class repeating "commercial."

HALLBERG DIRECT CURRENT ECONOMIZERS IN DEMAND

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports a gratifying increase in the sale of the Hallberg Direct Current Economizers for all voltages. Among recent sales is one to R. S. Lind, Belize, British Honduras, of a 500 Volt Direct Current Economizer; also a 220 Volt Hallberg D. C. Economizer for the Silk City Amusement Company's new theater in Paterson, N. J. There are now five Hallberg 220 Volt Direct Current Economizers in operation in Paterson.

Des Moines, Ia.—A new office and theater building is to be erected at Fifth and Walnut streets by I. Ruben at a cost of $150,000.

CHRISTMAS IS COMING

So Are Gem FILMS

They will be received as A GIFT by any audience.

THE PRIDE OF LEXINGTON. A REPUBLIC RELEASE.

FOUR OF THE PRINCIPALS OF "THE PRIDE OF LEXINGTON"
The Widow McNeil, Billy Smith, Jane McRae and Aaron Knox

A QUIET MOMENT IN "THE PRIDE OF LEXINGTON"
Director McGlynn and principals enjoying their lunch of hot coffee and sandwiches after the taking of a "big scene."

FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT

Office of the News
8 Sherwood St., London, W.

I have just had an opportunity of seeing the first of Majestic films. "The Courting of Mary," if not a perfect subject itself, promises very well indeed for the future of the Majestic. The quality is very good indeed and another merit which this film possesses is one which, as a general run, is not so common among American subjects as in the French and Italian product—that is to say, special care has been taken to secure backgrounds of real beauty, with the result that almost every scene is a real picture. "Little Mary" is as bewitching as ever and her reappearance will delight the numerous admirers she already possesses in this country. The only fault of this film is that it was rather too full of incident; a little pruning would have been judicious and the material annulled would have gone a fair distance towards making another subject.

* * * *

The Cosmopolitan Film Company, Ltd., have secured what seems likely to become a very big thing in the handling of the "Polar" films, the first issue of which, "The Four Daredevils," is a real corking drama. For a first film indeed it must about beat record. The staging is excellent and there's a real thrill in the last scene, when the discarded woman brings about the death of her one-time lover, with whom she is performing a trapeze act high up in the air, by withdrawing her hands just as he is about to grasp them at the end of a flight. Despite an entrance price, this subject should sell very well indeed and the future "Polars" will be looked forward to with considerable interest.

* * * *

The Gaumont films of the Scott Antarctic expedition are among the finest ever released and should have a great run.

* * * *

Very little seems to be heard about the Sunday show at present, save when a charity more straight-laced than others refuses to benefit by the unholy thing. Meanwhile the bank accounts of a number of philanthropic organizations—and of one in particular—must be in a particularly healthy condition. The showman, of course, has the satisfaction of knowing that he is helping on the good cause (though it's not on odds on chance he would remember what particular good cause he is benefitting, if you asked him). If you express surprise to anyone in the trade here that the showman should feel sufficient reward for his efforts in the glow of an approving conscience, you may be met with a momentary lowering of your friend's eyelid—a little mannerism which in certain circumstances is said to convey remarkable things. And after all, is there not a proverb: Charity beginneth at home?

* * *

Cricks & Martin, Ltd., have secured the agency of the "Papillon" films (French made). The two subjects to hand, while not record breakers themselves, are examples of clever stage management of the "collision" comic variety, and the quality is good. Some of Cricks & Martin's own recent issues are very good; notably "Topsy's Dream of Toyland," a Xmas special which yet again disproves the libel that English firms cannot or will not spend money on staging. Costumes and settings here are capital. Mr. G. H. Cricks has started well in his new headquarters and is doing his share to enhance the reputation of the home-made films.

* * * *

Ambrosio have been scooping in prizes at the Turin Exhibition, gaining not only the Grand Prix (premier award of the Exhibition), for "After Fifty Years," but also specials for "The Bees" and "Life of the Butterfly" in the Natural History section. And these are great subjects, more especially the Butterfly film, which shows the actual changing of the caterpillar into the chrysalis and the emergence of the full-fledged butterfly later. It must have entailed, in photography, a tremendous amount of time and pains, but the result was well worth it, and I am confident the American public will endorse my opinion when it reaches your side.

* * * *

We know Mr. A. M. Kennedy, of whose new project we read in the News, here, chiefly as a gentleman who can give a good start and a beating to most others in the film trade in the way of publicity. We look to the "Producers" literature to give up something new, yet again, and if the films are up to the same mark, their sales will be all right.

Hamilton, Mo.—Ed. Moore, of Kahoka, has purchased a moving picture theater here and will take possession.

New York, N. Y.—Plans have been prepared for a new theater to be erected at 238-42 W. 44th street to replace the New Theater and be known as "The Little Theater" to be erected at cost of $100,000.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

By Leonard Donaldson

Pictures, Prudes and Prejudices

NOW that the motion picture theater has come to be recognized as one of the established national amusements, it is not surprising to notice that incidentally it also receives a critical study, or, in other words, has come in for the attention of the "puritanical prude," a type of person who in reckless language speaks of the "debasing and immoral films" which are frequently being exhibited in this country. Now, picture theater patrons are drawn from all classes and are composed of persons of all ages possessing varied intellects. I accordingly agree that the programmes submitted for their delectation should be of a varied character. To this end the producer and the exhibitor is forever striving. He is aware. if he is endowed with average intellect, of what type of film his patrons most enjoy. Let us suppose that this exhibitor is situated in the poorest quarter of New York City, and that he, like numerous other members of his fraternity, is transferred to carry on his business at a first class house on Broadway. His previous experience will stand him in very little stead when catering for his new patrons. That bedroom scene; that execution, will find very little, if any sympathy, now. I do not for a moment wish to convey that just because a theater happens to be situated in a poor quarter of any city that that theater must necessarily exhibit "questionable" films, but I would point out that there is a great need for improvement in the matter of the selection of films, that they should be suited in every respect to the people to whom they are shown.

I have recently had the pleasure of viewing what is, in my opinion, a perfect film, embodying, as it does, the manifold phases of life. The pathos, humor and temptations; in short, everything which goes to make up this kaleidoscopic existence. No portion of this film may be dispensed with; every inch is needed to convey the meaning, the "moral" of the whole. But the film contains one portion with which the prurient prude would delight to exemplify his remarks. This section, it should be added, is absolutely indispensable, if only for the fact that it conveys in silent emotion the characters of those participating in the play. We witness the impassioned longing of twin souls—is this debasing? Devoid of unhealthy suggestion the picture affords a clever portrayal of life as it is; life as it always will be—is this derogatory?

Now, Mr. Exhibitor, why have you asked for this portion to be eliminated? Shall I answer the query for you? Is it not because your patrons contain at least a smattering of that element to which I have referred? Those persons who go from your theater and indulge in sweeping assertions which have no foundation in fact, and might be more bluntly described? Those who in their indiscriminate denunciation of the picture theater, and the films exhibited therein, are guilty of a gross injustice to an industry which, far from being an incentive to immorality, exercises an influence for good in the education, enlightenment and amusement of the people. This is the class of person who witness a similar episode on the legitimate stage in my own country—England. They see "The Girl Who Took the Wrong Turning," or more recently "Baby Mine." True, the latter is farcical comedy—but still a bedroom scene! Concerning these they have nothing to say. No, it is the filmic drama; the story which portrays life as it is; as we know it to be, that is dubbed "immoral" or "derogatory."

The picture theater has since its inception been the victim of the Puritanical Conscience, of that large body of persons who positively delight in holding an extremely bad opinion of the majority of their fellow creatures, especially as regards what is euphonistically known as "purity," and who circulate foul charges bearing not a scintilla of truth.

All this can only be the outcome of an extremely morbid and prurient imagination. They think that mankind—and womankind—are incessantly seeking opportunities for evil of a certain kind, and that accordingly they require carefully watching. It is for this class of person that we reluctantly are obliged to spoil an excellent film; a film which by familiarizing the masses with the temptations of life, is going to make that same people contemptuous!

HIS AMBITION

I'd like to be an actor in a moving picture play
That is the man to be!
He steps from out his auto in a careless sort of way.
It looks mighty good ,you see.
Attired in evening raiment of the very latest style,
He's just the individual to attract a lady's smile,
With his shiny patent leathers and handsome silken tile—
Suppose I could pose for the pictures?

I want to be an actor in a moving picture play,
Far out there in the West.
Say, a Colonel in the Army, all ready for the fray,
With medals hung on my chest!
Wearing a bright uniform with sword by my side,
On a spirited steed—something I cannot abide—
I'd aid the handsome hero to rescue his bride—
Suppose I could pose for the pictures?

I wish to be an actor in a moving picture play.
Yes, become a cowboy bold!
Teach the bucking bronchos not to get too gay,
And search the hills for gold.
Ride out to the round-up with the other men,
Shoot up the desperate bandits in their gloomy den,
Lasso all vicious cattle and put them in a pen—
Suppose I could pose for the pictures?

I long to be an actor in a moving picture play.
That is the stuff for me!
Don't believe for a minute the life is just play,
It's as difficult as can be.
It takes a Booth or Barrett to delineate the parts,
To become an oily villain with appropriate starts,
Or as the trusty trapper, to dodge Indian darts—
Don't suppose I could pose for the pictures!

—William Lord Wright.

Open to Represent Good American Film Manufacturers for

England, English Colonies and Europe

Cable or Write Terms:

Universal Film Company, Ltd.

5 Denmark St., Charing Cross Rd., London, W. C.

Cable Address, "Ufilmco, London" 'Phone, 13674 Central

OUR MUSIC COLUMN

Conducted by C. W. Long

A. P. Harkins writes: It is only of late that I have tried "playing to the pictures," and it is in regard to this that I would like to ask you a question. In a dramatic picture where there are a great many changes of music, is it best to stop for a moment as the scene changes? I hardly know what to do in the matter. Please give me a little advice on the subject.

In regard to making a pause where the scene changes, I would not advise it, although sometimes a distinct pause is effective, but as a rule the music should be continuous. Finish each number as near as possible, when the picture will permit. Of course there are times when you have to make an abrupt change, but don't make a practice of it, as it makes your music of the "patchwork" class. It is also a good idea, if the picture is of a serious nature, to start your music for the change, in the sub-title, and in that manner pave the way for the change of scene and make it more readily understood.

* * * *

Cleveland, Ohio (name withheld by request) writes: I am a constant reader of your Moving Picture News and wish to have your opinion. I shall try to explain to the best of my ability, therefore if I may intrude by stating on page 23 of your issue of November 18th, I notice a write-up concerning Mr. William Loveman (alias Willie Loveman). In regard to same, I wish to ask if that was to criticise him or boost him? To my knowledge Mr. Loveman is quite mistaken in his statement. He says, for instance: "If a man places a ring on his intended's finger, forth comes 'Every Little Movement Has a Meaning of Its Own.'" Don't you think any sentimental piece or good rag is appropriate? Everyone in the audience is not apt to know that certain piece, so why not be more particular with a drama or some picture like "The Crusaders," "The Golden Wedding," "Hands Across the Sea," "The Fall of Troy," "Romeo and Juliet" or "David Copperfield" and not those silly pieces which almost any pianist can play without claiming to be such a great "Wagner."

I think one who plays good music such as the good picture requires is entitled to be published as a "good adapter," am I right or wrong? In Wagner's day he did not play such pieces as "I Don't Care." At his (Mr. Loveman's) way of playing, I presume he would play for that great picture "The Golden Wedding" as an opening, "Is Everybody Happy" just merely because it is the anniversary of an aged couple, and apparently happy. I don't see any sense in his write-up. Now, please let me know your clever opinion, and give those credit that deserve it. What I mean by good music is such as this: "Intermezzo," by Joh. Brahms; "Nocturne," by Fr. Chopin; "Ase's Death," by Edward Grieg from "Peer Gynt Suite," "Tarantelle," Op. 48, by Alex. Guilmant; "Berceuse," Op. 24, No. 2, by Liadow. Such operas as "Bohemian Girl," "Il Trovatore," "Kamennoi-Ostrow" by Rubinstein.

If you would not mention my name I would be very thankful.

Thanking you in advance, I am, yours truly.

Answer: First of all, the write-up in question must not have been read very thoroughly, or it would be plain that we were not responsible in any way for it, as it plainly states that it was taken from the columns of the Cleveland Leader. It was evident that the Leader intended to boost, and not criticise, Mr. Loveman's way of interpreting a picture. You are evidently sincere in your questions and we will try and be just as sincere in our reply. You ask if any sentimental piece or rag would not be just as good as "Every Little Movement Has a Meaning of Its Own" when a man places the ring on his intended's finger, if the proper selection was made a sentimental piece (if the picture was not a travesty or comedy, would be much better than "Every Little Movement," etc.—say such a piece as "Annie Laurie"—for just at this stage of the game a man (or woman) surely are sincere, and as the lyrics of "Annie Laurie" run, "Gave me her promise true," would be much better than "Every little Movement," etc.—but a rag, never. For instance, suppose you were to play the rag called "Stewed Prunes" or "Hard Boiled Eggs," you wouldn't want the audience to think the poor prospective man of the house would be fed on them for the rest of his natural life, would you? You say everyone in the audience is not apt to know that certain piece—if you are on the lookout for the proper music to accompany the picture with.

With the great amount of music that is being published and popularized now, there is absolutely no reason why you should select music that the majority of the audience is not familiar with. As the pianist you are the connecting link between the pictures and the audience, and if you are awake to the situation and intend to be "on the job" as you should be, you must at all times make the picture be as full of life as possible; make them speak as near as it is possible for music to do—and it is not possible to do this by playing rags, etc., to a sentimental portion of a picture just because such a piece as "Every Little Movement" seems "silly," as you say.

You ask, "Why not be more particular with a drama or picture like 'The Crusaders,'" etc.? If you intend to be a first-class moving picture pianist, and want to be classed among the best, you must realize it is the audience and not you who is to be satisfied, and it can only be done by playing each and every picture as well as you do another. The poorer the picture, the more pains you must take in its interpretation, for it needs help to make it as good as possible, and in a comedy, you must take care to bring out each and every little situation that the producer intended. When a comedy picture is on, don't try to make a funeral out of it. Go to it and make it a comedy (but do not burlesque it) and it will prove to be much more interesting to the patrons of the theater.

True, almost any pianist can play such a piece as "Every Little Movement" without "claiming to be such a great 'Wagner,'"—but that is not the point—interpretation of the picture is what is wanted, and not a classic rendition of some masterpiece to a picture not requiring it.

You say, "I think one who plays good music such as the good pictures require is entitled to be published as a 'good adapter.'" True in every sense of the word, but it is impossible to be a "good adapter" as you say without the fullest interpretation of the picture in each and every detail, no matter how minute.

No, "Wagner" did not play such pieces as "I Don't Care," neither does Paderewski, and neither of them would score a terrific hit playing for moving pictures—they couldn't surround them with the atmosphere needed to make them life-like.

No, I think you are inclined to be a little presumptuous. The chances are Mr. Loveman would play "Silver Threads Among the Gold" or "Love's Old Sweet Song" as an opening to "The Golden Wedding."

Your list of "good music" is all right, but use it where it is intended, and don't try to play music of this class entirely to pictures and expect to make good.

We will say, however, that Mr. Loveman seems to be throwing himself all of the bouquets when he states that "not many moving picture pianists are doing what I am doing." He is no doubt good, or the Leader would not have given him the write-up, but at the same time he should realize that the music field in motion picture work is a large one, and that there are many who are doing just as much as he is in the rendition of the proper music at the proper time for the pictures.

I SURE HAVE THOSE ANTI TRUST FILM PEOPLE ARE TREATIN ME GREAT FAMILY THEATRE
GOT A GOOD SHOW TO NIGHT
TICKETS
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED A.T.F. Co.
"Take a Chance, Old Sport"
"You've Taken So Many—Take Another"
BUT REMEMBER
You take no chance with us
26,000 ft. of New Film Weekly is the Reason
ANTI-TRUST FILM CO.
128 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.

MISS MILDRED HOLLAND

THE "MARVELOUS MILDRED" JOINS POWERS

Mildred Holland, Famous for "Power Behind the Throne," Adopts Film Stage

Miss Mildred Holland, that wonderful emotional star whose feats have made her famous as the "Marvelous Mildred," is the latest moving picture feature to be shanghaied from the ranks of the legitimate constellation. It is announced by the Powers Motion Picture Company that Miss Holland is now under contract to appear exclusively in their productions.

This announcement from Mr. Powers is looked upon in film circles as a forerunner of what he is now planning as regular releases from his studio. It is a widely known fact that only on the recent completion of his Duplex Studios has Mr. Powers come into possession of such adequate picture-making facilities as he has long cherished a desire for. Now that he has them, he is proceeding to startle the film world.

Miss Holland's most famous play, "The Power Behind the Throne," in which she has been applauded in almost every city in the country and which has won her a fortune, will be the first of her repertoire for release. This drama of Austrian nobility embraces one of the most powerful plots ever written, giving admirable play for Miss Holland's art and motion picture adaptation.

There is, perhaps, no more widely known star in the theatrical business to-day than Mildred Holland. She has toured the country for years in "The Power Behind the Throne," playing in the same cities season after season successively and to capacity. So remarkable has been Miss Holland's triumph in this play that it has become a classic. In fact, when one hears Miss Holland's name, "The Power Behind the Throne" invariably comes to mind. She is the only woman who ever starred in it, as she is the sole owner of the play.

The Powers Company is going to back up the production with a unique line of free advertising matter, which it might be well for exhibitors to apply for at once, as this material will be distributed only on a special list of requests, and it will be worth while writing for.

THE SOLAX COMPANY

SOLAX TO HAVE NEW PLANT—SPLENDID BEGINNING OF MONTHLY SPECIAL RELEASES

By Our "Roving Commissioner"

THE trees were hung with festoons of downy snow, and all the world was aglow of sunlight which threatened with destruction the great white mantle which had but a few hours before been flung about mother earth by her frigid visitor, as I was being whirled in the Solax auto to the Flushing railroad station, with the dear little "Solax Kid" at my side. The little girl threw kisses to me with her tiny hands as I disappeared within.

MME. ALICE BLACHE
President, Solax Co.

As I sat in the waiting room I jotted down some of the present-day history of the Solax Motion Picture Company—the picture company whose emblem is the rising sun—whose pride it is to be ever a shining light in the industry, as is his great solar majesty in the heavens.

The appropriateness of the emblem is signified in the first of their monthly special releases, which it was our pleasure to view some few days ago, and which from an artistic and technical point of view is a very masterpiece. But of this more anon.

Rumor told us that a beautiful new plant was about to be constructed by the Solax Company—constructed over on the Jersey side where so many other moving picture companies have hied them because Jersey is beautiful and affords ample and splendid material for exterior scenes. It was with the object of gaining authentic information on the subject that I made my visit to Flushing to the quarters of the Solax Company there.

The new Solax plant and studio I find will be erected at Fort Lee. Twelve lots of ground have been purchased by them, comprising almost an acre; on this will be constructed a building 62 x 62. This building will be two and three stories. On the lower floor will be the offices of the company, on the second in all probability will be the dressing rooms, and the third floor will serve possibly as a scene room. To one side of the above-mentioned department, but still within the dimensions of the building proper, will be the glass studio, which will be splendid and spacious, affording ample room for the setting of scenes. "Deep pictures," said Mr. Magie, "are what we will strive after," and the accommodations of this new studio will overcome every difficulty which besets the motion picture producer so far as the scenic portion of the picture is concerned.

The erection of a new studio and plant has been made necessary by the rapid increase in trade of the Solax Company. Though their accommodations at Flushing were quite spacious enough for ordinary purposes, still as business was found to have outgrown their environment, the condition of rapid growth had to be met and accommodated.

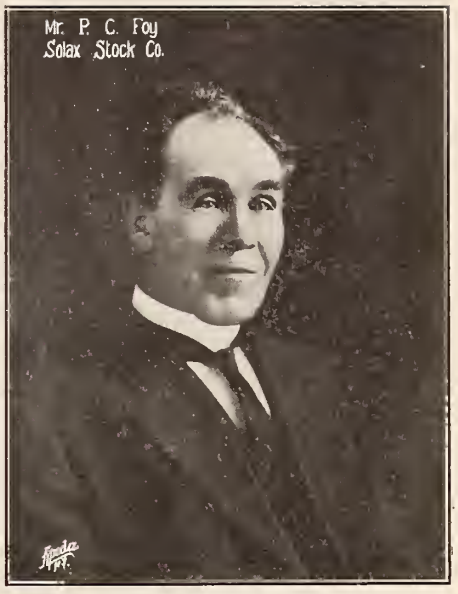
Another object of my visit to Flushing was to gain some further information concerning the picture mentioned above, and of the able directress to whose capable work the beauty and perfection is in a large measure due. Madame Blache, as a woman, stands alone in her unique position of president and directress of a moving picture company. Under her supervision the entire workings of the company progress. For twelve years she was with the Gaumont Company in Paris, gaining with them very valuable experience. But although Madame Blache is now head of the Solax Company, her husband, Mr. H. Blache, representing the Gaumont Company in New York, the two companies must not be conflicted. It has been a common habit, we find, to confuse the two on account of the former relationship of Madame Blache with the Gaumont Company and the present relationship of her husband with the same company. Though the two companies are operating under the supervision of two members of the same family they are constitutionally and essentially two distinct and different concerns. The confusion of two business concerns is troublesome to both parties in that the one is constantly being interrogated with regard to things which belong entirely to the other party, and time and patience are thus encroached upon.

The picture of which we have spoken is entitled, "The Violin Makers of Nuremburg," and is one of the most beautifully staged and enacted that we have ever seen. The scenery for the same was painted by Mr. H. Menesier, of the Beaux Arts, Paris, and scenic artist for the Solax Company. These scenes were painted from pictures brought home by Mr. and Mrs. Blache from the town of Nuremburg, where they visited, and therefore, the scenic effects are the genuine thing. The story was arranged by Madame Blache from the play by that name. The scenes are deep and the light and shade effects beautiful. The picture is full of pathos, and the atmosphere of reality thrown around the scenes by the capable Solax Stock Company is wonderful. Every month we are to look for just such a masterpiece from the Solax Company. They have in mind now something that will call for very fine orchestra effects, but of that more

MR. AND MRS. HERBERT BLACHE HAVING FUN IN THE SWITZERLAND ALPS

EDWARD WARREN
Director Solax Co.

EDGAR LEWIS
Director Solax Co.



MR. P. C. FOY
Solax Stock Co.

at another time; suffice it for the present to know that the public as well as the exhibitors have something to look forward to from the Solax.

Accompanying this article are illustrations showing members of their stock company, and the artistic and executive faculty of the company. Madame Blache, as I have before said, is the president of the company; Mr. George F. Magie, secretary; Mr. Lavine, publicity agent, and Mr. Edward Warren and Mr. Edgar Lewis, stage directors, all under the efficient supervision of Madame Blache.

Madame Blache is a wonderful woman, having business ability as well as artistic ability. She is one fine example of what a woman can do if given a square chance in life. She is both dignified and gracious, lending the dignity of her personality to the manipulation of the company of which she is the head. Her directors, Mr. Lewis and Mr. Warren, are both capable men of wide experience, both in stage management and acting, both in having worked for some of the largest theatrical managers in the business in the capacity of stage manager, and appearing with such stars as Lillian Russell, Viola Allen, Robert Mantell, and many others. Tiny Magda Foy, the little pet of the Solax Company, and loved by all who have the pleasure of meeting this diminutive miss of six years, is one of the cleverest children in the profession. "The Violin Makers of Nuremburg" was completed in three days; of course, after all scenic arrangements had been previously prepared. This was made possible, Madame Blache declares, on account of the specially talented company which she has to work with.

The construction work of the new plant at Fort Lee will soon be commenced. All plans have been already drawn up, as will be seen from the accompanying illustrations.

MISS BLANCHE CORNWALL
Solax Stock Co.

LITTLE MAGDA FOY
"The Solax Kid"

MISS MARIAN SWAYNE
Solax Stock Co.

MR. GLADDEN JAMES
Solax Stock Co.

MRS. MAGDA FOY
Solax Stock Co.

MISS FANNY SIMPSON
Solax Stock Co.

SOLAX HAS AN INTERESTING NEWCOMER

Somewhere back in the snow and covered regions of Alaska, a place three days and three nights away from a civilized habitation, Miss Marian Swayne's father, who is a mine owner, reads about his daughter's adventures in the fascinating realm of moving pictures. "Big Bill" Swayne is a miner who is known from Seattle to Nome. He takes great pride in his accomplished daughter. Many a tempestuous night he spends around the camp fire with his hearty and begrimed comrades reading press notices or showing photographs of his "gal down yonder East."

MISS MARIAN SWAYNE

Miss Swayne is a newcomer in motion pictures. She recently joined the Solax Stock Company, and is showing great promise. She is comely and debonair and has the appearance of a young girl fresh as a morning rosebud. She is vivacious and has a manner and presence that should make her a favorite.

Although Marian Swayne is very young, she has had much experience in the legitimate. She has been across the country and played in stock from Seattle to Philadelphia. She also had one year in vaudeville on the K. & P. circuit.

Like other women, Miss Swayne is a bundle of inconsistencies. Although she is of the home-loving, back-to-the-farm kind, she loves excitement. The moving picture studio, she says, nourishes her craving for excitement without disturbing her home-loving disposition.

"In the Solax Studio," she declared, "I always have felt at home. The home spirit permeates the place. This spirit is perhaps fostered by our getting together at lunch hour and, like a big family, eating all at the same table the delicious food which Madame Blache so generously provides.

"Unlike work on the legitimate, one has a good deal of time to themselves. For example, I can spend my evenings any way I like. I don't have to experience the inconvenience of hustling and packing to catch trains. The actress who wants to develop her art should pose for moving pictures. There she has no excuse for nerves, headaches or indigestion. The life is as regular as one would want it to be."

Miss Swayne has appeared to advantage in the Solax productions of "An Interrupted Elopement," "Husbands Wanted," "The Little Shoe," and "A Revolutionary Romance."

Her father in the cold regions of Alaska will perhaps read this notice with a swelling heart or moistened eyes—but he may rest assured that his daughter is doing well and that her ambitions to be a good comedienne will be realized.

THE CHAMPION FILM COMPANY

Robert G. Fowler, the well-known aviator, is now on his way from Beaumont, Texas, to New Orleans, La., and further parts, accompanied by our camera man. Pictures will be taken from the aeroplane that will be of great scenic and topical value. We have obtained the exclusive privilege for this most interesting and up-to-the-minute undertaking, which entails no small cost.

Gus Mager has granted us the exclusive privilege of reproducing the famous Sherlocko, assisted by Watso in Moving Pictures. We need not dwell on the comic qualities of this subject, nor how well we are taking up this feature.

The Champion Company, who have had their offices for some time at 12 East Fifteenth street, inform us that they will, within the next few days, move to more commodious quarters, having taken a suite of offices at 145 West Forty-fifth street.

"BUFFALO JONES" PICTURES

"Buffalo Jones" called upon us and said he is bringing out a reel of the most astonishing pictures showing the conquest of the animal kingdom and of which full announcement will be made in the next issue of this publication. These pictures will be shown at Carnegie Hall on the evening of December 22d for public exhibition, and at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, in the afternoon and evening of December 23d.

THE POISON CUP

BY T. W. JOHNSON

Adapted from Synopsis of Reliance Picture

JOHN, dear, may I ask you a question?" said Mary Adams to her husband one morning at breakfast.

"Go ahead, but I don't know whether I'll answer it," replied John without looking up from his paper.

Mary sat silent for a moment, twirling a spoon between her fingers. When she spoke it was very quietly.

"John, I want to speak about some of your friends—some of the men who come here to see you. They—they don't look like men you should associate with."

John threw down the paper impatiently and jumped to his feet.

"Now, look here, Mary," he said angrily, "none of this. You don't understand anything about these matters. Those men are business friends of mine."

"But, John, they don't look honest. I am sure they are not honest. They will get you into trouble if you continue to associate with them."

John laughed, and his wife felt, somehow, as if he had struck her.

As he was leaving the dining-room he turned and said: "There are a lot of things you don't understand, Mary, and you might as well let them alone."

When he had gone Mary sat still at the table. She was not exactly thinking—rather she was experiencing a number of feelings that she could not have expressed in words.

Mary had been very young and inexperienced when she married John Adams seven years before. She had given him her whole heart and to her he had seemed to be the embodiment of love and goodness. He did not have a profession, but he was never without a good clerical position, and to Mary that was all one could desire; and when he had finally risen to head clerk of the largest jewelry establishment in the city she thought their good fortune was without bounds.

But, somehow, for the last few years she had not been so happy. John had become so quiet—almost secretive—and a gulf seemed to be widening between them, and then lately those strange companions of his. She did not like it—she did not understand it, but when she spoke of it he always grew very angry with her. He grew angry very quickly these days. Sometimes she thought he was sick, but he assured her he was not—although she had seen him take something when he thought she wasn't looking.

She determined to watch more closely, for she knew something was wrong.

One Saturday evening after John had finished his supper in silence he told Mary she might as well go to bed early, for he would not be home until very late. So when Mary had washed the dishes she went upstairs to bed.

About two o'clock she wakened suddenly with a start. She was not conscious of having heard a noise, but she felt afraid and nervous. She thought perhaps John had come in and that was what had wakened her, but as she waited she could not shake off a feeling of uneasiness and dread.

As she lay listening to the night noises outside there came to her a noise from inside the house. Unmistakably it was a door opening very, very softly and then closing again.

Mary was not a coward; in fact, she was braver than most women, but it is not a pleasant thing to lie in bed and know that someone who has no right to do so is prowling around your house.

With sudden determination Mary crept softly out of bed and slipped on her dressing-gown. Stealthily she glided through the hall and down the stairs.

When she reached the lower hall she could see beneath the dining-room door a narrow streak of light. Yes, there was someone there. She listened breathlessly, her heart beating so that she was afraid it could be heard.

Someone was talking in the dining-room, but she could not catch the words. There must be two or there would be no talking.

Mary listened more closely. Where had she heard that voice? Could it be?—yes! It was one of the men who had come so often to see her husband! She almost gave a cry of delight. Now she could prove to John that she was right about those men—that they were rascals—and then he would have nothing more to do with them. But she must see. Merely hearing could not prove.

Between the parlor and dining-room was an archway at which hung heavy portieres. On the parlor side the opening between the rooms was mostly filled by the piano. Close to the remaining space at the end of the piano Mary crept. The men were talking.

"That was a neat job," said the voice Mary had heard before. "You get better every job you tackle. And this time, when it was your own store—how do you keep so calm?"

"This way," answered another voice. Mary leaned against the piano for support. Could it be—oh, no!

The first man was speaking. "Dope?" he asked and the other answered that he could not do without it.

With a cry Mary pulled apart the curtains and almost fell into the room. Yes, it was John! There he stood by the table with his companion, and between them a little pile of jewels.

At the noise of Mary's entrance John raised his revolver. They stood staring at each other. At last he spoke:

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" he asked.

"Oh, John, you have robbed—you are a thief! You have robbed men who trusted you, too! What—what made you do it?" sobbed Mary.

"None of that," growled her husband. "I asked what you are going to do about it?"

She did not answer, but looked straight into his eyes.

"You won't squeal if I've got to use this to prevent you," he cried, coming toward her with the revolver raised.

Mary sprang to catch his arm and twist the revolver from him. A shot was fired and John fell to the floor.

"John!" she cried, "John!" But he did not answer. She turned to speak to the other man, but he was gone.

She must go for a doctor, she thought. So, without further preparation, she ran from the house. She ran first in one direction and then in another, calling. But she knew no one could hear, for the house was outside the town and there were no near neighbors.

The trolley ran close by, perhaps it would come soon. She would wait for that. So she ran to the crossing. Oh, why didn't it come? Perhaps she had better walk.

Yes, she would run to town. But then the trolley might come along and pass her and reach town first.

Back and forth she ran, not knowing what to do, until worn out with fright and exposure she dropped unconscious by the roadside.

Just before dawn she regained consciousness and got on her feet again. But she was chilled through and her head was very hot and she did not know why she was there. Still she felt that she must go somewhere for some reason—she did not know where nor why. So she wandered on and on as fast as her bruised and bleeding feet would carry her.

* * * * * *

"Can't you remember anything, dear?"

The speaker was an elderly woman of refinement and culture. She sat beside the bed of a young woman of twenty-five, holding her hand and patting it encouragingly from time to time.

The young woman was Mary Adams. She was pale but fast recovering from a severe illness which had left her in a peculiar state—her mind was perfectly bright and normal excepting that she had lost her memory of her past life. She did not know her name nor where she came from or how she came to be wandering in Mrs. Allen's grounds in only her nightdress and dressing-gown, a month before.

Mrs. Allen had grown fond of Mary and had tried in every possible way to bring back her memory so that she might restore her to her friends, but always Mary answered, "No, dear Mrs. Allen, I cannot remember anything about myself. But sometimes I have a feeling that I would rather not remember. I think I must have been unhappy in my other life."

So Mary stopped trying to remember and soon she was well again and took her place in the Allen household.

She was Mrs. Allen's companion, and when she fell ill some months after Mary's arrival it was Mary who took constant care of her, and when, after a few weeks' illness, she passed quietly away, Mary felt that she had lost her only friend.

She was sitting in Mrs. Allen's sitting-room when the young doctor came in. Quietly he laid his hand on her shoulder.

"I know what you are thinking, but it is not so," he said. "I shall be your friend always if you will let me."

She looked up at him gratefully, but something in his eyes made her drop her own.

"I was not going to speak now," he said, "but you are so lonely that I cannot help it. I love you. You must know without my saying it."

"No, I did not know," said Mary with genuine astonishment. "I never dreamed of such a thing. I have no name. I don't know who I am. You cannot marry a girl like me."

"I can and I will, if the girl will only let me. Will she?"

For a moment Mary hesitated and then she whispered "Yes."

* * * * * *

When Mary married Dr. Morris she thought she was the happiest woman in the world; when her baby boy was laid in her arms it seemed her cup of happiness was running over. She often thought that if other women had long years of past life to think over, she had all the more time to give to the glorious present. To sit in the nursery beside the baby's crib, sewing and thinking of her happiness and the little one's future—that was more than enough.

She was sitting thus one morning while the doctor was making his calls.

A maid entered and told her there was a gentleman downstairs to see her. When asked who it was the maid said he did not give his name.

The mother kissed her boy and went down to the parlor. In the shadow of the room stood a man with his back turned toward her. Her heart quickened its beat though she could not tell why. The man turned toward her and looked at her in a way that made her grope for the memory of past years.

"What is it you wish?" she asked in a low voice.

A smile that was not pleasant to see played over the man's face for a moment.

"Have you forgotten your husband, Mary Adams?" he said.

She did not move nor speak. A horrible, unknown dread was settling upon her. Was this an awful nightmare? No, she knew that it was not. Something of the past was slowly dawning upon her mind.

"You thought I was dead that night, but I wasn't. I wasn't shot bad, but I struck my head and was knocked senseless. When I found you'd gone I thought it was just as well for me to take a little trip. So I locked up the house and skipped." The man spoke in a matter-of-fact way, little thinking or caring what the woman was suffering.

Mary stood gazing at the man as he spoke—struggling, struggling to remember what she felt was the truth. Suddenly something seemed to break within her brain. It was as if the door of her past life had been violently flung open. She gave a faint cry and would have fallen to the floor had not the man stepped forward and caught her, none too gently, by the arm.

"Here, none of that," he said. "We might as well get down to business. You've got two husbands. Now what are you going to do about it?"

"What can I do! Oh, God, show me the way!" she cried in agony.

"You needn't call on God. I'll show you the way all right," said John Adams.

She looked at him almost hopefully and he continued: "Get me five thousand dollars and I'll disappear and you'll never hear of me again."

Mary looked at him for a moment and then said, "What good would that do? Even if I could give you the money I must leave my baby's father. You are my legal husband, not he. But I cannot. I will not do it! Oh, why did you come back?"

An evil look came into the eyes of John Adams. "You better take my way," he said. "I can make a rotten lot of trouble for you if I choose."

"Well—well, give me time to think about it. I cannot tell right from wrong now. Please go now, for Dr. Morris will come back soon. Only go now and I'll see you to-night."

"All right. I guess you'll decide to take my way. I'll be back to-night sure."

When John had gone Mary stood perfectly still where he had left her until she heard the doctor's latchkey in the door. Then she slipped through the dining-room and up the backstairs to her own room, leaving word with a maid that she had a headache and was not to be disturbed.

All afternoon she lay upon her bed thinking. Her heart seemed dead, only her brain was alive. So calm did she seem that Dr. Morris noticed nothing unusual when he came in to kiss her good-bye before going to make his evening calls.

What was the best thing to do? What would most spare her beloved husband and her baby? Those were the thoughts that ran over and over in her mind.

Suddenly her heart and her breath seemed to stop.

Then she grew cold. She closed her eyes and lay back quietly among her pillows. The way had been made clear. There was but one way. Why had she been so long in seeing it?

She arose and dressed herself ready—ready for what?

Softly she went into the doctor's private office, and, pale but unafraid, she searched until she found a certain bottle containing a white powder. She put a pinch into a glass and filled that half full of water. Then she raised it slowly to her lips. But no! Not yet, she thought. She must see her baby once more.

Carrying the glass with her, she went to her own sitting-room and after setting the glass on a shelf behind her work-basket, she slipped quietly into the nursery. One kiss for her boy and then she would do what she must do.

When John Adams came the maid took him into the parlor and went in search of her mistress. From room to room she went, never thinking she might be in the doctor's office.

John Adams grew impatient. He began to think a trick had been played on him. He knew Dr. Morris was out, for he saw him go before he came in. He had had drink enough to make him reckless, so he decided to find out why Mary did not come.

When he reached the top of the stairs the only door he saw standing open was the door of Mary's sitting-room. There was a light there, so he went in.

When a woman is bidding good-bye to her baby she is not very conscious of time. John had been drinking enough so that he became more and more thirsty as he waited. He walked around the room looking at everything. Then he saw the glass setting by the work-basket, on the shelf. He looked at it; he smelled it, and seeing no color and smelling no odor, he thought it was water, and drank it at a gulp.

With a hoarse cry he sank to the floor.

Mary ran from the nursery and found him lying quiet.

"Oh, God, what have I done?" she cried. "I have killed him! I have killed him!"

She heard running in the hall, and in a moment Dr. Morris was at her side. She would have thrown herself into his arms, but he bent over the dead man. When he knew there was no hope he turned to his wife and led her from the room.

"Dearest," he said, "this is beyond my understanding, but I do not doubt you for one moment. When you can, tell me what it means."

So Mary, clinging to him, hold him all, and he, with an understanding born of love, forgave her for her attempted crime; and very gently he showed her how she also must forgive herself.

With a full knowledge of her past and a new faith in each other, they turned to face the future.

Yuma Cal.—C. Olcester has the contract for the erection of a theater on Main street for Miss A. Desmond.

Gaffney, S. C.—The Humphries moving picture theater has been sold by W. V. Humphries to P. M. Morgan.

I wish to announce to my patrons that I will no longer handle the NATIONAL EXCLUSIVE PROGRAMME, as I now feel confident after careful investigation that I can not furnish a good programme with their goods, and I wish to thank one and all for their past favors. I shall hereafter confine myself to feature and commercial stock and do business at the same address.

WILLIAM COHEN,
503½ Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

American Film is Chemically Treated By Secret Process

Which explains the great many letters we constantly receive from exchanges saying "YOUR FILM IS SHOWN IN MORE THEATERS THAN ANY OTHER," and that, you will admit, is mighty good business for any exchange.

THE REASON is a SECRET PROCESS that lengthens the life of American films, prevents them from becoming brittle and retains their brilliance.

But—if American pictures DIDN'T HAVE THE BUSINESS "KICK"—didn't INTEREST and HOLD, the best photography in the world wouldn't make up for it.

The same keen business insight that makes American films distinctive in the technical sense makes them undisputed peers in every other.

THE STORY
PHOTOGRAPHIC TECHNIQUE
PANTOMIME

are three great essentials closely watched in all AMERICAN productions.

"The Last Notch"

(Release Date, December 18th. Approx. Length 1000 feet.)

An aged sheriff, deposed by a younger man, has counted a notch for every desperado killed on the butt of his gun. Sorrowfully he goes to live with his married granddaughter, much to the disgust of her husband. An outlaw, terrorizing the community, is too much for the new sheriff, so the old man dons the harness again and adds the seventh and last notch to his gun. Who the outlaw is and his connection with the old sheriff makes one of those intensely interesting and vivid dramas characteristic of the American.

"The Gold Lust"

(Release Date, December 21st. Approx. Length 1000 feet.)

When the local bank was robbed, the old ranger and his prospective son-in-law give chase. They capture the outlaw and recover the gold. With the lust upon him, the younger man kills the ranger and returns in search of the murdered man's daughter. There are cross-currents, misplaced love, and other story elements that lend an absorbing interest to a picture truly Western.

American Film Mfg. Co.
BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK CHICAGO, ILL.

WHY THE CHECK WAS GOOD

Imp Release, December 11

At twenty minutes of twelve, as recorded in the illustration, our hero drops the cue he is handling and hurries home, to be rebuked by his father and turned adrift for his bad behavior, with a check in his pocket. He is too proud to cash the check. It falls into the hands of a man who befriends the lad when he is down and out.

The boy goes West and starts a new life and becomes a prosperous bank official.

The man who had befriended him falls low in the world.

But he has retained the check which does not belong to him, and so as a last resort he forges the signature to it.

There occurs an exciting situation. The owner of the check and the signature is sent for. He recognizes his benefactor in the would-be forger. Gratitude is strong upon him. He says the check is good and the money is paid over to the old fellow.

As showing the essential goodness that is part of human nature at times, this beautiful little story will no doubt be highly appreciated by admirers of the Imp pictures.

Cincinnati, Ohio., November 30, 1911.

Moving Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:—We wish to inform you that Mr. C. K. Metcalf, who has been in our shipping department for some time, is no longer connected in any way with this company, and we wish to state that no contracts or deals of any kind made by him will be recognized by this company.

Yours respectfully,
THE CINCINNATI-BUCKEYE FILM CO.,
Per McMahan & Jackson.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank P. Smith is reported as to erect a theater for the Pantages Vaudeville Circuit at a cost of $600,000.

FOR SALE	Each
3 Continuous Printing Machines (includes motor)	$50.00
7 W. B. Hausman Printing Machines	100.00
8 Prevost Printing Machines—Head only	50.00
Or with Light Attachment	75.00
1 Itala Printing Machine	50.00
2 Prevost Perforating Machines (large)	150.00
1 Prevost Perforating Machine (small)	100.00
2 Itala Perforating Machines	250.00
9 Carlton Perforating Machines	25.00
6 Schneider Perforating Machines	225.00
8 Motors, ⅛ H.P	5.00
2 Gaumont Cameras (Beater type, including lens and 8 magazines)	250.00
6 Cutler-Hammer Dimmers for Printing Machines	1.00
1 Pathe Projecting Machine complete	50.00
1 Gaumont Projecting Mechanism with magazines	35.00

EVERYTHING GUARANTEED IN GOOD WORKING CONDITION

CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES
540 WEST 21ST ST., NEW YORK CITY

NESTOR FILM CO.

"The Law of the Range" is the title of the first Nestor picture made in California. It is said that for spirited action and beautiful scenery this Western picture surpasses the best Nestor has ever done. "The Law of the Range" will be released Wednesday, December 13.

What's all this talk about handsome men posing in the various Independent companies? Kerrigan, of the American; Greenleaf, of the Reliance; Karr, of the Solax, and the scores of other Apollo-Adonises of motion pictures, look to your laurels, for here comes Nestor with an array of truly manly men, captained by two of the handsomest and most dashing men who ever drew breath, namely, Gordon Sackville and Harold A. Lockwood. The former will soon be seen in the Nestor Monday releases, while the latter has already made his debut in the Nestor Western pictures.

Though the new Nestor factory, at Bayonne, N. J., is practically finished so far as the building proper is concerned, the installation of the most up-to-date equipments will not be an accomplished fact until after Christmas.

David Horsley is so enchanted with California that he seems loath to return East. With three companies to look after, we doubt that he has much time for relaxation.

QUILL OPENS EASTERN OFFICE

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 8, 1911.

Tom H. Quill, general manager of the World's Best Film Company, has opened an office in Springfield, Mass. Mr. Josepe Spero, formerly of W. E. Greene Film Exchange, Boston, has been appointed manager of this office. Mr. Spero's past experience in the film business speaks well for the future business for the World's Best Film Company's Eastern office.

St. Louis, Mo.—Imperial Theater Co.; capital, $2,000; Louis A. Cella, John H. Havlin and J. H. Marks.

Youngstown, Ohio.—Plans have been prepared for a new theater building to be erected in the rear of the Century building on Walnut street.

Waterproof Films

DON'T BE DISCOURAGED

Noah was 600 years old when he awoke to the advantages of waterproofing. Then he built an Ark and saved himself and stock from destruction.

LET US SAVE YOU

By waterproofing your stock of films (either new or old). Then you wash them occasionally with soap and water and see how much longer they last in clean, pliable, "first run condition."

National Waterproof Film Co.

Patentees of Process and Machinery
4202 W. ADAMS STREET, CHICAGO

CINES CO.
OF ROME

ITALIAN-TURKISH WAR
No. 2

The SECOND SERIES containing the aviators, etc., will be RELEASED ABOUT DECEMBER 7. In preparation, the "SEARCHLIGHT," a war story taken in Tripoli. SEND FOR SYNOPSIS.

445 BROOME ST.
NEW YORK

Telegraphs, Cines New York Telephone, Spring 9232

HAVE YOUR

POSTERS MOUNTED

IN

POSTER STYLE

They are mounted on muslin and Tacked on Roller and Moulding. Hundreds of Thousands of similar Paper Sheets have been mounted in this way. Some call it Roller or Map Style, as they hang on wall.

Poster, Show Card and Map Mounter E. C. BRIDGMAN
86 Warren St., New York City

AN INTERVIEW WITH THE MOVING PICTURE PIANIST

He Expiates Upon The Wrong Kind of "Indian Pictures

"I can tell you I'm awfully sore on some of the pictures they're putting on nowadays," observed the Moving Picture Pianist. "Not enough attention is given to the modern scenario. It's a shame, too."

"What's the kick?" we inquired.

"Oh, the Indian Jinx," resumed the Pianist, his brow wrinkled, "I saw one here the other afternoon that made me feel as if I'd like to crack some author over the dome. The day is past for the conventional blood-and-thunder Western Big Chief film. They're all the same. Old Hatchet face, the last of the Toolchests, has a beautiful daughter. While out picking cranberries she finds Lieutenant Canteen wounded, under a spreading chestnut tree. You see, the lieutenant was reciting 'The Maiden's Prayer' aloud, and it frightened his horse. He was thrown to the Mossy Hillock right in Beautiful Onawangamanga's cranberry path.

"She puts his manly head on her knee, gives him a drink of White Rock and falls in love with his uniform. When the lieutenant recovers, he is all wrapped up in buckskin, like a special edition of one of Fennimore Cooper's books.

"While she is putting him on his horse, and doing other little side chores, to patch out the scene, a telegram from the Old Fort drops from his dinner jacket, and when she glances it over, she learns with horror that the lieutenant has been ordered to round up her father's braves that same night.

"There is a tearful farewell, and Onawangamanga watches her brave hero from a picturesque rise of ground, until he disappears over the Western horizon or something else equally as good.

"But the telegram. Ah! Ha! It is written in code, as such messages really are, but the Indian Maiden, having attended night school in Boston, readily deciphers it, and hits the trail for dad's camp, situated hard a-port of a thriving and prosperous Denver canning factory.

"After applying another coat of beetle nut juice, Ona, etc. rousts Old Hatchetface out of his tepee. You can't be sure of what is happening, but it's a safe gamble that the daughter is reading the letter aloud and warning father to kick up some tall timber dust.

"He summons a full cast of warriors, and leads in the opening steps of the latest thing in grizzly bears or Harlem shindigs. When they're all tired of waltzing, the old gent colors his meerschaum for another five minutes, while the producing manager picks out a nice, fat, healthy piece of ground for his climax chase.

"The Indian girl steps out of the picture, and during her absence who should be captured but the young lieutenant. There seems to be no good excuse why he should journey so far unaccompanied, but they get him just the same and lash him to a stunted black haw.

"There is nothing but something to do after this. In a night session of the moving picture, Indian Young Chief's Christian Association, the ayes have it that the lieutenant shall be served as goulash, with special spices and a red pepper.

"Old Hatchetface rustles around in the brush and returns with a neat assorted line of pine fagots and stove kindling. These are placed at the feet of the helpless young lieutenant, who appreciates the fact that he is in for a roasting.

"Honest, now, haven't you seen all this yourself? Haven't you watched the beautiful squaw return from a shopping trip, only to discover the one man she loves in all the world done up like a bundle of clothes line rope and father just touching off the brush?

"She does not intend to allow him to die. Oh, no. For he must appear as the ranchman's son, Clifford Sterling, in next week's release, entitled 'Purple Fawn's Revenge' or 'Who Put Cloves in Mother's Wigwam?'

"Here is about where I get in on the shivery music. I always do it better on days I've forgotten my overcoat and throw a chill between bars.

"The Indian Maid accuses Young Ostrich Feather, of the adjoining tribe, that has a name like a Florida Pullman, of grossly insulting her, and while father is mussing up O. F.'s war paint, Onawangamanga slips up behind the lieutenant and chews off a couple of yards of hemp, thus liberating him.

"She selects a nobby brown mare from the stables and tells the lieutenant to get a hustle while there's some still in stock. Just then Old Hatchetface gets wise to the rough stuff that's being pulled off right at his own doorstep by one of the family, and the girl is compelled to follow on another horse.

"The recipe for the next set is as easy, and as self-evident as making a Welsh rarebit.

"To one lieutenant and one Indian girl, riding horseback, add five pieces of rough road, two trails through rocks and running water, and a tablespoonful of pine trees. When boiling, mix in a mountain stream, a couple of well seasoned fallen logs, and a pinch of red dust. Cook on a moderate oven until done. Garnish with alkali, moss and brown toning and serve hot.

"Father has it up his sleeve, not only to tomahawk the lieutenant's expression, but to have revenge upon his child for her ill-timed love. The tribe follow in hot pursuit over as much private property as can be annexed. It is always permissible, and lends a touch of reality, especially in a Wild West picture of Buffalo Bill's day, to snap the tag end of a trolley car in the left up-stage, or, if this is not convenient, the director's automobile will do. The Sioux 30, with side doors and hand-painted carburetor having been old stuff during the early forties.

"The lieutenant is finally overtaken, ditto the squaw, and father tucks his napkin under his chin for the big feed. The army officer has a hand-to-hand knife battle with some select Indian stock, killing several, who, if they lie still are permitted to smoke until the close of the performance.

"Overpowered, helpless, all hope gone, the lieutenant sees some of the gallant boys approaching. Each supplied with a modern Colt, the whites come out victorious, thanks to the lieutenant, who carefully dressed for the part in a bloody bandage, kills a few more, just to keep his conscience clear.

"I tear off a yard and a half of "Poets and Peasants' while the lieutenant finds Onawangamanga and graciously condescends to permit her to die down the front of his new uniform, her father having completed a last sweet revenge. Oh, they're classy little epics of the West, these Indian films."

"But the public demands them," we argued, "and, incidentally, some wonderful photography is being done, to say nothing of exceptionally well written scenarios."

"Humph," growled the Pianist, "I'm not putting the kibosh on the Indian graft as a whole; I was simply trying to impress upon you that a director can't hurriedly jot down a plot on his cuff, while coming from breakfast, and expect to get away with it. We have no authentic information to the effect that Shakespeare dashed off "The Merchant of Venice" on the bottom of an ale mug during a wait for a Brooklyn local, or that Sardou dictated his tragedies to a blonde typewriter as relaxation, his pet barber giving him a shave the while. No, sir-e-e; this Indian scenario writing is as much an art as fitting John Drew with a new light comedy or making Dave Warfield happy over a new role. Moving picture audiences are wise beyond their years. They can't grow hilariously excited over watching twenty rented Indians tiring truck horses on a wild and desperate trail, ten or twenty feet from the new Carnegie library at Hackensack, N. J.

"I know there are companies doing fine work right out there where the first Indian sprouted and took root, but it's the infant or truck garden variety of Indian film, about as near what is should be as a Burbank crabapple resembles a Swiss chalet that gets my chin-whiskered nanny."

"Nevertheless, these Indian films are educational, wouldn't you say. They acquaint people with the Wild West."

"My son," terminated the Pianist, "when the average well dressed, well groomed, electric-lighted and hot water plumbing Big Chief sees what the directors are doing to him in moving pictures, he thanks creation that he belongs to a dying race."

THE KICKERS BOOST

By Carl F. Miller, Fremont, Ohio

A great many persons who read the heading of my article will wonder what I mean by calling it "The Kickers Boost." A kicker I will admit I am, but my kicks and criticisms, I believe, if read by the manufacturers, will do a whole lot of good if the manufacturer tries to avoid in his future releases the things I have seen fit to criticize in his past releases; therefore do I believe, as the old saying goes, that every knock is a boost.

I desire to call attention to a few of the things I have noticed in my trip around to the various picture houses this week. In one trust house there was being shown on the canvas a picture of a burglar trying to gain entrance to a house and one of the occupants hearing him comes rushing out on the porch with a lamp in his hand. Now there would not seem to be anything strange or unreal in this had the manufacturer tinted his film, but fact of the matter is the scene was evidently a daylight scene and caused persons in the audience to wonder if the burglar was trying to break into this house in broad daylight and if so what was the reason for the occupant of the house to come out on the porch with a lighted lamp in his hand. This one scene spoiled what otherwise would have been a good picture.

In another Trust picture a young man wearing a dark suit meets a young lady and starts to escort her to her home. The next scene shows them arriving at the young lady's home, the same young man still her escort, but this time togged out in a light suit. Is our audience supposed not to notice this sort of thing or should they bring their imaginative powers into action and try and make themselves believe that the aforesaid young lady waited patiently upon a street corner while Mr. Beau Brummel took a run home and changed his togs? Another picture showed a burglar about to enter a house. This burglar was wearing a great big wide leather belt and was shown raising the window. The next picture showed an interior scene and the burglar entering the room through the window but my what a change had taken place Instead of the great big wide leather belt his trousers were held in place by a piece of rope, and still the manufacturers expect the public to fall for this kind of stuff. Some of the scenes one sees enacted in some of the Western pictures almost drive an exhibitor crazy. For instance, in my own theater the following was pulled on the poor unsuspecting audience: An Indian has stolen a squaw from another tribe; he takes her to a lonely spot in the mountains and ties her to a tree, that is, he backs her up to the tree, puts her hands behind her and then takes a rope and wraps it about her hands and body, and when he turns away from her the rope falls to the ground but still the squaw stands there as though she was tied securely. Oh, what wouldn't I have been willing to give if the manufacturer of that picture could only have been in my show shop and heard what the spectators said about it.

I cannot understand what the manufacturers mean by their lack of attention to these details. Either they must think the American public will stand for anything or else they think the average picture show patron is too stupid to notice these things. Take it from me, Mr. Manufacturer, the public is watching close and they are noticing these things and their strict observance of your blunders is one of the things which is going to hurt the game.

Can you imagine anything more foolish than this: Scene 1 shows two men in an office. The setting is center door fancy; back of center door is a large mission clock. The time is 5:05. Scene 2, supposed to be several hours later, time of clock 5:05. Scene 3, supposed to be a day or two later, time of clock 5:05. Now doesn't it stand to reason that the clock is evidently there for some purpose and the purpose is the same as every clock is intended for, which is to keep time. It seems to me that the stage director would have foresight enough to notice this. I am sure a great majority of my audience did. I would not have thought so much of this had this clock been a small one upon which it would have been hard to distinguish the figures, but this was evidently one of the biggest the property man could dig up and it was placed dead center in the setting.

It's the little things rightly done that make the big ones a success and the sooner the manufacturer realizes this the better it will be for the exhibitor who has to be the goat for the very good reason that the man who pays the nickel always makes his kick to the man who takes it.

I just want to offer a suggestion to wide-awake exhibitors. When you have a kick to make don't make it to your film exchange. The poor devil has trouble enough. Make it to the man who makes the trouble for you. You know whom I mean—the manufacturer. I am sure that the manufacturer will more than appreciate it and will make a real effort to produce pictures in the way the public wants them. I had occasion last week to write to quite a few of the producers of Independent pictures and I want to say to you that if you could only read same of the nice letters I got from them you would surely agree with me when I say that they are all good fellows and are anxious to be on your side of the fence.

Don't start in and kick continually. When you see something which you think is not right then, I believe, you ought to rip him up the back; and, on the other hand, when he produces something which you know to be good write him a letter, pat him on the back and give him credit for it. I believe if all the exhibitors would tell the manufacturers whenever the picture is good it would spur them on to greater efforts.

We exhibitors all like to have our patrons tell us how much they like the pictures, it sort of makes us feel good, and yet are we the ones who are entitled to the credit? Of course not. It's the man who made the picture; therefore we should pass the good word along to the person entitled to it.

THE LAST NOTCH
Released by American Film Co.

ECLAIR ENLARGES BIG FORT LEE PLANT

General Manager Raver, of the American Eclair Company, announces the enlargement of its present holdings. Additional property has been added to the space already acquired and the work of erecting another large studio, an office building and a modern garage will be started at once. When asked why this step was found necessary, Mr. Raver offered the following statement: "When the Eclair Company of Paris decided to invade America plans were drawn up for a studio equal only to the production of one reel weekly. The intention was to complete the plant some time in advance of the initial release date, so as to allow for an ample accumulation of reserve negatives, but building delays made this impossible and it was necessary to engage three directors and a large stock company to meet the emergency. Then came insistent demands for more than one American release, and we found studio, dressing rooms, property and scenic department and the studio offices entirely too small. Mr. Jourjon, head of the Eclair interests in Europe and America, lost no time in deciding to increase the American investment without a moment's delay, as he is determined to stop at nothing that Eclair Films may attain leadership.

"We are frank is saying that our first release was not satisfactory to the Eclair Company, although we are in receipt of many complimentary letters and telegrams extolling its praises, and, fully realizing the need of ample working space and adequate facilities to handle large and important productions, we are wisely making additions at a time when they are most needed."

ANOTHER LETTER FROM THE CATSKILLS

November 30, 1911.

Mr. A. H. Saunders,
Editor Moving Picture News.

Dear Friend—Just a line to let you know that I am still at the wheel as William Lord Wrights. Do you know it seems just a little mite odd to me that some of the "great ones" are only now beginning to notice the man that runs the show (some of them look intelligent, too) when you have been trying to pound it into them for the past five or six years to my knowledge. I must say that I heartily agree with "Flickers" where he says we can speak nothing but praise for Mr. A. H. Saunders, proprietor and editor of the News, as he has done more than anyone else in a like position to better conditions for the "Operator." Friends of mine who read film news here say that it is the classiest paper in the moving picture business. Now, Mr. Saunders, will you please send me sixty copies of the Moving Picture Tales for a starter. This town has a population of about 10,000 now, and I will be content if I sell a copy of the M. P. Tales to half that amount.

To say I was tickled to death is only mildly expressing it when I saw news about the Operators' Union. Why can't we have it all the time? It is the only way we have of knowing anything about what is going on in the Union. Now I wonder if it would do any good to draw their attention to the fact that it is the only paper that carries the Union Label and as such should have the hearty support of every member of the Operators' Union, not only in New York but through the entire country. I only wish I had the chance to travel and I would do my utmost to have every operator in Canada and the United States subscribe for the fairest and squarest paper in "Picturedom," The Moving Picture News. I will always be a staunch supporter of the News. An operator friend of mine from Toronto (at present doing road work) told me that he saw a bunch of the boys waiting in an exchange in Toronto when the postman brought in the News. He says if you had seen the mad rush for the real operators' paper you would have worn the "Quaker Oats Smile" the rest of your days. I have a few more questions. Shall I send them on or wait until the others are answered? Hoping I have not bored you too much, with best wishes, I remain,

Sincerely,
CANUCK-IN-THE-CATSKILLS.

(You had better wait a little ere asking more bum questions. In the first place what amperage are you drawing at your arc? How have you got the carbons placed, upright or at an angle? You did not expect any brilliant reply when those particulars were lacking, did you? Particulars were published in News May 2, 1908, on How to Prepare a Screen. We will republish it shortly. Thanks for order for "Tales." These are coming in by the thousand.—Ed. M. P. N.)

PICTURES

By C. S., in Harrington's (Australian) Photographic Journal

Beau finished his roll, lit a cigarette, and sipped thoughtfully at his coffee. The Nut looked at him, and said:

"Well, are you going?"

"Yes, may as well. I suppose it's my turn for these," answered Beau, picking up the checks.

"That's right. It was my turn yesterday."

"But yesterday was Sunday."

"Yes, my turn Sunday. Don't you remember, you paid Friday. I would have paid Saturday, but you went home to lunch."

"Ah, yes, of course! Then it will be your turn to-morrow?"

"Yes, my turn to-morrow," answered the Nut, cheerfully. "To-morrow is my day—always to-morrow."

Beau laughed as they left the table. Walking up Pitt street, they met Mac, who greeted Beau with "Hullo! I heard you had got back. Getting into harness again, I suppose."

"Yes, getting down to it."

"And what did you think of Merrie England and the Coronation, and all that?"

"I had the time of my life. But I'm glad to get back to New South Wales all the same."

"Not a bad place," said the Nut.

"Where are you fellows going?" asked Mac.

"Suppose we take the children to see the pictures?" suggested the Nut. "I've never been in a picture show in the daytime."

"Where are the children?" asked Mac, laughing.

"You can come, if you like," answered the Nut.

Mac bowed sardonically, and said, "You remind me of a smart repartee. I went into the lift of a big store one day, and said, 'Ladies' gloves, please.' (Now don't interrupt, Beau, I was looking for the Buyer, on business.) The lift-man said, in evident astonishment, 'Ladies' what, sir?' I answered severely, 'My good man, do you think I said something improper?' He answered like a flash, 'Oh, no, sir! I shouldn't think you capable of that!' "

"And what did you say?" asked Beau.

"What would you have said? I felt the size of threepence, when I saw it. But I had to laugh."

"Well, talking about threepence, what about the pictures?" said the Nut. They crossed the street, and having passed the wicket, sat down to watch the "Events of the World" in motion.

"It's a marvelous boom, this picture craze," said Beau, looking round the house, which was more than half-full. "Where do all these people come from, with time on their hands in the middle of the day?"

"I suppose they drop in for ten minutes at the lunch hour, just as we are doing," answered the Nut.

"Isn't it marvelous! Can it last, though? Won't they get sick of it?"

"Do they appear to be getting sick of it?" asked Mac. "Are the shows gradually diminishing in size and numbers, or are they being constantly enlarged and added to? For the last three years people have been 'getting sick' of them, according to the prophets; yet capital is pouring into the business every day. Not the £100 cheques of the rash adventurer, setting up a machine in a tent or the open air, and looking for big, quick profits; but the thousands of hard-headed capitalists, men with wide interest, broad ideas, and keen foresight. They see in it not a passing craze, but a growing and lasting element in the life of the community, a recreative amusement, and, further ahead, but deeper and more vital, a great educative force."

"They'll get sick of it—it'll bust sooner or later," said the Nut, reflectively.

Mac turned on him. "Why?"

"Oh! anybody would get full of—watching match-board houses falling about—and—men falling out of—balloons—and—that kind of thing."

"Certainly—they have got full of that kind of thing. What then?"

"Ask me something easier."

"Well, the public get what the public want. They are sick of trick films, and nearly sick of 'comics,' and what the exchange clerk calls 'domestic drama.' There is no real human interest in buffoonery, nor in ridiculous impossibilities. These cannot last, any more than pantomime could run all the year round. What is the result? We have a school of cinematograph actors, many of whom have never played to an audience. We have studios, theaters, designed and built solely for cinematography. We have many big firms who have sunk great sums of money in film-making plants, and a great many more who have sunk smaller sums in developing and finishing plants. We have an army of operators, trained to the one special camera—the cinematograph. All these represent hundreds of thousands of pounds capital. What will become of it? Will all the plant be scrapped, and the actors and operators drift into other channels, just because the public are sick of 'comics'? Certainly not! We'll give the public what the public want. And they'll want more of it than ever they wanted of 'comics.' "

"What will you give them?" asked Beau.

"The great human interests," answered Mac, "are Comedy and Tragedy. Everything boils down to that. And with all its limitations, the screen can present these almost as well as the stage, which also has limitations. True, it is in a sense dumb-show. But what stage, now, could present the hundreds and thousands of Bonaparte's army, deploying and skirmishing and wearily dragging across the snow towards Moscow? What stage could present a fire, with licking, sinuous tongues of flame, volumes of smoke, fire engines and columns of water? True, the voice, with its emotional bond between player and audience, is lacking; and here we have a weakness which will always place the stage in vantage. But for sheer realism, the stage is nowhere.

"Then, again, could a historical, educative, and thrilling tragedy like, say, the story of Lady Jane Grey, be presented to fifty thousand of Sydney's workers at a charge of 3d. or 6d. a head? Hardly! Where would you seat them, unless you duplicate the cast and play to a number of houses at once. Could that be done—commercially? But it can be done with a film—do you see?"

"But the worker doesn't want to see Lady Jane Grey," objected Beau.

"Make no error," said Mac. "The worker won't pay 3s. or more to see it in a theater, but he flocks to it at 3d. a time. And the cinematograph brings it within his reach."

"Yes, and by partially satisfying his emotional nature dulls his appetite for real art, and numbs his aspirations towards it."

"That is to say, eases his craving for your pictures, my dear Beau, which he has never seen, and would not understand, and could never afford to buy if he did. True, if you starved his emotional nature, he might barrack for your pictures till the town bought them for him. And, again, he might shelve his artistic craving, and buy beer. As the latter

W. E. GREENE
FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.
THE OLDEST AND LARGEST INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE IN NEW ENGLAND

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Start the Season right by using an Independent Service from a Reliable House. We are buying the Output of the Sales Co. and have some choice services open. Write—wire—or call To-Day at

W. E. GREENE FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.
228 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.
Telephone: 2187-3790 Oxford.

course is the more probable, we had better let him have what he will take, and perhaps when he has got the size of that he'll come at the pictures and the theater later on."

"You mean, let him be content with bad art just because it is too much trouble to educate him up to the standard of good art. Don't you see the short-sightedness of such a policy?"

"I mean, old man, that your well-known creed of 'Art for Art's sake' is limited in application to artists and people of leisure and refinement. What about art for humanity's sake? Shall we deny the people beefsteak because turbot is more digestible or chicken more nourishing? And would these viands really be of more use to a navvy, say? If he has plenty of good solid food, does he envy you your more delicate fare? I trow not. But see that the beef is good, sound meat. And rejoice that legitimate tragedy and clean comedy are taking the place, on the picture shows, of ridiculous 'comics' and meretricious 'domestic drama'; because the picture-show is the people's theater, and is only in its infancy as a great educative force."

"Come on, out of it," said the Nut, "or we'll all get the sack."

Afterwards, in the office, Beau said, "Mac, what's worrying you, lad?"

"Oh, nothing."

"Anything I can do?"

"Thanks, no, I'm afraid not."

After a little, Mac. went on: "Did you ever conceive a perfect picture, and start it to your liking—and then walk in your sleep, and paint at it, dreaming it would one day be complete—and then wake and find you had been smudging it with your sleeve as you worked—and you had turned a thing of exquisite beauty into a hideous blunder—did you, old man?"

"I never walk in my sleep," said Beau, laying his hand on Mac's shoulder. "But if I had, I should wipe it all out, and start again."

"Ah, yes!" sighed Mac. "You would—with a picture!"

KINEMACOLOR IN NEW YORK

The prettiest thing that has ever been seen in the city was presented before a large and very enthusiastic audience Monday, November 27th, at the Kinemacolor Theater, when their gorgeous new production called "Nature's Wonders" was displayed for the first time.

Their natural color motion pictures of the Coronation have been presented in this city over two hundred and fifty times, and have not been exceeded in popularity by any attraction now playing, but the new pictures far excelled them for perfect reproduction upon the screen.

Among the pictures shown were "The Sunset on the Nile," a study of tropical grandeur so beautiful that could any one of its many scenes have been snatched away and put upon canvas no masterpiece of human artist could have rivaled its glorious beauty, for it was Nature itself brought before us, and than Nature nothing can be more wonderful. In the mystic half twilight shadowy forms of camels moved about, the purple haze rising from the river Nile circled up around the graceful palms, while in the heavens a great ball of fire tinted the hovering clouds with pigments and skill ascribable only to a Divine hand—in the foreground the ancient pyramids towered above the quiet, slow-running river, and were reflected on its mirror-like surface. There were many other pictures—"Harvesting in South England," a picturesque rural topic accompanied by appropriate music of the Southwark Glee Singers. "The Seville Carnival," a festive event full of color and life. Lake Garda, Italy, was brought to us in all its loveliness of coloring, the snow-capped Alps in the background, while a floral study showing the opening of tiny buds as if by magic, and their development into full blossom was tremendously applauded, while several other topics filled out a splendid program. "Nature's Wonders" is one of the most interesting offerings that we have had this year, and is sure to be a great success.

The Kinemacolor Co. are about to open Kinemacolor theaters in Philadelphia, Chicago, and many other large cities, all of which will be run along the same lines as the Scala Theater in London and the Kinemacolor in New York.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING

The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.

Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

SOME INCONSISTENCIES OF THE MOVING PICTURE COWBOY

Says "Flickers":—It is mighty easy for a man who has punched cattle on the Western range to tell whether the actors who portray cowboy characters in moving picture films got their makeup and atmosphere from the Western plains, or from Broadway and 43d street.

The way some of these moving picture cowboys wear the handkerchief around their necks usually betrays their ignorance in the first scene. It's a ten-to-one chance that the cowboy hailing from Broadway wears it with the knot hanging down his manly throat, where he'd wear a breast-pin if he were a woman, with the skirts of the handkerchief falling gracefully—and uselessly—down his back. This may be graceful, but it is far from being true in actual life. We have seen hundreds, yes, thousands, of real cowboys, and have yet to see the first one wear a handkerchief knotted in front. Invariably, they knot them behind, and allow the folds to fall down loosely on their breast.

The reason for this is one of necessity. The hard work of the cowboy comes in summer and fall, when the trails and ranges are hot and dusty. Most of this work is riding behind some big bunch of cattle, or worming in and out among them, spurring and shouting and doing all manner of things that the Broadway cowboy never heard of, which provoke intense perspiration under the broiling sun. The dust of the Western plains in full of biting alkali and this settles on his forehead, and the profuse perspiration washes it down into his eyes, and the pain resulting from this acrid combination is blinding and intense. A cowboy who is busy with 500 nervous steers has no time to reach in his pocket and pull out a handkerchief. What he does is to tie it about his neck, as stated before, with the folds hanging down in front, and when he feels the perspiration gathering, he wipes the folds across his forehead, with a single flirt of his hand, and the thing is done.

The moving picture cowboy usually wears boots with heels as flat and broad as those of a New Jersey farmer. The cowboy of the cattle range wears a boot with a heel as long and pointed as the most extreme French heel the ladies wear, and as on a lady's shoe, the heels are set well forward toward the instep. They wear this style for no other reason than because when they ride, instead of merely putting the toe on the base of the stirrup, they jam the whole foot in as far as it will go. Then when they turn suddenly, or brace back to throw a lariat, they can set all their weight firmly on the instep, and the long narrow heel prevents the foot from going all the way through the stirrup.

Furthermore, nobody ever saw a real cowboy on the range ride a horse with a bridle on over the halter, like you usually see them in the pictures. Neither does the real cowboy stop to tie his pony when he dismounts. He simply throws the bridle rein over the pony's head, onto the ground, and a genuine, properly trained cowpony will never wander from the spot. It is amusing, to a Westerner, to see the moving picture cowboy stop and tie his horse to keep him from running away every time he leaves him for a moment.

To the film manufacturer, these things may appear to be of trivial importance, but the public, in the West, that see the cowboy almost every day, and know him as he is in real life, is quick to notice them, and such oversights oftentimes mean failure for an otherwise well executed story.

THE WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE
OF NEW YORK

CITY CUSTOMERS ARE ALL SATISFIED

NOW READY TO CATER TO OUT-OF-TOWN BUSINESS

LET US HEAR FROM YOU

Telephone 2892 Bryant 2893

Forty-Fifth St. Ex. Bldg.
145 WEST 45th STREET

The COMET

THE MOST PRETENTIOUS PICTURE
THE "COMET" COMPANY HAS OFFERED TO DATE

A Game of Bridge

RELEASED MONDAY, DEC. 18th

A skillfully presented picture of society's latest frolic—"Bridge"—The salon scene sparkles with beautiful girls, stunning gowns and gorgeous scenic effects. The Independent exhibitor who is not getting two "Comets" every week is being shabbily treated—This business builder is one thousand feet.

THE ABOVE IS A HIGH CLASS REEL
BUT NOT ONE WHIT BETTER THAN

The Man with the Camera

A Corking Comedy Drama—985 Feet.
RELEASED FRIDAY, DEC. 22nd.

This picture shows a band of crooks, disguised as moving picture camera-men, and what happened to them when they tried to "put it over" on a suburban chief of police.

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

THE COMET FILM CO.

344 East 32nd Street NEW YORK CITY

China to the Front

THEATRES

If you wish to draw the crowds order a selection of our new Chinese slides, all from direct photographs. We have over 250 to select from at $4.00 per dozen. High-class coloring. Send for list of this and other subjects. 30,000 slides always in stock.

Riley Optical Instrument Co.

3 EAST 14th ST., NEW YORK CITY

JUST OFF THE PRESS—THE NEW

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14

By far the best book of comedy material I have ever written. Contents include 20 sure-fire parodies, 11 great monologues, 10 fine acts for two males, 6 acts for male and female, a splendid minstrel first part, an original one-act comedy, also brand-new acts for quartettes and sister teams, besides an almost endless assortment of newest gags, jokes, sidewalk patter, etc., etc.

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14 is sold with the guarantee of being absolutely satisfactory in every way or money instantly refunded. Send orders to

JAMES MADISON
1404 Third Avenue, New York

English Representation

An English firm of exceptional financial standing is open to negotiate for representation of good American maker. Full particulars on application (which will be treated confidentially) to

Box 6, London Office of The News,
8 Sherwood St., London, England.

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

NOTICE—The Edison patent (Re-issue No. 12,037) relating to motion picture cameras, was re-issued on December 5, 1911, as No. 13,329, to the undersigned. The patent contains the following claims:

1. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; feeding devices engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; and a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

2. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; a continuously-rotating driving-shaft; feeding devices operated by said shaft engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; and a continuously-rotating shutter operated by said shaft for exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

3. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section, crossing the lens; a continuously-rotating driving-shaft; feeding devices operated by said shaft engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest; and a reel revolved by said shaft with variable speed for winding the film thereon after exposure, substantially as set forth.

4. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; feeding devices engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion, said feeding devices comprising means proportioned to cause the devices to so advance the film that its periods of rest shall exceed its periods of motion; and a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

5. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized perforated tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; feeding devices provided with teeth engaging the perforations of such intermediate section of the film and moving it across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; and a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY.

PENNSYLVANIA STATION FILMED IN ITS NATURAL LIGHT

And now the new Pennsylvania station, New York, the largest railroad depot in the country, has been stormed by the moving picture man. And the Thanhouser people, who composed the attaching force, did the filming right in the interior, minus the aid of any artificial light, an achievement that ably demonstrates the go-ahead spirit of the present day motion picture photographer. Many of the scenes were made at the lower train level, in conditions that heretofore have never been thought favorable to the taking of a successful moving picture. As the pictures were taken at the rate of 16 per second, with a maximum exposure of 1/32 part of a second for each picture on the roll, any photographer will appreciate the difficulties that were surmounted. Photographers who have been in the Pennsylvania lower level will marvel at the fine view of the train emptying passengers at the subway station. A bright comedy story is woven about the great railroad station, a fast railroad train, a bachelor, and a baby, all under the title of "Brother Bob's Baby." Thanhouser releases it Friday, December 8.

THIS ODD CHART FOUND "SHE"

Or, rather, it enabled Leo Vincey, the hero of the Thanhouser picture, to find her. It was the work of his ancestors who had sought "She" before him and lost their lives in the attempt. With this as his sole guide, Leo left civilization for the deserts of Asia to seek out "She" and revenge a two thousand years old wrong on her. He found the "Negro Head" rock (denominated in the chart) that seemed the key to the land of "She," and finally the deathless woman herself. The part the odd map bore in the search is well shown in the picture, which is released in two reels Tuesday, December 26, as one of the "Greatest December" features.

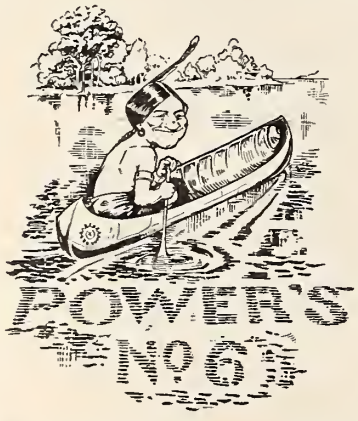
The Thanhouser Company announces that arrangements have been made whereby the exhibitor can secure from his exchange two kinds of one-sheet art posters for "She," at five cents apiece, and a three-sheet art poster at fifteen cents. The supply of these is limited, and it is requested that exhibitors give their exchange now an idea of how many art posters they will require.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The Marquise Amusement Co. will erect a new theater on Crawford Road.

RUNS SMOOTH—NOISELESS



POWERS CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6

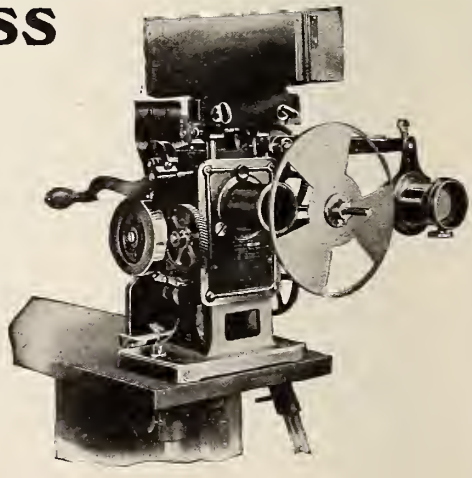
THE PATHFINDER TO SUCCESS

We have been making moving picture machines since the game began. POWERS NO. 6 is the very best product of inventive genius and mechanical skill; it has blazed the way for others, it is and always has been the leader.

Into it have been incorporated stability, perfect mechanism insuring utmost ease of operation, absence of noise, a picture projection which is clear, steady and without flicker; these are but a few of the virtues of POWERS NO. 6. It has made our reputation, it will add to yours.

Get a POWERS NO. 6 and have the "Indian Sign" on the other fellow.

Catalogue D will tell you all about it.



NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, NEW YORK

For fourteen years the leading manufacturers of moving picture machines.

Increase Your Box Office Receipts

BY USING

The Greatest Educational Feature of the Day

4 DAILY

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD'S SLIDES OF CURRENT EVENTS
THIS SERVICE COVERS
EVERY EVENT THAT IS INTERESTING
EVERY OCCURRENCE THAT THRILLS

24 WEEKLY

News pictures of Wars, Sports and all National and International happenings by Underwood & Underwood, the world-famed news photographers. Flash these events daily while they are news and public interest is keenest. Everyone is interested in the news of the day, and this is a service of news pictures. COSTS NOTHING WHEN COMPARED WITH RESULTS.

4 SLIDES DAILY—24 PER WEEK, RATE $12.00 PER WEEK

3 current event photos 14" x 17" for outside display with printed news titles, rate $5.00 per week.
WRITE TODAY FOR THREE, SIX OR TWELVE MONTHS' CONTRACTS

HUNTON-FELL-ELLIOTT, Inc., 1328 Broadway, NEW YORK

THE KINEMACOLOR THEATER

By Margaret I. MacDonald

When the Kinemacolor Company established their motion picture theater in New York City, the motion picture entered an era in America where art, dignity and culture dominate. At the doors of this theater one evening not long ago the carriage checks represented over 300 vehicles; and, in fact, any night one cares to attend the Kinemacolor Theater there will be found there a most refined and cultured audience.

During the past few weeks the Coronation pictures, together with the Royal Horse Show at Richmond, and some very beautiful floral offerings, have delighted the large audiences. On Monday of last week, however, an interesting innovation was introduced including "Lake Garda," a beautiful scenic subject introducing this beautiful Italian lake in all its nature-endowed loveliness of coloring; "The Harvest," scenes in the south of England showing the harvesting of the crops and picturesque rural subjects; "Following Mother's Footsteps," a story of happy childhood, illustrating a new departure in Kinemacolor, and showing the tremendous dramatic possibilities of the process; "Scenes in North Wales," a coaching trip through one of the garden spots of the universe, panoramic views of the Welsh country which can hardly be equalled for grandeur, while ancient castles tower over hill and dale in mystic solemnity; "From Bud to Blossom," tracing from the tiny green-coated bud to the gorgeous beauty of a full blown blossom, seeing in a few moments what Nature takes hours to accomplish. On the screen the subject is one of the greatest beauty, and it has captivated audiences nightly at the Scala Theater, London, for months. The program also includes the principal numbers of the Coronation series, which New York audiences have been enjoying for some time past.

It is absolutely impossible to properly describe the beautiful effect of the Kinemacolor pictures; they are living, moving paintings set in a background of rich, dark velvet; the somber gray effect produced on the outer edges of the picture by the overplus of screen acts as a frame set in the velvet, and enhances the beauty of the picture, throwing it out in bas-relief, and adding vividness and reality to the color scheme of nature so wonderfully reproduced in the Kinemacolors.

The music at the Kinemacolor Theater is perfectly beautiful, as presented by organ, orchestra and voice. There are engaged there at the present time an excellent organist, and several singers who constituted a portion of the choir that executed the musical part of the Coronation ceremonies at Westminster Abbey, who diffuse strains of beautiful and dignified music during the evening's program. The decorations in the old Mendelssohn Hall are simple and beautiful, and there is an unmistakable air of refinement permeating the place, and an interest displayed in the wondrous art such as is rarely found even in our best theaters. People speak aloud unconsciously, enthusiastically applauding the silent moving scenes.

It was absolutely funny as I sat in the theater the other night to find myself groaning aloud, or exclaiming in excited satisfaction at the failure or success of the different horses in their attempts at hurdle jumping, shown in the film "Royal Horse Show at Richmond," and then to awaken to a realization that after all it was only a picture; but let me tell you, friends, it was just as real as though you sat in your carriage, or on the grandstand viewing the actual scene. I was glad to find that I was not the only one lost to the present world, for over the entire house ran a series of murmurs of varied tones, from quiet anticipation to climatic intensity.

The pictures of "The Clansman," taken by the Kinemacolor process, are nearly completed, and the public ere long will have an opportunity of viewing this interesting drama in the wonderful colored motion picture. The reason given for the choice of this particular drama is its popularity, over 6,000,000 people having witnessed this play. Some of the scenes were taken in the vicinity of Natchez, members of the original "Clansman" company taking part in the production. A company of U. S. Cavalry were also employed to add a vividness of reality to the scenes. Taken in the midst of the darkey element, with all the picturesqueness of the southern atmosphere, the film promises to be all that would be expected with Mr. Brennan and his company at the helm, and an efficient camera man in charge of the photography.

The whole world is open to the motion picture as a beautiful panorama, recognizing the motion picture as a medium of scattering broadcast the seeds of education, and artistic and scientific developments.

WM. LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

NO HOPE FOR HIM

Some bug yelled "fire" in a motion picture house in Pittsburgh, Pa., and children were trampled upon in the panic.—News Item in Newspapers.

* * * *

There's that dippy individual who tampers with a gun,
Pulls trigger of the weapon just to cause a little fun.
His repeated explanation, when the cartridge is exploded:
"Good gracious, how unfortunate; I didn't know 'twas loaded!"
May be a way on Judgment Day, when Peter calls the roll,
Just perchance, some influence may save this party's soul;
But the irresponsible person who always shouted "fire,"
While in a motion picture house, will never twang a lyre!

There's that poor unfortunate, who grabs the coal oil can,
Pours contents in the kitchen stove; he's in "the also ran."
Papers of the following day come out in letters red:
"Started a Fire with Coal Oil—Explosion—Three Are Dead!"
And they say on Judgment Day, when Peter calls the roll,
Extenuating circumstance may save him shoveling coal;
But the senseless individual who always shouted "fire,"
While in a moving picture house, will never join the choir!

There's that careless youngster who finds the deadly cap;
He places it upon a rock and wields the friendly rap.
A playmate has drawn nearer to better hear the sound—
Funeral well attended, and the boy's placed under ground.
On Judgment Day, when all is gay, and Peter calls the roll,
Both these careless urchins will remain inside the goal;
But the crazy individual who stampedes the picture show—
St. Peter, in just three brief words will say: "Go Down Below!"

* * * *

We spoke recently of the value of the personally signed letter in dealing with scenario writers. The man who instituted this method of fostering the friendly regard of the author was Giles R. Warren, head of the editorial department of the Lubin Manufacturing Company. Mr. Warren was the pioneer in the personal-letters-to-contributors field. He instituted the policy while editor of the Independent Moving Picture Company's scenario department. Mr. Warren believes that a personal letter accompanying a rejected manuscript often encourages the writer to persevere, when otherwise discouragement would retard development of hidden talent. Mr. Warren's ideas have been taken up and followed by other editors until, at the present time, the printed rejection-slip policy is adhered to by but a few companies.

Giles R. Warren is a wonder in his way. Personally and professionally, he is a courteous gentleman, admired by all of those fortunate enough to know him. He hides his light under a bushel, but rays of light trickle forth despite his very best efforts, in the shape of delicious comedies and sincere and impressive dramas.

More than one humble author has been encouraged to persevere and to finally win success in a new field of literary endeavor through the kind and painstaking sponsorship of Mr. Warren. No manuscript is so impossible but that Warren can find some ray of hope for the future therein. This editor has, individually, unearthed more promising writers and, in so doing helped along the cause of novel plots and plays, than any other one man in the animated picture business to-day.

Warren is also a glutton for work. He has written hundreds of playlets, and ninety per cent of his work has been put over without alteration. Giles R. Warren's name is synonymous with system. The editorial force under his direction works like a clock. Everything is in its place and there is a place for everything.

We'll get the dickens for this tribute. His personal friends and his employers are cognizant of his worth, but to many of our readers the personality of Mr. Warren is not so well known. Writers know they get quick action on their work and prompt payment if the work is acceptable when Warren figures in the deal. This little tribute is to inform many of the personality of the man and of his methods. The writer believes in giving credit where credit is due, and Giles R. Warren's modesty has too long prevented him from getting what was coming to him.

* * * *

There is a scarcity of good picture plots, both comic and dramatic. Editors are on the sharp lookout for meritorious work. Many of the popular magazines have been carrying advertisements from film manufacturers recently. They offer best prices for moving picture plots. The Imp, Lubin and Reliance concerns have been advertising in the Saturday Evening Post.

* * * *

The moving picture theater proprietors in Kenton, Ohio, a city of 10,000, have been interesting church people in the animated picture show. The latest plan followed by one picture house would be worthy of emulation in those localities where the picture theater has been the center of misguided attack from certain sources. The manager of the Idle Hour Picture Theater in Kenton has been devoting one evening every month to the interests of the churches. The young lady members of Mrs. O. P. Blue's class, of the Disciple Sunday School, had charge of the Idle Hour the other evening and realized a neat sum for church purposes. The shows were attended by large crowds, members of the church congregation predominating. No special films were shown, just the regular releases sent on by the Exchange being run.

* * * *

A story attributed to John Collier, secretary of New York's board of moving picture censors, has drifted to the Middle West. Collier is quoted as saying:

"It's no good getting up objectionable picture plays. We never pass them. In fact, we turn them down so invariably that it seems to me that the composers of such plays are animated by a spirit of perversity. They remind me of old Uncle Jethro Husk.

"Uncle Jethro sat fishing on the bank of a tiny rivulet when a stranger stopped beside him and said:

"'Is it possible there are any fish in such a small stream as that?'

"'No, there ain't none,' Uncle Jethro grunted.

"'But you're fishing!'

"'Yep,' said Uncle Jeth.

"'What, then, is your object?'

"'My object,' said Uncle Jeth, 'is to show my wife I ain't got no time to sift the ashes!'"

* * * *

The Scripps-McRae newspapers, of the United States, carried an interview with Beulah Binford the day before Harry Clay Beattie was executed. The interview stated that she was employed as an actress for a moving picture film concern. The interview was very widely read, including the moving picture film item.

* * * *

The city of Cleveland, Ohio, is now on the map as a producing center for films. The Feature and Educational Film Company is the name of the first producing concern to be established in the Buckeye State. The company plans to produce pictures in two and three parts which will take an hour to display before the audience. The first two releases are entitled, "Love and Aviation," and "Zigomar." The F. and E. plan is to provide drama and comedy which will last an hour or more, one long reel making up an evening's entertainment, and be more like attending a standard theater. E. Mandelbaum is president of the concern and believes that the one long-reel subject is an idea that is bound to take a hold on the public. The concern will release an average of one subject every two weeks.

UNDER PROTECTION OF GENERAL WASHINGTON
Scene from "Before Yorktown," Republic release December 23d and 24th.

Jacksonville, Fla., Nov. 30, 1911.

Mr. Alfred H. Saunders,
Editor Moving Picture News,
New York City.

My Dear Friend Saunders—Let me congratulate you on the Moving Picture Tales, soon to be started. It's just what the Independents need to enable them to keep up with the procession, and I am glad to see that the price is to be a nickel. In my travels I shall certainly take pleasure in "boosting" the new publication and urging exhibitors to handle it.

I am sending you a copy of yesterday's Jacksonville Metropolis. Please look over it carefully and see the amount of space devoted to moving pictures. It's wonderful, and if more daily newspapers throughout the country would follow the example of the Metropolis it would strengthen the cause of moving pictures generally. Note the big page ads. of Fahey and Montgomery. The latter, as you know, is a Trust man, is the biggest blowhard outside of the Sturtevant blower factory, and to boost his picture show here in Jacksonville has been giving away gold dollars and automobiles. Fahey, who is Independent and a staunch friend of the cause, comes back at "Monty" with an uppercut when he declares in his ad. that he has "nothing to give away but good pictures."

Glad to note that Gaumont is coming over on the Lord's side. Let him specialize on colored pictures and he will fill in a niche that has been vacant on our side. I hear this spoken of by all Independent exhibitors who once were Trust, and who at times have showed Pathe's stuff.

Don't you think that some one of the Independent companies should be designated to get up something like Pathe's weekly or the Vitagraph monthly? I find a call for this along the Independent line. Objection might be made to this that it is imitating the opposition. I say, never mind if it is; if the people call for it we will have to give it to them, otherwise the General Film will always have these features to play as a good card to get Independent exhibitors to flop over to their side. And the G. F. Co. is playing this card for all they are worth, besides getting write-ups in the newspapers that never fail to set forth the fact that these animated news features are obtainable only in the licensed service.

Another thing: There should be an Independent press agent, to see that our side gets as good a show as the Trust, and to boost our side to the greatest possible extent, and in every conceivable way. A series of articles on the moving picture business, along educational lines, is running in the Woman's Home Companion, beginning in the October number, and from it the general public would not know that there ever was a film of any value turned out by anybody outside the Trust.

These views I have gathered from hundreds of interviews with exhibitors in my travels throughout the States of Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma, and if there are any ideas in them that might be of service to you, I am sure you are welcome to use them, if only thereby you can put another nail in the coffin of the atrocious Trust.

The Independent cause is growing in strength and favor all the time and the weak-kneed exhibitors are coming over in satisfactory numbers, and once over they breathe freely, in that they then don't have to go down on their knees to ask Mr. Trust if they please may run, for instance, the "Fall of Troy," or "Hands Across the Sea," or "Daniel Boone," or any of the scores of fine feature films that the Independents are turning out. Imagine, if you can, the feelings of an exhibitor who is restrained from showing pictures such as the above. It is absolutely repugnant to every patriotic American idea of right.

"Concordia est robur" (in union there is strength) is the motto of a fire company that I used to belong to, and that must ever be the slogan of the Sales Company if it is to forge ahead and be the chief factor on the Independent side of the moving picture game.

With kind regards to the brethren, and especially to yourself, Fraternally yours,

_____.

New York, N. Y.—Shampan & Shampan have plans for a two-story moving picture theater at 155 Monroe street for Geo. D. Segal to cost $10,000.

GREAT NORTHERN

CARL ALSTRUP
Playing leading parts in all feature comedies.

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9th

WINTER IN SWITZERLAND

A comedy of an entirely new kind. One that compels hilarity. A real rib-tickler. Enacted by star performers. On the Same Reel:

BUTTONS AND HOOKS

An exceedingly charming picture of Alpine scenery. Snowbound villages nestle in the valleys with the superb peaks forming a wonderful and impressive background.

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16th

HIS FIRST MONOCLE

A delicious comedy film with every scene a laughable one. On the Same Reel:

GREECE

An admirable travel subject, depicting many interesting scenes amongst which the Corinthian Canal, Corfu Harbor, and the German Emperor's mansion are included.

ALL FIRST-CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT!

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 E. 14th St., NEW YORK

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

SECURE FINE VIEW OF RACES

Camera Experts of Republic Film Co. on the Job—Every Detail Pictured—Many Interesting Features in 5,200 Feet of Film

Securing 5,200 feet of moving picture film which will be a credit to the Savannah races and to the company, the camera experts of the Republic Film Company yesterday comprehensively photographed the automobile races.

The negatives were tested last night and proved perfect in every detail. They will enable clear and well defined moving pictures to be flashed on the screens in the thousands of moving picture houses in which they will be exhibited.

The pictures take in every detail of the Vanderbilt race, from start to finish. The moving picture camera man stationed on the elevated platform in front of the grandstand secured views of the start and finish of the race and a spreading panorama of the grandstand and its occupants, showing the gay attire of the many women in the stand to great advantage.

Much Human Interest

In addition they secured the thrilling runs in the homestretch, around the turn, and away under the bridge over the course. Herbert Miles, president of the Republic Film Company, said that the elevated platform proved to be an ideal location and that there was more human interest to the square inch in the picture taken there than in any other moving picture he had ever had photographed.

The camera experts stationed around the course secured views of every accident, pictures of the Fiat, the axle of which smashed; the Marmon driven by Burman of which the gasoline feed pipe was broken, and of the Jackson driven by Cobe which went out of the race, being taken. In addition every brush and fight for position in the race was photographed by the wideawake camera men of the Republic Film Company.

Picture at Herb River

The only film which was not tested last night was that of the scenic views taken at the bridge over Herb River. These pictures were taken by John C. Hemment, son of the official photographer to six presidents of the United States, including McKinley, Roosevelt and others. There is little doubt that the beauties of the course will be shown in their full glory in this film.

One of the feature pictures snapped by the moving picture camera was that of Ralph DePalma, in his big Mercedes, taking on gas, oil, water and tires at the same time and getting away inside of a minute.

Another very fine view was that of the winners of the three races, Ralph Mulford, Hughie Hughes and Frank iWtt being congratulated after the races in the paddock in front of the grandstand. Shown in the picture are the three drivers, Governor Slaton, Mayor Tiedeman, Harvey Granger, president of the Savannah Automobile Club; Arthur Solomon, secretary; Oliver S. Bacon, vice-president, and a number of prominent automobile men. A picture of the reception given the three winners, in which those assembled around them waved their hats and cheered, was also taken. This round of applause was brought about by Mr. Miles himself, the other persons seeming to be content to shake hands with the drivers.

Moved Portable Stand

To secure these latter pictures it was necessary to move the portable stand, which was placed in front of the grandstand, and at the end of the line of pits, around to the paddock where the winning cars were parked. The work of changing the position of this stand was done in record time, and elicited a round of applause from the people in the grandstand for its clever execution.

Four moving camera men representing rival firms invaded the course during the Vanderbilt race and endeavored to secure views of the race. They were ordered off by the militia and police and not allowed to take any pictures, the Republic Film Company having the exclusive right under contract with the Savannah Automobile Club to take moving pictures of the races.

Moving pictures of the city police, both mounted and afoot, will be taken in the Park Extension at eleven o'clock this morning. These pictures will be added to the circulating reel of the races—Savannah News.

FIRST OF NESTOR WESTERN PICTURES WITH GENUINE WESTERN AMOSPHERE.

"The Law of the Range" is the first of the Western pictures come to hand as a result of the Nestor Company's work in California. This picture is good. It has the atmosphere—the genuine thing—that subtle something that makes us long for the hills. The story is one of a half-breed who because of the odious mixture of blood running in his veins is an outcast in cowboy circles. The climax of the story is where the sheriff's son, who, fleeing, thinking he has killed a brother cowpuncher, is caught in the cabin where is the stolen mail bag, is accused of the theft, and about to be dealt with in the manner of the men of the range, when the persecuted half-breed brings into the midst of the bunch of cowpunchers the real thief and the young man is released. The part of the sheriff's son is taken by Mr. Lockwood, a new member of the Nestor Company, and a young man whose future as a moving picture actor looks very promising.

The release date of this film is December 13.

Another good Nestor release for December 11 is "Only An Iceman." This is an excellent comedy picture, with a good sprinkling of heart interest that fascinates. We can recommend this film as being most entertaining, and is good clean comedy—very good!

Mt. Carroll, Ill.—C. W. Wilson has sold his moving picture theater to Floyd Oleson, of Mt. Morris.

Taylor, Tex.—G. B. Brieger has been awarded the contract for the enlarging of the theater owned by Dan Murphy.

HAVE YOU WRITTEN YET FOR PARTICULARS CONCERNING THE

MOVING PICTURE TALES

Can now be obtained at all

Newsstands, every modern

Moving Picture Theatre

or direct from

CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY
30 WEST 13th STREET, NEW YORK

Don't delay, write now, as only a limited First Edition of 25,000 will be disposed of

5c

Every Exchangeman Will Need 1000 Copies There are 61 Exchanges

Let Us Know At Once How Many

SCENE FROM "LOVE AND CHARITY"
A Christmas Playlet by the Reliance Stock Company, released December 13th.

Cleveland, O., Nov. 29, 1911.

Moving Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen—The enclosed resolution was unanimously adopted by the Cleveland branch of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at their regular meeting, held this day, after several weeks of investigation by a special committee.

THE MOVING PICTURE LEAGUE OF AMERICA,
Cleveland Local No. 1,
L. H. Wilk, Secretary.

Whereas, Miss Kate Davis, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., having made statements in her recent Sunday evening sermon at the Old Stone Church, this city, and also issued statements to the "Plain Dealer" representatives to the effect that (1) "Cleveland's moving picture shows are of a much lower moral standard than those in Detroit or Columbus," (2) "They are hotbeds of iniquity," (3) "Training schools for criminals," (4) "Recruiting stations for the white slaver and disorderly house," and other similar statements well calculated to injure the characters and cast a public reflection upon the members of this association, if such or any part of her statements were true, and

Whereas, Miss Davis, having given the name and address of a prominent officer of the Juvenile Court of this city as authority for her statements in reference to the evil effects of the local picture theaters upon the juvenile population, etc., etc., and

Whereas, Our committee having investigated thoroughly and made a detailed search for facts regarding the conditions complained of, said search being in the various city departments, and

Whereas, That the said investigation shows that Miss Davis' statements can not be verified by official figures in one single instance, but on the contrary said statements were made without the slightest authority or official sanction,

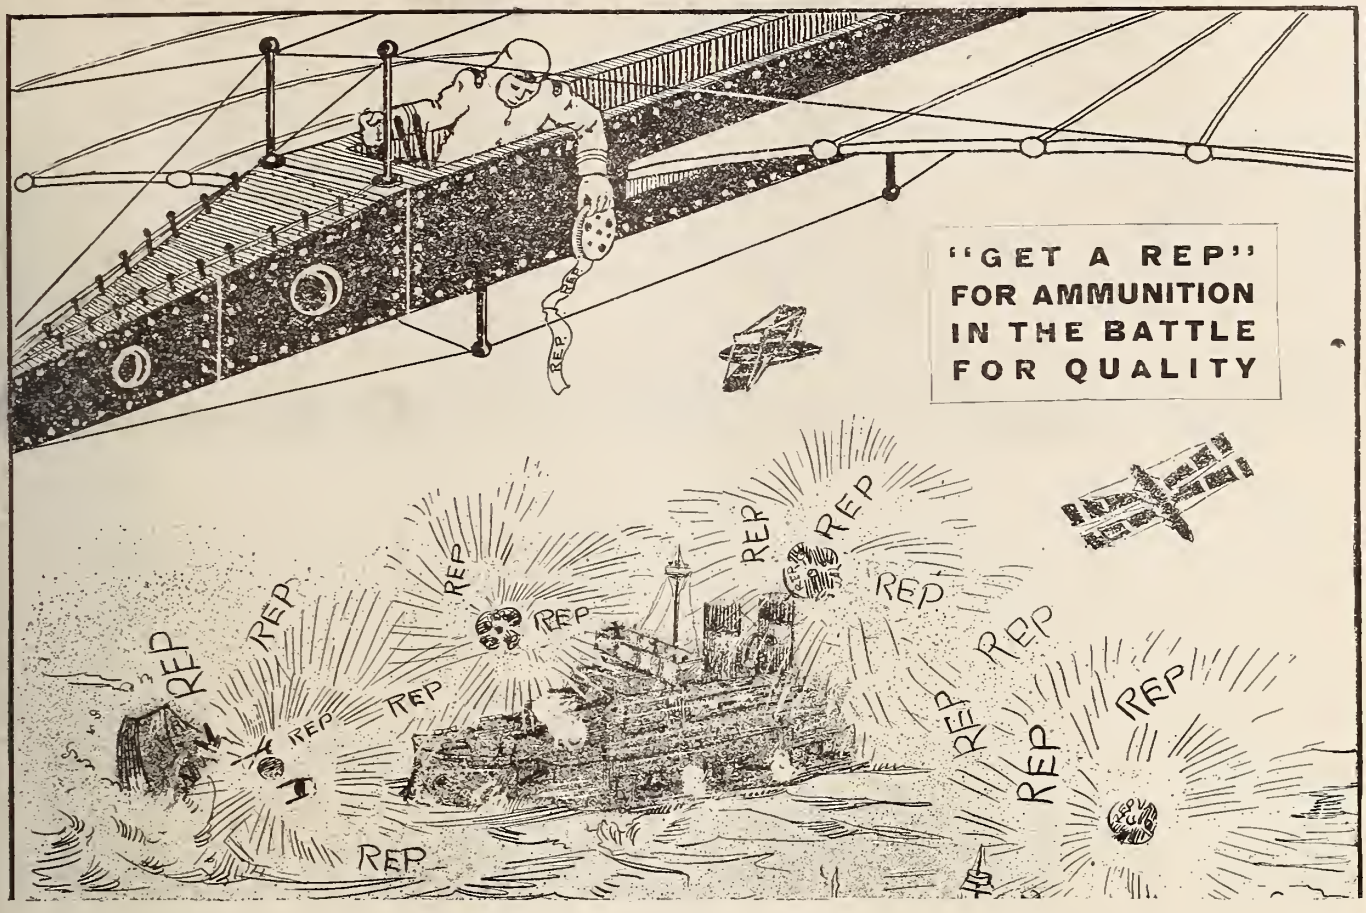
Therefore be it resolved, That we condemn her statement as reckless, slanderous and false, publicly spoken for sensational purposes and cunningly calculated to assist her candidacy for the position as State Film Censor in Pennsylvania.

We further condemn the action of Rev. A. B. Meldrum, of the Old Stone Church, for permitting a "professional sociologist" and alien office-seeker to use his edifice as a medium for her utterances without first ascertaining whether the same were founded upon facts or otherwise.

We further tender the assistance of this association to any official body who are honestly desirous of correcting any evil they may judge detrimental to the morals of our 500,000 weekly patrons.

H. SNOWDON WARD

It is with sincere regret that we inform our readers of the demise of the above-named gentleman, a friend of ours of over twenty years' standing. We knew him in England as a member of the Theosophical Society, and many pleasant associations did we have together. As editor of the Photogram, as a food reformer, and also as an earnest student of Dickens, a vice-president of Dickens Fellowship of New York, for whom he was delivering a series of lectures in the public schools of New York, and at the time he was stricken with his fatal illness was preparing a special lecture on the subject of Dickens for the night of Friday, December 8th. He was well known to every photographer the world over, and to those who knew him personally he was a genial, charming personality. At a lecture on Dickens that he gave to a public school at 145th street and Amsterdam avenue two weeks ago, we were most charmed with his manner, and would have thought he had at least twenty years on his life. It is hard to lose such old friends, but such is the course of nature, and in sympathizing with his widow, who is taking his remains to Albany for burial, we offer our sincere condolences and can say of him, requiscat in pace.



RELEASED SATURDAY AND SUNDAY, DECEMBER 30 AND 31

THE PRIDE OF LEXINGTON

A Beautiful Romance Founded on Incidents in the Life of Jane McCrea, the Heroine of the Battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill.

IT'S A BOX OFFICE BOOMING "REP"

REPUBLIC FILM CO.

SUITE 804-812 145 WEST 45th STREET NEW YORK

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

WITH THE WESTERN PRODUCERS

Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch Show, which is wintering here, has been engaged by the Bison Company to appear in a number of pictures.

These films should prove to be popular, as this wild west show contains a number of full blooded Indians and some real cowboys.

* * * *

Mr. W. N. Selig returned to Chicago this week. While here, Mr. Selig supervised the many improvements that have been made at the local studio. Work is now being rapidly pushed forward on the new offices which adjoin the studio, and they are expected to be ready for occupancy in the near future.

POPULAR CURRENT EVENTS SLIDES

The Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., of 1328 Broadway, New York City, are meeting with great success in their Underwood & Underwood Educational Feature Slides of Current Events. This servicec overs every event that is interesting and includes news pictures of wars, sports and all national and international happenings by Underwood & Underwood, the world-famed news photographers. Exhibitors can flash these events daily while they are news and public interest is keenest. Everyone is interested in the news of the day, and this is a service of news pictures at a very moderate price. Write them for terms of three-, six- or twelve-months' contracts.

* * * *

Graetinger, Ia.—A new $10,000 opera house is being established here.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

FROM THE OBSERVATORY

By G. F. Blaisdell

The aldermanic hearings in New York City on the proposed alterations in the code governing moving picture shows have uncovered a new form of what a one-time New York politician boldly described as "honest" graft. The special aldermanic committee on moving pictures, the chairman of which is John J. White, owner of vaudeville and picture houses, recommends that, while all existing picture theaters remain undisturbed, such as may be built in the future shall conform to the regulations prescribed for large theaters. This, of course, means just one thing. The houses now in business will be secure from further competition.

In a body of men whose action is controlled by ordinary standards of common decency, let alone honesty, measures would be in force prohibiting action of any sort by members financially interested in proposed legislation. What can be expected from a body one of whom cynically remarks: "Surely we are not philanthropists?"

Nor is the shutting off of the construction of new picture theaters the least of proposed radical changes. The aldermanic committee would place the censorship of pictures in charge of the Police Commissioner, surely a sufficiently busy man now. A sop is thrown to those interested by providing that ultimate decision shall rest with the Mayor—where most assuredly it always has. Complaint is made by this confessedly not disinterested aldermanic committee that the National Board, by reason of being partly or wholly, supported by the manufacturers, "while probably not subject to their influence, is susceptible to such influence."

Very pretty. One feature of the censorship by the National Board: No one has ever charged that it is subject to political influence. Which is more than can be predicted with any degree of certainty of censorship by an official subject to the mutations of politics. There is undoubted confidence on the part of the public in the present Mayor and also his commissioner. But mayors, and especially commissioners, come and go. Mayor Gaynor from the first has taken a sympathetic and an intelligent interest in moving picture problems. He has called to his aid men and women who are making careful study of the whole subject. These men and women advise that the control of picture houses remain just where it is—in the Bureau of Licenses.

The Board of Censorship, acting in co-operation with the License Bureau, absolutely controls the exhibition of pictures in New York City. A hint from the bureau is an order to be respected.

Friday, December 1, the aldermanic committee gave a hearing on the proposed changes in the code. Two hundred exhibitors were represented. Nearly all protested against the removal of supervision from the Bureau of Licenses. The committee contemplates no change in the present law prohibiting the admission of children under 16 years of age unless accompanied by adults.

Henry Moskowitz, representing the National Board of Censorship, was among those who referred to the limitation of the size of moving picture audiences to 300 except in theaters as working an injustice.

"Your law," he said, "makes it impossible to conduct a moving picture show in any other building than a theater, except in establishments now operating. I am inclined to think that the moving picture house seating 300 is not safe, but if it should be found that 600 is a safe unit, it seems to me that we should not make it necessary to show pictures only in theaters that seat from 2,000 to 3,000. These moving picture places are the local theaters of the family, and I think we should be careful not to work injustice."

* * * *

Fifty people in the Dixie Theater, Baltimore, got a fright when a film caught fire. The piano player pounded her instrument, the operator poked his head out a window and shouted for a policeman; the latter, after turning in an alarm returned and assisted in getting every one out. No one was injured.

* * * *

Manager Colin, of the Grand Opera House, Gloversville, N. Y., has offered the local Board of Education the free use of his house, with apparatus and films, for educational exhibitions at such times as may be arranged. The board has accepted, with thanks.

* * * *

Mrs. John Q. Mason, member of the newly organized social service board of Tacoma, Washington, had some things to say after a recent visit to the local picture shows. She declares she found nothing demoralizing in them, and at the same time admits there were many well-dressed and well-behaved children attending the theaters. Mrs. Mason considers the shows an elevating institution for the reason that they take so many men away from the saloons their proprietors are complaining. Sure enough.

* * * *

S. S. Hutchinson, of Chicago, in a glass bottomed boat off Santa Catalina, Southern California, has obtained a remarkable series of photographs of still and motion marine life. An octopus passed in review before the lens, his body and tentacles being distinctly visible.

* * * *

Mrs. Louise Berman, in the course of a heated discussion in the Chicago chapter of the National Woman's Society for the Study of Music and Drama, declared that a majority of the people preferred classical music to ragtime. To prove her assertion, she has made a three-day engagement with the Paragon Theater. She should win—and in a walk.

* * * *

Caruso and Scotti were recent visitors at a Broadway picture show As fifty observing wayfarers followed the singers into the theater the showman smiled. As Caruso emerged he smiled. Why not?

* * * *

By the way, when are we going to have Caruso in moving pictures? The most famous tenor of his day owes it to his own fame and to posterity to show the people of future generations that he could act as well as sing.

* * * *

Miss Edna Fisher, doing a lone moving picture stunt on the top of a rickety old stage coach, in Marion County, California, was thrown on her head when the coach overturned at a sharp bend in the road. She was removed to a hospital in a dying condition.

Four of the Essanay players recently had an experience with one of their vehicles.

This latest is but one of the tragedies for a moving picture holiday.

* * * *

The St. Paul Dispatch, referring to the effective manner in which the local authorities in Minneapolis suppressed the exhibition of the pictures showing the inmates of the Red Wing Training School, pertinently remarks that the same decisive steps could have been taken in St. Paul had appeal been made to the Mayor instead of the Governor. The Dispatch concludes:

"It is not necessary to drag in the Governor and Attor-

LUX FILMS

The Crown of Perfection

Released Friday, Dec. 15, 1911

Bill and His Chum Tired of Married Life

COMEDY—Length, 521 feet

Mistaken for the Culprit

COMEDY—Length, 459 feet

R. PRIEUR, 10 East 15th Street, NEW YORK CITY

TELEPHONE 3427 STUYVESANT

Sold only through Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

ONLY EASTMAN RAW STOCK USED.

ney General or to call out the militia to be rid of an objectionable moving picture film."

* * * *

Actor James K. Hackett, talking in St. Paul, ascribes as one of the causes of the "unfortunate" theatrical season the moving pictures. He says the shows have cut into the audiences at the regular theaters.

* * * *

Question: If a small boy ever got a glimpse of anything like that on a screen, would he quietly retire at the end of the show? Don't you think, Mr. Exhibitor, you would have to take him by the ears and throw him out? Well!

* * * *

Strictly personal: Would have liked to have had the Western correspondent and his splendid side partner with us at the celebration of the seventieth anniversary of the Eagle a fortnight ago. Will just wager a guess that the "Man" would have confessed it was "some bunch!"

* * * *

The Brockton (Mass.) Times, referring to the attention just now being paid by film makers to college football, talks thus:

"This cannot be objected to on moral grounds, but it is quite possible that some of the squads whose pictures are taken contain one or two boys whose sense of dignity rebels against the thought of their likenesses being exhibited through the country. Not even college boys are always lacking in a sense of the fitness of things."

Now, wouldn't that jar you? "Sense of dignity rebels!" It may be conceivably possible—maybe, mind you—that a college boy would decline to take a drink if he were thirsty; that he would pass by on the other side when he saw approaching a pretty girl; that he would cover his eyes with his hands when he had reason to believe a vagrant zephyr was about to expose to his unsophisticated vision a well-turned ankle. But to imagine him running away from a camera—a real publicity camera, too! No; it is too much. Forget it!

* * * *

It has been said that of the making of books there is no end. It may be said also that of the making of picture theaters there is no end. From all over the country come reports of new structures, expensive, comprehensive. There are still remaining a few who solemnly will assure you that moving pictures are ephemeral—that they cannot endure; that they are a "mere fad." If these isolated croakings are ever given the reality of prophecy we may be sure it will not be because this great industry died a natural death. The coroner's verdict will be "premeditated suicide."

The future of moving pictures is in the hands of their makers; on them rests a grave responsibility. Not alone must they produce good pictures. They must also in their organized capacities extend the hand of fellowship to those worthy to be their confreres. There must be no closed doors.

For the closing of a door sometimes precedes the breaking of a storm.

CHICAGO LETTER

A New Feature Film Company has been organized in Chicago, with offices in the Schiller Building. It will be under the management of Mr. E. J. Eickenlaud, well and favorably known throughout the country, both in the moving picture and theatrical circles. It is the intention of the new company to make feature films exclusively, which will all be franchised, under the state right plan. The main idea in the production of their feature films will be to furnish something entirely different from the ordinary. "Twenty Years in Sing Sing" is the title of their first efforts, which is in three reels. The state rights for this picture are already on the market. Mr. Eichenlaud stated that the states were selling fast.

The Chicago office of the Associated Motion Picture School have recently been moved to 672 Sheridan Road, where Mr. McIntyre will be glad to see many of his friends.

A fire panic was narrowly averted by the intermission at the Crown Theater on Division and Ashland avenues, when a fire started in the gents' smoking room, filling the entire house with smoke. There were over four hundred people in the audience at the time. Mostly women and children who, although frightened, kept their places until the arrival of the crew of the insurance patrol No. 7, who successfully put the fire out, without the aid of any city fire engines.

The third reception and ball, given by the moving picture operators of Chicago, will be held at the Illinois Hall, corner of Madison and Ogden avenues, Wednesday, December 13, 1911, at 8:30 p.m. Admission will be 50 cents; wardrobe will be free. The operators expect to see many of their friends at the reception and know it will be a great success.

"Hands Across the Sea" was shown here at the Boston Theater Saturday, November 25th, and made quite an impression on the audience, as they applauded enthusiastically after the second reel was shown. It is very seldom that a Chicago audience is aroused to the extent of applauding for a moving picture. The picture is a most interesting portrayal of scenes and events during the Revolutionary War and although the film is made up mostly of military scenes there is worked into the production an interesting love story, which helps to offset the over-abundance of military scenes. The film is also remarkable for the photography and the splendid outdoor scenes. Also for the care and the effort of the producers for the air of reality which is far superior to the ordinary military picture, as the reproduction of costumes, buildings and many landmarks of close historical connection are made with both accuracy and completeness.

A large article consisting of a column and a quarter appeared in the Commercial Chronicle, which was entirely devoted to the moving picture as an advertising medium. It told entirely of the wonderful advancement of the moving picture in this special line, and of the benefits the advertisers receive through this kind of publicity. There was also a great deal said about the Industrial Film Company, of which Mr. W. R. Rothacker is manager.

Mr. Altland, who recently sold the Fairyland Theater on State street, has purchased the Swanson Theater on Fourteenth street. Formerly licensed pictures were shown at this theater, but Mr. Altland, knowing the value of Independent service, having used the same at the Fairyland Theater, will continue this service, which is supplied by the Standard Film Exchange.

Mr. A. G. Spencer, manager of the National Film Brokers, who during the past week was in Wisconsin, has returned to Chicago and is again busily engaged at work.

Mr. Eserman, proprietor of the Liberty Theater on Halsted street, left the Independent for licensed service, but is again back in the fold after a two weeks' try of licensed service.

A rumor which has the earmarks of fact about it, is that a new five-cent theater will be located in the Loop District and the probabilities are that Independent service will be used. Mr. Hopp, who knows the parties connected with this venture, stated that the probability is far stronger than a rumor.

Mr. Eli Nelson, of Chippewa Falls, Wis., was in the city last week and arranged for Independent service at the Anti-Trust Film Company.

Mr. F. R. Martin has been appointed general manager of the Tisdale Feature Attraction Syndicate.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., Dec. 6.—What promises to be one of the largest vaudeville picture entertainments ever given in this city is being arranged by Manager Frank Head, of the Princess Theater, and the proceeds will either go for the benefit of a great Christmas fund or to the treasury of the new United Charity Association, which will be organized in this city within a few days.

Manager Head has had under consideration the giving of an entertainment that would eclipse anything of its kind that this resort has ever seen, and it is his intention to make the show one of the largest and best that can be secured. In addition to the regular five acts that play the Princess, which is the largest theater in the city and said to be the prettiest one in the South, he will also put on the bill the best of the professional acts now laying off in Hot Springs—and there are quite a number of them—together with one or two good amateur features, making between ten and twelve acts in all, giving one show and turning the proceeds, less the day's expense, to charity.

When he discussed this feature it was seen that he would not lack for acts, and there has been a most generous response. The details of the show have not as yet been arranged, but it is more than likely that it will be given either Christmas week or the week after.

This theater will have an exceptionally strong bill next week, when the Five Highland Lassies headline the programme, and on Christmas week arrangements are now under way to bring here a big musical comedy show, headed by Kitty Francis. It looks at this time as if the deal would go through, and if it does, it means that the charity entertainment will have to go over for a week, but that will make little or no difference, for the reason that those in charge of the organizing of this movement will not be in a position to handle the money before that time. Hot Springs has awakened to the necessity of organizing a great charity fund to take care of the deserving poor who come here for assistance. It is Manager Head's intention to make the pictures as attractive as the vaudeville, and several feature films will be used when the "big show" comes off. Tickets will be sold for one dollar each, and it is safe to assume that the theater will be jammed to the doors.

The management of the new Central Theater is busy getting the pretty lobby in shape for the opening New Year's day, and the electrical features will make the town sit up and take notice. I have not as yet been able to secure a complete description of this new house, but will state that it will do the motion picture industry great credit. It is going to be a beauty in every sense of the word.

Eddie Gavrel, of the Lyceum, has interested himself in a way in the Majestic Theater, and he is looking for some one to take charge of it. Eddie put the proposition up to "yours truly" this week, but I have too much work to do now, and it is impossible for me to accept. The Majestic, as I stated in these columns before, is the only house in the city that is recognized as the theater where the negroes can go and see a good show. It's a model theater in every sense of the word, and it is a moneymaker, too. For one who will give it his entire attention, there is a great deal of coin in it, and I would like to see Eddie land a good man and make a success of it. He is certainly making good with the Lyceum, and this week he put in a new tile floor in the lobby that is a beauty in every sense of the word.

The "Chocolate Soldier" was here this week, and I can't state that it was a howling success. So far as the comedy went it wasn't in it with "Alma" or "Madame Sherry," but the singing outclassed the aforementioned shows. It drew the biggest house of the season at the Auditorium Theater.

* * * *

There is a rumor that another Trust house will flop to the Independent cause this week, and I am waiting to see if this is true. From what I can learn it appears that the exchange they are getting their pictures from insist on their paying for the posters at the rate of five cents each, and the management maintains that he includes this charge and pays it in the weekly check he sends in. He also affirms that the film exchange insists that he pay the express both ways, which he declines to do, figuring that he pays enough for the films and that the house should pay the return charges. The gentleman in question was busy the past week trying to line up an Independent exchange. I had to laugh when he said to me:

"I have always been prejudiced against Independent pictures, but the other day I went into a theater where Independent reels were being shown, and I was really surprised at THE GREAT FILMS I SAW. I had no idea that the Independents were putting out such a FINE LINE OF PICTURES, and they WERE MAKING A HIT WITH THE AUDIENCE, TOO."

I have been trying to get it through this man's dome of thought for some time that he was being left when he kept knocking the Independent cause, and now we sure have him going after them like the reform sheriff and his deputies after a negro crap game.

During the past week I received a letter from a little youngster in this city. It was addressed to "The Stroller," that being the name under which I conduct a special column in the New Era here daily. I am going to send it to the Moving Picture News, because some one may be able to get a line to "Santa Claus" before I do. This little correspondent is a "Moving Picture Fan" of the deepest dye and he wants a moving picture machine for his Xmas present. The letter read:

"Dear Mr. Stroller:—

"I have been asking for a moving picture machine for a Christmas present, and mamma says for you to tell Santa to bring it to me. She says she thinks that Santa may see it in the paper, and I am afraid if I write to him the letter might get lost. Will you please publish this and let him know not to forget me? I go to see the pictures every week, and I want to put some of them on at night in my house."

And there you are. If "Santa" doesn't make good on that proposition he needn't come around any more. Also, I think that pap's purse, provided "Santa" does make good, will be made the recipient of a large dent. But it illustrates that the youngster likes his pictures just the same.

The new Central Theater, it is thought, will be in readiness by the first of the year. They are working now on the lobby, and I am told that the entrance will surpass anything in the South in this respect. I also noted that the plans were changed and that the contractors were busy putting in a complete "fly gallery," and so came to the conclusion that vaudeville would have an inning. This would be an ideal house for a stock company and it would not surprise me in the least to see a good "rep" show butt into the new theater, provided that pictures and vaudeville are not what the management anticipates. The location, however, is ideal and with good business the place should prove a winner.

PRESTO

Poster frames, the best poster frame made, $1.75 each in quantities up to five. Six or more $1.50 each, cash with order.

ELECTRA Pink Label Carbons 5/8 x 6 soft cored, $2.00 per 100. $19.00 per 1,000, cash with order.

Swaab Film Service Co.

Pioneer Film Exchange
129 N. EIGHTH STREET PHILADELPHIA
Power's and Motiograph Machines

ECLAIR

You Name the Day for the SECOND ECLAIR RELEASE

Another ECLAIR will be issued very shortly, and you are just as much interested in its success as we are. WHAT DAY DO YOU WANT for its issue?

We will be guided entirely by the decision of the trade. BEAR IN MIND: We are now issuing THE AMERICAN ECLAIR on TUESDAY and the PARIS-AMERICANIZED ECLAIR on THURSDAY.

High Class Comedy will characterize the Second Release and many two-subject reels will be offered.

We value your opinion and will appreciate an expression from you at once.

HANDSOME SOUVENIR FOR YOUR TROUBLE

To every exhibitor or renter who writes, we will mail with our compliments a handsome New Photo of THE HARRISON-FISHER GIRL, all ready for framing.

COMING RELEASES

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7

There Fell a Flower

(Comedy)

LIFE IN HAUTE PIEMONT (Educational)

An Interesting Split Reel

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12

The Musician's Daughter

American Heart Tale

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14

Japanese Drama

Her One Day's Dream

With artists from the Imperial Theatre, Tokio, Japan

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19

A Tragic Joke

Unusual American Drama

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 26

The Wrong Bottle

Or a Drug Clerk's Mistake

GET ON OUR MAIL LIST

ECLAIR FILM CO., STUDIO AND OFFICES FORT LEE, N. J.

BRANCHES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

The Photo Play continues to do a good business and I attribute the increased receipts to the fact that the best Independent pictures ever shown in Hot Springs, Ark., are viewed there every day. They have a good curtain and a dandy light; steady machine and a man who knows how to run the same, so, all these combined, with excellent service, why shouldn't the show be O. K.?

Eddie Gavrel is also piling 'em in at the Lyceum. Here is a little fellow who believes that the best way to make a success is to look after the business personally, which he does. He is using license pictures and the recent decorations of the lobby have helped to enhance the beauty of the place.

And, speaking of pictures, reminds me that "Tweedledom's Motor Car" caused all kinds of laughs here this week, and Ambrosia is responsible. There was another picture that deserves mention. It was a Solax. Before speaking of it, however, I want to state that I have some reels of this firm that amply illustrated their name—"So Lax," for they seemed to lack and be lax on many things so essential to good pictures. They came across in fine shape, however, with this one, "Grandmother's Love," which was not alone a pretty scenario, but the youngster in it was very clever. The reel had more genuine "human interest" than anything that has been seen here this week. Solax, give us more as worthy as that one.

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

Nantichoke, Pa.—Reilly & Schroeder have prepared plans for a new moving picture theater here, at Main and Prospects streets, to cost $8,000.

Cairo, Ill.—Travis A. Kimmel, of the Bijou moving picture theater, on Eighth street, has purchased a three-story building and will remodel it into a new theater.

Ottawa, Ill.—Ottawa Photo Play Co.; capital, $6,000; G. K. Robinson, K. Gerdes and F. H. Tichenor.

Melrose, Mass.—A new theater, to cost $40,000, will be erected here.

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

SANTA CATALINA, MAGIC ISLE OF THE PACIFIC

American Release, December 14

This picture is the product of considerable good fortune coupled with good management. It is a scenic containing some of the most extraordinary photographs ever made, among which is a magnificent view of the sea's bed with its famous submarine gardens.

It starts with a beautiful view of Santa Catalina Island, "Magic Isle of the Pacific," whose wonderful mountain grandeur is far-famed but seldom seen by the average American. Here is the clearest water in the world and many sights to amuse and interest even the most jaded traveler.

An extraordinary view of seals basking on the rocks off the island follows. The boat containing the camera party was pushed so close to the seals that the bow of the launch is seen almost touching the animals.

What follows is considered by many the most remarkable picture ever taken. The party had determined to photograph the world-famous submarine gardens of the Pacific and were equipped with some special camera apparatus and a glass-bottomed boat. They were successful in obtaining views of more than fifty feet of the ocean's bed, showing the remarkable submarine growth of a kelp, octopus, many varieties of coral and fish. The photography is clear and distinct and will cause a start of surprise to the most blasé picture fan when he realizes that the ocean's bottom is actually passing before him.

This scenic also contains an exceptionally fine view of the Pacific fleet in annual maneuvering off Los Angeles. The fleet contains the battle-scarred cruiser Raleigh, the cruiser Colorado, the flagship California, the South Dakota, the gunboat Vicksburg, the Oregon, the cruiser Cincinnati, several war tugs, supply boats and finally the entire torpedo fleet. This picture in its entirety is considered so educational in value that it is expected to show the film in California public schools.

THE LAST NOTCH

American Release, December 18

Old Jim Briggs was getting old and, although, in his work as sheriff, he showed no signs of advancing years, the day came when a younger man was given his place. It was a great blow to old Jim, and, deprived of his livelihood, he was compelled to go to his married granddaughter for support. Her husband never liked the sturdy honesty of old Jim because, perhaps, the husband did some shady things himself that would hardly stand the light of old Jim's honest blue eyes.

Shortly after Jim's retirement, a man was stopped at the point of a gun and robbed, and the man who did the work was none other than Jim's worthless grandson-in-law. The new sheriff, while able and willing in most cases, failed to capture the thief. So old Jim once more went into harness, affectionately counting six notches in his gun, each one representing a desperado he had killed. So Jim took sole charge, and, while rounding a rock alone, came face to face with the robber. The other shot, but not until he had himself received a bullet that caused instant death. Old Jim was carried home and placed in an easy chair on the veranda. Although weak from fatigue and a wound he insisted upon cutting the seventh notch in the old revolver butt.

BILLY'S SEANCE

Imp Release, December 16

In turning the tables on his tormentors Billy furnishes fun that is fast and infectious from the start.

Billy is out for a stroll when he spies a prepossessing looking young woman. He follows and she enters the office of a spiritualist, clairvoyant, etc. Producing a tip, he is initiated into the mysteries of table rocking and other occult practices and becomes interested.

In the seance he is impressed with the idea that he is out to mystify his friends and the soothsayer sells him a book which explains all about it. Repairing to the club, he cons the book and engages in experiments. The results are magical and he hastens to announce the fact to his friends. They are skeptical and treat his efforts lightly. They make all manner of sport of his demonstrations and Billy waxes wroth. He is rudely disturbed and casts about for a method of revenge. Adjoining the room there is the electrical apparatus and Billy enlists the services of the electrician by the means of a generous bribe. A wire is strung to the table and the plans carefully made to humiliate the unbelievers. They are called in and Billy pompously announces that he will give a table rocking demonstration. He proceeds to do so solemnly and the friends place their hands on the table as directed. The current is turned on and they are imprisoned, being unable to move their hands from the table.

Billy dances about in joy and his friends yell lustily in the agony. Billy declines to release them and takes keen delight in torturing his tormentors, but their cries reach the ears of two policemen who rush in. The electricity is turned off and the friends accuse Billy of cruelty.

Billy squares it with the cops by throwing a bundle of money on the table but when they reach for it the current is again switched on and they cannot remove their hands from the table. The finale is ludicrous in the extreme. On the same reel:

THE BUNGALOW BURGLARS

Two guests arrive at a bungalow who are not expected and take possession of the domicile. Each suspect the other of being a burglar and complications arise that furnishes laughs.

The Fords take possession of their bungalow and are delighted. They wish to have others share the advantage of living in the country and, unbeknown to each other, invite Guy and Agnes down for a week's end visit. The guests have never met. On the evening of their unannounced arrival the Fords go to the city, not expecting them.

The young woman arrives first, to find the doors locked. She must get in as the trip back to the station is a long one over a lonely road. She crawls through a window and gains egress. Once in, she reads of two burglars—a man and a woman—both handsome and bold, who are preying upon isolated houses in that vicinity and she is somewhat frightened.

In the meantime, Guy has arrived and is conveyed over to the bungalow. He enters also through the window and reads the same newspaper account. Agnes sees him enter and at once concludes he is the bold burglar mentioned. He hears her in an adjoining room and thinks she is the woman burglar he has just read about. Each is frightened but resolves to stay and see it out.

They meet and are agreeable, one trying to outdo the other in hospitality, all the while trying to circumvent each other and foil an intent to loot the house. Finally, they become separated and Guy secretes himself in one closet and Agnes hides in another, each awaiting the arrival of their friends.

When the Fords return home, they repair to their respective rooms there to find their guests concealed. They each sally forth to capture a burglar with the result that the whole thing is explained and introductions follow. The young people are very much impressed with each other to the delight of their hosts.

THE PROFESSOR

Imp Release, December 21

Professor Grimes, a crank on scientific matters, is addicted to somnambulism without a knowledge of his associates. He is impetuous and easily disturbed, consequently he is feared by Susie Davis, his private secretary.

The story opens with Grimes receiving a large sum of money from a caller. As he is inclined to be miserly, he starts for the bank to deposit the money, but finds it is closed. Returning home, he places it in the safe.

Grimes has a nephew, Ralph, who is being hounded by a creditor, and he hasn't the money to liquidate the indebtedness. He tells his troubles to Susie Davis, his sweetheart, and she assists him, giving him the money she has saved through frugality.

The next morning the professor misses his money when he examines the safe and is wild. He secures the services of a detective and that investigator is not long in discoverng that the nephew has paid a debt with quite a large sum of money. Ralph is under suspicion. He proves his innocence by the girl to the satisfaction of the sleuth, who is in a quandary as to how the money dsappeared. He resolves to keep a watch on the safe and does so.

In the still hours of the night Professor Grimes slowly descends the stairs, walking in his sleep, and returns the money to the safe. The mystery is cleared up. In the morning Grimes is confronted by the detective, who explains to him the mystery of the safe robbery.

Ralph and Susie are rewarded by being restored to the good graces of the uncle, who wishes them to forget all about the incident.

THE GIRL AND THE HALF-BACK

Imp Release, Dec. 18

Proverbial philosophy is the cause of a lot of misery in this world.

Early in life, Dick Alliston and Victor Fisher have learned that "all is fair in love and war." One of them proceeds to carry out this unwise teaching in due course. Both were in love with the same girl, and Dick contrived by the means of a misleading letter to the fair little lady to obtain an advantage over his rival—advantage which had its climax on the football field.

Victor was placed out of the game by means of this letter, and had the mortification of being banished to a part of the field where he had to stand and watch the game in progress, powerless to help his side. However, the fair Alice gets to learn that she has been deceived by means of the letter, which is produced on the football field. The result is that Dick is put out of the game, Victor takes his place, wins the game for his side as well as his sweetheart, both of them forgiving, in their new found happiness, the bad boy, Dick, when all is over.

A picture that is noticeable for the vivid representation of a spiritedly played game of football.

THE PLAYWRIGHT

Reliance Release, December 16

The playwright is unable to finish the great play he is working on because of his wife's attentions. He goes to the woods to work alone, and meets his chum on a hunting trip. The latter is in love with the playwright's wife and sends for her in her husband's name. The playwright quarrels with his wife, not believing her story, and being angry with her for having disobeyed his request. She accepts the attentions of the chum. The husband comes to a part of his play which nonplusses him. A husband is supposed to accuse an innocent wife of being unfaithful, and to see how an innocent woman would answer he dramatically accuses his own wife. To his horror she confesses her growing attraction for the chum. A big scene takes place between the two men in which the chum's cowardice is shown up and bringing to the front the high character of the husband. The woman turns to him, her illusions dispelled, and the chum is kicked out of camp.

On the same reel:

JUST SMILE

Two "Hall-room Boys" join a "Smile Club" and try to pay their debts with smiles. It works—sometimes—and at other times it does not. After receiving a series of beatings they go home and dissolve the "Just Smile" club.

THE TOMBOY

Thanhouser Release, December 19

A wealthy miner, having no near relatives, leaves his two little daughters to the guardianship of a former chum of his, who had left the West with a fortune and returned to his old home in an Eastern city. The guardian is rather overwhelmed by his responsibilities, but induces his old aunt to come and keep house for him, and prepares to give his charges a hearty welcome.

The guardian is a young man, and is surprised to find that one of his wards is of marriageable age, beautiful and vivacious. He promptly proceeds to lose his heart to her, and while she admires him immensely, the girl is finally thoroughly impressed with the idea that her guardian would gladly be rid of her.

This feeling is intensified when she attends a reception and her awkwardness is made more manifest. She decides that she is out of place in her new surroundings, and runs away after writing a pitiful note to her guardian. She takes her horse with her and has some wild, undefined plan of making her way out West again where she believes she will be loved and appreciated.

Fortune favors her, for she runs across a Wild West show, where her beauty and horsemanship promptly win her congenial employment. She is sorry to be separated from her little sister, but believes that it is for the best, and that her guardian "will make a lady of the little one," as she asked in her last note.

The younger sister mourns constantly, however, and is finally taken to the country by her worried guardian. There she and another child attend a Wild West show, and chance so ordains it that she and her sister meet.

The elder girl weeps over the sister and decides to take her with her. The little one, however, has a better plan than that. She has learned from her guardian how he misses the elder girl, and being a bright child, has shrewdly figured out the facts in the case. Furthermore, she loves both her sister and her guardian and does not want to lose either.

So she slips away, finds her guardian, and whispers to him the glad news that the missing one has been found. It requires no urging on her part to induce him to go with her. He tells his elder ward that he cannot live without her, that she is more to him than any other woman, and begs her to become his wife. Convinced of his love, she finally consents, and finds that the Girl from the West is the girl for the Man from the East—that is, when she is the girl he loves.

CINDERELLA

Thanhouser Release, December 22

A meek, mild Baron, with one motherless daughter, married again, and his second choice was an unlucky one. For not only did the woman browbeat her husband and make his life unhappy, but she beat and ill-treated poor little Cinderella, and made her a servant. The cruel stepmother had two daughters of her own, who were given every luxury, and they aided their mother to make the life of their stepsister very sad indeed.

The King's son gave a grand ball, and the Baron and his family were among the invited guests. But when Cinderella wanted to go, she was cuffed and jeered at, and told that she must stay in the kitchen, her proper place, so the stepmother said.

Little Cinderella helped the others to get ready for their night of enjoyment, and then sat in the kitchen alone in her rags. Really no one could blame her if she cried.

Fortunately for the poor child, she had a fairy godmother, but up to this time she had never been in evidence. But the fairy godmother, who had been keeping an eye on the Baron's household, decided that it was about time for her to make her influence felt.

So she dropped into the kitchen via the fireplace (fairy godmothers seldom use doors, it is hard to say why but they don't) and told Cinderella that not only was she going to the ball, but she was going in style. Her magic wand enabled her to provide a coach, coachman, footman and horses out of a pumpkin, a lizard, some mice and a rat. Then another turn of the wand changed Cinderella's rags into a fine ball gown, and she started for the castle in high spirits. But she was told that she must be home by midnight, and, like a dutiful little girl, she promised. Also the fairy godmother told her that at midnight all her finery would revert to its former state.

Cinderella created a sensation at the ball, and the Prince devoted all his attention to her. The wicked stepmother and her daughters did not recognize in the gorgeous guest the forlorn child that they had treated like a slave.

In fact, Cinderella had such a good time that it was midnight before she knew it. She ran away as fast as she could, but half way down the steps her gay garb turned into rags, and the coach and attendants became mice, pumpkins and lizards.

As she fled she dropped one of her slippers, and the Prince found it. Then he caused proclamation to be made that he would marry the lady who could wear the slipper if she could produce the mate to it. The stepsisters tried it on, with other dames, but failed to prove that it could fit. Then Cinderella asked for a test. She proved that the slipper was hers, and as she did so her rags turned back to the ball gown again. And the Prince married her, and they lived happily together for ever afterward. What became of the wicked sisters no one knows or cares. But probably the father of Cinderella had a happier life, for the chances were that his wicked wife was afraid to annoy him, fearing that the fairy godmother might get busy again.

THE COWARD'S FLUTE

Champion Release, December 18

Arthur Paget, son of the general of that name, was a coward. That is, nothing could induce him to take up arms in behalf of his country. He occupied his leisure moments in playing on a flute, and loved it next best to Lucy Larcom, and he certainly loved her dearly. But Lucy knew of his fear and his horror of war, and so while she loved him in a way, she also despised his cowardice.

Lieutenant Blaney also loved Lucy, and his second love was for gold. Aye, he loved gold better than he did the girl. But Lucy didn't know this and she admired his bravery as much as she despised the other's cowardice. Now, you may imagine how such love affairs progressed. Day by day Blaney won renown, and equally did Arthur Paget shrink more and more in craven fear of battle, until his own father and mother turned from him in utter disgust. But he found comfort in his flute when he could look for it nowhere else—not even to his Lucy.

But mark the following. The brave Lieutenant Blaney, captured by the enemy in battle, was tempted to betray his general's plans. He was tempted by the filthy lucre into becoming a despicable moral coward. As a result of this act, victory perched on the banners of the enemy. Arthur's father, the General, was in imminent peril. His troops were cut up and in full retreat. It was agonizing to Lucy and Arthur's mother, who viewed it from the window. Suddenly a noble inspiration evolved Arthur's soul. Dashing forth, he met the retreating soldiers, inspired them with his wonderful playing, and led them back to fight, turning defeat to glorious victory.

He was brought back from the field, wounded but triumphant. His parents honored him, Lucy adored him. His rival Blaney was dead and stained with ignominious dishonor. It is a most curious story; quite tragic and splendidly enacted.

BY DECREE OF FATE

Champion Release, December 20

What matter-of-fact thing for two young men to be in love with the same girl? Charles Morton, George Campbell and Martha Redmond are the trio held in the web of this story. Morton thought that he, above all others, was the favored one in Martha's sight, so one day when he called on her with a bouquet of flowers, it surprised him to find that George Campbell was his rival.

Now Charles, being hot-tempered and unreasonable, flung down the flowers and rushed madly from the presence of the woman he loved. "What fools we mortals be." And Charles was no exception, for he betook himself to a saloon to drown his sorrow in drink. His wild entrance thereto resulted in a collision with a "bum." Words came to blows, and with a bottle Charles struck down the man. Though his act was unintentional, the fellow died. His sentence of five years was a light one, considering that death might have been the penalty.

What strange things may occur in five years! Martha Redmond married George Campbell, the rival, the man whose presence had sent Charles Morton on his wild tear that day; she and her husband had departed for parts unknown.

Awakened to the great responsibility of life, Charles had studied medicine. He now set out for the West that he might devote himself in its wildest spots to the cause of the profession. And soon came his chance to prove his real worth, and he accepted it with the spirit of a brave man. A man was down with malignant small-pox. Charles unhesitatingly visited the victim and found his once-hated rival. He did not falter, however. Night and day he labored for that life, doubly so, for she was concerned. Despite heroic measures, the patient passed away, and Martha became a widow.

Charles had performed his duty, which no selfish thought had influenced, nor any possibility of winning favor. He deemed himself unworthy. That very sentiment ennobled him. And Martha understood! It came to her like a revelation, when one day she was about to leave for the East. Fate decreed that she should stay. Martha stayed and Charles was made happy by her.

FICKLE BRIDGET

Solax Release, Dec. 13

Bridget is an Irish cook, who brought with her from Cork her spirit of independence and her sense of humor. Rudolph, the German grocer, and Mike, the iceman, both get a "crush" on Bridget. Bridget is partial to neither of them. They both make professional calls on her and decide to stay to a social tea—or something stronger which looks like tea.

While Bridget entertains her professional acquaintances, the family which employs her impatiently awaits the arrival of the soup. Bridget is too much occupied playing hostess to have in mind her obligations to her hungry employers. Her neglect precipitates a rough house. Her employer forcibly ejects her friends and proceeds to give Bridget a tongue-lashing but is forced to make a hasty retreat under a resistless fire of crockery.

Bridget is about to decide to leave when she receives a telegram informing her that she is the heir to a fortune left to her by a dead uncle. She immediately quits her job and establishes herself as a fine lady should.

After Bridget is established in fine quarters, Rudolph and Mike begin to lay siege to her heart and shower her with their attentions. They soon find, however, a rival in the form of a handsome and courageous fencing master in pecuniary difficulties.

They plan to wreck vengeance on this intruder but the French count challenges them both to a duel. Not being very anxious to have their hearts punctured, they both set upon the count and beat and disarm him. Rudolph instructs Murphy to hold on to the count while he goes off with the folks. He buys red paint, puts the paint on one foil and comes to Bridget with "I've killed the count." She embraces the heroic Rudolph.

In the meantime Mike suspects that Rudolph has double-crossed him and so proceeds to investigate. He finds when he runs breathlessly into Bridget's parlor, with the count in front, that Rudolph is in soft.

Bridget sees the count—and it is all up with Rudolph. The count loudly challenges, "You must all fight and the one who wins shall have the blushing bride." The count wins and Bridget gets him in a half-Nelson.

This story is a pure satire, which brings out strongly the weakness of human nature.

THE LITTLE KIDDIE MINE

Solax Release, December 15

Although the West isn't as wild and woolly now as in pioneer days, there is still some red blood running through the plainsmen of Colorado. The excess energy of these hardy people continues to assert itself in different directions.

Little "Toots," who is the baby girl of a prospector, inherits her father's energy and, like other healthy children at play, imitates her elders. She goes out into the open country to try her luck at digging for gold. Little "Toots" uncovers with her pick a caché of a "Captain Kidd" of the plains. At this place is buried the highwayman's ill-gotten gains. "Toots" laboriously and joyously drags off the bags to her mother, proclaiming with elation that she has discovered a mine full of bags of gold.

Just then Jim, the terror of the plains, comes up and claims the return of the bags. "Toots'" father looms up suddenly and "gets the drop on Jim." Realizing that his game was crimped, Jim seizes "Toots" and holds her up in front of him and rides off hurling the defiance, "Shoot if you dare."

Jim makes his escape and leaves "Toots" by the wayside, several miles from her home. Jim plans to avenge himself by trying to shift his crime over on "Toots'" father. This plan fails, however, and the desperado is placed behind the bars, where he belongs.

Later "Toots" goes back to the place where she found Jim's treasure, and to her surprise and the surprise of her father unearths a real nugget. Father christens the place "The Little Kiddie Mine." Unlike other Western tales, this story is played and acted with convincing realism.

When Writing Advertisers Please Mention Moving Picture News

THE FOREMAN'S COURAGE

Bison Release, December 15

The brother of the foreman's sweetheart gets tangled up with the law, and is shot by the sheriff's posse. Wounded and exhausted, he reaches his shack and the foreman is wounded and captured, but saves the culprit. Some time later the brother comes back and is given honest employment by the foreman. He is arrested at his sister's wedding, but released by the kindly sheriff.

THE PRIDE OF LEXINGTON

Republic Release, December 30 and 31

Jane McCrea is recorded in the history of the Revolutionary days as a heroine of the time—she was a patriot in the trying days of Lexington and Bunker Hill, and was later massacred by Indians when trying to cross the British lines to meet her affianced husband, who was an officer of Burgoyne's army.

Accounts differ as to the manner of her death. One historian claiming that she was killed accidentally, by pursuing Americans, and later scalped by the Indians. Her death under the circumstances caused great popular indignation and many young men in consequence joined the Continental Army.

"The Pride of Lexington" is a romance founded on these facts of history, and pictures the beautiful Jane McCrea beloved by David Jones, who through a sense of loyalty to King George leaves the colonies to join the British army, placing Jane in charge of his friend, Aaron Knox.

The story follows Jane from the first entrance of the British into Lexington, during the campaigns of Ethan Allen and on the field of Bunker Hill, where she is taken prisoner. A Hessian, Count Von Meyer, furnishes the dark side of the story, as he falls in love with Jane and is spurned for his improper advances. Jane is befriended at different times by both General Washington, of the American Army, and General Howe, of the British Army; the latter shows the spirit of a true English gentleman when he gives Jane a release from Boston and saves her from the unwelcome attentions of Von Meyer.

The final scenes of the story are laid at Fort Edwards, New York, where Jane, despite the warning of Aaron Knox, tries to meet David when she learns he is with the British, and when crossing the lines accidentally meets Von Meyer, who renews his suit and on her refusal allows her to fall into the hands of the Indians. David is also killed in his attempt to save Jane, and Aaron lives on through the years, faithful to the one love that filled his life.

Throughout the story runs a vein of quaint comedy furnished by one, Billy Smith, a man, strong physically, but mentally weak, but who through his friendship for Jane proves a hero at the close of this dramatic picture.

"The Pride of Lexington," while portraying the patriotism of the Americans, does not in any way belittle the English.

When Writing Advertisers Please Mention Moving Picture News

ONLY AN ICEMAN

Nestor Release, December 11

John Mayfield is rich, young and healthy, but seems to be unhappy. Despite the delicious repast spread before him by his servant, he cannot be tempted to eat. Surely there must be something wrong with John! The life of ease and plenty does not appear to be conducive to general happiness. He decides to work; work like any other poor unfortunate obliged to toil to keep body and soul together. So, changing his stylish and costly garments for those of an ordinary laborer, he writes his own recommendation and sallies forth in search of a job.

The Monopoly Ice Company and John are soon connected, and the new iceman proves to be a veritable boon to poor people. He dispenses ice freely, and, in some instances, he even contributes his own cash to alleviate the suffering of needy ones.

Violet Claire, a charming young heiress, is delighted to temporarily fill the place of Nora, the family cook, who is suddenly called away. In her menial capacity, it falls to Violet to hail the iceman, who happens to be John. Well—it's a case of love at first sight. Each sees the other and conquers while being conquered. Haughty Mamma Claire witnesses a scene that causes her to say, "How dare you, sir! Leave my house at once!" Stammering apologies, John departs, but not forever.

The day's work over, John is one ton of ice to the bad and has to make good. There is no room for such as he in the Monopoly Ice Company, and he is peremptorily fired. At home John eats with rare good appetite. In an endeavor to draw solace from his calabash pipe, he dozes into the land of dreams, and THE girl appears before him with her witching smile. He awakens and determines to buy the ice-wagon. Meanwhile, Violet also dreams of the handsome peddler of frozen water, and sighs, "I hope he'll come to-morrow"

On the morrow, John purchases the ice-wagon and his first delivery (also the last) is at the Claire mansion. Here, forgetting the ice, he helps the "cook" with the kitchen work. They know how to combine work and pleasure, and while busy with the combination, the maternal parent "butts in" and the pseudo iceman is again fired with the parting injunction, "You forget, sir, she's my daughter!"

John Mayfield, "himself again," sends his auto and an invitation to Mrs. Claire and her daughter. The ladies eagerly accept and—tableau! John asks for Violet's hand; mamma is undecided, but the young miss urges, "Say yes, mamma," and John is happy at last.

THE LAW OF THE RANGE

Nestor Release, December 13

As Sheriff Randolph and his son, Walter, came in sight of Carter's saloon, they noted the boys excitedly mounting their horses to go in pursuit of Bill Herbert, who, not content with picking a quarrel with Pete, the half-breed, had cowardly shot him in the back. Taking their lead, the sheriff galloped after him, but Herbert cleverly eluded them, and the men were forced to return, believing he had reached the state line.

In the meantime, Walter, being refused shelter at Carter's for Pete, had persuaded his mother to put the half-breed in a small unused room, and there he remained until thoroughly recovered. Later, as the grateful Pete wended his way homeward, he beheld Herbert in the act of holding up the Pony Express, and although the half-breed was unable to go to the young man's rescue, being entirely unarmed, he crept stealthily after the outlaw, watched until Herbert hid the plunder in his shack, and then followed cautiously after.

While this was transpiring, Walter had gotten into an argument with Big Hank, and in the struggle to obtain possession of the gun, it had been discharged. The bully was only slightly wounded, but, panic-stricken, Walter had galloped away, only to be pursued by the sheriff and his posse, who mistook the fleeing figure for the hold-up man.

Seeing Herbert's shack, and glad of any haven, Walter bounded through the door and securely fastened it. The sheriff and his men dashed up, hurriedly forced their way into the place, and discovered Walter amid the outlaw's plunder.

With bowed head and trembling hands, the unhappy father placed the handcuffs upon his son, when, to the surprise of all, the half-breed, with Herbert as his prisoner, appeared and made the explanation which brought joy to the entire party.

IN THE EARLY DAYS

Nestor Release, December 16

It would be only a matter of a few months, perhaps weeks, before he would be able to send for her; so Tom Jordan assured his wife as he set out for the West to invest their savings in a small ranch. And indeed, ere six months had passed, Lucy received a letter, telling her to come. Accordingly, with little Ned and baby Annie, the delighted wife started at once, and was almost at her journey's end when a hostile band of Indians attacked the stage-coach. As the driver stopped to return their fire—the passengers were well armed—little Ned, screaming with terror, jumped to the ground and fled into the woods, while Lucy, with the baby still in her arms, ran after him. Hearing his mother's voice, the child turned, as Lucy, who had been struck in the head by an Indian's bullet, sank to the ground. In vain did the boy implore her to speak to him—then, more frightened than ever, he hurried on, but this time in the direction of the stage-coach.

Here, thanks to the wild chase which the boys of Bar S Ranch had made to the stage's rescue—for they had seen the Indian attack from an adjoining peak—the redskins had been driven back; so, hastily lifting Ned inside, the men gave the signal to start; and it was not until they reached their destination, and Tom sprang forward to greet his wife and children that they realized Mrs. Jordan was not there.

Between his sobs, the little chap confirmed their worst fears—Lucy Jordan had been killed by the Indians. Such, however, was not the case; the young wife, with Annie still clutched to her breast, had already staggered to her feet, when Nathan Anderson, called White Beard, the Hermit, found her and assisted her to his cabin. But her memory was a blank—from whence she came or where she wished to go, Lucy was unable to tell him. Believing the mother and child to be the only surviving members of a family that had been massacred, Nathan promptly offered them what hospitality lay in his power.

So the weeks lengthened into months and months into years until Annie was fifteen years old, and it was she, who, running through the woods to bring aid to "Grandfather" Nathan, who had been taken with a fainting spell, met her father and brother riding to the adjoining ranch.

Once at the cabin, where they found Nathan had recovered, Tom instantly recognized his wife, while she gazed at him in wonder—then slowly but surely the veil was lifted, her long-lost reason returned, and she sprang joyfully into his arms.

On the same reel:

MUTT AND JEFF MAKE THE FEATHERS FLY

The pangs of hunger drive both Mutt and Jeff out in the cold, heartless world, and feverishly search somewhere, somehow, for something to fill the aching void.

Jeff snoops around the exterior of a grocery store, the proprietor of which happens to be lynx-eyed and ready-footed. Mutt meets with better success. A farmer is on his way to the market with a truck-load of vegetables and poultry. A sympathetic chicken deserts the wagon and soon becomes Mutt's property.

At "home" Mutt makes the feathers fly, then proceeds to roast the "bird." The fowl fragrance emitted from the stove, gently wafts Mutt to sleep. Enter Jeff. Ah! ah! Chicken! In a moment nothing but the bones are left, and, as in bones there is strength, won't Mutt be strong? He is, and Jeff is compelled to do the Marathon act on a full stomach. The little fellow is saved from a rough "panhandling" by the arrival of the owner of the late chicken and a guardian of the law, who "leads" Mutt to the lock-up.

LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD

Majestic Release, Dec. 17

The beautiful story of Red Riding Hood, told by the mothers of many nations to their little ones, is here enacted in the motion drama by "Little Mary" and her confreres.

The dear old grandma has come to Red Riding Hood's home bearing a present for her grandchild which she has made herself. This is a beautiful hood made in Granny's cleverest and most loving way. Little Red Riding Hood is charmed by it, and expresses her joy freely. Granny then goes home to her lonely hut in the woods escorted by her niece.

One beautiful autumn afternoon little Red Riding Hood is sent by her mother to take some goodies to Grandma. She repairs on her way, but grows tired and sits to rest under a tree. She stops and dreams the well known story:

How a wolf in the guise of a friendly dog came and asked her where she was going. She told him, and the said wise wolf sped to Granny's cot in a shorter direction. Arriving there, he satisfied his wolfish appetite on poor Granny's aged carcass and donning her night cap took her place in the bed. Little Red Riding Hood appears and enters the bedroom gladsomely exhibiting her presents. The wary wolf, after a confidential chat, jumps at her. She screams, her father, the woodsman, and his trusty man rush in, despatch the wolf and save her. Awakened suddenly by her own screams, Red Riding Hood cannot break the spell of that awful dream.

So she goes timidly to the cottage, peeks cautiously in at the window, finding Granny alive and well.

CUPID'S BIG SISTER

Powers Release, Dec. 19

A sweet girl's little brother is one of the standard nuisances of the spooning business, and usually he's a rather unromantic kind of a proposition. His interest in the courting of his sister is an entirely mercenary one, and swains have learned that the quickest road to some girls' homes is via the sweet tooth of her little brother. That's how the artist happens to be getting along finely with Sue, until somebody comes along who has something for the little fellow that wins him quickly—that's an automobile! To a little country lad a ride in a tonneau is the consummation of all earthly bliss, and when this wealthy young Romeo comes along with the joy on four wheels and all cranked up, his road to success looks clear. But you can never tell about the small boy's caprice; here it gets him into various brands of trouble, and the mere fact that his sister acknowledges his relationship is all that saves his hide from a merry tattoo.

But he's a wise little youngster, and plays his game knowingly, so that in the end he is voted by the happy couple to be the best little Cupid that ever was. And he is!

On the same reel—

TOURING BRUSSELS

For a delightful little trip in the old world, this little scenic wonder captivates. Just makes you feel as if you were right there, and you'll agree it's one of the best reasons for sticking to our travel releases. It will make you want more of them.

HEARTS OF ITALY

Powers Release, Dec. 23

There is no question but that even in this enlightened day the law of Camorra and stiletto is a strong factor in the lives of many Italian families. Rosita Maroda finds it almost the guide of her destiny because of the not unfounded fears of her parents, and were it not that the youth in her rebelled, it might even have been the cause of her marrying such a villain as Luigi Cardone. But a fate inexplicable draws her on to foreign shores, and at last she leaves the old home and comes to America.

Here all is well until Luigi, too, arrives, and in that Babel of New York's crowded settlement they meet—he a conniving villain, she the mother of a lusty babe. Slowly the strands of the interrupted vendetta connect once more, but Guido, Rosita's husband, is equal to the problem. The cruel Luigi is enmeshed in his own snare, and the hand of Providence comes to the rescue of the little family.

It's a powerful little play, and carries a heart-throb that holds the situations together in magnificent unison.

HIS FIRST MONOCLE

Great Northern Release, Dec. 16

James, whilst walking in a fashionable district, noticing the air of distinction which an eyeglass seems to bestow on the wearer, forthwith decides to sport himself one. He purchases a monocle, and in the privacy of his own room attempts in vain to make the wretched thing stick on his eye. At length, he glues it on, and then sets out to attend a ball. There he has the misfortune to tread on the train of a lady's skirt, and strip it entirely off. When tea is handed around he mistakes a gentleman's bald pate for a marble pedestal, and rests his cup on it. The old gentleman thinks it is a fly on his head, and brushes the cup and saucer to the ground. Not perceiving his mistake, James adds sugar and milk to where he thinks the cup is, with the most ludicrous results. After a number of other unpleasant mistakes, including the last, where he enters a lady's bedroom in mistake for his own, James reaches home, and having, with the aid of hot water, removed the piece of glass from his eye, swears never again to be led into making such a fool of himself.

GREECE

The successful results which have been achieved in color cinematography by our process are strikingly shown in this film. A clear impression is conveyed by the delicate tints of the warmth of color of this semi-tropical region, and the scenes depicted are full of interest. The Corinthian Canal is an unusual sight, and the views of Greece from Corfu harbor are pretty. The German Emperor's villa there is included.

THE MAN WITH THE CAMERA

There is no gainsaying the cleverness of the action of this unusual film. The story bristles with originality and the situations are numerous as well as humorous. A gang of burglars elect to rob the home of Mr. and Mrs. Starbuck. The house has been closed temporarily, and the occupants are away on a two weeks' trip to Atlantic City. In order not to excite any undue suspicion, the burglars decide to operate in broad daylight, and to do this successfully they pose as moving picture men. They first go to the chief of police, get permission to photograph a scene representing thieves in the act of robbing a palatial home, and with all the essential details settled go ahead. The populace turns out, and the police are kept busy holding in check the crowds desirous of witnessing the unusual sight of real burglars plying their profession in public. The thieves jimmy their way into the place, ransack the home from top to bottom and steal everything they can lay their hands on. In order to facilitate matters they hire an automobile to carry away the ponderous booty and accomplish all this under the supervision of the police, who are innocent aides to the entire proceeding. When the theft is discovered one can better imagine than describe the emotions of the authorities. Safe to say, they soon round up the gang and make them pay the penalty The denouement is reached by easy stages and interest never permitted to lag.

A GAME OF BRIDGE
Comet Release, Dec. 18

The pernicious habit of gambling is never better illustrated than in this particular film. At any rate, it comes near terminating the placid domestic relations of Mr. and Mrs. John Osprey. It does strain it, and thereby hangs the tale. Mrs. Osprey likes bridge. In fact, she is a veritable slave to the game, and gets heavily into debt through it. Her husband is a diamond expert and most unsuspecting. Mrs. Osprey is desperate, and in order to replenish her losses at cards steals a valuable brooch. The theft is discovered, Mrs. Osprey accused, and after admitting her guilt confesses and is forgiven. The following day three Japanese gentlemen, agents of the Marquis of Otaka, visit the home of Mr. Osprey. They leave a valuable diamond with him with orders to dispose of it to someone who pays the highest price. The jewel is deposited in a large safe, where it is found by his wife, who forthwith confiscates it. She then leaves the doors of the safe ajar so as to convey the impression that burglars have taken it.

Mrs. Osprey is a somnambulist and hides the diamond in the garden. The act is witnessed by the butler, who steals the diamond, and the following morning tries to pawn it. Gordon Bart, a friend of the Ospreys, who knows of Mrs. Osprey's indiscretions, learns of the disappearance of the diamond and sees the butler enter the pawnshop. He is curious and investigates. When he learns of the truth he goes to the butler and makes him return the treasure. The butler then tells how he acquired the stone and implicates Mrs. Osprey, of course. Once more, Mr. Bart acts as a good Samaritan and the theft is kept a secret. He writes to Mr. Osprey, though, advising him to induce his wife to quit gambling. She agrees to do this if hubby will pay her debts, which he does. Then everything ends happily and their bliss thereafter is no more disturbed.

THE LOGGING INDUSTRY
Rex Release, Dec. 14

There are industrial pictures — and then there are industrial pictures. They're the same, only different. One variety bores, while the other augurs well for the trade. There's the industrial picture that is only a conglomeration of unconnected scenes with the captions the only intelligent and intelligible feature of the whole arrangement, and there is the industrial picture that really teaches a lesson in the world's economics. Of this class, conspicuous for its general absence, or, at least, infrequency on the exhibitors' program, is "The Logging Industry."

The picture shows a great branch of human endeavor, with a sufficiency of human interest. Watching it, one feels the swing of mighty arms, the song of a man's work close to Nature, the inspiration of primeval labor. From the forest to civilization—this is the text of the film.

Here's only one little item the picture teaches which, we'll wager whatever you think of first, you didn't know before. Owing to the great loss of life and the wholesale destruction of timber due to the most ruthless and relentless foe of unsettled domains—the forest fire—the Government employs five wardens to make daily inspections of the forests.

Then there's a cunning little scene showing men, experts in the work, felling trees. That isn't much of a stunt, think you? If you had more than one life to lose for the learning, we'd suggest that you try it! The men must measure the exact distance and direction the tree will fall or—well, this isn't an obituary notice. But it's exciting.

In rapid and thrilling succession the picture goes on to show "bucking," the operation of trimming the tree after it has fallen; the "donkey" engines hauling logs across the canyon by means of cables and loading them on the trucks; the logging train that hauls the logs a distance of ten miles from the logging camps—one of the best equipped logging trains in the service (just because it's Rex!); dumping the logs from the trains into the water, where they are cut and marked, ready for the buyers.

And then—a great forest fire! In many instances these fires are started through carelessness; but Nature makes man pay a dreadful penalty for his negligence. A panoramic view shows the utter destruction caused by the fire. It means more than destruction for the towns around; it means distraction as well, devastation, destitution!

But listen, the logging industry doesn't entail only danger and hardship. There's fun, too—real gaiety—"burling," the pastime of the lumberjack, consisting of rolling the great logs, from which the bark has been peeled, at great speed.

That describes the entire reel—great speed. It's a fast motion motion picture.

CHINESE WAR CRUISER HAICHI
Imp Release, December 18

The Imp release of December 18 is, as we have already announced, a love story, in the course of which a real game of football is played. It having been found by the Imp Film Company that the story of "The Girl and the Halfback" does not take up the full reel, it has been made a split by the addition of a series of views of the Chinese cruiser Hai-Chi while she was lying in Charleston harbor a few weeks ago. There are besides the view of the big ship herself pictures showing the movements of her great guns; deck scenes, Chinese sailors, Chinese band playing American airs, ship's mascot, a fine angora cat, Sir Thomas, and other interesting views, making a highly attractive and novel subject.

THE F. & E. FILM COMPANY

The Feature and Educational Film Company of Cleveland is being flooded with inquiries from exhibitors asking for the names of State right buyers for its two new productions, "Love and Aviation" and "Zigomar." This is as a result of the campaign of advertising now being carried on in the Moving Picture News.

By advertising its films, The F. & E. Company is able to give its State buyers dozens of inquiries for bookings as soon as deals are made.

Independent Film Service

FILMS that will BRING back LOST TRADE. A little higher in price but twice as good.

Look at these prices.

2000 ft.—6 times a week.....$14.00
2000 ft.—7 times a week..... 15.00
3000 ft.—6 times a week..... 18.00
3000 ft.—7 times a week..... 20.00

Songs and lithographs Free—Express one Way.

SEND FOR LIST.

STOCK ROLL TICKETS—7c per M in lots of 20M or more.

Bargains in Second-Hand Machines—Write Today.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY COMPANY
109 NO. DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

QUICK—CHEAP—GOOD

OPERA CHAIRS

Ask for Catalog 306

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.,
218 So. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

BARGAINS—BARGAINS.

Motion Picture Machines $35 up. Cineograph $65. Powers Cameragraph No. 5 only $110. Edison Kinetoscope $55. Model B Edison $140. Standard, New, $155.

Send for Sup. No. 33 Bargain List.

Motion Picture Machines Wanted.

HARBACH & CO.,
809 Filbert St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Theatre Sales Co.
211 Dearborn Street, opposite Post Office
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
Long Distance Phone, Harrison 341

Dealers in Theatres anywhere in the United States and especially Chicago. Write or Call. Make Known your Wants

THE WORLD'S GREATEST THEATRE CHAIR

Sanitary, Space-Saving, Life-Saving, Money-Saving.
To Use This Chair Is to Make Your Business Grow.
Write Today for Circular W.

HARDESTY MFG. CO.
Canal Dover, Ohio.

BLANK LEADER

from $7.50 per 1,000 feet. Shipments subject to approval.

WASTE UTILIZATION CO.
500 Fifth Avenue NEW YORK

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

Our price is right and the service is right, that's why you ought to write right now for our Film List.

Two Reels, 6 times per week.....$14.00
Two Reels, 7 times per week..... 15.00
Three Reels, 6 times per week..... 16.00
Three Reels, 7 times per week..... 17.00

NATIONAL FILM BROKERS :: 186 N. LaSalle St., Chicago

Data from Manufacturers' List of Releases

MEMBERS OF SALES CO.

AMBROSIO

Feet

Oct. 14—Tweedledum's Monkey .....
Oct. 14—One of Tweedledum's Tricks (Com.)
Oct. 18—The Conversion of St. Anthony....
Oct. 25—Salambo .....
Nov. 1—Judas (Dr.) .....
Nov. 8—Dolly's Doll .....
Nov. 8—Tweedledum's Motor Car.....
Nov. 15—The Convict's Song (Dr.).....
Nov. 22—The Golden Wedding.....
Nov. 29—The Little Duke.....
Dec. 6—Jorio's Daughter .....

AMERICAN

Oct. 19—The Lonely Range (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—The Horse Thief's Bigamy (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 26—The Trail of the Eucalyptus (Dr.).1000
Oct. 30—The Stronger Man (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—The Water War (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 6—The Three Shell Game (W. Dr.)..1000
Nov. 9—The Mexican (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 13—The Eastern Cowboy (W. Com.)..1000
Nov. 16—The Way of the West (Com.).....1000
Nov. 20—The Test (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 23—The Master of the Vineyard.....
Nov. 27—Jolly Bill of the Rollicking R.....
Nov. 30—The Sheriff's Sisters.....
Dec. 4—The Angel of Paradise Ranch (Dr.).1000
Dec. 7—The Smoke of the Forty-Five (Dr.).1000
Dec. 11—The Man Hunt (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 14—Santa Catalina, Magic Isle of the Pacific (Scenic and Educational).1000
Dec. 18—The Last Notch (Dr.).....1000

BISON

Oct. 24—A Noble Red Man.....
Oct. 27—An Indian Hero.....
Oct. 31—The Cattlemen's War.....
Nov. 3—A Young Squaw's Bravery.....
Nov. 7—A Race for a Bride.....
Nov. 10—Wenona's Broken Promise.....
Nov. 14—The Winning of Wonega.....
Nov. 17—The Ranchman's Mother-in-Law (Com. Dr.) .....
Nov. 21—The Broken Trap.....
Nov. 24—White Fawn's Escape.....
Nov. 24—A Bad Man.....
Nov. 28—A Western One-Night Stand.....
Dec. 1—An Easterner's Peril.....
Dec. 5—The Empty Tepee.....
Dec. 8—A Range Romance.....
Dec. 12—Bar Z's New Cook.....
Dec. 15—The Foreman's Courage .....

CHAMPION

Nov. 13—The Redemption of a Coward..... 950
Nov. 15—The Passing of Sal..... 950
Nov. 20—National Guardsmen and Regulars at Fort Riley, Kansas (Top.)... 950
Nov. 22—When the Sheriff Got His Man (Dr.) 950
Nov. 27—The Mother Goose Series (1st Reel) 950
Nov. 29—The Two Browns..... 950
Dec. 4—Yankee Doodle and Our Navy.....
Dec. 6—The Indian Fortune Teller (Dr.).. 950
Dec. 11—A Traitor on the Staff..... 950
Dec. 13—The Saving of Dan..... 950
Dec. 18—The Coward's Flute..... 950
Dec. 20—By the Decree of Fate..... 950

COMET

Nov. 24—The Diamond Locket (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 27—Grandma's Toothache (Com.)..... 955
Dec. 1—The Late Mrs. Early (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 4—Billy's Letters (Com.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Dead Canary (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 11—The Ups and Downs of Rafferty (Com.) .....
Dec. 15—Just in Time for Dinner (Dr.)...

ECLAIR

Nov. 6—Life Under the Sea (Educational)..
Nov. 13—The Legend of the Eagle (Dr.).... 925
Nov. 21—Hands Across the Sea.....
Nov. 23—Portuguese Centaurs (Mil.)..... 600
Nov. 23—The Automatic Lighter (Com.).... 400
Nov. 28—Miss Masquerader (Com.).....1000
Nov. 30—The Five Daughters of Mr. Durand (Com.) .....
Nov. 30—Gussy's Congratulations (Com.)...
Dec. 5—In Humanity's Cause (Dr.).....
Dec. 7—There Fell a Flower (Com.)..... 660
Dec. 7—Manners and Traditions of Piemont (Edu.) 660
Dec. 12—The Musician's Daughter.....
Dec. 14—Her One Day's Dream.....

GREAT NORTHERN

Sept. 16—The Conspirators (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—Caught in His Own Net (Dr.)....
Sept. 30—The Conspirators (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—The White Tulip (Com.).....
Oct. 7—Barcelona (Scenic) .....
Oct. 14—Secret of the Underground Passage (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—His Fidelity Investigated (Com.)..
Oct. 28—The Vicissitudes of Fate (Dr.)....
Nov. 4—The Actor as Soldier (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Woman's Wit (Com.).....

Feet

Nov. 18—A Rendezvous in Hyde Park (Com. Dr.) .....
Nov. 18—High Scotland (Scenic).....
Nov. 25—The Theft of Mona Lisa (Com.)..
Dec. 2—The Penalty of Her Ambition (Dr.)
Dec. 9—Buttons and Hooks (Com.).....
Dec. 9—Winter in Switzerland (Scenic)...

IMP

Sept. 28—'Tween Two Loves (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 2—The Rose's Story (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—Through the Air (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 9—The Sentinel Asleep.....
Oct. 12—The Better Way.....
Oct. 16—Uncle Pete's Ruse.....
Oct. 19—The Aggressor .....
Oct. 23—The Biting Business.....
Oct. 26—The Waif .....
Oct. 30—His Dress Shirt.....
Oct. 30—A Few Minutes with Steeplejack Lindholm .....
Nov. 2—King, the Detective.....
Nov. 6—Waiting at the Church (Com.)...1000
Nov. 9—The Wife's Awakening (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 13—The Fallin' Out.....
Nov. 16—Breaking the Seventh Commandment
Nov. 20—From the Bottom of the Sea.....
Nov. 23—Executive Clemency .....
Nov. 27—Uncle's Visit .....
Nov 30—Over the Hills.....
Dec. 2—Percy the Masher (Com.)..... 750
Dec. 2—President Taft Dedicating the Naval Training Station at Chicago, Ill. 350
Dec. 4—The Dumb Messenger (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 7—Tony and the Stork.....1000
Dec. 9—Her Birthday (Com. Dr.)..... 750
Dec. 9—Columbia Interscholastic Chase.... 350
Dec. 11—Why the Check was Good (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 14—The Little Stocking (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 16—Billy's Seance .....
Dec. 16—The Bungalow Burglars .....
Dec. 18—The Girl and the Half-Back.....
Dec. 21—The Professor .....

ITALA

Aug. 19—The Blunt Sword.....
Aug. 24—Modern School of Italian Cavalry..
Aug. 26—Foolshead—Cbauffeur .....
Aug. 26—For a Straw.....
Sept. 2—Clio and Phyletes.....
Sept. 7—The Infinitive Ways of Providence (Dr.) .....
Sept. 9—Foolshead Hypnotizer (Com.).....
Sept. 9—Toto Has a Purse.....
Sept. 16—The Horse of the Regiment (Com.)
Sept. 16—Foolshead Charges Himself with Removal (Com.) .....
Sept. 23—The Mask of tbe Red Death.....
Sept. 23—The Hornet .....
Oct. 7—Foolshead a Model Guest.....
Oct. 21—Foolshead Quarrels With His Sweetheart .....
Oct. 28—Toto and the Dummy (Com.).....
Oct. 28—The Rearing of Pheasants (Dr.)..
Nov. 4—Foolshead's Holiday (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Woman's Wit (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Victim of Competition.....
Nov. 28—Second Dr. Crippen.....
Nov. 18—Foolshead, a Professor of Innocence
Nov. 18—The Life of Bees.....
Nov. 25—The Tailor Wants His Pay.....
Nov. 25—The King of Noose Throwers.....
Dec. 2—Severed from the World.....

LUX

By Prieur.

Oct. 6—Bill Has a Batb (Com.)..... 452
Oct. 6—Neighbors (Com.) 488
Oct. 13—A Dog in a Coiner's Den (Dr.).... 593
Oct. 13—Bill, Police Cyclist (Com.)..... 390
Oct. 20—Bill Pays His Debts (Com.)..... 442
Oct. 20—Henpecked Bertie Goes Fishing (Com.) 514
Oct. 27—Bill, His Wife and the Water (Com.) 455
Oct. 27—Bertie and His Rivals (Com.)..... 472
Nov. 3—Bill and the Bear (Com.)..... 554
Nov. 3—Tommy's Camera (Com.)..... 393
Nov. 10—Bill Taken for a Ghost (Com.).... 426
Nov. 10—The Diversions of a Nursemaid (Com.) 495
Nov. 17—Saas Grund, a Village in the Alps (Sc.) 295
Nov. 17—The Mystery of Beaufort Grange (Dr.) 695
Nov. 24—Bill and Bertie Get Married (Com.) 325
Nov. 24—A Passing Cloud (Dr.)..... 658
Dec. 1—Bill as a Veterinary Surgeon (Com.)
Dec. 1—The Making of an Aeroplane (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Man in the Auto (Dr.)..... 650
Dec. 8—The Adventures of an Amateur Hypnotist (Com.) 350

MAJESTIC

Nov. 26—The Courting of Mary.....
Dec. 3—Love Heeds Not Showers.....
Dec. 10—Keeping Mabel Home .....
Dec. 17—Little Red Riding Hood.....
Dec. 24—The Actress .....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Feet

Nov. 11—Desperate Desmond Almost Succeeds
Nov. 18—Mutt and Jeff and the Unlucky Stars (Com.) .....
Nov. 15—The White Medicine Man (Dr.)..
Nov. 18—That Kid from the East (Com.)...
Nov. 20—His Vacation .....
Nov. 22—The Cowboy Pugilist (W. Dr.)....
Nov. 25—Desperate Desmond Pursued by Claude Eclaire (Com. Dr.).....
Nov. 27—Happy Hobo's Help.....
Nov. 29—When the West Was Wild.....
Dec. 2—Western Feud .....
Dec. 2—Mutt and Jeff and the Scbeme tbat Failed .....
Dec. 6—Struck Gold (Dr.).....
Dec. 9—Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Only an Iceman (Com.).....
Dec. 13—The Law of the Range (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—In the Early Days (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—Mutt and Jeff Make the Feathers Fly .....

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Oct. 31—Apples and Destiny (Com.).....
Oct. 31—The Progressive Book Agent (Com.)
Nov. 4—The Pride of the West (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—Mobilization of the American Fleet
Nov. 11—For the Tribe (Dr.).....
Nov. 14—When First We Met (Dr.).....
Nov. 14—The Tell-Tale Parasol (Com.).....
Nov. 18—The Old Leader (Dr.).....
Nov. 21—Rivals (Com.) .....
Nov. 21—Views of Montserrat, Italy (Sc.)..
Nov. 25—Jug o' Rum (Dr.).....
Nov. 28—Too Much Injun (Com.).....
Nov. 28—The Lineman and the Girl.....
Dec. 2—The Wanderer's Return (Dr.).....
Dec. 2—Views of Lake Como (Scenic).....
Dec. 5—The Little Tbief (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 5—The Secret Order of Horns (Com.)
Dec. 9—Two Men and Girl (Dr.).....
Dec. 12—The Little Chaperone (Com.).....
Dec. 12—Views of Genoa, Italy (Scenic)...
Dec. 16—When Heart Wires Cross (Com. Dr.) .....

RELIANCE

Nov. 15—The Moonshiners .....
Nov. 18—The Injustice of Man.....
Nov. 22—Helpless Man .....
Nov. 25—A Daughter of Italy.....
Nov. 29—Happy Thanksgiving .....
Dec. 2—The Poison Cup.....
Dec. 6—The Turn of the Wbeel.....
Dec. 9—The Turnstile .....
Dec. 13—Love and Charity.....
Dec. 16—The Playwright .....
Dec. 16—Just Smile .....

REPUBLIC

Dec. 5—Auto Races .....
Dec. 16—Six Nations (Part I) .....
Dec. 17—Six Nations (Part II) .....
Dec. 23—Before Yorktown (Part I) .....
Dec. 24—Before Yorktown (Part II) .....

REX

Nov. 2—The Tale of a Cat.....
Nov. 9—Saints and Sinners.....
Nov. 16—The Return .....
Nov. 23—The Price (Dr.).....
Nov. 30—The Strangers .....
Dec. 7—The Measure of a Man (Dr.).....
Dec. 14—Logging Industry in the Northwest

SOLAX COMPANY

Nov. 3—A Heroine of the Revolution (Dr.)
Nov. 8—An Interrupted Elopement (Com.).
Nov. 10—Grandmother Love (Dr.).....
Nov. 15—Baby Needs Medicine (Com.).....
Nov. 17—Only a Squaw (Dr.).....
Nov. 22—Husbands Wanted (Com.).....
Nov. 24—The Will of Providence (Com. Dr.)
Nov. 29—A Troublesome Picture (Com.)....
Nov. 29—Life on Board a Battleship (Com.)
Dec. 1—A Revolutionary Romance (Mil.)..
Dec. 6—Baby's Choice (Com.).....
Dec. 6—The Paper Making Industry (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Little Shoe (Dr.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Oct. 31—The Loves of David Copperfield...
Oct. 20—The Satyr and the Lady (Dr.)....
Oct. 27—The Jewels of Allab (Dr.).....
Nov. 3—Their Burglar .....
Nov. 7—The Missing Heir (Dr.).....
Nov. 10—The Last of the Mohicans (Dr.)...
Nov. 14—The Higher—the Fewer (Com.)..
Nov. 17—A Mother's Faith (Dr.).....
Nov. 21—A Master of Millions.....
Nov. 24—The Baseball Bug (Com. Dr.).....
Nov. 28—The Tempest (Dr.).....
Dec. 1—Beneath the Veil (Dr.).....
Dec. 5—The Newsy and the Tramp.....
Dec. 8—Brother Bob's Baby (Com.).....
Dec. 12—The Lady from the Sea.....
Dec. 15—Deacon Debbs (Com.) .....
Dec. 19—The Tomboy .....
Dec. 22—Cinderella .....

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

	Feet
Nov. 23—Her Mother Interferes (Com.)....
Nov. 27—Sunshine Through the Dark (Dr.)
Nov. 30—A Woman Scorned (Dr.).....
Dec. 4—Why He Gave Up (Com.).....
Dec. 4—Abe Gets Even with Father (Com.)
Dec. 7—The Failure (Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Saved from Himself (Dr.).....	999
Dec. 14—Taking His Medicine (Com.).....	673
Dec. 14—Her Pet (Com.)	323

EDISON

Dec. 13—An International Heart-Breaker (Com.)	700
Dec. 13—Eskimos in Labrador.....	300
Dec. 15—Brocton Fair and Horse Show.....	990
Dec. 16—Stage-Struck Lizzie (Com.).....	650
Dec. 16—A Trip from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek	350
Dec. 19—Santa Claus and the Clubman (Dr.).	1000
Dec. 20—The Sign of the Three Labels (Com.)	1000
Dec. 22—How Sir Andrew Lost His Vote (Com.)	1000
Dec. 23—Pat Clancy's Adventure (Com.)...	1000
Dec. 26—Papa's Sweetheart (Dr.).....	625
Dec. 26—Modern Weapons for Fighting Fire, New York City.....	375
Dec. 27—The Stuff that Dreams are Made of (Com.)	1000
Dec. 29—A Romance of the Cliff Dwellers (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 30—Uncle Hiram's List (Com.).....	1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Nov. 23—Old Fidelity (Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 24—At the Stroke of Twelve (Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 25—The Desert Claim (W. Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 28—A Football Hero (Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 30—Little Red Riding Hood (Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 30—'Twas Ever Thus (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 1—The Quinceville Raffle (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 2—The Mountain Law (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 5—The Madman (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 7—The Long Strike (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 8—Getting Even with Emily (Com.)..
Dec. 8—Stray Bullets (Com.).....	1000
Dec 9—A Frontier Doctor (W. Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 12—The First Man (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 14—The Hack and Schmidt Bout (Com.)
Dec. 14—A Polished Burglar (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 15—A Goodfellow's Christmas Eve (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 16—The Cowboy Coward (Dr.).....	1000

GAUMONT
G. Kleine

Nov. 11—Manresa, a Spanish Town (Travel)	200
Nov. 14—Jimmie and His Country Uncle (Com.)	820
Nov. 14—The Outskirts of Paris (Scenic)..	164
Nov. 18—The Reckoning (Dr.).....	875
Nov. 18—A Trip to Saxony.....	150
Nov. 21—The Sealed Confession (Dr.).....	900
Nov. 21—A Stone Quarry in Saxony.....	75
Nov. 25—The Escape from the Dungeon (Dr.)	825
Nov. 25—Cave Homes in the Canary Isles..	180
Nov. 28—A Busy Cupid.....	758
Nov. 28—Review of the Austrian Army.....	232
Dec. 2—The Promoter (Dr.).....	1140
Dec. 5—Jimmie Tricks the Landlady (Com.)	475
Dec. 5—The Challenge (Dr.).....	525
Dec. 9—Camoens, the Portuguese Shakespeare (Dr.)	610
Dec. 9—Important Scenes in Paris, France (Travel)	320
Dec. 12—Heroism (Dr.)	610
Dec. 12—Arabian Customs (Ind.).....	366
Dec. 16—A Queen's Treachery (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 19—Through the Enemy's Lines (Dr.).	985

KALEM CO.

Nov. 20—Dan, the Lighthouse Keeper (Dr.)..	1000
Nov. 27—The American Insurrecto (Dr.)...
Nov. 29—Among the Irish Fisher Folk (Edu.)
Nov. 29—The Franciscan Friars of Killarney, Ireland (Top.)
Dec. 1—How Betty Captured the Outlaw (Com.)
Dec. 1—A Glimpse Into the Yellowstone National Park (Sc.).....
Dec. 4—Arrah-Na-Pogue (3 reels) (Dr.)...	3000
Dec. 6—The Long Arm of the Law (Dr.)..	1000
Dec. 8—Too Much Realism (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 11—Molly Pitcher (Hist. Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 13—Norma from Norway (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 15—Bill's Flute (W. Dr.).....	1000

LUBIN

Nov. 25—His Brother's Double (Com.).....	1000
Nov. 27—The Man in the Taxi (Com. Dr.).	1000
Nov. 29—An Actor in a New Rôle (Com.)..	600
Nov. 29—The Crab Industry (Ind.).....	400
Nov. 30—A Nicotine Conspiracy (Com.)....	1000
Dec. 2—Western Chivalry (Com. Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 4—A Head for Business (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 6—Sins of the Father (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 7—Love's Labor Lost (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 9—The Teamster (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 11—A Girlish Impulse (Com. Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 13—Mr. and Mrs. Suspicious (Com.)..	400
Dec. 13—Quick! A Plumber (Com.).....	600
Dec. 14—The Substitute (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 16—A Timely Lesson (Com. Dr.).....	1000

G. MELIES.

Nov. 9—The Spur of Necessity (Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 16—The Miser Miner (Com. Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 23—An Oil Country Romance (Dr.)...	1000
Nov. 30—The Reason Why (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 7—A Western Girl (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 14—The Better Man (Com. Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 21—The Mission Father (Dr.).....	1000

PATHE FRERES

Nov. 20—Pathe's Weekly
Nov. 21—Cain and Abel.....
Nov. 21—A Grouch Cure (Com.).....
Nov. 22—A Pinch of Snuff (Com.).....
Nov. 22—The Bari Tribe (Sc.).....
Nov. 23—Cowboy Life
Nov. 23—The Kioday Equilibrists.....
Nov. 24—Two Daughters of Havana (Dr.)..
Nov. 24—Comic New Year Games in Singapore
Nov. 25—The Lost Necklace (Dr.).....
Nov. 27—Pathe's Weekly No. 48.....
Nov. 28—Romance of the Mummy (Dr.)....
Nov. 28—Picturesque Hungary (Scenic).....
Nov. 29—The Incendiary Indians (Dr.).....
Nov. 29—Glimpses of San Francisco (Scenic)
Nov. 30—Oh! What a Thanksgiving Day (Com.)
Nov. 30—A Life Saving School in Australia (Scenic)
Dec. 1—Rover is Jealous (Dr.).....
Dec. 1—Capturing Polar Bear Cubs (Scenic)
Dec. 1—Examination of the Stomach by the X Rays (Edu.).....
Dec. 2—A Bear Hunt Romance (Dr.).....
Dec. 4—Pathe's Weekly No. 49.....
Dec. 5—The Secret of the Confessional (Dr.)
Dec. 6—Hobo Luck (Com.).....
Dec. 6—Fishing in the Ceram Islands (Sc.)
Dec. 7—The Poisoned Arrow (Dr.).....
Dec. 7—French Cuirassier Manoeuvres (Sc.)
Dec. 8—Eva's Faithful Furniture (Com.)..
Dec. 8—Gathering and Preparing Cocoanuts in the Philippines (Scenic).....
Dec. 9—Her Little Slipper (Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Pathe's Weekly No. 50.....
Dec. 12—Youth Versus Age.....
Dec. 12—Small Trades in Malacca (Scenic)..
Dec. 13—The Flower Girl of Las Palmas (Dr.)
Dec. 14—An Episode of the Early Mormon Days (Dr.)
Dec. 14—The Magic Suit Case.....
Dec. 15—In the Grip of Alcohol (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—A Mother's Remorse (Dr.).....

SELIG

Nov. 27—The Right Name, but the Wrong Man (Dr.)	1000
Nov. 30—An Evil Power (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 1—In Japan (Scenic).....	500
Dec. 1—Seeing Cincinnati (Scenic).....	500
Dec. 4—A Diamond in the Rough (Dr.)...	1000
Dec. 5—A Frontier Girl's Courage (Dr.)...	1000
Dec. 7—The Maid at the Helm (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 8—The Plumber (Com.).....	600
Dec. 8—A Day with a Circus.....	400
Dec. 11—The Chief's Daughter (Dr.).....	500
Dec. 11—April Fool (Com.).....	500
Dec. 12—A Romance of the Rio Grande (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 14—George Warrington's Escape (Hist. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 15—Industries of the South and West (Edu.)	1000

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

Oct. 4—A Jealous Wife (Com.).....	338
Oct. 4—The Grand Chartreuse (Trav.).....	292
Oct. 4—Ezra and the Fortune Teller (Com.)	348
Oct. 11—Pardoned by the Governor (Dr.)..	646
Oct. 11—Making Cheddar Cheese (Ind.)...	342
Oct. 18—Ordered to Move On (Dr.).....	605
Oct. 18—Madeira, Portugal (Travel).....	385
Oct. 25—A Woman's Slave (Dr.).....	950
Nov. 1—Trapped (Dr.)	975
Nov. 8—An Eye for an Eye (His. Dr.).....	1000
Nov. 15—The Hindu Jewel Mystery (Dr.)..	1015
Nov. 22—Guy Fawkes (Dr.).....	1010
Nov. 29—The Mysterious Stranger (Dr.)....	610
Nov. 29—Salt Industry in Sicily.....	372
Dec. 6—The Luckless Banker (Dr.).....	1002
Dec. 13—The Tragedy of Old Age (Dr.)...	798
Dec. 13—Harbor of Marseilles, France (Sc.)	215
Dec. 20—The Miracle (Dr.).....	1040

VITAGRAPH

Dec. 2—The Husking Bee (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 4—Saving the Special (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 5—The Hypnotist (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 5—A Slight Mistake (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 6—The Black Chasm (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 8—The Sick Man from the East (Dr.).	1000
Dec. 9—His Wife's Secret (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 11—One Touch of Nature.....	1000
Dec. 12—The Military Air Scout.....	1000
Dec. 13—The Ventriloquist's Trunk.....	1000
Dec. 15—Love at Gloucester Port.....	1000
Dec. 16—Sick Man from the East.....
Dec. 18—Vitagraph Monthly
Dec. 19—Vanity Fair (Three Reels).....
Dec. 20—Fires of Driftwood.....
Dec. 22—A Reformed Santa Claus.....
Dec. 23—The Old Doll.....
Dec. 25—Some Good in All.....
Dec. 26—The Patchwork Quilt
Dec. 27—Testing His Courage.....
Dec. 29—A Doubly Desired Orphan.....
Dec. 30—In the Clutches of a Vapor Bath..

STATE RIGHTS! STATE RIGHTS!

The Triumph of the Century—A Masterpiece of Sensationalism

"ZIGOMAR"

A Thrilling European Detective Play in Three Parts and Fifty Scenes.
Write at once for quotations on state or territory rights. Elegant lithos, lobby displays, banners and booklets.

"LOVE AND AVIATION"

A BEAUTIFUL THREE-REEL PRODUCTION. A POEM IN PICTURES

Ask for illustrated pamphlets on these two great subjects.

The Feature and Educational Film Company

GENERAL OFFICES:
710 Columbia Building, Cleveland, O.

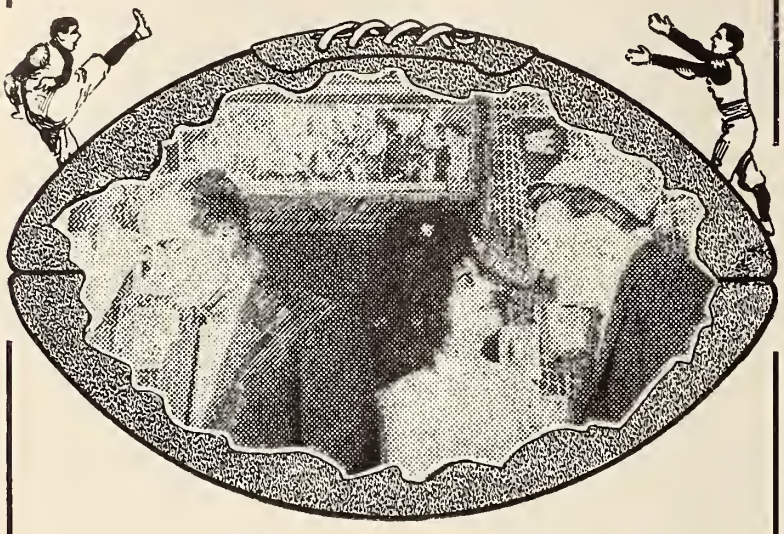
CHICAGO OFFICE:
Delaware Bldg., Randolph & Dearborn Sts.

DETROIT OFFICE:
305 Equity Building.

Look out for "MOVING PICTURE TALES"—Early in December

"The Girl and the Half-Back"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Films Co.)



A great "rah-rah" picture that will bring your audience to its feet in wild excitement. Released Monday, Dec. 18. Your favorite, King Baggott, takes the leading role. Sufficient!

"THE PROFESSOR"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Films Co.)

In which a detective tackles a knotty problem and runs up against a sleep-walker. Released Thursday, December 21. Go after it hard.

"SATURDAY SPLIT IMP"

(Both subjects copyright, 1911, Imp Films Co.)

A slam-bang comedy, "A Pair of Gloves," is crowded into the first 600 feet of this reel; followed by "Niagara Falls Celebration," embracing 400 feet packed full of corking good stuff, the famous Leach going through whirlpool rapids in a barrel, some great airship stuff, and other extremely interesting views. BEG FOR IT!

Imp Notes: Photos of Imp performers for sale. Picture postcards of King Baggott are splendid souvenirs. Imp A. B. C. Books make dandy Christmas gifts for your patrons. Three Imps a week insure you of at least three good houses every week. Is your exchange getting the Saturday Split Imp as well as the Monday and Thursday Imps?

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. OF AMERICA
102 W. 101st St., New York
Carl Laemmle, Pres.

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

EVIDENCE!

As one of the many proofs that we use brains in making up your programs. read what H. F. Rostiser, Palace Theatre, South Bend, Ind., says: "Your service is excellent. Our patrons are still talking about the splendid program you sent us last week. We cannot express our appreciation." . . . . Why don't YOU hook up with Laemmle so you'll feel like writing a letter like that?

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters:
New number 204 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.
Sykes Block, Minneapolis, Minn.
1312 Farman St., Omaha, Neb.
1110 Wyandotte St., Kansas City, Mo.
515 Mulberry St., Des Moines, Iowa.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

(My Free Employment Bureau is at your service, whoever you are.)

25c IN STAMPS GIVES YOU ONE COPY OF

HALLBERG'S

1912 MOTION PICTURE CATALOGUE AND REFERENCE BOOK

Special Jobber of

EDISON
POWERS
MOTIOGRAPH

Moving Picture Machines

The "Hallberg Economizer"

Used in connection with any of the above moving picture machines, produces the finest results on your screen that money can buy.

I Equip Theatres Completely

And carry in stock only the highest grade goods required for your theater.

Free catalogues, circulars and pamphlets furnished of individual items you require.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Free Catalogue No. 2.

You Can't Dodge

POWERS

WE'RE JUST SOARING, HIGH AND AWAY FROM ALL POSSIBLE STANDARDS. THAT is an inspiration to us, and it's a reason for spending money. We are now giving you one of the most famous stars in the country, in a repertoire of plays, including her world-known "POWER BEHIND THE THRONE." In addition to these (regular releases) our Boost Department is going to fire out to you the grandest line of matter you ever saw —free. But you've just got to demand.

DUPLEX STUDIO

MILDRED HOLLAND

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

RELEASE FOR TUESDAY, DEC. 19

CUPID'S BIG SISTER" and "TOURING BRUSSELS"

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DEC. 23 A FULL REEL FEATURE

"HEARTS OF ITALY"

NOT GOING TO SAY A WORD—READ THE SYNOPSIS, THEN DON'T REST TILL YOU GET THEM

POWERS MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

511 WEST 42d STREET NEW YORK CITY

SIXTY-THREE

EXCHANGES BUYING FROM THIS WEEKLY PROGRAM. THERE IS A REASON. NOTHING BETTER ON THE MARKET.

WEEKLY PROGRAM

MONDAY—Imp, Comet, American, Champion, Nestor.
TUESDAY—Thanhouser, Bison, Powers (Eclair, Amer.)
WEDNESDAY—Champion, Solax, Reliance, Ambrosio, Nestor.
THURSDAY—Rex, American, Itala, Imp, Eclair.
FRIDAY—Bison, Solax, Thanhouser, Lux, Comet.
SATURDAY—Powers, Itala, Great Northern, Nestor, Reliance, (Republic starts Dec. 23rd), Imp.
SUNDAY—Majestic, Republic (starts Dec. 24th). Solax (starts Dec. 24th).

INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURERS

AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO.	Ashland Block	Chicago, Ill.
NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.	1 Union Square	N. Y. C.
CHAMPION FILM COMPANY	12 East 15th Street	N. Y. C.
ECLAIR FILM COMPANY		Fort Lee, N. J.
GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY	7 East 14th Street	N. Y. C.
INDEFENDENT MOVING PICTURE COMPANY	102 West 101st Street	N. Y. C.
LUX FILM COMPANY	10 East 15th Street	N. Y. C.
MAJESTIC MOTION PICTURE COMPANY	145 West 45th Street	N. Y. C.
COMET FILM COMPANY	344 East 32nd Street	N. Y. C.
NESTOR FILM COMPANY	Ave. E. and 43rd Street,	Bayonne, N. J.
POWERS MOTION PICTURE COMPANY	511 West 42nd Street	N. Y. C.
REX MOTION PICTURE COMPANY	573 Eleventh Ave.	N. Y. C.
CARLTON M. P. LABORATORIES	540 West 21st Street	N. Y. C.
REPUBLIC FILM COMPANY	145 West 45th Street	N. Y. C.
SOLAX FILM COMPANY	Congress Avenue	Flushing, L. I.
THANHOUSER COMPANY		New Rochelle, N. Y.

SELLING THROUGH THE

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO., 111 E. 14th St., New York City

DEC 13 1911

The MAJESTIC

Will release two subjects each week beginning in early January.

We have overcome the many difficulties experienced by every new company, and each new picture will note a step in our progress.

An absolutely necessary requirement in producing a good picture is a strong scenario. We have been particularly fortunate in securing the work of able and thoughtful writers, conversant with the needs of the moving picture business.

Dec. 10th—"KEEPING MABEL HOME" Approx. 1,000 Ft.

Intrducing MABEL TRUNNELLE and HERBERT PRIOR, former Edison stars, in a delightful comedy with a clever plot. Mabel's parents plan a trip abroad to secure a duke for her; the handsome lover, disliked by parents, plans to defeat them by a clever ruse. See the crazy duke, watch him eat! Note the funny situations and how the handsome lover wins Mabel.

CHRISTMAS PICTURE—By Special Request

Dec. 17th—"LITTLE MARY PICKFORD" in "LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD" Approx. 1,000 Ft.

An appropriate Christmas picture for the children—a clever portrayal of the famous Nursery Rhyme—showing Mary taking "goodies" to her Granny—followed by the terrible wolf—reaching Granny's home to find Granny eaten by the wolf—calling of the woodsmen to dispose of the wolf—and the awakening of Mary from her dream.

Dec. 24th "THE ACTRESS" Approx. 1,000 Ft.

A strong emotional story, showing MABEL TRUNNELLE as the Actress, whose duty calls her to portray a lighted-hearted character on the stage, while at home her child lies at death's door. This film is one of the strongest yet produced and will be a big feature wherever it is shown.

A SPLIT COMEDY REEL

Dec. 31st—"THE CADDY'S DREAM" Approx. 400 Ft.

A farce comedy, showing how it took 20 years for a clever caddy to find the golf ball and the ridiculous situations in which the lovers are placed, while growing from youth to old age. A real, sure laugh and a hearty one.

Dec. 31st—"WILL YOU MARRY ME?" Approx. 600 Ft.

Another farce comedy, showing the determination of the young fellow to get married—he proposes to every girl he meets and is finally tricked by the girl he loves.

THE MAJESTIC MOTION PICTURE CO.

TOM D. COCHRANE, GENERAL MANAGER

145 WEST 45th STREET NEW YORK CITY

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

JAN 12 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

Volume IV
No. 50

December 16
1911

PRICE
TEN CENTS

SCENE FROM
THE TRINITY
IMP RELEASE - JANUARY 4, 1912

REP

RELIANCE.

$500.00 REWARD

FOR INFORMATION LEADING TO THE ARREST AND CONVICTION OF ANY PERSON DUPING THE FILMS OF THE MANUFACTURERS WHOSE TRADE MARKS SURROUND THIS NOTICE

WILL BE PAID BY THE

MOTION PICTURE DIST. AND SALES CO.

111 EAST 14th STREET NEW YORK

NESTOR

THE "COMET"

THE MAJESTIC

Has a perfect right to expect unqualified support from every buying exchange in the country.

It entered the Independent market under the most trying conditions any manufacturer was ever called upon to face—conditions which almost precluded the possibility of profit.

It has made three releases with a reasonable degree of success, and the subsequent releases will prove conclusively to every exchange and exhibitor that THE MAJESTIC is second to none in the Independent market.

It is now releasing one subject each week—ONE GOOD ONE—and beginning January 7th will release two-a-week—TWO GOOD ONES.

It will then concentrate every effort on ONLY two good ones each week.

Five First Class Quality Pictures. New and Novel Plots :: :: Perfect Photography—Acting Above Criticism :: ::

INDEPENDENT Release Dates

MAJESTIC

Nov. 26—The Courting of Mary (Com.)....1000
Dec. 3—Love Heeds Not Showers (Com.)..1000
Dec. 10—Keeping Mabel Home (Com.).....1000
Dec. 17—Little Red Riding Hood (Juvenile).1000
Dec. 24—The Actress (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 31—The Caddy's Dream (Com.)..... 385
Dec. 31—Will You Marry Me? (Com.)..... 615
Jan. 7—Training a Husband (Com.).....1000

Dec. 17 CHRISTMAS PICTURE—By Special Request

LITLE MARY PICKFORD in

"Little Red Riding Hood"

An appropriate Christmas picture for the children—a clever portrayal of the famous Nursery Rhyme—showing Red Riding Hood taking "goodies" to her Granny—followed by the terrible wolf—reaching Granny's home to find Granny eaten by the wolf—calling of the woodsmen to dispose of the wolf—and the awakening of Red Riding Hood from her dream.

Dec. 24 "The Actress"

A strong emotional story, showing MABEL TRUNNELLE as the actress, whose duty calls her to portray a light-hearted character on the stage, while at home her child lies at death's door. This film is one of the strongest yet produced and will be a big feature wherever it is shown.

A SPLIT COMEDY REEL

Dec. 31 "The Caddy's Dream" — 385 Feet

A farce comedy, showing how it took 20 years for a clever caddy to find the golf ball and the ridiculous situations in which the lovers are placed, while growing from youth to old age. A real, sure laugh and a hearty one.

Dec. 31 "Will You Marry Me?" — 615 feet

Another farce comedy, showing the determination of the young fellow to get married—he proposes to every girl he meets and is finally tricked by the girl he loves.

Jan. 7th "Training A Husband"

A clever comedy reel—the husband does not like his wife's cooking—wants his mother to cook a meal for him. She does, then he says he can cook better than either one of them—gets his stenographer to do it for him, then claims credit—is found out and then he gets what is coming to him.

Two Good Majestics a Week beginning January 7th

THE MAJESTIC MOTION PICTURE CO.

145 WEST 45th STREET

NEW YORK CITY

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

THE THANHOUSER "GREATEST DECEMBER"

Let us help decorate your lobby for the Holidays—Mail us the coupon in the lower left-hand corner.

"SHE"

Request NOW the "Greatest Decemher's" GREATEST Picture!

IN 2 REELS

RIDER HAGGARD'S MYSTERY MASTERPIECE

TUESDAY, DEC. 26

A Special and a Feature Issued as a Regular Thanhouser Release

AS A GORGEOUS, MYSTIFYING MOTION PICTURE

Here is the wonder-subject you have been waiting for. To be booked at any exchange NOW. Ask to-day. Don't join the line when it stretches clear around the hlock. Remember, there are two kinds of dandy one-sheets for the picture and a rich three-sheet Artposter. You can bill it like a circus. And once your display pulls the people inside, the picture will astound and stun them with its startling effects and amazing mystery situations.

"SHE"

RELEASED FRIDAY, DEC. 29

Last of the "Greatest December" Issues

The Expert's Report

is something novel in the dramatic way, introducing a "twist" that will thrill and satisfy any audience. Try to be at your exchange when they put on the reel for inspection. Get a line on the "twist" we're tipping you about, for use in your advertising. And don't forget that "The Thanhouser Kid" drops to the bottom of a well in this picture. Mention THAT in your advertising. Here is a good, strong story that any patron will appreciate.

EXTRA! Plenty of Billing Matter for "SHE!"

Thanhouser Company beg to announce that the exhibitor can secure from his exchange TWO kinds of one-sheet four-color lithos for "SHE," and a THREE-SHEET ARTPOSTER. The supply of the three-sheet Artposters is limited and it is requested that you give your exchange NOW an idea of how many three-sheet Artposters you will require.

THANHOUSER CO., NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.—Send me FREE Lobby Decorations for your "Greatest December" features. I am not getting "The Thanhouser News."

(NAME).....

(ADDRESS).....

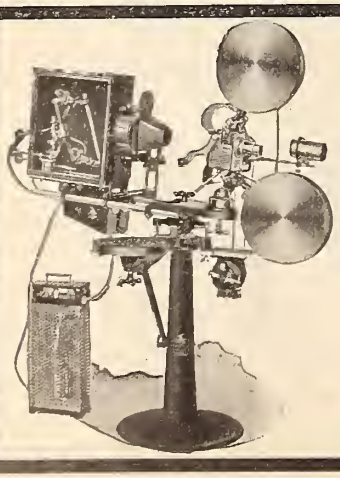
(EXCHANGE).....

CLIP AND MAIL THIS DAY

THANHOUSER CO.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Sales Company agents for U. S. and Canada.



One Hundred and Fifteen Thousand People in the First Fifteen Days

was the attendance at the lectures of the Southern-Union Pacific Railway System at the Land Show, Chicago, Novemher 18th to Decemher 9th, 1911.

This great railway system has given suhstantial proof of their unhounded faith in the moving picture as an advertising medium hy investing over Twenty-five Thousand Dollars for an exhihit of only three weeks. This company had erected for their purpose two complete moving picture theatres seating about 500 people in each and conducted alternately one-half hour lectures.

THE MACHINES USED WERE ONE 1908 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH AND ONE 1910 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH—"NUF SED."

1912 MODELS NOW BEING SHIPPED.

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO., 564 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO

For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

© Cl.B250974

"The contents of this issue are copyrighted"

The Moving Picture News

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

Sole Agent and Correspondent for advertisements in Great Britain B. Allan, 8 Sherwood St., Piccadilly Circus, W., London

Chicago Representative: Warner Kennedy, 844 Waveland Avenue. 'Phone 3818 Lake View.

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor.

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President; John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Volume IV December 16, 1911 Number 50

DISGRACEFUL FAKE PICTURES

WE thought the day of faking pictures had long since passed. It is with extreme regret and reluctance we take up our pen to strongly protest against exploiting fake pictures upon a long-suffering public. We received an invitation a short while ago to go and see a great war picture being staged out on Coney Island. We were unable to do so, but had we known what the picture was to be, we certainly would have gone and strongly protested personally against such an atrocious lying story. We speak strongly, because we feel strongly, and we do not for one moment hesitate to say that the company who produced this film should apologize in their trade organ to the public of Nickelodia, whom they have grossly insulted, more especially, to our friends, the Italians.

We refer specially to the Vitagraph film showing the scenes supposed to emanate in the atrocities perpetrated by the Italians upon the Turks. The following excerpt clipped from the "Tribune" of December 12th will give our readers an idea to what we refer:

DENOUNCE WAR PICTURES

Result: Three Italians Must Answer for "Inciting Riot"

In the Essex Market Court this morning three Italians will be tried on a charge of inciting a riot in the Dewey Theater last Saturday afternoon. They are Albert Pecorini, managing director of the Italian-American Civic League; Alberto Tarchiani and Glauco Barral, friends of the league director.

According to Mr. Pecorini, the men entered the Dewey Theater when they saw advertised the first pictures of the war in Tripoli. What they did see, he declared, was a vitagraph picture entitled "War," showing the Italian atrocities.

"The scene, however," said Mr. Pecorini yesterday, "was enacted at Coney Island. There was nothing about the dress of the soldiers to show that they were Italians. Such a thing was an insult."

In loud tones, Mr. Pecorini then told the large audience that the pictures were "fakes." A number of Italians immediately left the hall, he declared. So did he, with his two companions, but their departure was assisted by a patrolman.

"We were locked up on a charge of inciting a riot," said Mr. Pecorini, "and our bail was set at $1,500, which was soon produced by other Italians."

The Vitagraph Company, Mr. Pecorini said, had publicly advertised the fact that the pictures were enacted here, but from newspaper descriptions of the atrocities, and also before they were officially denied.

The Italian ambassador, he declared, had been in conference with Secretary Knox regarding the display of the pictures, asserting that they were creating a false impression in this country. The Italian Consul General here, Mr. Pecorini said, had taken the matter up with the District Attorney.

We honor the men who stood up in defense of their country as described in the above clipping. We think that every Italian in the country, who sees this film, is justified in getting up in his seat and denouncing with all the vehemence of his nature, and we believe that every honest, upright American citizen will commend them for so doing. The film is an abominable lie, and, as such, should be censored by the National Censorship Board, by the police boards of Chicago, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, etc. It was a disgrace to the Vitagraph Company, for the sake of pocketing a few dirty dollars, to bring out such a film, and, worse still, for the Patents Company to allow such a disgusting exhibition of disgraceful avariciousness to be released by the General Film Company. The following clipping acts as a sequel, and we are pleased to find that Magistrate Harris had the sense of public principle to take the stand he did:

FREES THEATER "RIOTERS"

Magistrate Upholds Italians for Denouncing "Fake Pictures"

Three Italians who made a protest against moving pictures of the Italian-Turkish war, in the Dewey Theater on Saturday afternoon, and who were arrested and charged with inciting a riot, were discharged by Magistrate Harris in the Essex Market Court yesterday afternoon.

They were Albert Pecorini, Albert Tarchiani and Glauco Barral, and they testified that their protest was based on the fact that the films were advertised on placards as being the "first original pictures of the Italian-Turkish war." The manager of the picture show, they swore, admitted to them that the pictures had been taken at Coney Island, the "soldiers" being actors arrayed for the part.

Magistrate Harris, in discharging the three Italians, said that their protest against the pictures was perfectly proper under the circumstances, since the pictures were not original, but an insult to the Italian army. Pecorini admitted he had denounced the pictures as "fakes," and then, with his two companions, left the theater.—Tribune, December 13.

In conclusion, we want to say that this, in our opinion, is a Federal case, and should be taken up by the Federal authorities at Washington, that the Italian Consul of New York City, and every other city, where these films are shown should write a vigorous protest, asking that action shall be taken by the Federal authorities to wrest an apology from the makers of this film, and if it is possible to mulct them in damages, the damages should be very high; in fact, the damages awarded to Jack Binns of "wireless fame" should only be a fleabite compared with what is due to the Italian Government in damages. One thing that so greatly surprises us in this matter is the fact that original films are being produced, and can be procured. They are on exhibition in various cities of the world. They were taken by the Cines Company of Rome, whose camera men are in Tripoli and on the actual scene of warfare. These original pictures are available to every one who wants them, therefore the production of fake films are the still greater crime. It brings back to our memory very forcibly the Boer War, where Jack Rosenthal was at the seat of operations, sending in to his English firms actual proceedings of the progress of the belligerents. This not being quick enough, the manufacturers produced fake films of Spion Kop, and San Juan Hill, which were taken around Hempstead Heath, the Clee, and Fox's Hills of Aldershot. We protested strongly against these fake pictures then, in quite as vigorous language as we protest against these fake pictures of the war between Italy and Turkey to-day, and sincerely trust that the time of faking such incidents will after this be a thing of the past.

OPERATORS' UNION OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

IT is greatly to be regretted that the Washington Moving Picture Operators' Association, which has just begun its career, should have brought discredit upon itself at its first banquet, which occurred recently. That some of the members had prepared a picture show after the feast was quite in keeping with the organization; but that disgusting, objectionable views should be presented was not the wish of the association, yet such pictures composed the show, and some one secured the reels purposely and some one is to blame. The question is, "Who?" but the answer is not forthcoming. The police, with the further assistance of one of the local papers, have so bungled the affair that it will be no easy matter to place the blame on the responsible parties.

The public of Washington, which has always held the reputation of having the cleanest picture houses (fact for which the managers must be given first credit), is righteously incensed that such an indecent show was presented before even a stag audience. The matter has a serious side, as it reflects discredit on this new industry which is now becoming so helpful to humanity. It is to be regretted that there are always in organizations some "misfits" and "objectionable parties" who are a drawback to the society, but who somehow get in. This is what has happened in the case of the operators' union.

The fact that the several arrests that have been made have proved of no consequence reflects small credit on the police department. Those interested in the moving picture industry, especially those interested in it financially, are ready to bend all efforts to locate the guilty parties and place the blame on the proper persons. Manager Tom Moore at once offered $100 for the recovery of the films, and would see that they were destroyed before the authorities.

There have been conflicting statements, misstatements, and an absence of knowledge of the affair from many quarters, while one of the local papers has been adding objectionable fuel to the fire with columns of "words." Action is what is wanted in a case of this kind, not opinions. The police department of the District has always spoken so highly of the Washington picture houses and found so little cause to "call them down," that it was in no way prepared for an objectionable show of pictures from any quarter. Still, when the discovery was made, inefficiency of some character has been displayed and until "something is done" to bring to justice those responsible for the films, there seems little necessity for further discussion.

OBJECTIONABLE THEATERS

By Margaret I. MacDonald

OWING to the recent cry about certain moving picture theaters in Newark, I made it my business to investigate as far as it was possible for me to do so. In one afternoon during the past week I visited a number of small moving picture theaters there. Among the number was one that is an absolute disgrace to modern civilization. This theater is called the Imperial Theater, and is on Springfield Avenue. It will seat in the neighborhood of two hundred people. The place was in total darkness, save for the faint glimmer of one small incandescent light near the entrance, the two red-globed lanterns which hung one over each entrance door, and another like lantern shedding a sickly glow from above the one sole exit that was scarce worthy the name. In fact, I have not yet seen the door supposed to be there, but, judging from the fact that a lantern hung on the wall, I guessed that there must be some loop-hole of escape beneath it. This exit was directly beside the small stage which was used as a vaudeville stage as well as for the moving pictures. In the middle of the stage was a tiny coop with a black curtain in front of it, which I think was used as a dressing room for the performers. Association pictures are shown at this theater. Somehow I found myself glad that it was not an Independent house. I suppose that was a little weak, womanish touch in me; it ought not really to make any difference, for a picture is a picture, and "What's in a name, after all?"

Of the other small theaters visited by me on that afternoon there was really little fault to be found. Some of them were lacking in the way of ventilation, but many of these were supplied with electric fans, and only two had but one exit—the others had at least two well-defined ones. Some of these theaters, though small in floor dimension, had a height of ceiling that in a large measure saved the situation, allowing more breathing space. Also only a couple of these were dark, most of them having softly shaded lights, which, however, penetrated the remotest corners of the theater.

The first-mentioned theater was a veritable firetrap. Of the others I could not say this except in one instance, and above this theater was a dwelling, a condition which should not be allowed. On this particular afternoon there were very few children at the shows. Outside one of the doors I was attracted by one poor little tot, weeping as though her heart would break. She had evidently been refused admittance. The situation with regard to the children is pathetic. A number of children hung about the doors of most of the theaters. One litte chap, as I emerged from the prohibited paradise, pointed to a picture of Indians on a poster at the door. Said he, "Are they showin' that to-day?" I felt sorry for the little fellow, for I knew he was longing to go inside. And, for my part, I cannot see for the life of me what earthly harm the children can derive from the motion picture as it is to-day. The press tells us that mothers complain that the moving picture shows are answerable for the waywardness of their children. I am willing to wager that out of every hundred children that attend moving picture shows there will not be more than one or two at the most that derive actual harm therefrom, and I will also wager that those same children did not have to come to the moving picture theater to learn harm.

In every neighborhood there should be a moving picture theater. In that theater there should be shown a variety of pictures. The educational picture should, of course, always have an inning. These theaters should be compelled to be lighted properly, and ventilated properly; also they should be compelled to be provided with proper exits in case of fire. Is it not better for the child to spend his pennies in going to the moving picture show, where he will see something to set his mind at work, tone up his imagination, and inspire certain high ideals, than to spend his spare money in buying miserably adulterated candy with which to ruin his digestion? Have we not been already told that impure food has a degenerating effect upon the morals? I am inclined to thing it may be so. There is no doubt in my mind that the greatest harm in the child's attendance at a moving picture show is in the restraint placed upon him by the authorities, and also his home folks, with regard to going to the moving picture show. Teach the child that there is only good to be derived therefrom, and he will most likely glean what he is told to be on the lookout for. Tell him there is evil lurking in the pretty pictures, and his little mind will doubtless commence ferreting about for the evil. Why shut the little ones away from these great living picture books? All their picture books have stiff, starey pictures that you have to use a great deal of imagination to be able to convert into living things. It is a great, big, abnormal selfishness, and a weak-minded prejudice that prohibits the chidren from attending the moving picture show when it is their desire to do so. In fact, I will go so far as to say that the degenerating element very often enters society with the prohibitory clause.

The neighborhood theater provides amusement for many who have not the extra money to pay carfare to go a distance to be entertained. It can also be made educative and one of the safest places of resort for children. There is a great hue and cry about very little—"much ado about nothing." What is the law for if not to prevent conditions detrimental to the morals and safety of the community? Then cannot the authorities without so much ado compel the exhibitor who fails to do his duty to step out of the ranks and give place to those who have a will to do what is right?

CHILDREN AND PICTURE SHOWS

WE believe, with Mayor Gaynor, that under certain conditions not only should the City of New York allow children to visit the picture shows, but they should also be allowed wherever a theater is in existence. We have watched the progress of the children's movement, and we feel ashamed that religious bodies, Roman Catholic priests, Episcopalian ministers, Methodists and Baptists, should ally themselves with such prejudice to the suppression of the entrance of children to these theaters. They are simply using arguments that went out of existence years ago, to try to bolster up poor arguments to-day. We feel sure that if the children are permitted to visit the theaters, and that it was known that they could criticise, manufacturers would be more careful in submitting films to the general public that would harm or injure the child. The following report taken again from the "Tribune," will give our readers some idea of the foresight and sympathy of Mayor Gaynor on behalf of the children. May other mayors be as broad-minded, and help as he has done.

TO AMEND PICTURE LAWS

Mayor Approves Plan to Admit Children at Certain Hours

Mayor Gaynor indicated yesterday that he was in favor of the recommendation made by the commission to amend the ordinances regulating moving picture exhibitions so as to permit children under sixteen years of age to attend such shows unaccompanied by a parent or guardian between the hours of 3 and 6 p. m. on school days, and up to 6 p. m. on other days.

The commission yesterday submitted drafts of new ordinances to the Board of Aldermen through the Mayor. But the provision in regard to children under sixteen years of age can be changed only by the Legislature amending the Penal Code. The commission found that the Penal Code provision had never been enforced because of the difficulty it presented, and it believes it is better to give children the opportunity of going to these shows alone, so long as they do it under the proper conditions and the nature of films shown is properly controlled.

The Mayor has also made it plain that if the Board of Aldermen should pass the proposed oprdinance of Alderman White changing the regulation of moving picture shows before giving due consideration to the one framed by his commission he will feel called upon to use his veto power.

EDUCATIONAL PICTURES

WHY all this talk about educational films? Why do you want a showman to educate children? His duty is to amuse—make people laugh. To that end he shows comedy in his theater, and drama to make them cry. I once heard a showman say he liked to end up with a comedy so as to send every one home laughing—while another liked to end up with drama and send his audience home drying their eyes—but I never heard of one closing his show with an educational or scenic picture, for his house would be empty before the first 100 feet had been shown. As an operator, I do not carry reels now, but when I did my boss that I once worked for would not show a scenic reel. "Go and pick one four years old, rather," he'd say. Once, when I disobeyed, he looked first at the picture, then at me and gave orders for a reduction in my salary. When pay night came around I discovered my pay envelope was no lighter than usual, but the boss quietly but firmly informed me if I wished my pay envelope to remain in its fat state I was to remember he wanted in his theater drama for the ladies, war pictures for the men, love stories for the girls, and cowboy and Indian pictures for the boys—no mention was made of scenic or educational pictures. He also reminded me that before I could get my salary it had first to come through the little "How Many" window, and neither educational nor scenic pictures would do that. Film manufacturers would be tickled to death if they could sell a whole lot of this kind of films, as they cost less to produce, and the renter would be pleased, too, but he knows the exhibitor makes one big holler when one is switched on him. He (the exhibitor) is the man who knows what the people want, and nine-tenths of the theater-going public don't want to be educated in a theater. They will stand for half a reel a week—say a good scenic picture of some foreign country, but no more. Only this week I showed a beautiful picture of France, and I noticed quite a number of peple go out directly it appeared, and that was the first show of the evening. By all means let them be shown in the schools—that's the proper place for them—where children are educated, and where the teachers can lecture on them, but people come to the theater to be amused—that is what they pay for. The girl, who helps mother is seen in drama now and again, and goes down all right, but the showman knows that the Evelyn Thaws, Nan Pattersons, Indians, cowboys and soldiers pay his help, film and electric light bills, rent, etc., and leave a good margin for himself—and he does not have to bother about educational films.

From an Operator's View.

"WHAT'S IN A FACE"

Ask Mr. Lee Beggs, Solax's New Character Comedian, Who Plays the Leading Role in "His Musical Soul"

Some forty years ago, away out in that part of the country where the folks are skeptical and ask to be shown, the rotund and corpulent Lee Beggs was born. Mr. Beggs has ever since his birth been a living argument for the "fat man." Everybody loves the "fat man" around the Solax studio—with the possible exception of little Magda Foy, the Solax Kid—but then little Magda has a little heart, and she can only love "one" at a time. Sh! hush—her love affair is a secret!

When Mr. Beggs was not yet above the spanking age, he decided that there was more fun in being an actor than in studying geography. So one day Mr. Beggs begged himself into the theatrical business. His first responsibilities were the onerous labors of a "prop" boy. His salary consisted of free admission to the show.

The beggarly existence of a "prop" boy didn't satisfy Lee Beggs for long. He had higher aims. His manly heart, palpitating in a body weighing two hundred pounds, was set on becoming a real actor. That he became a real actor is evidenced by his twenty-five years of continuous engagements in vaudeville and the legitimate. He played with Julia Marlowe and had many engagements in stock in various sections of the country. He was stage director and manager on a number of occasions.

In all, Mr. Beggs believes he has played anywhere between 500 and 1,000 parts. He is a newcomer in motion pictures, and is a great believer in the future of the silent drama. He has his own ideas on what constitutes the requirements of a good moving picture actor. Mr. Beggs doesn't have to use many words to express himself. His face speaks for him before he opens his mouth—and that is saying a good deal. Mr. Beggs appeared with success in "The Interrupted Elopement," "Fickle Bridget," "A Troublesome Picture," "The Will of Providence," and "His Musical Soul."

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

By Leonard Donaldson

The Durbar Films

Our German cousins have long boasted the possession of an "Official Bioscopist." It is quite apparent that in cinematography, as in various other matters, Germany has taught us much. Up to the moment my own country has no "official" cinematographer, in the accepted significance of the term. Obviously the duties of this person is to obtain records by means of the cinematograph of all the events of moment in a country's history. I have just heard that Mr. Chas. Urban has been appointed by His Majesty, King George, to record the Coronation Durbar in Delhi in "Kinemacolor"; to film in natural colors the magnificent ceremonial of England's beloved King being crowned in person and proclaimed monarch of his Eastern Empire. I am informed that the invitation to do so came in the first instance from His Majesty in person, so pleased was he with the Coronation films, the Prince of Wales' Investiture, and the Naval Review exhibited by command at Balmoral a short time ago. Possessed of a prerogative never previously granted to any cinematographer, Mr. Urban will certainly bring back to England a pictorial history of the unexampled splendors of the King-Emperor's visit of great vividness and realism. The pomp and ceremony connected with this function will, as in the case of the Coronation, have a marked effect in impressing on the public mind all the world over the value and potentialities of the motion picture and the picture theater in particular. Such functions as these are going to give the picture theater a great fillip by demonstrating the utility of the cinematograph in recording for posterity the great national events of our time. We hope that all those connected with it will seize the opportunity and discharge their duties well. The Durbar films will serve to bind the Fatherland and its Eastern sons closer together, and arouse and develop good-will between nation and natnon. Following the Durbar, Mr. Urban is to be given an opportunity to visit and take pictures of the wonderful palaces of several of the great ruling princes of India. This remarkable color panorama will certainly be awaited with keen interest both in London and the provinces. It is scarcely hazardous to predict that our descendants would prefer to see a visual reproduction of the coming great event at Delhi than to read in a time-stained news-sheet a reporter's bald record of the same. In a very short time—even before the return of their Majesties to England—every inhabitant of the British Isles, every subject of the Empire, will be able to feel as if he or she had, to some extent, participated in those functions and festivities connected with the great historic ceremony.

MOVING PICTURES AND ILLUSTRATED STEREOPTICON TEACHING

The Lever for Progressive Auxiliary Education

(A Lecture at the Gotham Club, Dec. 5th)

By Mary Lawton Metcalfe, D.A.R.

IT was not until recently that we became interested in the possibilities of the International Movement of Moving Pictures, as the auxiliary to advanced educational methods of instruction. In thinking deeply on this subject, the moment is ripe to assert with unfaltering conviction that:

Moving pictures for all subjects of progressive education, from the kindergarten through the university and teachers' colleges, have absolutely no rival, as a method of practical, interesting teaching.

As an experienced teacher and mother it is my privilege to present with unlimited enthusiasm the claims of the moving pictures and stereopticon apparatus to the attention of homes, schools, clubs, churches, parish-houses, social settlements, college settlements, etc., etc.

The moving picture movement has simply stepped out from the hidden mysteries of nature to make its initial bow on the threshold of the great temple of knowledge to claim its right of being, as the distributing battery of right ideals for upliftment in city, town, village, hamlet.

Through the lens of the human eye, upon the camera of the conscious observing faculties, located in the nerves of the brain, sights and scenes are being printed incessantly of passing objects and scenes.

There are, therefore, millions of mental-picture galleries full of past views of real happenings. Mental pictures of happenings in farce, comedy, tragedy, indeed stories of joy and sorrow are incessantly being stamped on the mental films of every conscious creature. This is noticeable in the animal world, as well as with men.

The saying that "Children and dogs know their friends" is truth based on knowledge that animals receive the impression of the kindness granted them and, storing up the mental picture of the former friend, return to ex-press, that is press out in a deed a visible sign of appreciation, if only a joyous bark, a leap, a wag of the tail.

The responsiveness of a horse is too old a story to expand into another example of the capacity of the brute creation for receiving and retaining mental pictures of their individual impressions.

Advancing in the graded steps of continuity of thought, we reach the tender years of the healthy, normal child. Until the years of moral consciousness, he is but in the stage of a vigorous young animal, that must be trained and loved through the obstreperous period of the "young colt age."

It is in the gallery of mental pictures that imagination and desire wander for inspiration. From memory's storehouse the youth of each age get their supply of material with which to build the character of men and women of the future.

"Shipwrecks on the sands of time" have struck the bar because the headlights pointed to the shoals, instead of into the port of Success. Right sailing from the life chart must be on these lines:

Do Right and Love God and Your Fellow-man.

Nerve specialists, to-day, do not hesitate to advise for child-welfare an environment dominated by all that is light, bright, happy, cheerful. It is the age of optimism, applied to every condition of humanity.

Psychologists and advanced educators demand equipment in the home and school of attractive furnishings, stimulating pictures, encouraging views. Fresh air, pure food, simple living are the sine qua non of long life and happiness, with no reality of the spectre old age. A live mind expresses a young body. Results from investigation show that early association with darkness, gloom, illness, disorder, disease and any form of crime have so dominated the mental camera of infancy and childhood that the full-fledged criminal has matured before boys and girls actually reached the age of maturity—unfortunate victims from impressing pictures of wrong sights and influences, rather than initiative producers of virgin crime.

It will be seen, therefore, how necessary it is for those who have the training and education of the impressionable years of youth to surround the massses and individuals with entertainments of wholesome, helpful value.

Impure pictures of depressing conditions, as well as poisonous literature can sap the most brilliant minds of vitality and power. While philanthropists are providing public libraries for the masses; while from the public moneys are vast appropriations for books to satisfy a natural mental hunger, the claims of the moving pictures and their neces-

CHRISTMAS EVE!

Sunshine and song without, the sound of bells in the air! Christmas cheer and Christmas gaiety and gladness everywhere! Everywhere? Ah, no! Even this night, when the world rejoices, there are some who are desolate, some whose hearts are drear, some for whom the merry Christmas chimes strike only a knell.

"The Martyr"

REX XMAS FILM,
RELEASED THURSDAY, DEC. 21,

tells us the other side, the shadow lost and forgotten in the Yuletide brilliance. The sweet spirit of the One of Galilee moves through the thousand feet, and we throb and thrill at the truth of it. "The Martyr" is one to her own mother-love, and the Christmas Eves of many years come and go, and with the passing of each a little more respect and a little more of her children's love go with it. The sympathy and sentiment and sweet sadness which Miss Lois Weber instills into the role will characterize it as a master work of dramatic art.

IT'S AN EMOTION PICTURE!

It's a picture truly without peer or parallel!

REX

THE REX MOTION PICTURE MFG. CO.
573 ELEVENTH AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

Sales Co. says "The Martyr," like every other, will do a lot of good!

sary place, as supplementary to public library lectures and public schools, must be recognized!

The rich are able to provide foreign travel and departments of specific culture for their children.

What are the chances of the millions herded in narrow rooms and apartment homes who have no opportunity to satisfy the riotous imagination of untrained childhood?

Earth's beauty spots are brought to childish eyes through the moving picture show in the narrow street of the crowded city.

Sunshine, bird-songs, green trees, sandy beaches, the joys of nature in forest, on hill top or down by the sea are all the dreams of the children of city streets.

In the inland southern and western towns can the boys and girls dash in the waves of old ocean, as he throws them high on the wide beaches of the great American seashores.

Yes, on the top of the Rocky Mountains in mining camp centers boys and girls see the pictures of Atlantic City, Asbury Park, Manhattan Beach, Coney Island and it is all so real, as the moving pictures show the real scenes of healthy physical exercises that audiences are carried away with enthusiastic realization of being "in it."

Before the sixth year, when Baby Bell can spell out the first story in her reader, her education has begun out of school. Little Jack has gone to the "moving pictures with papa." O great event in the country child's life! "I want to be with papa and get to be a man like him," should be the greatest message to every father, who leaves too often all the responsibility to "mama."

What greater incentive to parents to think right and to do right, than that the children from their mental ideals of their manhood from them!

Granted that the child goes with his parents to the "show" in early years, that is, before he can read from a story-book; moving pictures show him in life size the animals of a "live" Noah's Ark.

What are wooden toys and a brass monkey in the dark bedroom on the sixth floor of the apartment home to the sight of real live animals—horses galloping through the woods, dogs leaping up to the master, elephants crashing through jungles, parrots flying in the branches.

The moving picture menagerie, or live Noah's Ark, gives joy for the holiday afternoon.

It will be understood thus, that the first step in the child's education is to focus its attention.

The moving picture show leads all other inventions of mechanism in the developments of science and arts to chain the attention of childhood.

Let us emphasize the assertion:

> Moving pictures and illustrated stereopticon talks have no rivals as the educational agency to distribute knowledge.

A picture sets in activity the first currents of individual thinking about the scenes thrown on the canvas.

Pictures in motion in the school rooms are the first steps to stimulate the desire to learn about persons, places, things.

This is the prime idea in supplying inspiring books to the juvenile mind.

Every normal child has the hunger for books.

> The moving pictures suggest ideas which cause the desire for reading matter in the children's department of the public library systems.

These two avenues of learning are the indisputable complement of each other.

Public and private modern education of youth demands more individual reading under proper guidance.

The moving pictures, having focused first the attention of the child, helps him up to the next rung of the ladder of education which must lead upward to success.

The moving picture next creates interest in the wonderful mechanism of the child's unfolding brain.

It develops unfolding nobility, generosity, earnestness to help in the emergency, and each act suggested by a good picture is a stone in the temple being constructed as the character building of the future citizen.

Sights of great cities, where both "halves" make the one American people, are truly being stored up in the realm of the subconscious mind, that mysterious power house, the heaven or hell in the moving world of constructive thinking to the good or to the bad.

The moving picture is an active agent in the education to good citizenship, whether one is convinced or is still thoughtless of the great truths of impressionable life.

The young folk's library established itself as the best of the world of English compilations in presenting a character building plan to help in the Educational Auxiliary Movement. In this series of books mental development is presented as the unbroken chain of ten links.

In a progressive community it will be realized how indispensable to the educational opportunities and facilities of childhood and youth is the auxiliary supplement of moving picture and stereopticon equipment available for private and public teaching.

The vast fertile agricultural South will awaken to the value of the moving picture movement to give sight-teaching of practical skilled labor as producers to millions of men and women in the rural sections where no proportion have been able to learn the art of reading and writing, though enjoying the rights of national citizenship for half a century.

The ignorance of alien peasantry in American life and its established institutions can be removed through enlightenment of sights which their eyes may read from the canvas of the moving picture, though ears are sealed to the meaning of English words. It remains for these suggestions to be seriously appropriated by all who are earnestly engaged in solving the problems which confront the American nation in its most wonderful period of living, moving history of progressive education; that educing or drawing out constructive conscious power of individuals single and collectively.

THE BURBANKER OF THE ANIMAL KINGDOM

By Margaret I. MacDonald

Once or twice in a century an individual distinct and separate from all others appears on the horizon of human history. Science makes its progress step by step by manifestation of the great universal mind through man. The rapid development of the gray matter added to his natural love of enterprise and exploitation has, in recent years, led the old-time course of evolution rather a breathless chase.

BUFFALO JONES

The vegetable kingdom, which had been wending its way along the same beaten track for who knows how many centuries, until rudely disturbed by the hand of man dissatisfied with natural developments, at last met its "Waterloo" in the divine Burbank. Luther Burbank, whose immediate ancestors had accidentally introduced into the make-up of the plant kingdom a combination that was destined to make him the greatest scientist of the culture of vegetation, produced the most wonderful results from the most modest units of the plant kingdom.

"WHEN?" G!

In this century of wonders, alongside of Burbank, came another mastermind working along another channel in the line of evolution. It remained for a brave man (from the West also) to experiment with the animal kingdom in just such manner as did Burbank with the vegetable kingdom. Through crosses of species Mr. C. J. Jones, better known to civilization as "Buffalo Jones," of New Mexico, but born in the State of Illinois, has given us new types of animals. This is hurrying evolution on a bit, isn't it? Nevertheless, this is what he has done; as a result of a cross between the buffalo and range cattle we have the animal with beautiful silver gray fur, known as the catalo. He has also developed a new kind of mutton by importing the broadtail and crossing it with the merino sheep. The meat of this animal is said to be delicious as venison, without the woolly taste usually accompanying mutton. And many other interesting feats in hybridizing have been accomplished by "Buffalo Jones." Mr. Jones has at present a large ranch in New Mexico. He is the possessor of a large herd of buffalo, three thousand sheep, also cattle, horses and other members of the animal kingdom.

Although to the more scientifically inclined of us the above facts are most interesting, still to the general public the fact that "Buffalo Jones" is one of the most fearless men in Christendom—a famous buster of bronchos—and last, but not least, the only man who has been, up to the present time, able to lasso and rope alive all kinds of fierce wild animals, is the one that makes him in their eyes a very hero among men. With two American cowboys and ten horses he roved the African jungles, roping the lion, rhinoceros, and what not. Mr. Jones is getting on to seventy, perhaps; but one is not quite sure, for he is fully as active as if he were but forty. With his gray sombrero hat and his several feet of fine American manhood, he strikes one with a thrill of life from the Western plains. "Buffalo Jones" is a thoughtful looking man. He impresses one with the idea that he has meditated much and talked little, and he is altogether a very interesting individual to come in contact with. As he escorted me across our own native Broadway, alive with automobiles, street cars and vehicles of all kinds, of which I have never outgrown my original terror, his stimulating remark of "Don't you be afraid of 'em. If they see you're afraid they're liable to run over you," is characteristic of the principle upon which he has carried on his work—it is the secret of his success in overcoming even the king of beasts. He knows that there are two alternatives to which the wild beast has recourse in case of attack. It will either attack with intent to kill or it will run away. He knows that fear-thought is the downfall of the many.

Humanity owes a great deal to a man of "Buffalo Jones'" sort. He is doing things not only for us now but for posterity. What he is doing is destined to leave its impress on the history of the universe.

"Buffalo Jones," who has many interesting moving pictures of his wonderful exploits, will lecture in Carnegie Hall, New York City, on the evening of December 22d. Then it will be our privilege to hear from his own lips of some of his hair-breadth escapes from death, and also of his method of taking alive the wild animals. A year ago, "Buffalo Jones" broke the Broadway record for such things by filling to overflowing the Wallack Theater at $2.50 a seat. This was, indeed, a record-breaker.

THE RAISING OF THE MAINE COMPANY

Opening at West End Theater, New York, and Belasco Theater, Washington

The Raising of the Maine Company are opening on the 18th of December at the Belasco Theater, Washington, showing Togo films, Raising the Main films, and also mobilization pictures. They also open in New York at the West End Theater on December 18th. This company has secured pictures of the portions of the Maine which have been under investigation.

"I Wonder Whether They're Going To Make Good Film?"

G!

OH! SEE THE BIRDIES!

IN spite of the fact that the house was green, we tried to light our cigars, and it was Sunday. But the horse continued galloping, and the sun sank into the East, even though the birds chirped. Ah, it was a merry tale, but the sad situation didn't make the thermometer any warmer. There he sat, head bowed on his arms, and the carpet tacks frolicked and sang! Until at last the weather came, and it rained happily.

Suddenly the tables were oblong, but he still wore the wig. His face had a terrible expression for half past two in the evening. There was a fierce glint in his lips, and his eyes curled scornfully, as the tears ran up his forehead. The bandanna handkerchief roamed around the room, and came back pleased at the vain quest. Then a cry arose and left the room.

Oh, it was awful to contemplate! Strong men on roller skates, sailing off into the distance and telephoning that they would be late for dinner. Weak women lifting tons of feathers, making light of their occupation. And as they labored, delight went out, and silence was heard on all sides. Even the trees were barking. And the brook rippled on, and the sidewalked.

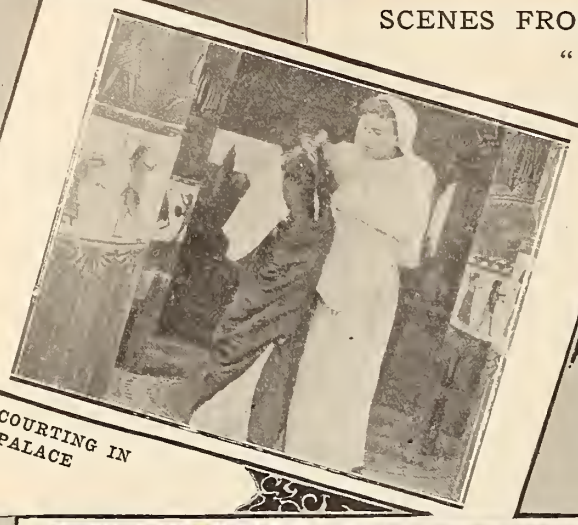
So it went for four hundred years and a month; but a time came when the mystery was cleared, and the grass grew again and the battlefield was closed for the evening

. . . . . .

The secret will be released for the first time on Sunday . . even sooner than that!

THE GEM MOTION PICTURE CO.

SCENES FROM THANHOUSER'S "SHE"



THE COURTING IN THE PALACE

"SHE" LEADS THE WAY

LEO SEES HIS ANCESTOR

IN THE DESERT

I OPEN MY BOOST PACK THIS WEEK--GET YOURS

Beginning with this week, I'm going to be the genuine Santa Claus of the moving picture business. I'm going to do it all through my special BOOST DEPARTMENT, and what I want the exhibitor to tell me is,

HOW SHALL I SPEND MY MONEY

for you? I'm ready now to send you gifts all through next year, but I want to send you something useful—something that will help your business, because I know that if your business is good, mine will be, too. So I want to boost yours first. Meanwhile I'm satisfied to know that my along lines that will make me worthy of your enthusiastic support. The very first pictures my new staff gave me made my heart leap with joy. I'd be a fool to go into big advertising if my present product did not back up the statements I make here. I'd only fool you once, then you'd point to me as the biggest faker in the business. And I wouldn't blame you, BUT I'm not going to give you the chance. I'm going to do things so that when you read that I pronounce a film good, it's no "bunk." You will learn to bank on my word and trust in me. I'm now in complete personal charge of my business, and when I tell you something it's because I know it's so. The only possible excuse I'll have for deceiving you is when my expensive staff is deceiving me; but am I paying them money to do that? Answer it yourself.

DUPLEX STUDIO IS WORKING

Now you've got it from me in person, and I want you to chew on what I've said until you get it down. Wait until you catch me in bad faith, and then fire it into me for all you're worth—but not until then!

RELEASED TUESDAY. DEC. 26

"THE SIGN OF THE HELMET"

and

"Where Steel Meets Cloud"

RELEASED SATURDAY, DEC. 30

"A MAIL BAG ROMANCE"

A full-reel feature.

Read the synopses, in this issue, and see if they don't even SOUND different from the ordinary run of pictures. Then get 'em!

POWERS MOTION PICTURE CO., 511 W. 42d Street New York City

INCONGRUITIES IN MOVING PICTURES

By Robert Grau

IT is nothing short of amazing that in an industry which has attained to the artistic heights characterizing the present status of motion picture development, one must bear witness continuously to a series of incongruities, such as would suggest a decidedly primitive period in public entertaining.

One would naturally suppose now that the country's best players and producers are available to the manufacturers, and that scenarios are now provided by quite as competent centers as those who supply the legitimate theaters with MS. that the important problem of detail would be easy of solution, but it is a fact that the most absurd crudities are constantly in evidence, utterly spoiling the artistic effect despite the almost herculean endeavor to achieve a realistic portrayal.

On the very day that the writer is recording his observations the uninspiring spectacle of two Biograph films, produced consecutively, with the same players in the cast, was on view, and the incongruity in this instance was so pronounced and so wholly inartistic as to destroy every illusion intended.

The extraordinary part of this unnatural exhibtion is that the Biograph Company is noted for its realistic portrayals, and in the first of the two photo-plays here referred to the company must have gone to an enormous expenditure to attain the public impression of an "actuality," and I have never witnessed so ingenious a manipulation of stagecraft. Had the Biograph's part of the day's program ended right there the effect would have been truly illuminative.

But fancy for a moment an audience held spellbound from the dying struggles of the hero, actually enthralled by the seeming verity of the soul-stirring scene; fancy, I say, ten seconds later to see that same hero come forth in another photo-play—made up precisely as in the first offering, and two of the characters of the earlier play following, with not the least effort to disguise their features, and all going through a rapid, slapstick farce. This was indeed versatility, and in a playhouse where acting is purely theatric this would be enjoyable, but the moving picture producer seeks no such effect, and let me add that the instance here illustrated is by no means unusual.

I do not know if the photo-players are aware that the present-day projection of motion pictures is so perfect that the least movement of the lips is apt to convey to the spectator all and perhaps more than is intended; hence it might be in order to caution some of the over-enthusiastic players against giving expression to profanity under the idea that realism is thus achieved, for in the last week I have seen scores of auditors hide their faces; and well might they do so. Nothing can be gained here by quoting specific cases, but all active factors in the film world know whereof I speak, and I know of no better way to reduce a family patronage than by encouraging this phase of realism in cinematography.

But of all the incongruities, on view in the picture resorts, the one that is the greatest eyesore is the prolific use made of the engagement and wedding rings. By actual count in one day's visit to two different exhibits there were five bestowals of the wedding ring, and the presentation in almost every instance was almost immediately after the inaugural meeting of the couples. Could anything be more crude—more ridiculous? The way the audience yawned has a caution—yet this has been going on for years, and is in evidence to-day with a vengeance—hardly a production comes forth now but that this almost sickening procedure is forced on a long-suffering public.

The writer dwells on these inartistic effects because the motion picture producer seeks to reach for greater heights in realism than the play producer of the stage itself. In nothing is this more evident than in the use of real money for film purposes, and yet this often results in spoiling the illusion instead of enhancing the verity. In such matters David Belasco is a wizard. He would not permit the spectacle of a trio of Fifth avenue fashionables dropping a wallet containing over $1,000 in greenbacks in the Ghetto district—while shopping there. How ridiculous! Yet such unseeming events are shown on the screen almost every day, demonstrating an utter lack of attention to detail.

The technique and philosophy of the silent drama has now reached a state where the playwright of theaterdom is bound to appear on the scene, and with the advent of high-grade authors the primitive scenario will give way to the carefully prepared playlet; but in order that these writers of distinction may justify themselves to enter the field the film manufacturers have got to concede at least two privileges—one, the advertising of the author's name, for if the incentive that comes from fame is lacking, this element will not be attracted to the art that otherwise greatly appeals to them. The other concession is the right of the author to have a hand in the staging of his work. If the day is to come when the Paul Armstrongs, the Charles Kleins and the Eugene Walters are to help solve the problems of the silent drama, that day can only be hastened by mutual co-operation, and surely no one can deny that the names of successful playwrights will greatly enhance the value of a photo-play, and even serve to attract increased crowds by the sheer potency of their hard-earned fame. By the same token these gentlemen and their numerous colleagues who are ready to knock at the doors of the manufacturers' sanctums will, by their assistance at the rehearsals, bring all that is best in the legitimate theaters, and surely such incongruities as I have here referred to will not be permitted.

THE VIOLIN MAKERS OF NUREMBERG

Solax Release, December 22d

The admirable features of the production are its exquisite simplicity, its sympathetic chords, its cleanliness of theme and its unfathomable depth of imaginative creation. Only the delicate mind of a woman with a highly-developed aesthetic sense could have staged such a theme with success.

"The Violin Makers of Nuremburg" strikes chords which thrill the imagination. Indeed, it makes its appeal to one's finer sensibilities.

The story revolves about two pupils and comrades who are apprenticed to an old and successful violin maker of paternal and sympathetic inclinations. He hears that the king of his country has announced to the townspeople of Nuremburg that the maker of the best violin would be titled the Violin Maker to the Court, and pensioned on an annuity. The old man apprises his pupils of the king's proclamation.

The old teacher is anxious to have his pupils enter the competition, so, as an incentive to both of them, he promises the hand of his beautiful daughter to the winner. The old man does not know, however, that both of his pupils are already in love with his daughter, and that the younger of the two is the one she prefers.

The older of the pupils is a better violin maker than the younger one. They all know this and, of course, the younger man is unhappy and disconsolate. But he does not figure on the generous nature of his comrade, who, kowing that it would be useless for him to try to win the fair maiden's hand, secretly exchanges violins on the night before the tournament.

The rest, naturally, is apparent. The younger pupil wins both the title and the girl. The older one retires and gives up his thoughts to his art, and lives with the satisfaction of knowing that he has made the prize-winning violin.

RIDER HAGGARD'S "SHE" AS PRODUCED BY THANHOUSER

Thanhouser has created out of the imaginative story, "She," by Rider Haggard, a masterpiece in the way of film dramatization. The work of preparing the story for the film has been done with great intelligence. The thread of the story is kept intact through a series of well chosen scenes. The atmosphere surrounding the scenes is made of good stuff, and specially do the desert scenes deserve particular note as regards atmospheric attribute.

The work of Miss Marguerite Snow is, indeed, excellent in the part of "She." Miss Viola Nicholls interprets the part of the daughter of Pharaoh with remarkable conception, and Mr. James Cruze as Leo does his part to complete the excellency of the production. We do not know where we have seen a drama so well enacted upon the screen. There are many beautiful scenes in this story, and the beauty and lithesomeness of Miss Marguerite Snow adds not a little to the success of the production.

EXHIBITORS ATTENTION

Build up your business, increase your box office receipts. Place your order today for our set of 24 beautiful slides showing the Government Buildings and other points of interest in the CAPITAL OF THE UNITED STATES.

Give away post cards of the leading MOVING PICTURE ACTORS AND ACTRESSES on your souvenir night.

Send name and address for sample and full information. Let others imitate where you originate.

CAPITAL NOVELTY COMPANY, 405 11th Street, N.W., WASHINGTON, D. C.

WARNING TO SCENARIO WRITERS

We notice in some of our foreign exchanges, advertisements asking for money to be sent for criticism of scenarios. We want to caution our foreign readers that it is better for them to get these scenarios criticized in their own country, among their neighbors, rather than in a foreign country where they can get no redress. To our knowledge one of the advertisers was dismissed from a film manufactory for stealing the ideas of a scenario, and getting paid himself, and easy money comes pretty good to him. Another of the advertisers has been receiving scenarios, taking the plots and selling them as his own. A word to the wise is sufficient. Exchanges please copy.

Imp Scenario Contest

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly allow a space to remind your readers that the Imp Scenario Contest closes on the 31st of December.

In this contest we offer a first prize of $100, a second prize of $75.00, a third prize of $60.00 and a fourth prize of $50.00 for the four best comedies submitted to us.

So far we have had a very large number of high-class comedies submitted, which will make the award of the prizes a matter of great difficulty, nevertheless we are open to receive more entries for the contest.

Thanking you for your courtesy, we are,

Very truly yours,

IMP FILMS CO.

Champion Films—Miss Blanche Scott, Aviator

They have just completed two negatives embracing aeroplane stories in which Miss Scott figures prominently, both as aviator and actress. Both subjects will be released in the month of January.

The Champion Film Co. are now almost settled in their new quarters, at Room 801, 145 West 45th street.

Champion Films Taken from Aeroplane

Robert G. Fowler, accompanied by the Champion camera man, is making air flights from New Orleans to the Atlantic seaboard. He is making overhead city flights and the Champion camera man is photographing the best scenic effects that he can get, cities, hills, valleys, and all the interesting points in connection with the flights.

The Champion Company have the exclusion for the taking of these pictures from the aeroplane from heights varying from 150 to 250 feet.

A Correction

An item in the last issue of the News stated inaccurately that a three-sheet artposter for the Thanhouser "She" could be had at exchanges for 15c. This price extended to the artposters only when purchased in hundred lots, and not on single copies.

SPECIAL NOTICE

Commence the New Year right—Exchanges—Exhibitors—Manufacturers—Operators—Musicians—and all interested in the Moving Picture trade should be regular subscribers to the Moving Picture News. We are offering the "Art of Scenario Writing," by William Lord Wright, as a premium for all subscriptions at Two Dollars per year. Or the "Haviland Moving Picture Pianists' Album." Take your choice. If you desire the premiums it must be so stated in your letter when ordering—but don't neglect to order the "News" for 1912.

SEEING YOURSELF SEE YOURSELF

Experience of a Player in the Thanhouser "She"

Bobby Burns said, centuries ago, "O wad some pow'r the giftie gie us to see our'sels as others see us"; but even this prophetic poet couldn't conjure a man SEEING HIMSELF SEE HIMSELF. But James Cruze, of the Thanhouser players, accomplished this very miracle the other day, when, seated in the New Rochelle inspection room, he watched a first-print of "She" on the screen. The tomb scene wherein "She" shows Leo Vincey (Cruze) the body of his ancestor flashed before him, and as the ancestor was posed by Cruze and by a trick studio process printed into the tomb scene, the actor was in all truth seeing himself see himself. All of which again goes to prove that the motion picture is the great modern performer of miracles!

DOINGS AT THE IMP

By "Our Roving Commissioner"

IN the busy round of affairs this week, prior to the preparation of our Christmas issue, the Imp Moving Picture Company claimed a portion of my attention. Finding myself within the precincts of the all-alive plant of this company, I soon became convinced that I was not the only busy individual in the city that particular day. Nothing but a busy hum was discernible about the offices, significant of the fact that things were doing there.

Just recently the Imp Company have commenced releasing three a week. Their Saturday release is a two-subject reel, one of which is refined comedy, and now and again of a more or less cynical trend. Upon the Imp desk on the day of my visit there lay a stack of the most complimentary letters which I have ever seen directed to any business firm. Previous to the release of the Imp "three-a-week," printed announcements were sent out by them to different exhibitors and exchanges throughout the country with a view to feeling the pulse of the public on the matter of giving out three Imps a week. These announcements brought letter after letter of commendation, telling of the popularity of the Imp on the market, and giving the reasons of exhibitors and exchange men for welcoming the third release of Imp.

The Imp Company has always kept itself surrounded with individuals who were heart and soul for the best interests of the concern. Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Imp Company, is a man of intense purpose, made of the kind of stuff that makes whatever he connects himself with go. Mr. Thomas Bedding, who has recently allied himself with Imp interests is also of the go-ahead type, and Mr. Julius Stern, another courteous member of the firm, gives one the impression of sincere heart interest in anything that he might ally himself with. There is another member of the Imp Company whom I feel is deserving of honorable mention, and one who has been with the firm since its birth, and that is Mr. E. M. Roskam, superintendent of the factory. Judging from appearances, Mr. Roskam is a member of trust, and one whose judgment is to be relied upon with the utmost faith with regard to quality in films, etc. And as a business flourishes on good manipulation, it is not surprising that "Imp" is in the lead.

The Imp pictures are being rapidly introduced into European markets, where none but quality counts. To make good pictures there must be at least three things provided as essential and indispensable to the artistic and technical welfare of the whole: competent actors and actresses, a good

MR. CARL LAEMMLE

MARGARET FISHER

MR. POLLARD

MISS LEWIS

MR. ED. LYONS

MR. F. MACDONALD

MR. KING BAGGOT

director, and a capable camera man. All of these characterize the work of "Imp."

Mr. Laemmle informed me that they were contemplating the putting out of educational films, which, to my mind, is a good move on the part of any film company. There is a decided move on foot for uplift through the moving picture and the manufacturer knows it, and judging from appearances he is going to meet the demand. It will be but a short time when producers will vie with one another for orders for school supplies, when moving pictures will be as necessary as books in the school curriculum.

The Imp Company is, I find, alive to all this. And as the quality of picture which they have been putting out heretofore has raised them to a place among the best, it goes without question that they will be one of the first to be called upon to send out samples of school work. A letter was handed to me to read at their office wherein an exhibitor was asking for one educational release a week. Surely this is a good omen of what is to follow. The world is at last awake to the value of the motion picture, in spite of the few calamity howlers that from time to time attack the dignified interests of the trade.

The Imp Saturday release, which is looked forward to by the public with so much pleasure, will consist on December 23d of "A Pair of Gloves" and "Niagara Falls." The latter is, of course, partially scenic. It was taken at a time of celebration there.

One of the pictures illustrating this article is the story of an artist's model, who, in her jealousy of a society woman whose portrait the artist has painted, and which is to be displayed at a reception, takes a knife and hacks into the face of the portrait, utterly destroying its contour. The result of the deed is not discovered until the curtain concealing the picture is drawn aside, when the terribly distorted picture is brought to the view of the guests. The young girl, however, comes upon the scene confessing and asking forgiveness. She afterwards is rescued by the artist as she attempts to throw herself into the water. They marry and live happy ever after.

The Christmas release of the Imp is a most pathetic and interesting story. It is the story of a man who goes to seek his fortune on a strike of which he has heard. As he is preparing to depart, his little girl slips one of her tiny stockings into his valise. He dies on the way to the strike, and

MR. ROB DAILEY

MR. LE SAINT

MR. CUMPSON

MR. H. S. MACK

SCENES FROM "THE PORTRAIT"
Imp Release of December 28th

his pals finding the stocking attribute its presence there to the fact that the dead man had intended to fill it for his little girl for Christmas. They at once decide to fill it for his little girl for Christmas, money forming the principal ingredient. One of the party is dispatched to the widow with the stocking, arriving there just in time to save her from dispossession by the landlord.

"ON THE STROKE OF THREE"
Imp Release of December 25th

There has recently been formed by the Imp people a new stock company, which makes the third in the employ of this go-ahead company. Some excellent talent have been secured by them, among whom are Mr. Cumpson, comedian, and Miss Fisher, ingenue, to say nothing of many others equally talented who are in the employ of Imp.

Hallberg Installs Mercury Arc Rectifiers

In many of the up-to-date moving picture theaters, operating on alternating current circuits, especially those having vaudeville, and such where the elimination of noise from the alternating arc is desired, Mercury Arc Rectifiers are being installed to change the alternating current into direct current at the arc. Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that he has recently installed 40 ampere Rectifiers for G. A. Robinson, Colonial Theater, W. Hoboken, N. J., and Carl Michelfelder, Star Theater, Fall River, Mass. Also 30 ampere Rectifiers for A. A. Jackson, St. Ann's avenue, the Bronx, New York City; Temple Theater, St. Marys, Pa.; Palatka Gas & Fuel Co., Palatka, Fla.; Montgomery Amusement Co., Jacksonville, Fla.

The Champion Aviation Films

Two pictures have just been completed by the Champion Film Company in which Miss Scott, the accomplished young lady aviator, has posed. Some very interesting flights have been filmed.

The Champion Film Company have removed their quarters from 12 East 15th street to Room 801, 145 West 45th street. Their new offices are bright cheery rooms where plenty of God's good sunshine can penetrate.

COMET

RELEASED MONDAY, DECEMBER 25th

The Tie That Binds

A dainty comedy of domestic differences in Gotham's social high life. Beautifully presented by the Comet Stock Company. One thousand feet.

RELEASED FRIDAY, DECEMBER 29th

The Crude Miss Prude

(1,000 feet)

A comedy romance of intelligence office life. One of the funniest stories of modern times. The exhibitor who stands for a "story" instead of a "Comet" from his exchange man, is being sidetracked.

Through Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company.

COMET FILM COMPANY

344 EAST 32d STREET NEW YORK, N. Y.

BEFORE YORKTOWN

By Virginia West

Adapted from the Synopsis of Republic Film

MANY and varied have been the stories, both historical and romantic, that have been told of the American Revolution. One might almost think that the supply had been exhausted, but not so! As long as there are any real Americans left in the country there will be from time to time stories gathered from yellow, time-worn diaries and memoirs, and from the lips of grandparents who in turn heard them from their grandparents.

When Cornwallis took possession of Yorktown in the summer of 1781, there to await help from Clinton in New York, there was with him a young lieutenant, Beresford, by name. This young man was a general favorite among his comrades, both on account of his genial nature and his bravery, and whenever he came in friendly contact with the Colonists he was as well liked by them.

So, when, one day, he was wounded in a skirmish with a handful of Americans, who were awaiting orders from Washington, and was taken to the home of Dr. Adams, nearby, it was no wonder that something happened. But we must not get ahead of our story.

Dr. Adams was quite old. He lived in his large country house with his daughter, Beatrice, her younger brother, Charles, and a few servants. He had not practiced his profession for several years before the beginning of the war. During the war he had been glad to give his aid impartially to British and Colonist alike, even though he was as true an enemy to the King as any of his neighbors.

Beatrice and Charles were stanch Colonists also, but lacked the discretion of age, and the old doctor was sometimes kept pretty busy trying to keep their youthful enthusiasm within bounds.

It was during one of their lively discussions one evening about nightfall, that they heard a knocking at the front door and the tramping of heavy boots on the porch.

Charles went to open the door, and Beatrice ran quickly to the front window, her eyes shining brightly, for one could never be quite sure when a knock and a tramping of feet might bring great excitement.

When Charles flung open the door, he found by the light of his candle a half dozen redcoats standing on the porch. On a rudely-constructed litter lay a lieutenant, very still and white.

"Can we find shelter here for the night? Lieutenant Beresford is wounded, and we are very far from our quarters," said one of the men.

"Bring him in. My father will attend to him—he is a physician. But you can't stay here to-night." Charles spoke with suppressed feeling. He was a gentleman, but he was young, and he hated the British soldiers bitterly.

Dr. Adams had come into the hall when he heard Charles' answer.

"My son," he said reprovingly, "it is not a British soldier nor a Colonist who seeks our aid, but a human being in distress. Come in, gentlemen."

The soldiers quickly accepted the old man's invitation, and carried their wounded leader past Charles into the library.

Dr. Adams led the way, and gave Beatrice instructions to bring the necessary articles for dressing wounds.

When she returned and stood quietly by the sofa, holding the basin of water and lint, more than one pair of eyes gazed on her face. But her expression was stern, and when her father told her that Lieutenant Beresford was very badly wounded, and asked her if she would nurse him, she replied, "I must, in common humanity, but I shall not forget that he is British. As for these other men, father, they must sleep in the barn. I cannot have them in the house."

The doctor, being full of the beautiful spirit of hospitality for which Virginians have always been noted, protested a little. But Beatrice was the mistress of the house and she had her way.

So the lieutenant was put to bed and carefully tended, and his men went to sleep in the hay loft.

When an attractive young girl and a handsome, gentlemanly young man are constantly together in the capacity of nurse and patient, they are pretty sure to become friends, even though they are sworn enemies.

Beresford had been confined to the best bed of Dr. Adams for a month, and he had had ample time to examine his heart—which examination proved to him very plainly that he was hopelessly in love with his enemy. He did not tell her so, for he felt that it would make a strained situation that would be very hard for both of them. For his wounds were by no means healed, and he could not be moved.

As for the enemy, she did not need to be told. She knew. But into her own heart she would not look, for fear of what she might find there. She would not let herself forget that he was a British soldier, but she had to acknowledge that he was friendly and kind, and she liked him. Further than that she would not go.

By the middle of September things were beginning to be more lively. Word had reached Yorktown that Washington had not moved against New York and attacked Clinton, as it was thought that he was planning to do, but that he was advancing rapidly, with his whole army, on Yorktown.

Beatrice was in a fever of excitement. Her brother was constantly bringing some fresh piece of news from the town, and sometimes she would overhear scraps of conversation between Lieutenant Beresford and the other officers who came to see him.

When, one day, Charles came home with the wonderful news that the mouth of the York River was closed by the French fleet of Count de Grasse, which would prevent any reinforcements from Clinton landing at Yorktown, the girl felt reluctant to tell the sick man. She tried to persuade herself that she was afraid it would make him more anxious to get back to headquarters, and so make him fret himself into a fever again. But the reason lay deeper than that, and in her heart she knew it.

When she did tell him of the French fleet, he declared he must leave at once, and when she took his hand gently in hers and persuaded him that he was not well enough yet, he drew her a little nearer to him and said:

"Promise me you will let me go as soon as it is possible for me to go without danger to my life. For, I want to stay with you so much, dear, that I am afraid I might let a little sickness keep me from my duty." A pause, and then, "I love you, Beatrice. Do you not know it?" and she answered very softly, "Yes, I know." And then, for no reason at all, she fled from the room.

About the last of September, quickly and quietly Washington's army surrounded Yorktown.

Lieutenant Beresford, now almost himself again, was expecting to return to his army. Beatrice insisted that he still take frequent rests that he might not overtax his strength.

It was during one of these periods of rest that Major Fitzgerald called. Beatrice disliked him at once, and resolved that he would have to wait until Lieutenant Beresford had rested sufficiently before she permitted him to see the young man.

"You will have to wait a while until Lieutenant Beresford has rested. He is under my charge, and I cannot permit any one to see him for a little while."

"Well, well," said the major, in a loud voice, "I shouldn't mind being under your charge myself. Would you, men?" He turned to his companions.

They were prevented from answering by the entrance of the doctor.

"Bring us some wine, my lass," demanded the major.

"Yes, daughter, bring refreshment for the gentlemen," said the old man gently.

Beatrice went, but the look she gave Major Fitzgerald would have made it impossible for a man less coarse to drink the wine she brought him.

When the men's glasses were filled, Major Fitzgerald turned to Dr. Adams.

"Dr. Adams," he said, "take a glass and we will drink to the health of King George. And you, Mistress Beatrice, take a glass." Neither Beatrice nor her father moved.

"Then, if you won't drink the King's health, you'll give me a kiss," said the major, striding toward the girl.

Quickly she seized a glass and bottle and cried, "I will drink!" and, raising a glass of wine above her head, she said in a clear voice, "To the future American nation," and turning to the man she flung the wine full in his face.

The major grew purple with rage. When he had mopped the wine from his eyes, Beatrice had gone from the room.

The doctor was pale with indignation. He spoke in a low, suppressed voice.

"I shall not prevent you gentlemen seeing Lieutenant Beresford, but I shall leave your presence, and ask you not to enter my house again."

So it happened that Fitzgerald went to Beresford's room and told him that they had all been ordered from the house at once, and the lieutenant, not knowing that he lied, went with him, without having another opportunity of seeing Beatrice.

That night, when the men had gone, and the house was quiet, Beatrice blew out her candle and sat down by her window to think. She had not been there long when she heard a rustle in the bushes along the garden border, and something that sounded like a low groan. Her heart beat faster, but she unhesitatingly took her candle and, after lighting it, stole down the long hall and the broad stairway to the front door.

As she stepped out onto the porch she heard some one say in a hoarse voice, "Put out the candle."

"Who is it?" she demanded, in a whisper.

"Charles," came the answer.

She blew out the light and went softly in the direction of the voice.

"Help me into the house," said Charles, when she had found him. "I am wounded badly, and I must tell you something important."

When Beatrice had gotten the boy into the house, he would not let her go for his father until he had told her what he had to tell.

The girl listened breathlessly. He had gone to Major Fitzgerald's room and stolen the plans of the British fortifications. He was seen making his escape and was shot.

"Beatrice, you must do as I say. Everything depends upon it. Put on my clothes and take these plans to General Washington or to some one who will put them into his hands." The boy's strength was fast failing. "Send father here and go. Quick!"

The girl aroused her father, and then went to her own room and quickly dressed in her brother's clothes. When she had tucked every little telltale curl under the cap, she buttoned the coat over the precious paper and started on the perilous journey.

When she was about a half-mile from home she had to pass along a dark stretch of road. Thinking she was safe here, she went hurrying along as fast as she could. Suddenly some one cried, "Halt!" She stopped. "Who goes there?" said the voice. The girl was so surprised that she did not speak for a moment. Then, thinking if she could not see she might not be seen, she softly tiptoed toward the edge of the wood. But in the meantime the man had come closer, and when she had taken a few steps farther she ran straight up against him.

The man rubbed his hand over her face a moment, and then said, "You better come with me, sonny," and led her away by the arm.

When he came to a light and some other soldiers, the men looked her over and asked her what she was doing out at that time of night. Then they searched her and, of course, found the papers.

Straight to Major Fitzgerald they took her. He looked at her searchingly for a moment, and then, turning to the soldiers, told them to leave her to him.

When they had gone he walked straight to her and pulled off her cap.

"Perhaps you will give me that kiss now, Little Wildcat," he said, and put his arms roughly about her.

The girl was desperate. Wildly she looked around the room. Only one thing she saw which could aid her She summoned all her strength to calm her voice as she said: "Let me go—just for a moment—until—until I have gotten my breath. Please, Major Fitzgerald."

The man laughed and let her go.

"You thought you would play a fine trick on me, didn't you? Where the devil'd you get these plans, anyhow? Somebody else stole them this very evening."

The girl did not answer.

"Well, you can give me a kiss now, I think. If you make it a good one, maybe I'll let you go without saying anything about this."

Beatrice stood with her hand resting on the table. The man came toward her with a look of evil passion in his eyes. He took her savagely in his arms. She did not resist, but her muscles were tense. His face bent over hers and his lips were about to touch her own. Quickly she reached back and seized the heavy brass candlestick from the table, and, with the strength of desperation, struck the man on the head. His arms loosened, and he dropped to the floor.

Seizing the plans, the girl ran to the window and raised it. As she was about to spring from the window she was stopped by a voice saying "Beatrice!"

She turned and stood face to face with Lieutenant Beresford.

"Oh," she said, "help me!"

"I must know what I am doing first," he answered, a little sadly; "I could not betray my country even for you, Beatrice. And I do not think you would wish it."

So she told him, as rapidly as she could, the whole story. He took the papers, and, without a word, lifted her out of the window.

As Beresford was about to step through the window himself, Major Fitzgerald regained consciousness. Staggering to his feet, he cried to the lieutenant to stop.

The young man stopped and faced the other.

"Where's the girl?" demanded Fitzgerald.

"She's gone. You brute!" and the young man started for the door.

"I'll have you courtmartialed!" yelled Fitzgerald.

"I dare you to," said Beresford quietly, and left the room.

He went at once to seek Beatrice as much as he dared, but she was gone.

As soon as she had heard Fitzgerald's voice, after she had been lifted through the window, she knew that her lover could not follow her. So she started for home, keeping in the shadows and creeping very softly.

She was in terrible suspense, both on account of her brother and her lover. Were Charles' wounds serious? What effect would the failure of her attempt to deliver the plans have upon him? And her lover—would he get into serious trouble on her account?

It was dawn when she reached home. Her father met her in the hall and took her in his arms.

"My brave little girl," he said, "tell me what success you had."

"None, father. They caught me." And for the first time she broke down as she sobbed out the story in the shelter of her father's arms.

"And Charles; how is he?" asked the girl.

The old doctor's eyes filled with tears.

"Our boy is gone; but we must be brave. It is God's will, and many others have lost their boys. He died for what he considered his duty, and I say 'Amen.'"

"Amen," said Beatrice, and held the old man close to her breast.

During the next week the Americans gained rapidly on the town. Nearer and nearer were their trenches to the British works.

Beatrice was torn between her loyalty to the Colonists and her ever-increasing anxiety for her lover's safety.

Almost constantly the cannonading kept up. On the night of the 13th of October the Americans made an attack and captured the outer works of the enemy. A few days later the British made a sortie from their entrenchments, but were beaten back.

Bravely and nobly Cornwallis held out as long as he thought there was a chance of victory, but when he was at last convinced that he could not win, he as bravely surrendered.

When the report ran through the village and countryside that O'Hara had led out the British army and they had all become prisoners of war, Beatrice could stand no more. She was overjoyed, and yet she was suffering deep anxiety on Beresford's account.

She threw herself into her father's arms, weeping convulsively.

"Why, why, what is it, little one? Are you not glad of the victory?" said the doctor.

"Yes, father, but—but—— Oh, father, I love Lieutenant Beresford, and he loves me, and I must find out where he is."

The doctor recovered from his surprise sufficiently to make a few enquiries. Then he went with Beatrice to Washington's headquarters.

The story of Beatrice's brave attempt to help him had reached the ears of the general, and when he learned that it was this same girl who wanted to see him, she was not long in being admitted.

General Washington thanked her in his kind, gentlemanly way for her loyalty and love, and asked her what he could do for her.

She was not long in telling him that she wanted to know about Lieutenant Beresford.

When the general's messenger returned the report was that the lieutenant was in the hospital.

Then Beatrice asked for his pardon. She told Washington how ill he had been at her home, and how he had gone back to do what he considered his duty, although he would rather have been by her side.

So frankly and so earnestly did she plead that the general promised the pardon under one condition.

"What is that?" asked Beatrice eagerly.

"That you make a good American of him," replied Washington.

"Oh, I will! And thank you, thank you!" cried the girl.

In a few minutes she was in the hospital kneeling beside the cot of her lover. What they said to each other doesn't matter. It is enough that the same war that took a son from good old Dr. Adams, gave one to him, and that Beatrice kept her promise to Washington.

Feature and Educational Film Co.

The two new three-reel feature films, "Love and Aviation" and "Zigomar," recently released by the Feature and Educational Film Company, of Cleveland, were exhibited before the convention of exhibitors in Indianapolis the past week. The theater managers were unanimous in saying that these subjects are two of the greatest features placed on the market in many years.

Mr. E. Mandelbaum, the president of the F. & E. Company, visited the branch offices of the concern in Chicago, Delaware Building, and Detroit, Equity Building, where he found bookings were as much sought for by exhibitors as in the general offices in Cleveland. He disposed of several state rights on his trip.

THE "MISADVENTURE OF A CLAIM AGENT"
American release January 4th.

LIDA EVANDELL

When we first met the "Lady from the West" it was to give her an interview for the Sunday magazine section of the New York Tribune on "How to have a sane and safe Fourth by substituting patriotic and historical moving pictures for the dangerous gunpowder celebrations."

When we came across her in moving pictures and found her name signed to scenarios instead of newspaper articles we were anxious to know why a "literary light" would be willing to extinguish itself in a scenario, or be content to merely cast a shadow on the moving picture screen.

In answer to our urgent inquiries the lady confessed that she first posed for moving pictures to learn the technic of their production, as she received payment for the idea only of her first scenario, the play itself being declared "technically impossible."

LIDA EVANDELL

"I've always been interested in the drama," said Mrs. Evandell, "and gave up my work with a road company to look after my little girl's education. I took up newspaper work so that we could have a home together, and only gave it up to be free to go with her when she decided upon a dramatic career.

"A writer must know something of life, and when all my thoughts dry up and rattle in my brain instead of coming forth as well-formed ideas, as they should, I go out and work in the pictures and get a fresh view of life and art. There is always something new in posing for pictures. The work furnishes both romance and realism, which every writer needs.

"I do believe in the clean moving picture with human interest," she continued earnestly. "I know of several instances where young people could not be induced to open a volume recommended as profitable reading for the young, but after seeing the same story on the moving picture screen they went at once to the library to get the book and would not lay it aside until it was finished. The 'David Copperfield' picture has aroused a new interest among the young folk in its long-neglected author.

"I know of no better training for writing the short story or drama than the scenario writing. The successful short story and the actable play must each have a plot of vital interest. Then each sentence, every word in the story must count to take this plot forward to its final culmination. In writing a scenario one must condense and tell the whole story in action.

"However, I think the film manufacturers will never obtain all the high-class picture plays they want until they are willing to give proper credit to their writers. An author should stand sponsor for the children of his brain, whether they are good or bad. Scenario writers should at least have as much credit and publicity for their work as is now given to moving picture actors. Progressive film producers are beginning to realize that high-class publicity articles create a demand for their production, just as they assist in advancing the interest of the producer of legitimate drama."

LORA FAY EVANDELL

There is no more devoted admirer and staunch defender of the moving picture than Miss Evandell, one of the youngest ingenues in the moving picture business. No gilded offers of fame and fortune can win her away from her "first love." As a child, her pocket money was not invested in indigestible sweets, but quickly found its way into the cashier's box of the best moving picture theaters.

There being no moving picture companies in her home city, Columbus, Ohio, she had to be content to make her first appearance in the legitimate drama, playing the part of one of his daughters, with Thomas A. Wise in "Are You a Mason?"

She came to New York to get into a moving picture company and was not turned from her purpose by having the appraiser of talent for vast musical enterprises tell her that she had a great future in her voice. She secured her first engagement with the Yankee Film Co., through Mr. I. Bernstein, and has since worked for the Republic.

In talking with the editor of Moving Picture News Miss Evandell said that a young girl is liable to strain and injure her voice by singing in public before she is eighteen or nineteen years of age.

"And that's one of the many good things about working for moving pictures," she explained enthusiastically. "One does not have to strain the voice as in musical comedy or regular drama.

"Then there are no long parts to learn each week, as in stock; no first-night terrors lest the hastily committed lines should suddenly 'evaporate,' leaving the mind a vacuum.

"Neither do we have to work such late hours in the pictures nor miss so many meals as in a road company.

LORA FAY EVANDELL

Great Northern

THE "KING PIN" OF QUALITY FILMS

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16th

HIS FIRST MONOCLE

A delicious comedy film with every scene a laughable one. On the same reel:

GREECE

An admirable travel subject, depicting many interesting scenes amongst which the Corinthian Canal, Corfu Harbor, and the German Emperor's mansion are included.

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23rd

THE TWINS

A corking good comedy film with a laugh all the way through. On the same reel:

FROM OSTERSUND TO STORLIEN

A superb travel subject. A magnificent as well as realistic picture which is bound to delight everybody.

ALL FIRST-CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

7 EAST 14TH STREET, NEW YORK

ALL FILMS SOLD THROUGH THE SALES COMPANY

Nor do we run the risk of walking the ties home in case we are abandoned by some wandering troupe.

"I like the real scenery used in moving pictures, too. If there is a rustic love scene, the maiden can lean confidingly against the tree until the arms of her lover are extended to receive her, without being fearful lest the tree should suddenly topple over and spoil the scene.

"O I love the outdoor plays best of all. It's much healthier working out in woods and open fields than it is staying in a badly-ventilated theater. A person is always ready to eat the big sandwiches generously handed out by the companies when no regular meals can be obtained nearby.

"But I haven't told you the principal reason yet why I prefer to work in pictures," naively said the little lady. She paused a moment for breath, then went on:

"It's because I can have the little mother with me all the time. Now don't laugh when I tell you I think no young girl should go on the road in a dramatic company alone. I have refused all offers to go into musical comedy because there was no part for mother, who does not sing. We are great chums and almost inseparable companions, but it's mighty embarrassing if I do happen to go any place alone, to be asked when my name is given: 'Oh, you are the writer of scenarios, aren't you?' I have really and truly written one or two all by myself but I can't expect anyone to believe it—they will all think that mother wrote them for me."

A FAT ACTOR'S SUGGESTION

I am reminded that the best moving picture play I ever saw had a fat actor as the central comic figure.

Winter winds sweep the bleak Rialto and not once this season have I heard the welcoming voice of the gallery. Only one play this year has contained a part which a fat actor could play and I am the fattest actor of my time.

Theatrical history is full of hopeless comedies which were saved by fat actors yet contemporary writers continue to make comedies which only the thinnest actors may play!

This age cries aloud for a great new acting literature of the modern stage while peering without hope into the insufficient shadows made by the pathological Ibsen. Have the learned critics ever calculated what the higher drama would be like if William Shakespeare had omitted Falstaff from the classics? Oh, for a Shakespeare's infallible analysis of the present large literary crisis! Oh, for a comedy all about a fat man to be played by a fat actor for the abstract good of the nation's intellectual being!

Ho, Boreas! let me have a summer time set for my Christmas gift or I may play the living skeleton in the spring productions!

Above these cruel blasts I contend that representative humanity is fat and genial. Therefore Ibsen is a dunce! Maeterlinck is a decadent! Pinero is a nature faker!

Nice occupation for a fat actor—crying theatrical degeneracy! Surely a fat actor should be the last person in the world to turn pessimist, or lament the passing of the heated term, or shiver at the sight of an open park, or think of zero chills with dread instead of glad relief!

May Irwin, Eva Davenport, Marie Dressler are three good winners and not one of them is a featherweight. Nobody ever saw a slender prima donna in grand opera. It proves that all influences which make for progressive theatrical success indicate the survival of the fattest.

Quantity wins, you know. The public likes a great deal for its money. Hence the fat actor. It is a sad mistake to bring out pieces in which a fat actor may not play unless he can carve himself into three or more separate individuals. Even then art would suffer by scattering the fat actor's hits. A fat actor, being three times the size of the thin actor, makes three times the impression by virtue of being bunched.

A role that may be played by a fat actor is never repellent. An unsympathetic fat character is simply inconceivable. Indulge a single illustration: a dark stage, blue lights with that greenish phosphorescence in them, shivery music, distant thunder, flashes of lightning—and suddenly, with a crash to bring him on, the fat actor uttering a demoniacal laugh in the character of Mephistopheles! What would the critics say to a fat devil?

No, the fat actor must play benignant stuff or none. Love is the theme of all great plays—ever notice that the god of love is plump? A fat actor could play cupid more successfully than either Mrs. Fiske or Mrs. Carter. Henry Irving in the part would never have made good.

For my own part I am willing to promote the dramatic uplift, on two weeks' notice for rehearsals, either as cupid or a fairy. Let the stage be set with precious stones as large as beer kegs and flowers as large as umbrellas. Presto! A fairy or a cupid, as large as an elephant, wearing pink tights and a kilt of green gauze bounds into the spotlight like a balloon! That would send the dramatic uplift to the skies!

Moving picture studios are welcome to the idea and are welcome to me along with it.

It is generally known the fairies are omens of good luck. I need not tell you how much actor folk respect good luck. They prefer it even to the dramatic uplift. If you do not believe it watch an uplift production on Friday, 13th, and judge for yourself if the thing gets over.

Please pardon my slang. THE FAT ACTOR.

DER KINEMATOGRAPH, DUSSELDORF

The leading Organ for the Motion Picture Trade in Germany.

Special Supplement for Talking Machines, &c.
Published every Wednesday. Annual Subscription 11/- Post Free.
Advertisements (4 columns to page); 2s. 6d. per inch. Situations Wanted, 1½d. per line.

Reduced Price for a Series of Insertions.

Publisher—ED. LINTZ. Chief Editor—EMIL PERLMANN.

POSING FOR MOVING PICTURES

By Lida Evandell

In spite of the great advancement of the moving picture business, the prevailing opinion of the ability required to pose for these pictures seems to be that expressed by a recent dramatic critic:

"What does it amount to anyway. Dramatic art! Bah! Anybody can stand up and make faces in front of a camera!"

If this were the only requirement for the person who works in moving pictures, many well-known actors could not stand even this test, as they depend largely upon a pleasing personality and a magnetic voice to win an audience.

When a person applies for a position in a moving picture company, the fact that he has been a good actor for a number of years in the legitimate drama is merely a starting point in his qualifications. In addition the director wants to know if he can ride well, not only in approved city style but also in Wild West fashion; can he swim, dance, skate on ice and rollers? Is he a good swordsman, pugilist, sailor? Can he row a boat, run an automobile, and has he a license as a chauffeur? The very latest demand is that he be an aviator in case he has to elope with the heroine in an aeroplane. Besides the requirements of the director, if he is a wise man he will have his life heavily insured before he joins the mob of a moving picture company.

In a recent moving picture show, the man in the audience who knew all about it was explaining for the benefit of his interested neighbors, that the drowning scene on the screen was a "fake."

"You can take it from me," he insisted, "that's nothing but a tank in a studio. The man's only walking on the bottom of it. You can bet he's no more swimming than you and me are right now. That aeroplane," he went on scornfully, as the next picture appeared, "is nothing but a few pulleys and sheets put together to fool the gullibles, but I'm wise to all them tricks."

The writer, who overheard him, resolved then and there to go out with a responsible concern to find out how many of the pictures were taken from real life and how much of the matter thrown on the films was faked.

Permission was secured to accompany the Republic Film Company out into the woods of New Jersey, where they took the pictures for their pictorial version of Daniel Boone, dramatized from the book of John S. C. Abbot by I. Bernstein, assistant to Herbert L. Miles, general manager of the company. The principal events in the life of Boone, from the time young Boone starts on his long journey into Kentucky up to his death, at eighty-six years of age, are given.

The production of the picture was somewhat delayed owing to the fact that the seventy-five Indians hired for the occasion positively refused to appear clad only in warpaint, feathers and a breech-cloth on the cold, raw day set to begin the picture.

Finally the weather permitted the company to be conveyed to the scene of action in old-fashioned prairie schooners without springs. These wagons were not allowed to go into the emigrant's train empty. Although they could not be seen in the picture, each wagon had household goods and women and children in it. During the attack by the Indians these wagons bumped over big rocks in the wild woods until some of the women screamed from fright and begged the driver to drive more slowly, or stop and let them out. He paid no attention to their entreaties and the wagons jolted on, until the director called "cut," and the camera stopped clicking.

When the Indians set fire to one of the canvas wagons, which was burned up, there was a lively scramble among helpmeets of the pioneers to find out if their belongings were in this particular wagon, and if so to get them to a place of safety. While a hard wind was blowing, the women had to stay close enough to the blaze to be seen in the picture, yet to keep their dresses from catching afire.

It took five men a week to erect a fort, which should be correct in dimensions, and an exact duplicate of the fort at Boonesville. This was fired by the Indians and burned up in a few minutes. The first settlers in the fort, including women and children, were kept choking and sputtering in the thick smoke, until the camera could record the frightened expressions on their faces.

After the smoke of battle cleared away, it was found that the Indian who scaled the fort to set it afire, had fallen and nearly broken his arm; it was swollen and black for days afterward. A hot cinder from his firebrand fell upon the neck of one of the defenders of the fort, and slid down his back through the loose open collar of his rough shirt. One of the women who fired an old-fashioned shotgun had been kicked over by it, while a half-breed was so badly burned by powder, it was hard to tell what had been his original color. An Indian was shot, it was thought for a time, quite seriously. The director constantly admonished the white men to shoot in the air and not kill any Indians. The settlers were warned to look out for the spears and arrows of the Indians, and yet instructed not to move from the positions the director assigned them where arrows fell thick and fast.

In one of the scenes an Indian rode down a steep hill at a breakneck pace; while doing so his horse stumbled and threw the Indian over his head. Boone had to ride without saddle or bridle down a steep incline at a terrific pace to produce the scene of his ride in the Cumberland mountains.

In the canoe scene, which was taken on a pond from fifteen to twenty feet deep in places, the canoe upset, its occupants had to remain in the water and were almost drowned before two men could rush in, out of the range of the camera, and rescue them from their chilly bath.

Quite recently a moving picture actor met his death in a similar accident. A case is also reported where one was killed by a railroad engine in an attempt to run it near enough to the victim on the track to give the appearance in the picture of it running over him. Seldom, if ever, do dummies take the place of live actors, even in the most dangerous positions. If you see a man in a moving picture hanging over a crevice in an iceberg, or almost buried in a snowdrift, you can depend upon its being realistic drama and that some actor has been kept in cold storage for some time to enable the camera to record the scene.

In one of the battle scenes of Daniel Boone the "dead" Indians lay almost nude on the cold, wet ground for nearly half an hour until the scene could be taken exactly right.

In a regular theater there can be many rehearsals until the actors are "letter perfect." After a "first night," if the play has not been well received important changes can be made in the lines and their interpretation.

In the picture play, after the director shouts "Action," the camera begins to record faithfully whatever passes before it. While some scenes may be left out without spoiling the picture the remaining ones must be presented to the audience just as they were taken.

The moving picture actor has no audience as a good incentive to good acting and must depend entirely upon facial expression and gestures to portray the character he impersonates.

Often some little incident will spoil a scene so that it has to be taken all over again at a cost of hundreds of dollars.

Mr. Bernstein, when asked about his production of Daniel Boone, explained:

"In writing the story I had to go into nearly every book on Daniel Boone I could find and select the most romantic parts, which would lend themselves to action and appeal to young as well as old. At the same time I had to avoid all the revolting scenes in the actual history of the life of Boone.

"It takes about a week to produce a play of this character, if conditions are favorable, and costs two or three thousand dollars for the posing alone.

"In one of the scenes where the white settlers, including women and children, are fleeing from the Indians, some of the less experienced people stopped to look at the camera to see if they were in the picture, which caused the whole scene to be done over.

"In another production there was a mob scene in front of a building. While the camera was working, some person in the building stuck his head out of a second-story window, unseen by the director or operator. When the picture was finished it showed a man's face laughing at the mob. This accident necessitated getting three hundred people together at the same place and taking the picture all over again.

"As a profession," continued Mr. Bernstein, "posing for pictures offers many advantages over legitimate drama. There is work all the year round, and the opportunity for home life for the actors. As one young lady disconsolately remarked: 'Every moving picture company seems to be a family affair. All the men have wives and the women have husbands.' There is a place in most companies for one or more children to work regularly.

"As to the moral atmosphere, the young girl does not have to travel about alone and unprotected. She does not have to work late hours as in the regular theater. There is no constant appearance before the public and she does not draw the so-called 'stage Johnnies.'

"Of course the moving picture audiences have their favorite actors and applaud them when they appear, but it can get no nearer to them than the front row of the theater.

"The wages are good; five dollars a day are paid to extra people, from twenty-five to fifty a week are received by the members of a stock company, while up to hundreds of dollars are given to special actors secured for certain plays."

For the benefit of aspirants to moving picture posing, it is only fair to state that it is usually a long road from working as an extra whenever a company puts on a big production and can use you and securing a place at a good salary in a stock company. It is a time of weary waiting in a hall bedroom, with nothing but Uneeda biscuits, cheese and bananas to keep one's ambition aglow.

However, if a person is willing to work hard while he waits, if he does not mind going without a dinner now and then, if he does not object to being a target for amateur shots, if he has nine lives like a cat and always lights on his feet when he falls, if he doesn't care for the bumps and bruises along the way, he may climb to the top of the moving picture ladder of fame, and live to a ripe old age to relate to his children and grandchildren how many narrow escapes he had from the very jaws of death.

NEW DEPARTURE OF PARIS ECLAIR

The Paris Eclair Company have incorporated in their program a series of scientific and industrial subjects of great interest, some of which are to be used as regular releases. The Eclair Company purpose being in readiness to meet the demand of the schools when the time comes for the adoption of moving picture films as aids to regular lessons.

The films shown to us were one on the culture of the honeybee, and another on the evils of exposing foods to the house fly. This is a wonderful lesson on the development of the microscope and shows the most disgusting evidences of the ravages of the house fly.

Paragould, Ark.—The National Theater Co., of Memphis, has purchased the Lyric and Airdrome Theaters from H. J. Whitsitt.

LOVE, WHISKERS AND LETTERS

Solax Release, Dec. 20th

A jealous lover, who imagines his sweetheart has kissed a bewhiskered stranger, furiously despatches a scathing letter, breaking off his engagement. In his excitement the lover sends his sweetheart a letter intended for his partner, and his partner is the bewildered recipient of the letter intended for the sweetheart.

The lover learns, before things have reached a climax, that the bewhiskered stranger is only a "long lost brother." So he sets out in a hurry to intercept the letter.

His adventures are not encouraging to hasty and jealous lovers. This comedy is just "chuck full" of human weakness.

PRESTO

Poster frames, the best poster frame made, $1.75 each in quantities up to five. Six or more $1.50 each, cash with order.

ELECTRA Pink Label Carbons 5/8 x 6 soft cored, $2.00 per 100. $19.00 per 1,000, cash with order.

Swaab Film Service Co.

INDEPENDENT FILM ONLY

129 N. EIGHTH STREET PHILADELPHIA

Power's and Motiograph Machines

The above illustration is from a photo sent us by one of our Western friends who is an admirer of the News. The pleased expression on his countenance is ample proof that he enjoys its contents and gains good information to help him in his business. This is the second anonymous communication we have had from him and would be pleased to hear from him who he is.

"THE WINNING OF LA MESA"
American release January 8th.

"WHEN ARE THEY GOING TO?" G!

ECLAIR

SHALL IT BE SUNDAY?

ECLAIR now issues One AMERICAN Reel on TUESDAY and One PARIS-Americanized Reel on THURSDAY. Heavy demand Necessitates Releasing ANOTHER AMERICAN ECLAIR. We asked The Trade What Day of the Week Would be Best for this Regular Release. MOST EVERYBODY SAID SUNDAY BUT WE WANT TO BE SURE

SUPPOSE YOU drop us a line and give your preference, after looking over the present Independent program carefully.

We've Engaged Notables

Men and women prominent in the moving picture limelight. ECLAIR accepts only the best talent, WITH A REPUTATION.

Announcement will be made next week naming these new ECLAIR acquisitions.

Courtesy to concerns using them at present forbids our giving names now.

COMING SOON

The Greatest two Reels ever given to pictures.

ALCOHOL

a production and a Sermon in one.

SEND FOR BOOKLET

of the story and further particulars. State if you are on our mail list or not.

COMING RELEASES

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19
A TRAGIC JOKE—Unusual Detective Drama

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21
A HEART BOWED DOWN—Wondrous Child Story

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 26
THE WRONG BOTTLE—An Almost Tragedy

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28
THE SILENT CALL—A Railway Drama

TUESDAY, JANUARY 2
DIVORCONS—Victorien Sardou's Great Comedy

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4
OLD PAPERS—OLD SOUVENIRS
An Unusual Drama

TUESDAY, JANUARY 9
A DOCTOR'S DUTY—A Hospital Story

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11
THE INVENTOR—A Tale of Conspiracy

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16
MAMIE BOLTON—A Wall Street Comedy

GET ON OUR MAIL LIST FOR DETAILS AND STORY.

ECLAIR FILM CO., GENERAL OFFICES AND STUDIOS FORT LEE, N. J.

BRANCHES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

IMP EMPLOYEES' BALL

The Moving Picture News,
30 West 13th Street,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

The employees of the Imp are running a ball on Saturday evening, December 30, at the Alhambra Hall, 126th street and Seventh avenue, and we are very anxious to make this a social success.

We are getting up a beautiful souvenir program, size 7 inches by 11 inches, and the cover page will be a two-color effect with a photograph of Mr. Laemmle in the center.

We are going to give a one-act sketch, acted by the members of the Imp Stock Company, and are making arrangements to have moving pictures of all the Independent manufacturers shown.

Our last year's affair was a great success, and we are doing everything in our power to make this year's even more successful.

Single tickets will be 50 cents, and ticket admitting lady and gentleman will be $1.00.

Yours very truly,
IMP FILMS COMPANY.

THREE-SHEET POSTER
"From the Bottom of the Sea"

The Imp Films Company are issuing a magnificent three-sheet poster, illustrative of one of the scenes in their two-reel subject, "From the Bottom of the Sea."

The incident selected for the illustration is that where the men in the submerged submarine are facing what is supposed to be certain death, on account of the inability of the vessel to rise to the surface of the water.

This poster was issued in response to a demand from exhibitors all over the country. Those of our exhibiting readers who have not yet obtained a copy should advise their exchange.

SCENE FROM "THE GRAB BILL"
A political play of deep dramatic interest by the Powers Co.

MR. P. A. POWERS IN THE FIRST PERSON

Signalizes "Reincarnation" With New Departure in Publicity Methods

Beginning in this issue with an ingenious and striking advertisement, Mr. P. A. Powers, maker of Powers Picture Plays, takes his place as a pathfinder in the advertising business of the industry. He is the first manufacturer to release his identity in advertising talks to the exhibitors, in connection with his own photograph. While we must agree that Mr. Powers' face certainly ought to make an impression, he gives some interesting reasons for using the Rooseveltian personal pronoun:

"It has long seemed to me that the exhibitor needed to be relieved from the weekly avalanche of exaggeration and descriptive verbal fireworks that the trade's advertising has burdened him with.

"On completing my new Duplex Studio, I felt that I could not afford to bury the identity of my product in the grandiloquent but commonplace publicity system in vogue. The exhibitor has gotten to the point where if a concern fails to go into a weekly paroxysm of ecstatic effulgence over its own work, he is surprised. So I have determined to surprise him. I am not going to say a word about any of my pictures unless I can prove it. Frankly, there is no concern in any line of business on earth that can maintain the same standard of merit in every single article it makes.

"I shall strain every effort to win the exhibitor to trust in me personally, implicitly. When I shall say in the advertising columns that a certain production will justify extra announcement by the exhibitor, I want him to accept my personal statements, not as phraseology designed to make impressive advertising, but as a simple statement of fact. And when an exhibitor shall have followed my tip once or twice he will learn that I am sincere, not indulging in idle self-praise."

It is a significant coincidence that Leon J. Rubinstein should be in charge of the Powers advertising campaign. As a newspaper man, he startled filmdom last winter by calling the advertising men of the trade severely to task for "extravagant bombasticity," as he termed it, and now we shall watch with interest his own practice of the doctrine of modesty for which he stands sponsor.

W. E. GREENE
FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE IN NEW ENGLAND

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Start the Season right by using an Independent Service from a Reliable House. We are buying the Output of the Sales Co. and have some choice services open. Write—wire—or call To-Day at

W. E. GREENE FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.
228 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.
Telephone: 2187-3790 Oxford.

WM. LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

Beat the tomtom! Twang the lyre! Sound the hurdy gurdy!

Seem a little vague to you? Not at all—it's just the boys who write the picture plots working overtime with the writer.

In other words, they want to know about this, that and the other, and the air teems with suspicions, ejaculations and accusations.

Well, fellows, I have been in the game, up to my neck, and any information I can give you from a store of varied experiences is yours for the asking.

I have devoted my entire department, aided and abetted by Editor Saunders, to you and yours this week. So up and at 'em—let the galled jade wince!

One author complains that his scenarios are returned without criticism. "I have not yet succeeded in locating that Golconda of the scenario writer, the firm that criticises," writes our friend. In the same communication he says he has recently turned to the scenario writing field for support. This author ended his epistle by asserting that the first story he ever wrote was sold for $30.

For a beginner it seemeth to yours truly that this is an unusually good start. The first story we ever wrote was re-written four times before it was sold. It was through the kindness of the scenario editors that it ever sold at all, at all. We are firm in the opinion that if a manuscript shows originality and talent that almost any editor in the business to-day will be glad to return a kind criticism with the rejected story instead of a rejection slip.

* * * *

There seems to be an idea prevalent among a certain section of the now great army of script writers that scenario editors and directors are conspirators to steal the thoughts and labors of authors. This is a fallacy. We know from experience that the staffs of the film producing concerns are vigilantly watchful for embryonic talent and that when a diamond in the rough is uncovered there is joy in that particular editorial office and the editor rather plumes himself on his discovery and farsightedness.

Never fear, brothers, if you submit an original script, which for some reason unknown to you is unavailable for studio purposes, you will get a free criticism all right, and an urgent request to submit your next playlet to the rejecting company. Many editors even go so far as to suggest markets where the rejected script may be sold other than their own companies.

* * * *

The Rex Company recently sent this letter to a scenario writer with his rejected manuscript:

"Your newspaper story went home. The emergency it describes, the opportunity, the pursuit of the scoop, the atmosphere and the general dramatic interest of it all brought back other days—I have been of the craft. I thank you for the happy moments the perusal of your splendid scenario gave to me, for a healthful reverie, and for the memory of other happy hours recalled. As a rule, newspaper pictures are hard to 'get over.' For that reason the enclosure. I hope to receive more of your work in the very near future."

Doesn't the above sound encouraging and does it read as if the editor was conspiring against the best interests of the author?

Here's another sample from the Comet Film Company:

"Please find enclosed check for your story. We were unable to use it for a holiday picture, but because we have been holding it so long and so preventing you from marketing it elsewhere while seasonable we feel we should pay you for the same."

The author who fired the above in remarks that he has no objections to make regarding his treatment from scenario editors.

Just a line from the Lubin Company as exhibited by another author friend:

"We thought so much of your manuscript that we handed it to one of our directors and are very sorry that he found it too long and complicated for use. You might rewrite it with shorter cast and briefer action and we shall take pleasure in again reading the story."

Faults of script criticised in a nutshell and a chance for the future.

We have read letters of kindly meant criticism to writers from the I. M. P., American, Edison, Thanhouser, Reliance and other companies.

From our own experiences and the investigation into the experiences of many other writers, we are unhesitatingly of the opinion that the editors are banded together in a conspiracy of honesty and kindness and are pleased to criticise a manuscript of worth and to assist the writer of originality by every means in their power. It's to the editor's interest and to the interest of the film company.

* * * *

For the benefit of another correspondent we would say that the usual prices paid for scenarios range from $10 to $50. Twenty and $25 are the average. If an author received but $10 for his story, it can be recorded that that sum is all it is worth to the purchaser. Generally the $10 is paid for the idea alone, and the scenic action is discarded and the plot rewritten by the house staff. We have read statements from one or two self-exploiting scenario writers who claim to receive $100 per manuscript. We have written some few scripts in our time and $50 was the top notch price with us. Picture play plots worth $100 to the producing companies are few and far between. Despite the pessimistic assertions of some authors, the prices of scenarios are not decreasing but are increasing. It used to be that a ten dollar check was forwarded to an author as a matter of course. Now, if the story permits, $20 to $25 is enclosed, or an offer is made which may or may not be accepted by the writer. These prices are fair, when it is considered that the majority of scenario authors are tyros and that very frequently the bare synopsis of his work is all that is utilized by the director or editor.

* * * *

Touching upon the assertion of our correspondent that "Scenario writers should get together and form an association for mutual protection" we would in reply ask: Protection for what? Remember, my friend, that there is just as good fish in the sea as has ever been caught. In other words, new writers are blossoming forth every day and there can be no monopoly upon the script writers product. Just so long as there is opportunity for a free-lunch writer to pull down $25 for a few hours' work, the editors will receive their daily influx of ideas, association or no association. Maybe the persons, so energetic in endeavoring to form such an organization, are self-seeking. There would be officers to elect, salaries, perhaps, to be paid, and who so logical candidates for offices and salaries as the originators of such ideas. Do you get the hunch?

* * * *

Another writer urges us to agitate the idea of having the author's name appear on the picture play. We are inclined to agree with the suggestor that there is some merit to this claim. We would like to see every film released bearing the cast of characters, the name of the director and the name of the author of the playlet. Even if the playwriter's idea is all that has been utilized in filming the subject, nevertheless he is entitled to credit. All lovers of the moving picture theater are now familiar with the names of the actors who develop the writer's thought. If the scenario writer's name was credited as is customary in the magazines and in other fields of literary work, the cry of "higher prices" would subside. The innovation would also bring into the field writers of ability who are not now tempted. The idea put forth by some that the film concerns are fearful that the writer would become popular and demand more money is not well founded. Ability to deliver the goods would be just as essential as before but the writer would be spurred by friendly rivalry with others and, consequently, more painstaking and enthusiastic work would be the result.

One writer would see another's name appended to a picture play. "Say, I can do better than that," he might naturally exclaim. Forthwith the rival would set to work with diligence and, perhaps, another masterpiece would be secured by the film company that screened the rival's labors. It is to be hoped that the day is not for distant when the scenario writer will be given credit before the theatergoing public that he sets forth to entertain.

* * * *

Another one of our correspondents wishes to know if it is

Increase Your Box Office Receipts

BY USING

The Greatest Educational Feature of the Day

4 DAILY

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD'S SLIDES OF CURRENT EVENTS
THIS SERVICE COVERS
EVERY EVENT THAT IS INTERESTING
EVERY OCCURRENCE THAT THRILLS

24 WEEKLY

News pictures of Wars, Sports and all National and International happenings by Underwood & Underwood, the world-famed news photographers. Flash these events daily while they are news and public interest is keenest. Everyone is interested in the news of the day, and this is a service of news pictures. COSTS NOTHING WHEN COMPARED WITH RESULTS.

4 SLIDES DAILY—24 PER WEEK, RATE $12.00 PER WEEK
2 SLIDES DAILY—12 PER WEEK, RATE 6.50 PER WEEK

3 current event photos 14" x 17" for outside display with printed news titles, rate $5.00 per week.
WRITE TODAY FOR THREE, SIX OR TWELVE MONTHS' CONTRACTS

HUNTON-FELL-ELLIOTT, Inc., 1328 Broadway, NEW YORK

necessary for all plots to end with a hug and kiss. Well, old boy, it seems so, right now. There is many a strong plot with the unhappy ending turned down, much to the sorrow of the minority which longs for more variety in denouements. Keep at it, however, and if you land please, please let me know! WM. LORD WRIGHT.

NESTOR RELEASES

Nestor has this past week shown at the offices of the Sales Company some very excellent work. "The Love Chase" is a rattling good, clean comedy—very funny, indeed. "Desperate Desmond Foiled by Claude Eclaire" is the best of the series yet put out. Claude Eclaire goes fishing with Beautiful Rosamond. Desperate Desmond, leveling his field glasses from the shore, spies them. He with some Zulu friends make a raft imitating a small island. The pair, thinking they have drifted ashore, are captured by Desmond. Beautiful Rosamond is taken to his ship and stowed away, bound and gagged, in a lifeboat with a tarpaulin thrown over her. Desperate Desmond hides in a barrel. After sending wireless messages, Claude at last finds out the whereabouts of the ship which the Zulus, who have turned friendly to Claude through a favor done by him, capture. The girl is found in the search and Desperate Desmond, who has so far forgotten as to indulge in his favorite pastime of smoking, is discovered through the escape of smoke from the bunghole of the barrel. Desmond is put in a safe and flung overboard. Here is a very fine submarine effect where is shown the safe sinking through the water among the fishy inhabitants of the sea. The safe suddenly moves. It has landed on the back of a turtle. The turtle rises and swims toward shore. It happens that a convict who has been breaking stones has climbed over the prison wall and is standing on the shore. He is used to safe-breaking and at the loud appeals of Desperate Desmond within the safe he unlocks it. Desperate Desmond steps out and the convict steps in, locks the door and the safe is again seen disappearing along the surface on the back of the turtle. The closing scene shows Claude and Rosamond on the deck of the ship making love, and visited by a vision of Desperate Desmond. There are more good films of this series yet to follow.

"The New Ranch Owners" is a splendid Western picture soon to be released by the Nestor Company. It is out of the ordinary in that it contains a wealth of comedy which is not the usual with the Western pictures.

WITH THE WESTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. F. W. Randolph, general manager of the Annex Motion Picture Company, of San Diego, left this week for New York.

* * * *

The Pathe Company returned this week from Santa Anna, where they have been located for the past two weeks. While there, many feature films were produced under the direction of Mr. Youngdeer.

* * * *

Mr. C. O. Baumann, president of the New York Motion Picture Company, arrived last week from New York. While here Mr. Baumann will supervise many improvements that are to be made at the Bison plant.

* * * *

Mr. David Horsley paid a visit to Miles Bros. Exchange this week. While there, Mr. Horsley discussed the many improvements that have been made by the Independents. He is highly enthusiastic in his praise of the conditions here in California and says the climate is ideal for the work of picture producing. PHIL WHITMAN.

ZIGOMAR—Who is he?

They call him the "Raffles" of Europe. He is packing theaters and mystifying audiences everywhere. The Most Sensational Film Ever Produced. STATE RIGHTS MEN—write for prices. EXHIBITORS—write for booking.

THE F & E FILM COMPANY
E. MANDELBAUM, Pres.
710 COLUMBIA BLDG., CLEVELAND, O.

Washington, D. C.

The Savannah Auto Prize Races have been having a "howling success" at the Moore houses. It must be remembered that our own Arthur Lucus, manager of the Washington Film Exchange, is responsible for the securing of the exclusive rights of this picture for the Independents. He graciously turned it over to the Republic, whose producers have graciously returned appreciation to Mr. Lucus more in the excellent set of films presented than in words. The recent return of Manager Lucus from Savannah found him "just full of it." His vivid description of some of the curves and high speed rates almost made me feel that pictures were not necessary if Mr. Lucus would give a lecture. He spoke highly of the excellent patrol that was given the course, and he believes this to be most responsible for the few accidents; for it is always the accidents and deaths that cast a shadow over an otherwise pleasure of this daring nature. He also spoke of the courtesies extended the camera men of the Republic, and how all others were excluded from the course. "Yes," he said, "we took about 16,000 feet of film and have boiled it down to 1,000 feet that is all action, dash, speed, daring, and action!" And at this point Mr. Lucus was intensity of action himself.

Tom Moore, who will be up-to-date, has in his office a latest model camera of Powers, 1912, which he will install in The Plaza. This house he intends to remodel, increasing its seating capacity and ornamentation and possibly its front. The Plaza is Mr. Moore's "pet" and he is forever improving it.

Miller Bros., of The Leader, had a unique barnyard in front of its theater as a Thanksgiving display. The fowls, the pumpkins, and the hay were in evidence, but the turkey had probably been disposed of for the home dinner.

Manager Notes makes a practice of adding a fourth reel frequently to his first-day-of-release show. This is always something educational, scenic, or scientific. He was making a specialty of the Turkish War last week, which called large attendance for the two days he retained this film.

Manager Moore has secured the services of Wagner's orchestra for his Academy Sunday performances. Here five reels of the best output of the week are presented, interspersed with excellent musical talent from the Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York theaters. The fact that a recent ordinance forbids any speaking numbers has caused the necessity of engaging finer talent for the Moore concerts of the Academy and Gaiety. For this the audiences of these houses are the gainer, though Mr. Moore must "pay the price."

It will not be amiss to state that Mr. Lucus received a cable from London for fifty prints of the Auto Races at Savannah, and there is a possibility that this will be increased if the film proves exciting. This speaks something for American films. Of course the order was turned over to the Republic at once. "These races are what I call educational," commented Mr. Lucus, "and I said long ago that there was a big field for such reels that will instruct and present national events."

"THE PROFESSOR"

The professor walks in his sleep. This supplies the keynote to an absorbing story which will hold the attention of all moving picture theatergoers from the beginning to the end of the picture.

The professor's nephew must find $1,000 to cover his stock exchange margin. At the same time the professor himself is paid a large sum of money for professional work. Finding the bank in which he wanted to deposit the money is closed, he puts the money in his safe.

Ruth, the professor's private secretary, lends his nephew the money for the cover.

It is here that the dramatist suggests the working of the professional mind. Unable to put his money in a place of safety, he has selected his own safe, which he does not thoroughly trust, so when the old fellow goes to bed he is troubled about the matter. He walks in his sleep and making straight for the safe abstracts the money, secretes it under the cushion of a chair and then returns to bed.

In the morning he discovers it is lost, and suspicion falls upon the nephew. A detective appears, secures evidence against the nephew in the shape of the broker's letter and the actual money left in the Wall street office.

But the professor's secretary clearly negatives the value of all this by proving that she lent the innocent Ralph the money.

The detective passes the night in the house. The professor walks in his sleep again and such is the influence of mind over matter, restores the money to the safe and returns to sleep.

The climax is reached in the morning when the detective convinces the professor that the old gentleman himself is the culprit. By way of restitution, he pays his nephew's indebtedness and the two young people are made happy.

The comedy gives the Imp Company an opportunity of putting over some strong dramatic work.

THE ACTRESS

The Majestic Company are releasing on December 24th a very beautiful film entitled "The Actress." The story is full of pathos and is significant of the great sacrifice made by the profession to please the selfish public. The story is of the compulsion of an actress mother to appear on the stage on the opening night of a performance while her little child lay almost at death's door in her home. The story is wonderfully told on the screen. The part of the actress is taken by Miss Mabel Trunnelle and the part of the manager by Mr. Herbert Prior. Both of these talented people acquit themselves with wonderful artistic force. These scenes showing in alternation her appearance on the stage as the sparkling ingenue and her terrible anxiety for the condition of the child behind the scenes, also the climatic moment when she reaches her home after the trying ordeal of the evening, not knowing whether her child still lives, or whether she has already crossed over the "Great Divide." However, the suspense of the onlooker is pleasantly broken when opening the door of the room where the child lay she finds the doctor with a pleasant smile of joy on his face, betokening the fact that the crisis has passed and the child is already on the road to recovery.

Wilmington, Del.—The Wilmington Theater Co., capital, $20,000.

Antigo, Wis—C. W. Van Doren is contemplating the establishment of a motion picture theater here.

Boxholm, Ia.—The Boxholm Hall Association has been incorporated and an opera house will be erected here at a cost of $2,500.

Monticello, Wis.—A new moving picture theater is to be established in the Gettings block under the management of Al. Yeagers of Freeport.

SPROCKETS
FAMILY THEATRE
HOW'S THIS
I BET WE BUST THE PLOT
SOME CLASS TO ME
TICKETS
LOVE ME AND THE WORLD IS MINE
THIS IS MY BEST SMILE
HEY !!!!!
SHUT UP AND SMILE DARN IT
GUST
NOAH
TORIN
MA
BE CAREFUL
GET BUSY
OLD MAN SPROCKETS BABY
SCRATCH
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED ATF Co.
In appreciation of the fine film service old man Sprockets is having a family Group picture made to send to the Anti-Trust Film Co- 128 W Lake St Chicago.
"Is your service that Satisfactory"?

Open to Represent Good American Film Manufacturers for

England, English Colonies and Europe

Cable or Write Terms:

Universal Film Company, Ltd.

5 Denmark St., Charing Cross Rd., London, W. C.

Cable Address, "Ufilmico, London" 'Phone, 13674 Central

"THE LITTLE STOCKING"

The Imp Christmas Story

It is not an easy thing to produce a book, a play, or a picture around the subject of Christmas, which while conforming to the needs of the season is yet fresh, convincing and satisfying.

But the Imp Company have done this.

Christmas is the children's feast and any moving picture story produced at that season of the year must go straight to the hearts and minds of the little ones, while at the same time it passes the critical test of the grown-ups. This is what the Imp picture, "The Little Stocking," does. Like all Imp successes, the story is clear and simple. Jim decides to leave the East for the Western mines in search of fortune, leaving his wife and little child behind. He takes with him a stocking, which unknown to him, has been placed in his grip by his little girl. When he reaches his destination in Arizona, he meets an old friend. The two chum in and after good wishes from the rough but good-natured miners, they set out upon their expedition. Crossing a dismal desert, Jim succumbs and dies. It afterward devolves upon his friend to write to Jim's wife, telling her she is a widow.

Misfortune of a worse kind befalls the young widow and her child. She takes to dressmaking for a living, but being unable to make ends meet is threatened to be dispossessed by her hard-hearted landlord.

Meanwhile, out in Arizona the little stocking has been discovered by Jim's friends, and they good-naturedly decide to fill it and to commission Jim's particular chum to personally carry it to the widow. This the good-hearted fellow does. He purchases some toys for the child on the way and arrives in the widow's home just in time to pay the landlord and make the widow and her child happy.

The ending of the story is particularly happy. Jim's friend smilingly accepts the widow's thanks and goes home, it is to be supposed to Arizona, to modestly tell his friends what he has done. He does not stay behind, fall in love with the widow and marry her. It is a natural and satisfactory ending.

The acting is in keeping with the theme of the story: simple and natural.

Undoubtedly this Christmas story of "The Little Stocking" will be a great "Imp" success.

"WHY THIS MYSTERIOUS DRAG?" G!

A BIG SACRED SUNDAY FEATURE, WITH SANTA CLAUS AS THE HARBINGER OF HOPE AND FAITH

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

RELEASED SUNDAY, DECEMBER 24, shows the Rising Sun breaking a dawn of a new era of better things and three-a-week.

WRITE FOR LOBBY DISPLAYS
FEATURE IT NOW

RELEASED
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 27

WHEN MARIAN WAS LITTLE

Naïve Little Marian, only sixteen, practices her alluring coquetry on her brother's college chum. She primps up like a big girl and gets the Indian sign on Dick. See Little Marian Swayne at her best.

RELEASED
FRIDAY, DECEMBER 29

THE DIVIDED RING

After the death of their parents, two children are separated and adopted by different families. Before their separation they divide between them their mother's ring. After their separation the children are reared in different environments. The story is an example of the effect of environment on character.

The musical sensation in motion pictures, THE VIOLIN MAKERS OF NUREMBERG, IS RELEASED FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22. With it is also released a three-sheet and a special lobby display.

ORDER NOW!

Solax

NOTES OF THE WEEK

FROM THE OBSERVATORY

By G. F. Blaisdell

Edison's "Life in the United States Army" contained one picture that was a rare treat. A camera placed on a tug towing a 30 x 60-foot target on a 600-foot line took pictures of the work of twelve-inch army rifles shooting at a five-mile range. When a camera man will work within 200 yards of a moving target peppered by 1,050-pound projectiles he has got sand. Two hundred yards at the distance of five miles is a mighty narrow margin

* * * *

The New York World recently sent out to its correspondents an inquiry as to conditions in the theatrical world, and, where the business being done was below normal, the cause. Chicago reported 700 actors idle. William Faversham, playing in Cincinnati, declared there were too many theaters. Manager A. F. Hartz, of Cleveland, thought likewise. He added: "The craze for vaudeville and moving pictures also has had its effect on the business done by legitimate attractions."

C. J. Bennett, manager of the Shubert in Milwaukee, blamed automobiles as well as motion pictures for the falling theatrical business.

* * * *

The United States Supreme Court has decided that the Federal copyright law of 1856 is applicable to moving pictures. The decision was the outcome of the suit by Klaw & Erlanger, together with Harper Brothers and the estate of General Lew Wallace against the Kalem Company on account of the latter's filming of "Ben Hur." There is a penalty of $50 for every illegal representation of a copyrighted work. As an average of a hundred films of a play are sent out to exchanges, and as each of these will probably be in the hands of at least five different exhibitors a week, and, further, as the penalty will lie against the manufacturer, it is easy to figure how expensive piracy is going to be in the future.

If some manufacturers get mulcted in good round damages as a result of this decision there will be many a long-suffering writer, long-time victim of bald robbery, who will murmur "Praise be."

* * * *

Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt and his partner, Louis L. Lane, have returned from the Arctic with a remarkable series of motion photographs. On Wrangell Island pictures were taken of twenty-four polar bears. One of them, whose picture was being taken at a distance of fifteen feet, suddenly developed a strong curiosity as to the camera and its operator. The picture was interrupted. On another occasion, when two kyaks converted into a catamaran were being used as a platform for a camera, a big walrus dived under the boats and punched his tusks through the craft. The natives managed to reach an ice floe.

* * * *

Nine picture show proprietors, on trial before a jury in Fort Worth on a charge of doing business on Sunday, have been acquitted. The attorney for the defense made the novel plea that the statute quoted to the jury by the prosecutor as the basis of the action was passed in 1878 and could not have been meant to apply to moving pictures, being enacted to prevent the operation of "low-grade variety shows." Evidently the jury believed this to be good logic. There will be many others who will agree with it.

* * * *

C. R. Milliman has offered a reward of $50 for the apprehension of the miscreant who tampered with the projector in the Grand Opera House, Stroudsburg, Pa.

* * * *

Red Eagle, in a letter to the World, protests against the average Indian pictures. His language is dignified, graphic, picturesque. He points out many gross inaccuracies of detail. Among other things he says:

"To the average child—and adult, too—the Indian is a yelling, paint-bedaubed creature, reeking of barbarism and possessing little or no intelligence. Whether the National Board of Censorship is aware of the fact or not (probably not), it is instilling an antagonistic germ in the mind of the young American against the American Indian that if continued may cause a bitterness.

"The finer sensibilities of an Indian rise futilely at the grossly exaggerated and falsely represented position to which his race is subjected. I know, for I am a full-blooded Milicete.

"Not including the tribal rites and ceremonies, an act should be passed prohibiting the showing of the 'Indian' picture so prevalent to-day. By all means let the ceremonies live in picture and song, but let those who are capable of going through the ceremony without holding it up to ridicule and derision do the reproducing."

* * * *

Mrs. Lillian W. Betts, addressing the Sunday Civic Center of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, took up the children's side of the moving picture problem.

"For two years," Mrs. Betts said, "I have been looking for the evils in the moving picture shows, but I have not found them yet."

Mrs. Betts believed that so-called moving picture show reformers have false ideals and do not look at child life in New York as it actually is or the conditions surrounding a large majority of mothers. These reformers, she said, ignore the real needs of the child. Suggesting a remedy, the speaker urged a law prohibiting the admission of any school child of school age into a moving picture show during school hours, but that between the hours of 3:30 and 9 p.m. the children should be admitted unaccompanied by parents or guardians. If the child cannot be regulated the show must be regulated; she believed people must demand that these places be made safe places for children, and that the department regulating them be given an income sufficient to carry out its duties.

* * *

The writer recently has visited two picture houses in the same neighborhood, each similar in size and general characteristics, and each showing the same brand of films. The hour of his visit at each place was practically the same—about 9 p.m. In the first one-half of the seats were vacant. In the second every seat was filled. In the first the films were ancient—streaky, oily. The maid who tried her best to sing may have been a very efficient ticket seller. In the second house the films were new—all but one—and of good selection. The young woman who interpreted the illustrated songs had a sweet voice. That's all.

* * * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat, in discussing the troubles of theatrical managers, talks in plain language. Here is a part of the lecture:

"The theatrical season is sufficiently under way by this time for us to reach some judgment as to it. The managers frankly confess that business has been bad, worse even than last year, concerning which there was nothing to boast of.

"Business is fairly good in New York, they say; but deplorably bad in what Manhattan is pleased to term 'the provinces'—that is, the rest of the country. Why is this? And what must be done to cure the evil? they are asking. The conditions are getting very serious when seventy-four companies were closed last week, stranded in various parts of the country, and in a number of cases sent back to New York by charitable contribution—we got a taste of it here. Nearly a third of our professional actors, including many of high standing, are now out of employment. Finally, a number of theaters, opened only to the drama, have been compelled to abandon that field and surrender to the moving picture business.

"There is something seriously wrong in the theatrical business when such results are possible. The managers are inclined to charge up all their present trouble to the cheap competition of picture shows, but this is incredible. They themselves are mostly to blame, that they have—in the recent extreme competition in their business—built too many theaters. They have, moreover, charged too much and driven off business; they have done too much in the starring line and done it badly; they have sent out too many inadequate companies to present such plays and operas as have met with some popular success and have thus killed their own golden goose; and they have endeavored to force on the public plays it does not want. In fine, it is quite evident that there will have to be a general overhauling of the theatrical business in prices, plays, etc., if the managers want to regain the profitable business they were doing a few years ago. They will fare better if they correct their mistakes instead of indulging in abuse of the public for not paying excessive prices for what it does not want to see."

* * * *

According to a new law in Connecticut, boys under fourteen years and girls under sixteen are admitted unaccompanied to picture shows in the afternoon. Children under those ages must be accompanied in the evening.

* * * *

James F. McCusker, the new warden of the Rhode Island State Prison, will place before the Board of Charities and Corrections a proposition to display on Saturday afternoons moving pictures to the 500 convicts in his charge.

The threat of being debarred from his weekly view of moving pictures should make a tractable prisoner out of an incorrigible. As a deterrent the pictures should be invaluable.

* * * *

The barring of the American flag from Canadian picture shows has become a subject of diplomatic correspondence, but the Dominion officers say the matter rests with the authorities of each province. The Toronto censors have decreed that the American flag must be cut out or the films will not be passed.

To tell the truth, some of the manufacturers have overworked the flag even for American consumption. When a half dozen cavalrymen are turned out for an emergency job it is enough to move the judicious to tears to witness one of the riders encumbered with a flag large enough for a street political banner. It may be spectacular, but it is not business.

* * * *

The Old Guard of New York on November 25th went into annual active service when it took its great long one-mile hike from the City Hall to the Battery to unfurl the flag from the pole that once served as the mast of the old cup defender "Constitution." This in honor of the anniversary of the evacuation of New York by the British. After the flag raising these bottle-scarred veterans marched in review before a motion picture camera. They then took a train uptown for a dinner. If the camera could have caught them later in the evening it might have had "some" picture.

* * * *

The elimination of illustrated songs by Quincy, Ill., showmen is expected to meet with the approval of the public, especially as the managers are offering other attractions in place of them. The experiment ought to be worth while. The addition of one good film would probably more than compensate the average picturegoer.

* * * *

Under a new ordinance in Peoria, Ill., picture shows seating less than 400 persons will in future pay a license of $100 annually; from 400 to 800, $150, and over 800, $200.

* * * *

Judge Staake, in Common Pleas Court, Philadelphia, has decided that theaters used for moving picture shows are exempt from the $500 license imposed on houses in first-class cities; even vaudeville acts in conjunction with the pictures, the Judge declares, do not bring these houses within the $500 class. The fee for picture houses is $100.

Here's the Ideal Three Reel Program

A Social Drama, strong, virile, with plenty of interior scenes, full-dress suits, ball rooms, etc. Then a split-reel of comedy and scenic, just to vary a bit toward the laugh and the out-of-doors.

Follow that with the Master Picture of the Evening—a WESTERN full of ACTION, red-blooded action—the kind that comes with Great Mountains, rolling prairies, and Primeval Instincts. Let this be your "piece de resistance"—A FITTING CLIMAX to the IDEAL PROGRAM.

We SPECIALIZE in Western Pictures—we're equipped to give you the Best Possible in Western film—our studio in enchanted El Cajon Valley, Southern California, is the dream-spot for the motion-picture manufacturer—and our company is specially selected, drilled and adapted for the production of Western subjects.

If you don't receive AMERICAN PICTURES—Ask for Them.

"Duel of the Candles"

(Release Date Dec. 25th. Approx. Length 1000 feet)

With two suitors, one a poor prospector and the other apparently a rich ranchman, but really leader of a gang of horse-thieves, the girl gives her heart to the prospector. He is kidnapped by the horse-thief, who deceives the girl and marries her. Making his escape the prospector hurries to her new home, getting the drop on her husband. Placing two candles on a table with the understanding that the first to go out should mean the suicide of its owner, they await the decree of fate. Who lost and how, makes one of the really fine pictures of the year.

"Bonita of El Cajon"

(Release Date Dec. 28th. Approx. Length 1000 feet)

Bonita, daughter of a gang of outlaws, grows to womanhood in the mountains, care-free and happy. Her father's lieutenant, venturing down the mountainside, meets heautiful Vera Bradley and kisses her. Vera's lover, Jack Cartwell, promptly goes in search of him and meets Bonita. She falls desperately in love with him and later, when Jack and his rangers hunt out the outlaw band and the outlaws capture Vera, Bonita has a chance to show her love. She gives her life for him, with a heroism hred of native simplicity. You'll like Bonita and the story she tells.

American Film Mfg. Co.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK CHICAGO, ILL.

LUX FILMS

The Films The Exhibitor Demands

Released Friday, Dec. 22, 1911

Yum, Yum, A Japanese Love Story

Drama - 977 Feet

A most interesting film showing the art of love-making

R. PRIEUR, 10 East 15th Street, NEW YORK CITY

TELEPHONE 3427 STUYVESANT

Sold only through Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

ONLY EASTMAN RAW STOCK USED.

CHICAGO LETTER

Mr. S. L. Phillips, manager of the Star Theater, Houghton, Mich., has arranged for the very best Independent service attainable with the Anti-Trust Company. This is Mr. Phillips' first entree in the Independent ranks, having always been a firm supporter of the licensed factions.

* * * *

Mr. William Selig returned to Chicago last week from California. He is very much improved. While out West Mr. Selig purchased a three-hundred-acre tract of land at Santa Monica for the erection of a studio and plant, also for an animal farm.

* * * *

K. W. Linn, Pathe's traveling representative, after a hurried visit to the different film people, left for a Western trip and will be out for about a month.

* * * *

Mr. Herbert Niles, general manager of the Republic Film Company, was also in the city last week looking after the interest of the firm.

* * * *

Mr. F. R. Martin, manager of the Tisdale Feature Film enterprises, has left the city for a business trip throughout Indiana.

* * * *

At the Land Show, two moving picture theaters were erected at a cost of $10,000, in which stereopticon views, moving pictures and lectures were given, demonstrating to the public in Chicago the various farm scenes and farm life throughout different states.

* * * *

A New Feature Film Company has been organized in Chicago, with offices in the Schiller Building. It will be under the management of Mr. E. J. Eichenlaub, well and favorably known throughout the country, both in the moving picture and theatrical circles. It is the intention of the new company to make feature films exclusively, which will all be franchised under the state right plan. The main idea in the production of their feature films will be to furnish something entirely different from the ordinary. "Twenty Years in Sing Sing" is the title of their first effort, which is in three reels. The state rights for this picture are already on the market. Mr. Eichenlaub stated that the states are selling fast.

* * * *

The Chicago office of the Associated Motion Picture School has recently been moved to 672 Sheridan Road, where Mr. McIntyre will be glad to see many of his friends.

* * * *

A fire panic was narrowly averted by the intermission at the Crown Theater on Division and Ashland avenues, when a fire started in the gents' smoking room, filling the entire house with smoke. There were over four hundred people in the audience at the time, mostly women and children, who, although frightened, kept their places until the arrival of the crew of the insurance patrol No. 7, who successfully put the fire out, without the aid of any city fire engines.

* * * *

The third reception and ball given by the moving picture operators of Chicago, will be held at the Illinois Hall, corner of Madison and Ogden avenues, Wednesday, December 13, 1911, at 8:30 p.m. Admission will be 50c., wardrobe will be free. The operators expect to see many of their friends at the reception and know it will be a great success.

* * * *

"Hands Across the Sea in '76" was shown at the Boston Theater, Saturday, Nov. 25, and made quite an impression on the audience, as they applauded enthusiastically after the second reel was shown. It is very seldom that a Chicago audience is aroused to the extent of applauding for a moving picture. The picture is a most interesting portrayal of scenes and events during the Revolutionary War, and although the film is made up mostly of military scenes, there is worked into the production an interesting love story which helps to offset the over-abundance of military scenes. The film is also remarkable for the photography and the splendid outdoor scenes. Also for the care and the effort of the producers for the air of reality which is far superior to the ordinary military picture, as the reproduction of costumes, buildings and many landmarks of close historical connection are made with both accuracy and completeness.

* * * *

A large article consisting of a column and a quarter appeared in the Commercial Chronicle, which was entirely devoted to the moving picture as an advertising medium. It told entirely of the wonderful advancement of the moving picture in this special line, and of the benefits the advertisers receive through this kind of publicity. There was also a great deal said about the Industrial Film Company, of which Mr. W. R. Rothacker is manager, who is one of the pioneers in the industrial moving picture business.

* * * *

A rumor has been in circulation here which throws blame on the Operators' Union for the bomb which was thrown in the Iola Theater at 1238 Milwaukee avenue. During my visit to the Union last week, I asked Mr. Miller in regard to this rumor. He stated that the Union uses no such tactics, that it must have been sympathizers that threw the bomb, and that the only act the Union did resort to was pasting labels on theaters, notifying the public of the fact that non-union men were employed there.

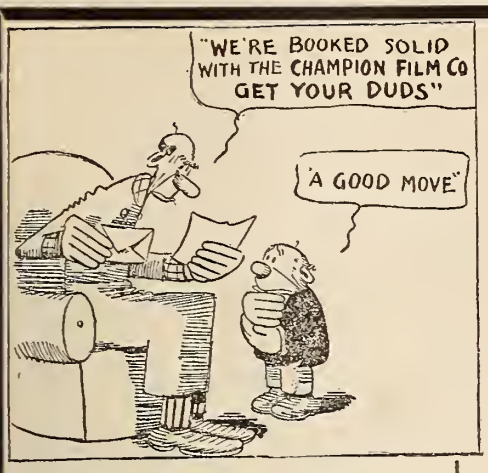
* * * *

The LeGrand Theater at 6618 North Clark street, has been purchased by Mr. David Mustock. Mr. Mustock, who formerly owned the Centre and Sangamon Theaters, has acquired, through excellent management, the title of the successful promoter of lemons. Both the Centre and the Sangamon Theatres were poor paying houses until Mr. Mustock bought and made them the good paying proposition which they are today. The LeGrand Theatre has always been considered a poor house, but it has already started to show what excellent management will do toward making a paying proposition out of most any theater.

WARNER KENNEDY.

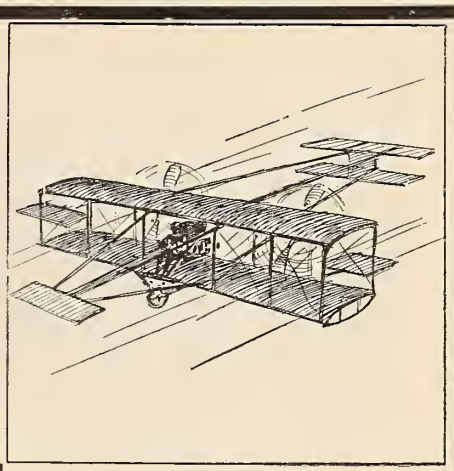
Baltimore, Md.—Pearce & Scheck, owners of the Victoria and other small theaters here, have completed plans for the erection of a new playhouse at Frederick, Md.

Troy, N. Y.—E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Novelty Theater, will open a new theater in the Caswell Bldg., on River street.



THE CHAMPION FILM COMPANY

MARK M. DINTENFASS,
Gen. Mgr.
now located in new offices at
No. 145 WEST 45th ST.,
NEW YORK CITY



SHERLOCKO and WATSO

already favorites in the public eye, will appear in Champion pictures, in special dashing, laugh-convulsive Comedies. We have the exclusive privilege for this Feature, therefore every exhibitor must employ every means for booking this CASH BOX DELIGHT.

THE WEEK'S RELEASES
FOR MONDAY, DEC. 25th, 1911

"BONNIE OF THE HILLS"

Parted from her sweetheart, Bonnie leaves her western home to educate herself at an Academy. A subsequent meeting and auto ride leads to their hold-up by bandits. Bonnie cleverly outwits and captures them. The sweethearts are then re-united.

FOR WEDNESDAY, Dec. 27th, 1911

"The Doctor's Close Call"

A young doctor, seeking to recover his health in the West, is captured in the company of bandits. His faithful sweetheart back East reads of his peril and courageously saves him.

ROBERT G. FOWLER

THE AVIATOR

accompanied by a Champion cameraman, is making an interesting air cruise from New Orleans to the Atlantic seaboard. Fascinating scenic pictures of beautiful and pleasing value. Overhead city flights will also be included. DIGEST THIS NEWS?

LOS ANGELES CORRESPONDENT

Los Angeles, Dec. 1.—The best of business is prevailing all over the city, and especially among the Independent exhibitors. They are all satisfied with the service that they are receiving, and everyone is praising the good work of the Independents, but we have one little bone to pick with the manufacturers.

One of the oldest Independent exhibitors in this city, who has never used any other service in his three theatres since they have been open, said the other day: "The manufacturer's are putting out some fine stories, the photography is sharp and clear, and the pictures are steady, but some of the film stock is very poor, with the result that after a film gets to be a week old it is in a terrible condition. The chief trouble is in the sprocket holes, which tear out, with the result that it is impossible to keep the film on the machine."

It seems that several exhibitors have been charged big prices by the exchanges for pieces of film that they were compelled to cut out. So it behooves the manufacturers to get a move on and eliminate this one bad fault.

* * * *

Well, the Los Angeles churches are awaking to the fact that the silent drama is not so bad after all, and several are contemplating installing motion picture outfits in their Sunday school departments.

A few Sundays ago, the Rev. Dr. Brougher, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church, gave a powerful sermon on the wonderful improvements that have been made in the motion picture industry in the last year.

He said, in part, the moving picture show is fast becoming a mighty power for the world. In most cities the moving picture shows are on a higher plane by far morally and educationally than the theaters. He further said that just as soon as the Temple Baptist Church can see its way clear financially to do it, he hopes to install a moving picture machine in the Temple that can be used in conjunction with the Sunday School work. He went on to say: "At the present time there are many films produced that present in the most interesting and entertaining way scenes from Biblical history, and I wish that I could say as much for the theaters. Historically, the theaters as an institution have never catered to high moral ideals, and the modern theater as an institution is no better."

Dr. Brougher is certainly looking at it in the right way, and we expect many other prominent pastors to look at the picture play in the same light. Now, Mr. Manufacturer, take heed and supply the demand for educational and scenic subjects that are proving to be so popular.

* * * *

We want to congratulate the Imp Company on the fine work done in "From the Bottom of the Sea." This big two reel release was shown at the Optic Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday to capacity house, and then some, for in order to view the films we were compelled to wait in line for a considerable time. Believe us, it was some picture, and when the Imp people give us another one we are all going to stand in line again.

* * * *

The Crystal, Main, between Second and Third streets, has changed hands, and from now on it will be known as the Nestor Theater.

* * * *

Messrs. Hogan and Jensen, of the Isis Theater, pleased their many patrons last week with Itala's "Clio and Phyletes." This picture is receiving much favorable comment.

* * * *

Selig's "Black Beard" was the big attraction at Clune's Fifth and Main streets house last week. As this picture was taken at Redonde Beach., Cal., much interest was manifested in the local scenes.

* * * *

The Salem Congregational Church, at the corner of 28th street and Central avenue, is now using moving pictures every Sunday in connection with the Sunday School work. Educational, scenic, and comic films prove to be most popular.

PHIL WHITMAN.

Temple, Tex.—The opera house here was destroyed by fire at a loss of about $5,000.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING

The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.

Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

"BUFFALO JONES ROPING A GRIZZLY"

Buffalo Jones' Greatest Triumph

ROPING WILD ANIMALS IN AMERICA
(Independent)

CONQUEST OF THE ANIMAL KINGDOM
The Greatest Achievement of the Age

The MOST MARVELOUS of all PICTURES. They make the red blood run cold to see them. NO ONE WILL MISS SEEING THEM EVEN AT $1.00 admission. 1,000 feet. Release date, Jan. 4th, 1912. A pamphlet lecture and most thrilling posters with each reel. Just the thing for good talkers to lecture on. No fake, and cannot be exaggerated by word or posters. Write at once.

Address C. J. JONES
31ST AND BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY
Phone 4100 Madison Square

WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., Dec. 12.—There is an old adage to the effect that one "never misses the water until the well runs dry," and, judging from the frantic manner in which those in charge of the General Film Company's interests in St. Louis are endeavoring to get back the "two per" each week from the house that deserted the cause, and once more line them up for the trust pictures, a striking realization of the truth of the aforementioned adage is seen.

In my last week's letter I stated that there was a house in this city that was thinking seriously of "flopping" to the Independents, and, glory be! The predicted business handspring came. The house in question was the Lyceum. To think that this theater would desert the trust never for a moment entered the minds of the patrons or those interested in moving picture circles. In fact, one might just as well have expected the city and county officials here to occupy the same bed, or Roosevelt to come out and boost Taft as the next President as to expect that the Lyceum would cease to be numbered among the "Old General's" contributors.

But this is the age of strange happenings. With the suffragette movement on, Congress in session and the oil trust disbanded, one can look for almost anything.

The manager I mentioned in my last letter as thinking of putting in the Independent pictures was Eddie Gavrel, and he, of course, presides over the destinies of the Lyceum. Eddie had to come to it. He couldn't get along with his St. Louis exchange. They were continually scrapping; if not over express it was over the payment for posters, and one thing after another happened, so Eddie concluded to call it off. He ordered the Independent pictures.

I met him on Central avenue this week, the day after he got his first run of Independent material.

"Have you seen my pictures?" he asked. "Say, they are the greatest I have ever had in the house. I never knew that the Independents were getting out such a fine line of reels. Come in to see them. Bring 'the lady to the baths,' too, for I want her to see them. They are great, great," and Eddie proceeded to do a Grecian war dance.

"Do you recall the first time I asked you to consider Independent moving pictures?" I asked him.

"I remember it well," he replied.

"You said at that time that you wouldn't have them in your house, didn't you?" I queried.

"Yes, I said that," he answered.

"And I told you then that you didn't know what you were talking about, and you said the Independent pictures were bum, and that the only reason I was boosting them was because I was writing for an Independent trade paper, and I told you that you had bugs in your garret, or words to that effect?"

"We had quite a hot argument about it," admitted Eddie.

"And I reminded you that the time was coming when you would consider it an honor to run Independent pictures and say that they were better than the trust," I repeated.

"Yes, and I told you that you were doing a juggling act with truth and should be in an asylum," laughed Eddie, who scented what was coming.

"Correct! Now, young man, I am going to take great delight in shouting I TOLD YOU SO!" I cried.

"I don't care a d—— what you shout, just so you come see those good Independent pictures," roared Eddie, and then he took it on the run to the telegraph office to wire his exchange his satisfaction and tell them to keep it up.

And, really, Mr. Editor, there isn't very much to tell. I did as Eddie requested, and went to the Lyceum, where I saw the Eclair reel, "Hands Across the Sea," which was a dandy in every sense of the word. There were some features in the same, however, such as Washington's battle on the stairs with the English, very much on the order of the late Kyrle Bellew and James K. Hackett, but it got a great round of applause, so what's the difference. It was a fine series and of great educational value.

The General Film Company is making an effort to get the Lyceum to again take up their service, offering considerable inducement for them to do so, but Eddie tells me that if the Independent exchange will keep up the pace they are going at present there will be nothing doing, as the Independent service looks very good and promising to him. His house continues to do a big business.

The management of the Photo Play Theater also informs me that it is the intention of this house to remain true to the Independent cause, and they are making a great feature of the American reels. I understand, too, that a Mr. Wagner, representing Swanson and Crawford, of St. Louis, was here during the week. I was invited to meet the gentleman, but had a previous engagement which it was impossible for me to break. He brought to Hot Springs the greatest reports of the progress the Independents are making and predicts that within another year the number of Independents throughout the United States will be doubled.

The Princess had one of the best shows of the season here this week, featuring the Five Musical Lassies, an act that made an immense hit. The last half of the week the Killarney Girls played a return engagement, and it was a week of choice harmony.

There was also at the Auditorium, "Excuse Me," which was the musical comedy hit of the season, and "Paid in Full," played by a very good cast, also came here during the week. The latter show, however, did not do the business that the former one did, which, in the vernacular, literally "mopped up."

I have been informed that the Lyric is due to lose two of its valued employees when the new Central Theater opens its doors. They are Carl Hansen, one of the best trap drummers—if not the best—in the South, whose work at the Lyric has made the orchestra feature of that house a great success. "Hansen makes the picture" is a statement that has been made in reference to this young man time and again, and every one seems to realize it, and it is safe to predict that with Carl in the pit of the new theater, which will be a beauty in every sense of the word, the pictures will be doubly appreciated. The other member of the Lyric force, who, I am told, will desert the house of Hale is Patrick Gillan, the operator, who is to a moving picture machine what Hansen is to an orchestra. "Pat" will shortly begin work on wiring the new house, and it will be some job, too, but when it is completed the managers of the new theater will have the satisfaction of knowing that it has been done right. There are no "half-way" methods in the work of these young men

The "lady in the baths" has come to my side with the information that she has just baked a great, big chocolate cake, and she has concluded that this will be about all for this week, so, here's "30" on this week's letter. I love my Moving Picture News, but, oh, you chocolate cake.

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

NOTICE—The Edison patent (Re-issue No. 12,037) relating to motion picture cameras, was re-issued on December 5, 1911, as No. 13,329, to the undersigned. The patent contains the following claims:

1. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; feeding devices engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; and a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

2. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; a continuously-rotating driving-shaft; feeding devices operated by said shaft engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; and a continuously-rotating shutter operated by said shaft for exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

3. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; a continuously-rotating driving-shaft; feeding devices operated by said shaft engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest; and a reel revolved by said shaft with variable speed for winding the film thereon after exposure, substantially as set forth.

4. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; feeding devices engaging such intermediate section of the film and moving the same across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion, said feeding devices comprising means proportioned to cause the devices to so advance the film that its periods of rest shall exceed its periods of motion; and a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

5. An apparatus for taking photographs suitable for the exhibition of objects in motion, having in combination a camera having a single stationary lens; a single sensitized perforated tape-film supported on opposite sides of, and longitudinally movable with respect to, the lens, and having an intermediate section crossing the lens; feeding devices provided with teeth engaging the perforations of such intermediate section of the film and moving it across the lens of the camera at a high rate of speed and with an intermittent motion; and a shutter exposing successive portions of the film during the periods of rest, substantially as set forth.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY.

THE GOLD LUST
American Film Co. Release

GORDON SACKVILLE

Both the Nestor Film Company and Mr. Gordon Sackville are to be congratulated, the former for capturing the services of one of the best motion picture actors, and the latter for having enlisted in the ranks of "The Worth-While Film."

GORDON SACKVILLE

Mr. Sackville, though in the very prime of life, has had a long and successful dramatic experience, having been for many years "character lead" with the late Richard Mansfield, who deemed him worthy of his closest friendship and admired his versatility. Mr. Sackville has also played leading parts with the "Fritzi Scheff Opera Company," Shubert's "Chinese Honeymoon Company," and at the Hippodrome, New York City. As "Mr. Brown" in the original "Buster Brown Company," he made a decided hit. His motion picture experience dates back to 1904, having worked chiefly in the Edison Company. In the Rex initial release, "A Heroine of '76," he was the stately and imposing Washington.

Excelling in character and heavy leads, Mr. Sackville's great versatility enables him to play any role, however difficult it may be. He is a war veteran, having served nine months during the Spanish-American War as first sergeant in Company "H," 47th Regiment Volunteers. He possesses a magnificent physique, and is uncommonly handsome. His strength is so phenomenal that ten able-bodied men completely exhausted themselves in a futile effort to tear him from a couch.

Mr. Sackville, who is now playing leads in the Nestor Company, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Ricketts, will shortly be seen in the Monday release of said company.

ZIGOMAR—Who is he?

They call him the "Raffles" of Europe. He is packing theaters and mystifying audiences everywhere. The Most Sensational Film Ever Produced. STATE RIGHTS MEN—write for prices. EXHIBITORS—write for booking.

THE F & E FILM COMPANY
E. MANDELBAUM, Pres.
710 COLUMBIA BLDG., CLEVELAND, O.

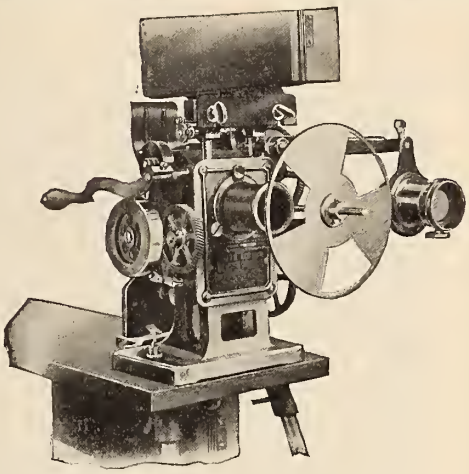
CONTENTMENT IN MORE WAYS THAN ONE

Results from the purchase of a

POWERS CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6

Because you not only know that you have the very best the market affords—that the other fellow can't beat you—but you are also making good with your patrons, giving them full value, and holding their patronage.

POWER'S No. 6 does this all the time. It is the product of fourteen years' experience in the manufacture of moving picture machines and it is the undisputed leader among moving picture machines today.



Solid in construction, perfect in adjustment, noiseless in operation, projecting steady and flickerless pictures, it stands to-day for all that is best in moving picture machine construction. You can have no better advertisement for your theatre than—"WE USE POWER'S NO. 6 CAMERAGRAPH."

Our catalogue D will tell you all about it.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, NEW YORK

For fourteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

"CHRISTMAS PRESENTS" (SOLAX)

The people in Flushing one day crowded around a five and ten-cent store on Main Street and watched with curiosity a burly cop arrest a little girl, for breaking the plate-glass window, because, as she later explained, she couldn't get the nice Christmas things displayed.

The breaking of the glass was her protest to society. The little girl felt that nature had conspired against her. In her little breast there surged a spirit of revolt against existing conditions. The child's story was exploited in the Flushing and the Brooklyn papers.

The Solax scenario editor got on the job. He worked up a story around the incident and the child. The result is a Christmas story with Santa Claus hovering over the characters and instilling them with a new faith and love for humanity.

The sacred character of the story makes it a fine Sunday release. In fact the Solax Company thought so much of it, that it decided to make "Christmas Presents" its first release on the three-a-week program. The public will have an opportunity to see it for the first time Sunday, December 24.

The story revolves about a widow who is "up against it," and her little child, who suffers quietly the restrictions of poverty. The mother gets into trouble because of the mistakes of others. She is befriended by a police sergeant.

Her little daughter, like more little girls, wanders off to see the big Christmas displays in the shop windows. While gazing with hungry and envious eyes upon dolls and houses and toys, she makes the acquaintance of a benevolent woman of wealth. This woman is moved by the child's longing glances and so buys for her a big French doll.

The plot is complicated by a dull-headed policeman who arrests the child, but it all turns out happily at the widow's humble home on Christmas eve, for Santa Claus is the harbinger of hope and love, besides material gifts.

"GET A REP BERNIE" SUCCESSFUL ON WESTERN TRIP

Mr. Isadore Bernstein, or "Get a Rep Bernie," as he is now called by some of his friends, is living up to his usual record of "hustler." On his recent trip every exchange visited by him placed an order for the "Rep" films. This looks good, and is significant of a future for the Republic Film Company. The much-talked of "Before Yorktown" shown before the exchanges, has been pronounced one of the finest pictures of its kind ever seen. The type of man used as Washington has called forth much comment by those who have had the privelege of seeing this splendid film. It is said that the likeness of the actor to the great Washington, that is, of course, after the make-up artist had performed a few artistic twists of the wrist, is very striking. This man is 6 feet 2½ inches tall.

The "Reps" are coming to the front without a doubt, and the responsible heads of the Republic Company are a hustling, bustling crowd.

ZIGOMAR—Who is he?

They call him the "Raffles" of Europe. He is packing theaters and mystifying audiences everywhere. The Most Sensational Film Ever Produced. STATE RIGHTS MEN—write for prices. EXHIBITORS—write for booking.

THE F & E FILM COMPANY

E. MANDELBAUM, Pres.

710 COLUMBIA BLDG., CLEVELAND, O.

SCENE FROM "COUNCIL OF SIX NATIONS."—REPUBLIC FILM CO.

HAVE YOUR

POSTERS MOUNTED

IN

POSTER STYLE

They are mounted on muslin and Tacked on Roller and Moulding. Hundreds of Thousands of similar Paper Sheets have been mounted in this way. Some call it Roller or Map Style, as they hang on wall.

Poster, Show Card and Map Mounter

E. C. BRIDGMAN
86 Warren St., New York City

CINES CO.
OF ROME

ITALIAN-TURKISH WAR
No. 3

THE THIRD SERIES, CONTAINING A GREAT MANY EXCITING INCIDENTS WILL BE RELEASED SHORTLY. SEND FOR SYNOPSIS.

445 BROOME ST.
NEW YORK

Telegraphs, Cines New York Telephone, Spring 9232

25c IN STAMPS GIVES YOU ONE COPY OF

HALLBERG'S

1912 MOTION PICTURE CATALOGUE AND REFERENCE BOOK

Special Jobber of

EDISON
POWERS
MOTIOGRAPH

Moving Picture Machines

The "Hallberg Economizer"

Used in connection with any of the above moving picture machines, produces the finest results on your screen that money can buy.

I Equip Theatres Completely

And carry in stock only the highest grade goods required for your theater.

Free catalogues, circulars and pamphlets furnished of individual items you require.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Free Catalogue No. 2.

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

FILMS that will BRING back LOST TRADE. A little higher in price but twice as good.

Look at these prices.

2000 ft.—6 times a week.....$14.00
2000 ft.—7 times a week..... 15.00
3000 ft.—6 times a week..... 18.00
3000 ft.—7 times a week..... 20.00

Songs and lithographs Free—Express one Way.

SEND FOR LIST.

STOCK ROLL TICKETS—7c per M in lots of 20M or more.

Bargains in Second-Hand Machines—Write Today.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY COMPANY
109 NO. DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

China to the Front

THEATRES

If you wish to draw the crowds order a selection of our new Chinese slides, all from direct photographs. We have over 250 to select from at $4.00 per dozen. High-class coloring. Send for list of this and other subjects. 30,000 slides always in stock.

Riley Optical Instrument Co.
3 EAST 14th ST., NEW YORK CITY

Advertisers want results When writing to them it is our due that you mention The Moving Picture News.

A Profitable Gift for Exhibitors

RELEASED SATURDAY AND SUNDAY, JANUARY 6th & 7th
In the Days of the

SIX NATIONS

HISTORICAL, EDUCATIONAL, ENTRANCING.

A beautiful romance woven into this pictorial version of the greatest event in Indian History.

"GET A REP" for the New Year

Dec. 23 and 24, BEFORE YORKTOWN
Dec. 30 and 31, PRIDE OF LEXINGTON

REPUBLIC FILM CO., 145 W. 45th St., NEW YORK

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

SHE

Thanhouser Release, December 26

Part One

The first scene shows us the outer court of the temple in Egypt, in the year 350 B. C. Here Amenartas, Pharaoh's daughter, waits to meet her love, Kallikrates (the strong and beautiful). He has just taken the vows, becoming a Priest of Isis. She urges him to renounce these vows and flee with her from Egypt.

We next see them during the sacrificial ceremony in the temple. The young priest goes about his sacred office constantly feeling the eyes of the woman he loves upon him. At the close of the ceremony he can resist her appeal no longer and they make their escape.

They fly through the city.

They leave the city behind them and on the desert meet some friendly Arabs. The young priest is weak from fasting, and his wife secures for him the camel owned by an Arab chief so that they may continue their journey.

On camel back they journey through the desert.

They thank their Arab friends, leave them, and on foot make their way to the water's edge.

After traveling "twice twelve moons" they land, with their infant son, on the coast of Africa, near a rocky eminence, known from its peculiar shape as the Negro's Head. They traverse up the river near this rock, in search of a sheltered spot to camp.

In her cave in the hollow mountain, "She," the white witch of Africa, who has learned the secret of eternal youth, sees the approach of the Egyptian by her magic power. "She" determines that he is the perfect man, that "She" will have him bathe with her in the fires of eternal youth, and together they will rule the world. "She" summons him.

In his camp in the desert the messengers of "She" find Kallikrates, his wife and child, and bring them before "She."

"She" shows the Egyptian the fires of eternal youth and offers him her love, but when he remains true to the love of his wife, "She" strikes him dead. His wife, Amenartas, escapes with her child.

At the river bank the wife embarks with her child whom she calls Tisisthanes (the avenger). She swears that this child shall return and avenge his father's death, or if not he, his male descendants.

Over the smouldering fires of eternal strife, "She" tries in vain to restore the vital spark to the body of the man she loved.

Unable to give her loved one life "She" has his body mummified by a marvelous process which makes him look as though he did but sleep. Besides her dead love "She" weeps and prays, that though "She" cannot restore him to life, some day, though it be in the remote centuries to come, her love will be reincarnated, and return to claim her.

Part Two

We now see a room in England in the year 1885 A. D. Holly, an Englishman, whose face is so ugly that it has won him the appellation of "the monster," receives, by the will of his friend, the fortunes and custody of that friend's son, Leo Vincent. This child is the direct descendant of the Priest of Isis whom "She" destroyed centuries before. With the child is sent a letter of instructions and an antique chest. The letter explains that Leo is to open the chest on his twenty-fifth birthday and follow the instructions it contains.

Through the ages "She" waits beside the body of her dead love, still praying for his reincarnation and return.

On his twenty-fifth birthday, Leo opens the chest and finds in it the story of his ancient ancestor and the information that although many men of his family had spent their lives in seeking "She," none of them had ever found her. Leo also finds instructions to carry on the work, to seek "She," learn her secret of eternal youth, and then destroy her. Leo determines to set out on the mission.

Leo and his guardian, Holly, approach the shores of Africa and note the strange rock, Negro's Head.

"She," in her cave, sees in a vision, Leo approaching. He strongly resembles his ancient ancestor, and "She" firmly believes he is the reincarnation of her ancient lover. "She" sends for him.

Through rocky caverns Leo's boat glides up the river toward the hollow mountain.

At an ancient landing place, now fallen into ruins, Leo's boat is stopped by a tribe of natives, who pay allegiance to "She-Who-Must-Be-Obeyed."

They blindfold Leo and Holly and lead them to the cave of "She."

"She" welcomes Leo as her lost love. He tells her he has come to destroy her, to avenge the death of his ancestor. "She" gives him the knife from her own girdle and, baring her bosom, bids him strike. Before her unveiled beauty, Leo is powerless to destroy her. "She" then bids them follow her and leads them through a strange passage.

In a rocky cavern "She" shows Leo the mummy of his ancient ancestor, and so like is it to the young Englishman that he feels he is gazing upon himself. "She" then destroys the mummy as she feels she has found her living love.

"She" leads Holly and Leo over a rocky precipice to the cave containing the "fires of eternal youth." "She" begs Leo to step into the flame so that he, too, will never die. Leo fears to take the step. To encourage him "She" steps first into the flames. The quality of the fire has changed in the centuries since "She" last bathed in them. "She" suddenly shrivels up before the eyes of the astonished men. "She" grows suddenly old, until she resembles an ape. With outstretched arms, and a cry to Leo not to forget her, "She" dies.

Holly and Leo, half-crazed with the terrible sight they have witnessed, find their way back to the native village. They are directed, by an overland route, as to how they can leave the country and they do so.

Safely returned to England, Leo, whose golden hair has been turned white from his horrible experiences, destroys all records of "She," the mysterious. His family has been avenged.

THE EXPERT'S REPORT

Thanhouser Release, December 29

The president of a great oil company hires a noted expert to investigate certain lands in a nearby town. The president knows the expert by reputation only, but his standing is high, and he is vouched for by one of the heavy stockholders.

The expert accepts the commission, and visits the town. There he meets a widow, with two daughters, who owns a farm which she has heretofore regarded as of trifling value. But the young man brings joy to the family by telling them, after his inspection, that their land is undoubtedly oil property, and worth a fortune.

A neighbor of the widow's has tried to curry favor with the expert, hoping thereby to sell his father's property, but the man from the city, while he willingly inspects the property, declares that it is worthless.

When the expert, his work completed, starts toward the railroad station, en route to the city, he again meets the son of the landowner, who asks for a final hearing. In the villager's rude shack they talk the matter over. They quarrel and finally come to blows.

Late that night a man, bound hand and foot, is thrown into a dried-up well. In the morning the president of the oil company again meets his expert, who declares that the widow's property is valueless, but that the land of the surly neighbor is a wonderful site.

Aroused to enthusiasm by his expert's report, the president goes post-haste to the village, accompanied by his employee. There he meets the aged landowner and after much dickering they agree upon a price.

In the meantime, the widow's two daughters, while wandering through the countryside, hear cries for help and locate the man in the well. Alone and unaided they rescue him. The story he tells causes them to hasten with him to the shack, where he tells the president of the oil company of his experiences. The result is that a carefully planned plot is blocked at the very moment that it seemed certain of success.

THE GOLD LUST

American Release, December 21

The sheriff's daughter learns to love Jack Caxton, but her father is very much displeased, as he wishes her to marry his young foreman. The daughter feels an instinctive dislike for the foreman, but her father is insistent. Apparently respectable, the foreman has companions who are reckless and willing to do his bidding. Learning that a large consignment of money is at the bank, the foreman visits the saloon in search of his pals and finding one of them, urges him to rob the bank. In effecting the holdup, the cashier puts up such a strong resistance that he is killed. A cowboy riding by notifies the sheriff, and taking the treacherous foreman with him, he starts on the trail of the bank robber. He sends the cowboys in search in another direction. Coming up with the robber, a brisk fight ensues and he is killed and the gold recovered.

Knowing that the sheriff's daughter scorns him, and the lust for gold overcoming him, the foreman shoots the sheriff and steals the gold. He returns to the sheriff's house and tells the daughter that her father was wounded by the robber and had sent for her, his plan being to kidnap her and leave the country with the girl and the gold. Jack Caxton comes upon the sheriff and learns the truth. The sheriff dies and the posse, coming up, imagine he is guilty of murder. He calls their attention to the approaching figures of the foreman and the sheriff's daughter. They hastily conceal themselves and hear the foreman map out his plans to the frightened girl. He is overpowered and led away by the posse and Caxton remains to comfort his grieving sweetheart.

BONITA OF EL CAJON

American Release, December 28

Bonita was the daughter of the leader of a gang of outlaws. She had never known female companionship and had grown up in her father's camp of lawless, reckless men as free as the birds in her mountain ranges.

One day her father's lieutenant ventured down the mountain and finding a beautiful girl outside her home attempted to kiss her. Freeing herself, she secured a gun from the house and returned to find her assailant gone. When her lover, Jack Dickson, of the rangers, called she told him of the outlaw's attack and he departed into the mountains to locate and punish her assailant.

Reconnoitering in the mountains, Jack meets Bonita and the care-free, happy girl is deeply impressed with the handsome ranger. Their meeting is observed by the lieutenant and he informs Bonita's father. When Bonita returns, she is told that when she sees the ranger again she must decoy him into camp, as he is dangerous. But Bonita, instead, warns the ranger of the outlaw's intentions. He departs to bring his posse and Bonita, loyal to her father, returns with a warning of the rangers' contemplated raid. They break camp, and while the rangers are searching for them the outlaws arrive at the home of the ranger's sweetheart, for the lieutenant has determined to make the plucky girl his wife and also to use her as a club to hold off the attack on their camp. She is turned over to the care of Bonita and the mountain-bred girl is full of wonder when she sees the beauty and grace of her charge. She attempts to imitate her grace and manner. She sees a locket around the captive's neck and examines it curiously. She accidently touches the spring and the locket opens disclosing the handsome, smiling face of the ranger. She asks her captive who he is and learns that the ranger is engaged to her. Bonita is full of jealous fury, but at last her passion subsides and she determines to rescue the girl for the ranger. This she accomplishes by exchanging places with the captive and sends her to her lover down the mountains.

The ranger's sweetheart shows him the way back to the outlaws' camp. The old outlaw, surprised by the sudden attack, points his gun at his daughter, thinking she is the captive girl, and warns the rangers that he will kill her instantly if they come nearer. Bonita turns and laughs at her father. He attempts to shoot the ranger, but Bonita, divining his intentions, throws herself in front of the ranger and receives the bullet intended for the man she had learned to love. The ranger's gun barks in return and the old outlaw joins his daughter in the Great Beyond. The ranger's posse takes care of the other outlaws while the ranger and his sweetheart kneel beside the body of little Bonita of El Cajon.

THE DUEL OF CANDLES

American Release, December 25

The widow's daughter has two suitors, one a poor prospector and the other apparently a prosperous ranchman, but in reality the leader of a gang of horse thieves. The horse thief, smooth and diplomatic, wins the widow's favor by bringing her gifts and buying the produce of her garden. But honest love will not be denied and the girl gives her heart to the poor prospector and the mother at last gives a reluctant consent. The horse thief, learning that she is betrothed to his rival, plans to kidnap the prospector and make the girl believe that he had trifled with her love. He captures the prospector at work, and his gang carries the struggling man to the horse thief's camp.

The horse thief writes a letter telling the girl that he has struck pay dirt and is going East to marry a former sweetheart, and then forges the prospector's name to it. He delivers the note to the girl's mother and pressure is brought to bear on the grief-stricken girl. Believing her lover is faithless, she is persuaded to marry the horse thief. The prospector, in the horse thief's camp, befriends the camp cook and the first opportunity that presents itself the old man liberates his benefactor and later pays the penalty of his life for allowing the prospector to escape. The prospector hurries to his sweetheart's home to learn that she is wedded to his enemy.

Half-crazed with grief, he goes to her new home and finds her alone. The unhappy wife begs him to take her away, but he points out to her that she is the legal wife of his enemy. They hear the husband returning and the prospector draws the gun given him by the camp cook. He denounces the horse thief, who pleads for a chance for his life. He agrees to give him a chance and bids the wife to leave the room. Pointing to an unlighted candle in the room, he tells the horse thief to bring it and light it beside the other candle on the table. Each has a candle, and the one that burns out first must die by his own hand. They swear it on the Bible and then sit down to watch the decree of fate. Outside the door, the wife waits in an agony of suspense.

At last the husband's candle goes out and with a sob of despair, he arises and places the muzzle of his gun to his temple. Then his treacherous nature asserts itself and he wheels and attempts to murder the victor. In a desperate struggle, the horse thief's gun goes off and he falls mortally wounded. The wife screams in terror and rushing in, she finds that fate has liberated her from a distasteful union.

A PAIR OF GLOVES

Imp Release, December 23

The average young woman is very suspicious when she finds her husband in possession of some strange articles of feminine apparel. A married man cannot be too careful to avoid carrying something in his clothes which belongs to a lady other than his wife.

A pair of ladies' gloves was found in Jim Robertson's overcoat by that lively young man's pretty little wife. Of course they belong to the "other lady," or "some other lady." Anyhow they didn't belong to Jim's wife, who, jumping to a naturally feminine conclusion that Jim was playing double, rushed home to her parents for consolation. Then the trouble starts for poor Jim. It is ultimately shown that the offending pair of gloves were placed in hubby's pocket by mistake, but not before there has been much unhappiness of the comedy kind.

The complications and cross-play give the Imp comedians an opportunity for some smart acting of the humorous kind which always please a moving picture audience. On the same reel is

NIAGARA FALLS CELEBRATION

The presence of some Canadian soldiers on United States soil at a recent Niagara celebration, is one of the many features shown in the film that preceded the descent of the falls in a barrel by the intrepid Leach. The district was en fete.

We see Leach preparing to enter the barrel. Then we trace the progress of the tiny vessel through the rapids and whirlpool. Finally he is seen coming out of the barrel. Incidentally an airship joins in the celebration, and at the conclusion of Leach's feat a flock of carrier pigeons is let loose.

There are views of the "Maid of the Mist" under the falls, and of the bridge with a train at rest upon it, above the falls. The picture gives some vivid representations of the tumultuous waters, and Leach's progress is clearly traced through them.

ON THE STROKE OF THREE
Imp Release, Dec. 25

At the crisis of a life, Joe Perkins was confronted by a grave problem. Forgery would save the girl he loved, as well as her father, from ruin. Should he take the risk?

He had led a foolish and vicious life in his earlier days. Farmer White gave him a job, and there was his opportunity to make good under new conditions. And Joe did make good. What was more to the point, Joe fell in love with Agnes, old White's daughter, and Agnes fell in love with Joe.

Then came the crisis. Farmer White went to town on business. While he was away news reached Joe that there was a run on the local bank. All Farmer White's money was there—$12,000. Joe had been a forger. Should he go back to his old game, forge a check, get the $12,000 out of the bank and save Farmer White and his daughter? He took the risk, wrote out the check, and got the money from the bank on the stroke of three.

Up in New York, Farmer White read the news of the crash. Going home, as he thought, a ruined man, he was confronted by Joe, who confessed all; was forgiven; was united to the girl he loved.

Joe had taken a risk which saved three people from misery and injured nobody.

THE PORTRAIT
Imp Release, December 28

While painting the demure little model, Vera, who sat to him day after day, Reginald Spencer was unconscious of the fact that she was falling very deeply in love with him. When her day's work was done and she returned to her room, her greatest happiness was to think of the handsome young artist in whose presence she always took such deep but concealed delight.

Success comes Reginald's way and he has a commission to paint the portrait of a handsome society girl. Between the artist and this lady something like affection springs up and poor little Vera finds herself out in the cold. But with feminine intuition she is not long in discovering that she has a rival, whom she identifies with the original of the portrait that Spencer is lavishing so much time on.

There is to be a private view of the portrait in the artist's studio. The society girl, her mother and several friends arrive, only to discover, when Spencer draws aside the curtain, concealing the masterpiece from view, that it has been hacked and cut out of all recognition. Of course, the society people desert him on this terrible catastrophe and he is left in the depths of misery.

Poor little Vera creeps in to confess that she was guilty of the destruction of the picture and avows love for him as her reason for it. Spencer repulses the girl, and off she goes in her despair to commit suicide. In the nick of time Spencer appears to prevent her mad act and realizing how much she loves him and he loves her, a happy ending is assured.

BONNIE OF THE HILLS
Champion Release, December 25

Bonnie is alone in the world—but a short while before her dear old daddy was put away beneath the sod. She is tenderly patting the grave and caressing the headstone, when there come on the scene two Eastern hunters, as their dress testify. The elder of the two is exhausted, and the younger man, who is the son, makes known their predicament to the huntress, who invites them to her shack.

Straightaway the two young people fall in love, but the boy's father will have none of it. Such nonsense! And the girl, possessing a high-strung vanity, can never give her heart when the covering is so uncouth; and so they part, not, however, without an understanding. Around the girl's neck the Eastern lad places a gold locket, given him by his sweet little sister, and which contains his sister's photo and his own.

Now Bonnie had a staked claim that her father left her, and nobody knew of it. So one day she started East for a certain young ladies' academy, conducted by a Miss Argyle. Can you imagine how the girls guyed the new applicant? But money talks, and when the principal saw the heap of money our heroine carried, there was no question about the cordiality of her reception. Time wore on. A young girl came to the school for whom Bonnie formed a deep attachment. And it so chanced that this was the sister of the man Bonnie loved, and whose locket she was wearing.

Bonnie was now a polished young lady. But she had not forgotten her Western education, or rather her "bringing up." But now for the sequel. Bonnie and her chum were out riding one day when who should chance along but her companion's father and brother. An introduction followed, but there was no recognition on either side. However, they drove on in their auto. At a loney spot in the road two highwaymen surprised them and they were forced to alight.

As her sweetheart's father stepped from the machine Bonnie noticed that his coat pocket held a trusty gun. In an instant she turned the tables on the outwitted outlaws; up went their hands, and as prisoners they entered the machine and were driven to police headquarters. A few hours later the little chum was explaining to her mother Bonnie's part in the adventure. Then father and son came in from the station, and lo! and behold! they recognized in our heroine the lovely young huntress who had befriended them. At the time of the auto drive Bonnie had worn a veil, and therefore they had not known her. But now, however, the young couple embraced to their hearts' desire, to the keen satisfaction of all.

THE DOCTOR'S CLOSE CALL
Champion Release, December 27

The young doctor, who is run down in his health through his devotion to his profession, gains our sympathy, not only because he is really one of those likable sort of fellows, but more especially on account of the girl who has given him her whole heart. There can be no mistaking the profundity of her passion for the young medical man, and when she realizes that the parting must come her grief is pitiable to behold. "The whole world loves a lover." No wonder, then, that we become interested in what follows.

In the West the young doctor is soon on the high road to recovery. Out in the wilds he does a service to a young rustler who has been injured, and, like the good Samaritan, he asks no questions of his patient, but simply ministered to the ailment, thus winning the gratitude of the band. They constrained him to stay among them for a while, which he did, not knowing their true status. But one fine day they were attacked by cowboys, and the doctor, of course, had to pitch in and do his share of the gun-work. With two others he was captured, and then he saw that he had been among horse thieves.

It wasn't long before he and his comrades were threatened with hanging, when their captors decorated them with a hempen tie. It seemed to be "all up" with the doctor. But that faithful little girl back East had been watching daily for his return. Her fidelity is rewarded. A morning paper described the capture of the rustlers, giving their photos, and one of which bore the likeness of her heart's desire, the young doctor.

She got her father on the phone immediately—he was a Senator—and soon he made his influence felt at Washington, getting an order from the Secretary of War to put the town where the arrest was made under martial law—and thus, in the very nick of time, when the doctor and his two companions were about to swing, they were saved by the Government troops.

The Senator and his daughter at once made for the town, and upon their arrival the Eastern lassie became the recipient of one of the biggest bear hugs she had ever experienced—for the young doctor had become a veritable Hercules, his strength being fully restored.

FREE
CHRISTMAS DINNERS
FOR 300,000
POOR PEOPLE
Will be supplied by
The Salvation Army
Throughout the United States
Will you help by sending a donation, no matter how small
TO COMMANDER
MISS BOOTH

118 W. 14th Street, New York City
Western States, Commissioner Estill, 669 S. State St., Chicago

THE LOVE CHASE

Nestor Release, December 18

Wealthy George Balker has two ailments, a gouty foot and a lovely daughter. The gout keeps him from taking active part in the doings of Daisy, the daughter, who persists to disobey and displease papa for the love of handsome Walter Coxsey. Joe, the faithful valet, however, is ever vigilant, and proves to be no small stumbling block in the tortuous path of true love.

Walter, with the aid of many disguises, succeeds in taking Daisy away from home, and, although the alert Joe and gouty George promptly give chase, the lovers lead from start to finish. The most strenuous efforts of the valet are made null and void. The gout necessitates slow going for the pursuers, while the pursued ones fly because "love lends wings."

After a most eventful and exciting chase the modest office of Hiram Bassell, justice of the peace, is invaded. The good old judge needs the money, and, in a twinkling, Daisy ceases to be a Balker and is transformed into Mrs. Coxsey. Papa Balker, semi-supported and quasi-pushed by Joe, arrives on the scene, and balks for all he's worth. While the parental storm is at its height, the gouty foot makes a kick at Walter, who sidesteps quite scientifically, causing the gout to commit suicide by colliding with a solid object. Ouch! and again, ouch! Then papa straightens up and a beatific smile spreads over his face. Unaided, he walks nimbly over to his son-in-law and fervently grasps his hand.

THE NEW RANCH OWNER

Nestor Release, December 20

The announcement that Sir Henry Arling, the new owner of Circle X ranch, intended to raise sheep instead of cattle, had excited much unfavorable comment among the cattle raisers of that section, especially as Foreman Raymond's generous offer to buy the place had been met with a curt refusal from the Englishman. This, however, did not one whit dismay the ambitious Mrs. Raymond. If his lordship sold the ranch to her husband and Ned Arnold, Louise might marry the young man and settle down, but if Sir Henry came over to take possession of his property, her daughter should be Lady Arling.

It was thus that matters stood when Lew Marks read in the town's weekly paper that the new owner would arrive the following day. Here was a chance to make a neat little sum. Except in his disguise, he had never been seen, so what would be easier than to waylay Sir Henry, secure his papers, pose as the Englishman, sell the ranch and disappear. Hurrying to their secluded shack, Marks informed his partner of the plan, and the two men were soon on their way to select a lonely spot where it would be safe to tie their prisoner until they had disposed of the property.

The outlaw would have suddenly changed his mind, could he have at that moment observed the tar and feathers that the boys of Circle X ranch, headed by Ned Arnold, were preparing for the young Englishman. But ignorant of all this, Marks carried out his original plans, and was soon in the buckboard which Foreman Raymond had sent to the hotel to convey Sir Henry to his new home. But ere they reached the ranch, the boys, all masked, surrounded the buckboard, and not only tarred and feathered the astonished outlaw, but putting a rope around his waist, compelled him to keep up to their horses' pace. Fortunately for the Englishman, in taking a short cut, they discovered his lordship, and in the confusion, Marks managed to get away. Sir Henry gladdened their hearts by insisting upon instantly returning to the railroad station, while he quickly dispatched a note to John Raymond, stating that the foreman might have the ranch at his own figure.

DESPERATE DESMOND FOILED BY CLAUDE ECLAIRE

Nestor Release, December 23

Rosamond and Claude are having a delightful time out on the lake; the girl is being initiated into the mysteries of piscatorial art. Alas! Desperate Desmond spies them. Aided by his faithful Gomgotz and other wild men, he boards a "moving" islet and quickly succeeds in separating the lovers. While he takes "the female of the species" in one direction, the man-eaters drag Claude toward a large boiling pot, which is cheated of its intended victim by the miraculous appearance of some bird hunters.

The villain and the hapless heroine reach the ship in safety. Bound and gagged, Rosamond is hidden in one of the lifeboats and Desmond proceeds to do the stowaway stunt by concealing himself in the interior of a barrel.

With the aid of a powerful field glass, Claude sees the situation and rushes to the wireless station. Marconigrams flash back and forth between ship and station, then captain and crew search for Desmond, whose hiding place is finally discovered through cigarette smoke issuing from the barrel's bunghole. Claude and the hunters join the sailors and force the villain to uncover the whereabouts of Rosamond. Reunited, the lovers are happy again.

This time Desperate Desmond shall not be permitted to escape, and accordingly he is locked into a large safe and thrown overboard. Foiled, but not forever! The heavy safe rapidly descends to the depths of the marine regions and lands upon an immense turtle, startling various sea monsters. Rather proud of its strange load, the turtle ascends to the surface and slowly but surely makes for the penitentiary. Here, a safe-breaker, now breaking stones, opens the safe, and the wicked Desmond is himself again. The dyed-in-the-wool villain again demonstrates that there is some good in the worst of us, by letting the safe-breaker break jail and depart with him on the turtle's back. Rosamond and Claude, beware! Desmond is one of the few who "come back."

THE TIE THAT BINDS

Comet Release, Dec. 25

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wallace are an apparently happy couple. They have a luxuriously furnished home, servants, etc., and an air of bliss and contentment seems to pervade the place. But the pair soon elect to disagree, and through a number of quarrels become eventually estranged. The first tiff occurs at the breakfast table, and it is continued when the question of naming the baby at the christening arises. Hubby has his views anent the matter, and wife has hers. Bitter words follow, and Mr. Wallace departs, vowing he will never see his wife or baby again. The wife tries to persuade him to remain, but her pleadings are all in vain. Two years pass. Mr. Wallace is lonely, and as he takes the picture of his little one he sighs and longs to clasp his child to his heart. Another scene shows the wife with her darling. Baby is playing on the floor. The wife is lonely for her husband. She looks at his picture in a locket which she wears around her neck, removes it and hangs it around her child's neck. Baby soon falls asleep and the mother then gently tucks it into a small wicker basket, attaches a tag on which is written, "Open immediately and feed," and carries her precious burden to her husband's apartments. Mr. Wallace is out and the wife hides behind a pair of portieres awaiting developments. Soon Mr. Wallace returns, and seeing the basket and note, expresses surprise. He opens the basket, and discovering the locket and his picture realizes that the little charge before him is his own son. His joy is unbounded, and clutching his offspring again to his heart unconsciously calls for the mother. Of course, the wife appears, and there is an immediate reconciliation.

THE CRUDE MISS PRUDE

Comet Release, Dec. 29

Miss Priscilla Prude is a resourceful old maid. She decides upon matrimony, and is inclined to believe that her chances of capturing a husband will be enhanced if she has a chaperone. She engages Pansy Blossom, a very pretty young woman. Hullie Baxter calls on Miss Prude, but when he sees Pansy he forthwith transfers his affections to Pansy and elopes with her.

Professor Studly is the next caller. Priscilla has hired another chaperone. She is Miss Bookstorm, a plain and unattractive female. Miss Bookstorm and the professor get to discussing things, and find that their ideals are in common with each other. Priscilla is bored and falls asleep. The professor and Miss Bookstorm then make violent love to each other. When Priscilla wakes and sees the pair in fond embrace she orders them out of the house.

The last chaperone engaged is Mrs. McInscare. The latter has nothing in the way of looks to recommend her. In fact, she is extremely homely and repulsive looking. Mr. Popaway calls, and when he sees Mrs. McInscare he leaves the premises without word or warning. This is the final straw. She must get a husband at all hazards. "I know what I will do," she ruminates. "I'll hire out myself as a chaperone, and see what luck I'll have. Then to the same agency she makes her way. Then she tells the boss of the establishment that she wants a job as chaperone.

May Jones engages her. Johnny Wilson calls on May, and when Miss Prude sees Johnny kiss May's hand, Priscilla is so shocked at the impropriety of the procedure that she admonishes May and sends her to her room. Left all alone with Johnny, Priscilla proposes to him. She artfully convinces Johnny that young girls as a rule are a frivolous lot, and that if he wants a wife why not take one who knows how to conduct herself properly. Johnny agrees to her way of thinking and Priscilla eventually wins him for a husband.

THE ACTRESS

Majestic Release, Dec. 24

It is the last rehearsal of the new play, upon whose success depends the fortunes of John Millroy—a season's profitable work for the artists of the company—the prosperity of the theater and its employees, and last, but not at all least, the reputation of the star, winsome Ellen Duran.

Ellen Duran has at last succeeded in securing a part that gives to the full, opportunity for displaying all the dainty graces and coquetries of a maiden charming enough to win the hearts of an audience as well as those of the actors playing opposite her. The company has rehearsed almost up to the hour of the opening of the play, and the manager has sent out for refreshments in order that the almost exhausted people may not be required to leave the theater for the little time left before the fateful call of half hour which must find them all in their dressing rooms.

Ellen, however, refuses the food offered her by her maid, and after an anxious moment over the phone, runs to the manager and tells him she must go to her home at once. Her child, a little girl of six, is critically ill at home with pneumonia, and she has just received word that the little one is much worse. Millroy places his car at her disposal, and she hurries home to find the state of affairs even more alarming than she had anticipated. The baby's little feet are straying perilously close to the river, which all must cross, and while her mother has been bravely at work perfecting the little tricks which shall that night win a thousand hearts to laughter—little arms have reached out vainly for the mother that hungered to be there to comfort.

The doctor's words are not needed to tell her of her child's condition and the mother's heart is lashed by remorse at the baby's cry, "Mamma—mamma—I want my mamma."

The tears come to the manager's eyes, but he turns to the sobbing little woman, and silently shows her the time. She looks up at him in agony—that hard little tick of the watch is calling to her—shouting to her—her duty to that public which is now snuggling complacently over good dinners discussing its prospective pleasure in the evening's entertainment she will afford.

Let the watch tick its grim reminder, let it shout a command—that little child's feeble cry tops and drowns all else, and the mother, no longer the actress, refuses to leave her child. The manager flies back to the theater, but a vain hope that somebody else may be able to play her part is soon crushed. He looks at the stricken company, a short time before alive with joy and anticipation. He hears the growls of the impatient first night audience—he has broken faith with them—he sees a thousand thumbs pointing down—he looks into the white faces of the stage manager and the leading man and knows their thought—she must play the part.

The mother is torn from her child, and out of the house goes a woman with baby cries ringing in her ears, and before her eyes an ever present vision of baby arms reaching out vainly for their mother—reaching out feebly and then still more feebly until——

Into her dressing room flies the actress, and all through that terrible night a dainty little ingenue makes men and women chuckle with laughter that even after her exit comes dully but audibly to her ears, as with white lips and staring eyes she stands at the telephone demanding news of her child—news that is never of a nature to give one moment's peace to that racked mother soul.

There comes a time when physician and nurse engaged to their utmost in administering oxygen to the baby cannot answer that desperate phone call, and the actress is fairly carried to the wing fighting to retain possession of that slender connecting wire. Her cue comes, she darts in the entrance door and appears upon the stage a mischievous, pouting, laughingly alluring bit of femininity, that causes an old gentleman in the audience to nudge his neighbor with the remark "she is the true spirit of joyous and as yet unhurt youth."

The play ends, and only kept on her feet by the desire to reach her child's bedside the actress is taken to her home. There is a terrible moment in the hall outside of the bedroom door where a weary haggard nurse holds up a warning finger and then the mother flies past her into the room where the tired physician catches her, and in answer points to the child, while a quiet smile of content lightens up his face.

The crisis has safely passed, and too bitter a price has not been paid by the little mother for her obedience to the call of her profession.

THE SIGN OF THE HELMET

Powers Release, Dec. 26

Your little pal who tramps the country for a living has got to have quick wits — either that, or starve; and you never heard of Weary Willy coming to an untimely end by the empty stomach route. He is quick to see any opportunity that may mean acquiring something for nothing, particularly in the food line, but especially in the drink line, and most especially if said drink is of amber hue, with a reasonable amount of foam over the amber. See?

He learns that at a certain saloon the sight of a policeman's helmet showing over the swinging door meant a free drink for the officer, and later, when Willie comes in possession of a helmet he begins to play the trick to a fine point. He even gets his friend, Waggles, in on the good thing. As might not be expected, they do not get the worst of it in the long run, for the little fellow is not only brainy, but muscular as well, and for once in the life of a tie-walker, the common enemy which wears blue and brass buttons is completely vanquished.

On the same reel—

WHERE STEEL MEETS CLOUD

Little do we know of the brawny structural iron workers who battle with death daily in their perilous work of building for man the gigantic skyscrapers that his modern business life demands. Holding tenaciously to a thin rib of steel that hangs hundreds of feet in the air, he braves a horrible death every second of his day's work, high up near the clouds, with frail, narrow planks that defy the most sure-footed, to walk on. On the end of a cable, a monster derrick swings him out, high over the heads of the gaping multitude, a mere speck against the sky.

The Powers camera man almost lost his life in photographing this dare-devil work, to do which most men would not accept a king's ransom.

A MAIL-BAG ROMANCE

Powers Release, Dec. 30

How'd you like to be the girl for whom each mail brings nice things? Jack and Tom carry the mails on the same route, and both are just crazy about Dotty. Tom, with the morning mail, brings her candy, and Jack, with the next mail brings some other dainty favor. But this kind of a seesaw game becomes a little slow for Tom, so he begins to plot to get rid of his rival.

There's nothing more sacred in the charge of the mail carrier than the registered letters that are entrusted to his care, and Tom one day manages to make it appear as if Jack had done away with the valuable contents of one; in fact, the opened envelope is found in Jack's desk, the evidence is strongly incriminating and poor Jack winds up in a felon's cell. Tom convinces Dotty that the charge is true, and wins her heart.

But that does not end matters, for even after years, inexplicable fate will claim her own, and so it comes to pass that when Tom meets with an accident that brings him to his deathbed, the better man in him refuses to meet his Maker with a lie on his lips. So, just before he breathes his last, he tells the story of his own crime that opens the prison doors for Jack.

And Jack captures the widow.

A JAPANESE LOVE STORY

Luxe Release, Dec. 22

Lieutenant Mordaunt and his little sweetheart, Yum, Yum, pass many pleasant hours in the land of the Rising Sun So winning are the ways of the little Japanese maiden, that Jack Tar falls very, very deeply in love with her. When love enters all else is forgotten, and thus, when the time for the departure of the fleet arrives, the lieutenant awakens to find that it was all a dream, and that it is now time to be up and doing and leave his little sweetheart behind him. The fleet returns to port, and Mordaunt goes home to his people. Staying at the house are three of his cousins, who greet him boisterously, for, being female cousins, they look forward to jolly times with the breezy sailor. Mordaunt's thoughts still turn to the land of the Rising Sun and to his little sweetheart far across the ocean. To their great disappointment, the cousins find a great change in their once cheerful playmate. In place of the breezy sailor-man is a poor love-sick swain, who can do naught else but sigh the hours away. The girls find the source of the trouble in the shape of a half-finished letter to Japan, and they decide to have some fun. Arraying themselves in Japanese clothes, they annoy their cousin considerably by appearing before him in the garb he loves so well, only to disappear again into a thicket or behind a tree. Finally, the tormentors are surprised to see their big, manly cousin burst into tears. From that moment Mordaunt becomes more and more melancholy, and in fact his parents begin to entertain grave fears as to his health. Meanwhile, the little Japanese girl beyond the seas has not remained idle. With the energy and enterprise of her race, she has decided to follow her lover beyond the seas After a long and weary voyage, the little Japanese maiden arrives in Europe. Have carefully rehearsed her part beforehand, the winsome Yum Yum finds little difficulty in finding her way to her lover, who is by this time desperately ill. At first Mordaunt does not recognize Yum Yum on account of her European dress, which becomes her so well, but when she again dons the kimono and flaunts her dainty fan the lieutenant recognizes her, and all their troubles are forgotten.

LOCKED IN THE VAULTS

Reliance Release, December 20

RELIANCE.

Robert Tyler, the son of a wealthy broker, marries a stenographer, and is disowned by his father. A baby is born to the young couple and Robert hopes this will soften his father's heart, but his letter is returned unopened. Several years elapse, and the young couple face hard times owing to the loss of Robert's position. Mrs. Tyler resolves to go to work, and in scanning the "Help Wanted" columns sees an ad of Robert's father for a stenographer, and secures the position under her maiden name. One night she is compelled to work late and Robert and the little girl go to the office to call for her. The baby wanders into the vault and is accidentally locked in by Mrs. Tyler. Robert's father is the only one who has the combination, and he calls him up. He is unable to talk to his father, however, for hearing his son's voice the old man promptly hangs up the receiver. In a frenzy, he dashes off to his father's house. The father tries to elude his son, but is grasped by the shoulders and thrown into a chair while the younger man forces him to listen. Horrified, the old man orders his auto and rushes to the office, where the child is released. A reconciliation between father and son is brought about by the child.

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA

Reliance Release, December 23

The surgeon discovers that his wife loves another man, and tries ineffectually to compel her to disclose his identity. They quarrel and he leaves for his office. He is called to an accident case, the patient being unconscious. The doctor finds a letter on the desk from his wife to the man, proving him the mysterious lover. In the first moment of rage the doctor puts away his instruments and starts to leave, but his sense of duty masters and he saves the man's life. When the latter is convalescent the doctor confronts him. The man begs forgiveness and writes a letter to the wife telling her of the nobleness of her husband's character, and saying good-bye forever. The doctor gives the letter to his wife, and she realizes that her infatuation for the other man has been replaced by love for her own husband. On the same reel:

A PAIR OF SHOES

The children of a shoe merchant break their doll, and the father comforts them, arranges the doll's remains in a shoe box and tells them to bury it. A hurried purchaser comes in, quickly buys a pair of shoes, and dashing out grabs the wrong box with the broken doll. Arriving home he finds a telegram from his fiancée saying that she will meet him at the ferry, and that the wedding party will go direct from there to the church. On the ferry the man takes off his old shoes and throws them overboard before opening the box. His surprise can well be imagined when he finds the broken doll. The waiting bride and her family consider that the shoeless bridegroom has insulted them, and giving him a sound beating the bride refuses to marry him.

THE MARTYR

Rex Release, December 21

Dedicated to our mothers.

When the curtains are drawn on Christmas night (or, for that matter, on any other night), when the fire is ablaze and you leave the ruddy glare of the hearth to peep out through the windows upon a frozen world, and perhaps in your warmheartedness give some of your store to a miserable creature passing by—remember your mother! When the Yuletide has elapsed and the joys and festivities of the season are but a memory—include in the memory your mother! For too many of her have only ingratitude and infidelity for their pains and sacrifices. Men, respect the mothers of you, for theirs is the only love that never falters.

It is Christmas, 1880. Mother and father and married brother Ned and his wife and baby and Cleo, the sweetest girl in the family for other reasons then that she is the only one, and the youngest son Bert are all gathered about the festive board. Ned tells his family he has a promising offer to go to England, and with well wishes and fond goodbyes he departs. While the others laugh and chat with the Christmas gaiety of young souls, the mother draws aside and weeps for the loss of her first-born, going away perhaps forever. But the years linger not, and with them go sorrow and pang——

Comes a new Christmas, new joys—and new sorrows. It is 1890. Another bird has tried its wing—Cleo has married. After the dinner she and her husband depart. The younger son, meantime, has gone the way of many others who have faced two paths and selected the wider, and has chosen the down grade and degradation. He leaves the house to join the fast set of whom he is one. He returns home very late, intoxicated. The father has locked the door, intending to keep him out of the house as a punishment. But the little mother stealthily and silently opens the door, and waits long hours for the wayward son's return. So the dreary months go and the weary years speed by and it is Christmas, 1900. The father has crossed the vale that leads into the veiled domains. Mother is living in her daughter's home. Her son-in-law has taken his aged mother to live with them, and looks upon both old women with displeasure. Mother notices and knows, and decides to go her own lone way. With shattered hopes and a broken heart, she leaves. And the years go by. It is Christmas, 1911. Ned has succeeded in making a failure of himself. It is the old tale of sin and vice and the wage they exact. Mother receives a note from him saying that if she does not send enough to pay his fine he will have to go to jail. The last few dollars that stand between her and destitution are sent to the erring youth. . . . Perhaps Ned will never know; if he did perhaps he really would regret it—the aged angel, a martyr to her own mother-love, goes over the hills to the poorhouse!

And when Christmas, 1920, dawns there will be another Sainted Madonna in the Celestial Choir, with a spirit as white as the Christmas snows, ready to bless those who had caused her pain and pang, ready—and eager—to forgive!

Ah, we are blind, blind! Why cannot we see the blessings of a gift until it is snatched from our weak hands? Why can we not appreciate the gift of a great joy before it is lost forever beyond regaining? Why can we not see the light before the darkness enshrouds us! Let us open our eyes!

English Representation

An English firm of exceptional financial standing is open to negotiate for representation of good American maker. Full particulars on application (which will be treated confidentially) to Box 6, London Office of The News, 8 Sherwood St., London, England.

We want all old friends as well as new ones to remember we want your $2.00 per year, or $1.00 for six months subscription.

If you are not satisfied with the results in next three months your money returned.

JUST OFF THE PRESS—THE NEW

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14

By far the best book of comedy material I have ever written. Contents include 20 sure-fire parodies, 11 great monologues, 10 fine acts for two males, 6 acts for male and female, a splendid minstrel first part, an original one-act comedy, also brand-new acts for quartettes and sister teams, besides an almost endless assortment of newest gags, jokes, sidewalk patter, etc., etc.

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14 is sold with the guarantee of being absolutely satisfactory in every way or money instantly refunded. Send orders to

JAMES MADISON
1404 Third Avenue, New York

Data from Manufacturers' List of Releases

MEMBERS OF SALES CO.

AMBROSIO

Feet

Oct. 14—One of Tweedledum's Tricks (Com.)
Oct. 18—The Conversion of St. Anthony....
Oct. 25—Salambo .....
Nov. 1—Judas (Dr.) .....
Nov. 8—Dolly's Doll .....
Nov. 8—Tweedledum's Motor Car.....
Nov. 15—The Convict's Song (Dr.).....
Nov. 22—The Golden Wedding.....
Nov. 29—The Little Duke.....
Dec. 6—Jorio's Daughter .....
Dec. 13—The Marquis of Lantenac.....

AMERICAN

Nov. 20—The Test (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 23—The Master of the Vineyard.....
Nov. 27—Jolly Bill of the Rollicking R.....
Nov. 30—The Sheriff's Sisters.....
Dec. 4—The Angel of Paradise Ranch (Dr.).1000
Dec. 7—The Smoke of the Forty-Five (Dr.).1000
Dec. 11—The Man Hunt (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 14—Santa Catalina, Magic Isle of the Pacific (Scenic and Educational).1000
Dec. 18—The Last Notch (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 21—The Gold Lost.....1000
Dec. 25—The Duel of Candles.....1000
Dec. 28—Bonita of El Cajon.....1000
Jan. 1—A Midwinter Trip to Los Angeles..1000
Jan. 4—The Misadventures of a Claim Agent (Com. Dr.) 1000
Jan. 8—The Winning of La Mesa.....1000
Jan. 11—The Locket (Dr.).....1000
Jan. 15—The Relentless Law (Dr.).....1000

BISON

Oct. 31—The Cattlemen's War.....
Nov. 3—A Young Squaw's Bravery.....
Nov. 7—A Race for a Bride.....
Nov. 10—Wenona's Broken Promise.....
Nov. 14—The Winning of Wonega.....
Nov. 17—The Ranchman's Mother-in-Law (Com. Dr.) .....
Nov. 21—The Broken Trap.....
Nov. 24—White Fawn's Escape.....
Nov. 24—A Bad Man.....
Nov. 28—A Western One-Night Stand.....
Dec. 1—An Easterner's Peril.....
Dec. 5—The Empty Tepee.....
Dec. 8—A Range Romance.....
Dec. 12—Bar Z's New Cook.....
Dec. 15—The Foreman's Courage .....
Dec. 19—Cowgirls' Pranks .....
Dec. 22—An Indian Martyr.....

CHAMPION

Nov. 20—National Guardsmen and Regulars at Fort Riley, Kansas (Top.)... 950
Nov. 22—When the Sheriff Got His Man (Dr.) 950
Nov. 27—The Mother Goose Series (1st Reel) 950
Nov. 29—The Two Browns..... 950
Dec. 4—Yankee Doodle and Our Navy.....
Dec. 6—The Indian Fortune Teller (Dr.).. 950
Dec. 11—A Traitor on the Staff..... 950
Dec. 13—The Saving of Dan..... 950
Dec. 18—The Coward's Flute..... 950
Dec. 20—By the Decree of Fate..... 950
Dec. 25—Bonnie of the Hills..... 950
Dec. 27—The Doctor's Close Call..... 950

COMET

Dec. 1—The Late Mrs. Early (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 4—Billy's Letters (Com.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Dead Canary (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 11—The Ups and Downs of Rafferty (Com.) .....
Dec. 15—Just in Time for Dinner (Dr.)...
Dec. 18—A Game of Bridge (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 22—The Man with the Camera (Dr.).. 985

ECLAIR

Nov. 6—Life Under the Sea (Educational)..
Nov. 13—The Legend of the Eagle (Dr.).... 925
Nov. 21—Hands Across the Sea.....
Nov. 23—Portuguese Centaurs (Mil.)..... 600
Nov. 23—The Automatic Lighter (Com.).... 400
Nov. 28—Miss Masquerader (Com.).....1000
Nov. 30—The Five Daughters of Mr. Durand (Com.) .....
Nov. 30—Gussy's Congratulations (Com.)...
Dec. 5—In Humanity's Cause (Dr.).....
Dec. 7—There Fell a Flower (Com.)..... 660
Dec. 7—Manners and Traditions of Piemont (Edu.) 600
Dec. 12—The Musician's Daughter.....
Dec. 14—Her One Day's Dream.....

GREAT NORTHERN

Oct. 7—Barcelona (Scenic) .....
Oct. 14—Secret of the Underground Passage (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—His Fidelity Investigated (Com.)..
Oct. 28—The Vicissitudes of Fate (Dr.)....
Nov. 4—The Actor as Soldier (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Woman's Wit (Com.).....
Nov. 18—A Rendezvous in Hyde Park (Com. Dr.) .....
Nov. 18—High Scotland (Scenic).....
Nov. 25—The Theft of Mona Lisa (Com.)..
Dec. 2—The Penalty of Her Ambition (Dr.)
Dec. 9—Buttons and Hooks (Com.).....
Dec. 9—Winter in Switzerland (Scenic)...
Dec. 16—His First Monocle (Com.).....
Dec. 16—Greece .....
Dec. 23—The Twins (Com.).....
Dec. 23—From Ostersund to Storlien.....

IMP

Oct. 12—The Better Way.....
Oct. 16—Uncle Pete's Ruse.....
Oct. 19—The Aggressor .....
Oct. 23—The Biting Business.....
Oct. 26—The Waif .....
Oct. 30—His Dress Shirt.....
Oct. 30—A Few Minutes with Steeplejack Lindholm .....
Nov. 2—King, the Detective.....
Nov. 6—Waiting at the Church (Com.)...1000
Nov. 9—The Wife's Awakening (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 13—The Fallin' Out.....
Nov. 16—Breaking the Seventh Commandment
Nov. 20—From the Bottom of the Sea.....
Nov. 23—Executive Clemency .....
Nov. 27—Uncle's Visit .....
Nov. 30—Over the Hills.....
Dec. 2—Percy the Masher (Com.)..... 750
Dec. 2—President Taft Dedicating the Naval Training Station at Chicago, Ill. 350
Dec. 4—The Dumb Messenger (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 7—Tony and the Stork.....1000
Dec. 9—Her Birthday (Com. Dr.)..... 750
Dec. 9—Columbia Interscholastic Chase.... 350
Dec. 11—Why the Check was Good (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 14—The Little Stocking (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 16—Billy's Seance .....
Dec. 16—The Bungalow Burglars .....
Dec. 18—The Girl and the Half-Back.....
Dec. 21—The Professor .....
Dec. 23—A Pair of Gloves..... 600
Dec. 23—Niagara Falls Celebration..... 400
Dec. 25—A Winning Miss.....1000
Dec. 28—The Portrait 1000

ITALA

Aug. 19—The Blunt Sword.....
Aug. 24—Modern School of Italian Cavalry..
Aug. 26—Foolshead—Chauffeur .....
Aug. 26—For a Straw.....
Sept. 2—Clio and Phyletes.....
Sept. 7—The Infinitive Ways of Providence (Dr.) .....
Sept. 9—Foolshead Hypnotizer (Com.).....
Sept. 9—Toto Has a Purse.....
Sept. 16—The Horse of the Regiment (Com.)
Sept. 16—Foolshead Charges Himself with Removal (Com.) .....
Sept. 23—The Mask of the Red Death.....
Sept. 23—The Hornet .....
Oct. 7—Foolshead a Model Guest.....
Oct. 21—Foolshead Quarrels With His Sweetheart .....
Oct. 28—Toto and the Dummy (Com.).....
Oct. 28—The Rearing of Pheasants (Dr.)..
Nov. 4—Foolshead's Holiday (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Woman's Wit (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A Victim of Competition.....
Nov. 28—Second Dr. Crippen.....
Nov. 18—Foolshead, a Professor of Innocence
Nov. 18—The Life of Bees.....
Nov. 25—The Tailor Wants His Pay.....
Nov. 25—The King of Noose Throwers.....
Dec. 2—Severed from the World.....

LUX

By Prieur.

Oct. 13—Bill, Police Cyclist (Com.)..... 390
Oct. 20—Bill Pays His Debts (Com.)..... 442
Oct. 20—Henpecked Bertie Goes Fishing (Com.) 514
Oct. 27—Bill, His Wife and the Water (Com.) 455
Oct. 27—Bertie and His Rivals (Com.)..... 472
Nov. 3—Bill and the Bear (Com.)..... 554
Nov. 3—Tommy's Camera (Com.)..... 393
Nov. 10—Bill Taken for a Ghost (Com.).... 426
Nov. 10—The Diversions of a Nursemaid (Com.) 495
Nov. 17—Saas Grund, a Village in the Alps (Sc.) 295
Nov. 17—The Mystery of Beaufort Grange (Dr.) 695
Nov. 24—Bill and Bertie Get Married (Com.) 325
Nov. 24—A Passing Cloud (Dr.)..... 658
Dec. 1—Bill as a Veterinary Surgeon (Com.)
Dec. 1—The Making of an Aeroplane (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Man in the Auto (Dr.)..... 650
Dec. 8—The Adventures of an Amateur Hypnotist (Com.) 350
Dec. 15—Bill and His Chum Tire of Married Life (Com.) 521
Dec. 15—Mistaken for the Culprit (Dr.).... 459

MAJESTIC

Nov. 26—The Courting of Mary.....
Dec. 3—Love Heeds Not Showers.....
Dec. 10—Keeping Mahel Home .....
Dec. 17—Little Red Riding Hood.....
Dec. 24—The Actress .....
Dec. 31—The Caddy's Dream (Com.)..... 400
Dec. 31—Will You Marry Me (Com.)..... 600

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Feet

Nov. 20—His Vacation .....
Nov. 22—The Cowboy Pugilist (W. Dr.)....
Nov. 25—Desperate Desmond Pursued by Claude Eclaire (Com. Dr.)....
Nov. 27—Happy Hobo's Help.....
Nov. 29—When the West Was Wild.....
Dec. 2—Western Feud .....
Dec. 2—Mutt and Jeff and the Scheme that Failed .....
Dec. 6—Struck Gold (Dr.).....
Dec. 9—Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Only an Iceman (Com.).....
Dec. 13—The Law of the Range (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—In the Early Days (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—Mutt and Jeff Make the Feathers Fly .....
Dec. 18—The Love Chase (Com.).....
Dec. 20—The New Ranch Owner (Com.)....
Dec. 23—Desperate Desmond Foiled by Claude Eclaire (Com.) .....

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Nov. 7—Mobilization of the American Fleet
Nov. 11—For the Tribe (Dr.).....
Nov. 14—When First We Met (Dr.).....
Nov. 14—The Tell-Tale Parasol (Com.).....
Nov. 18—The Old Leader (Dr.).....
Nov. 21—Rivals (Com.) .....
Nov. 21—Views of Montserrat, Italy (Sc.)..
Nov. 25—Jug o' Rum (Dr.).....
Nov. 28—Too Much Injun (Com.).....
Nov. 28—The Lineman and the Girl.....
Dec. 2—The Wanderer's Return (Dr.).....
Dec. 2—Views of Lake Como (Scenic).....
Dec. 5—The Little Thief (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 5—The Secret Order of Horns (Com.)
Dec. 9—Two Men and Girl (Dr.).....
Dec. 12—The Little Chaperone (Com.).....
Dec. 12—Views of Genoa, Italy (Scenic)...
Dec. 16—When Heart Wires Cross (Com. Dr.) .....
Dec. 19—Cupid's Big Sister (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 19—Touring Brussels (Scenic).....
Dec. 23—Hearts of Italy (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Nov. 15—The Moonshiners .....
Nov. 18—The Injustice of Man.....
Nov. 22—Helpless Man .....
Nov. 25—A Daughter of Italy.....
Nov. 29—Happy Thanksgiving .....
Dec. 2—The Poison Cup.....
Dec. 6—The Turn of the Wheel.....
Dec. 9—The Turnstile .....
Dec. 13—Love and Charity.....
Dec. 16—The Playwright .....
Dec. 16—Just Smile .....
Dec. 23—The Doctor's Dilemma.....
Dec. 23—A Pair of Shoes.....

REPUBLIC

Dec. 16—Six Nations (Part I) .....
Dec. 17—Six Nations (Part II) .....
Dec. 23—Before Yorktown (Part I) .....
Dec. 24—Before Yorktown (Part II) .....
Dec. 30—The Pride of Lexington.....

REX

Nov. 9—Saints and Sinners.....
Nov. 16—The Return .....
Nov. 23—The Price (Dr.).....
Nov. 30—The Strangers .....
Dec. 7—The Measure of a Man (Dr.).....
Dec. 14—Logging Industry in the Northwest
Dec. 21—The Martyr .....

SOLAX COMPANY

Nov. 22—Husbands Wanted (Com.).....
Nov. 24—The Will of Providence (Com. Dr.)
Nov. 29—A Troublesome Picture (Com.)....
Nov. 29—Life on Board a Battleship (Com.)
Dec. 1—A Revolutionary Romance (Mil.)..
Dec. 6—Baby's Choice (Com.).....
Dec. 6—The Paper Making Industry (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Little Shoe (Dr.).....
Dec. 13—Fickle Bridget (Com.).....
Dec. 15—The Little Kiddie Mine (Dr.).....
Dec. 20—Love, Whiskers and Letters.....
Dec. 22—The Violin Makers of Nuremberg.
Dec. 24—Christmas Presents .....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Nov. 3—Their Burglar .....
Nov. 7—The Missing Heir (Dr.).....
Nov. 10—The Last of the Mohicans (Dr.)...
Nov. 14—The Higher—the Fewer (Com.)..
Nov. 17—A Mother's Faith (Dr.).....
Nov. 21—A Master of Millions.....
Nov. 24—The Baseball Bug (Com. Dr.).....
Nov. 28—The Tempest (Dr.).....
Dec. 1—Beneath the Veil (Dr.).....
Dec. 5—The Newsy and the Tramp.....
Dec. 8—Brother Bob's Baby (Com.).....
Dec. 12—The Lady from the Sea.....
Dec. 15—Deacon Debbs (Com.) .....
Dec. 19—The Tomhoy .....
Dec. 22—Cinderella .....
Dec. 26—She (Part I).....
Dec. 29—The Expert's Report.....
Jan. 2—She (Part II).....

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

	Feet
Nov. 30—A Woman Scorned (Dr.).....
Dec. 4—Why He Gave Up (Com.).....
Dec. 4—Abe Gets Even with Father (Com.)
Dec. 7—The Failure (Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Saved from Himself (Dr.).....	999
Dec. 14—Taking His Medicine (Com.).....	673
Dec. 14—Her Pet (Com.)	323
Dec. 18—As in a Looking Glass (Dr.).....
Dec. 21—A Terrible Discovery (Dr.).....

EDISON

	Feet
Dec. 13—An International Heart-Breaker (Com.)	700
Dec. 13—Eskimos in Labrador.....	300
Dec. 15—Brocton Fair and Horse Show.....	990
Dec. 16—Stage-Struck Lizzie (Com.).....	650
Dec. 16—A Trip from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek	350
Dec. 19—Santa Claus and the Clubman (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 20—The Sign of the Three Labels (Com.)	1000
Dec. 22—How Sir Andrew Lost His Vote (Com.)	1000
Dec. 23—Pat Clancy's Adventure (Com.)...	1000
Dec. 26—Papa's Sweetheart (Dr.).....	625
Dec. 26—Modern Weapons for Fighting Fire, New York City.....	375
Dec. 27—The Stuff that Dreams are Made of (Com.)	1000
Dec. 29—A Romance of the Cliff Dwellers (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 30—Uncle Hiram's List (Com.).....	1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Dec. 1—The Quinceville Raffle (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 2—The Mountain Law (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 5—The Madman (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 7—The Long Strike (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 8—Getting Even with Emily (Com.)..
Dec. 8—Stray Bullets (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 9—A Frontier Doctor (W. Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 12—The First Man (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 14—The Hack and Schmidt Bout (Com.)
Dec. 14—A Polished Burglar (Com.).....	1000
Dec. 15—A Goodfellow's Christmas Eve (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 16—The Cowboy Coward (Dr.).....	1000
Dec. 19—The Three Bears (Juvenile).....	1000
Dec. 21—Winning an Heiress (Com. Dr.)...	300
Dec. 21—The Foiling of Red Dugan (Dr.)..	700
Dec. 22—The Millionaire Barber (Com.)....	1000
Dec. 23—Broncho Billy's Christmas Dinner (Dr.)	1000

GAUMONT
G. Kleine

Nov. 11—Manresa, a Spanish Town (Travel)	200
Nov. 14—Jimmie and His Country Uncle (Com.)	820
Nov. 14—The Outskirts of Paris (Scenic)..	164
Nov. 18—The Reckoning (Dr.).....	875
Nov. 18—A Trip to Saxony.....	150
Nov. 21—The Sealed Confession (Dr.).....	900
Nov. 21—A Stone Quarry in Saxony.....	75
Nov. 25—The Escape from the Dungeon (Dr.)	825
Nov. 25—Cave Homes in the Canary Isles..	180
Nov. 28—A Busy Cupid.....	758
Nov. 28—Review of the Austrian Army.....	232
Dec. 2—The Promoter (Dr.).....	1140
Dec. 5—Jimmie Tricks the Landlady (Com.)	475
Dec. 5—The Challenge (Dr.).....	525
Dec. 9—Camoens, the Portuguese Shakespeare (Dr.)	610
Dec. 9—Important Scenes in Paris, France (Travel)	320
Dec. 12—Heroism (Dr.)	610
Dec. 12—Arabian Customs (Ind.).....	366
Dec. 16—A Queen's Treachery (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 19—Through the Enemy's Lines (Dr.).	985
Dec. 23—The Maid of Argos (Dr.).....	980

KALEM CO.

Nov. 29—The Franciscan Friars of Killarney, Ireland (Top.)
Dec. 1—How Betty Captured the Outlaw (Com.)
Dec. 1—A Glimpse Into the Yellowstone National Park (Sc.).....
Dec. 4—Arrah-Na-Pogue (3 reels) (Dr.)...3000
Dec. 6—The Long Arm of the Law (Dr.)..1000
Dec. 8—Too Much Realism (Com.).....1000
Dec. 11—Molly Pitcher (Hist. Dr.).....1000
Dec. 13—Norma from Norway (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 15—Bill's Flute (W. Dr.).....1000
Dec. 18—He Who Laughs Last (Com.).....1000
Dec. 20—The Flash in the Night (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 22—Between Father and Son (Dr.)....1000

LUBIN

Nov. 29—The Crab Industry (Ind.).....	400
Nov. 30—A Nicotine Conspiracy (Com.)....1000
Dec. 2—Western Chivalry (Com. Dr.).....1000
Dec. 4—A Head for Business (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 6—Sins of the Father (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 7—Love's Labor Lost (Com.).....1000
Dec. 9—The Teamster (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 11—A Girlish Impulse (Com. Dr.)....1000
Dec. 13—Mr. and Mrs. Suspicious (Com.)..	400
Dec. 13—Quick! A Plumber (Com.).....	600
Dec. 14—The Substitute (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 16—A Timely Lesson (Com. Dr.).....1000
Dec. 18—Love Decides (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 20—Art Versus Music (Com. Dr.)....1000
Dec. 21—Kiddies' Christmas (2 reels).....1800
Dec. 23—The Sergeant's White Peril (Dr.)..1000

G. MELIES.

Nov. 23—An Oil Country Romance (Dr.)...1000
Nov. 30—The Reason Why (Com.).....1000
Dec. 7—A Western Girl (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 14—The Better Man (Com. Dr.).....1000
Dec. 21—The Mission Father (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 28—The Ranchman's Debt of Honor (Com. Dr.) 1000

PATHE FRERES

Nov. 29—Glimpses of San Francisco (Scenic)
Nov. 30—A Life Saving School in Australia (Scenic)
Dec. 1—Rover is Jealous (Dr.).....
Dec. 1—Capturing Polar Bear Cubs (Scenic)
Dec. 1—Examination of the Stomach by the X Rays (Edu.).....
Dec. 2—A Bear Hunt Romance (Dr.).....
Dec. 4—Pathe's Weekly No. 49.....
Dec. 5—The Secret of the Confessional (Dr.)
Dec. 6—Hobo Luck (Com.).....
Dec. 6—Fishing in the Ceram Islands (Sc.)
Dec. 7—The Poisoned Arrow (Dr.).....
Dec. 7—French Cuirassier Manoeuvres (Sc.)
Dec. 8—Eva's Faithful Furniture (Com.)..
Dec. 8—Gathering and Preparing Cocoanuts in the Philippines (Scenic).....
Dec. 9—Her Little Slipper (Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Pathe's Weekly No. 50.....
Dec. 12—Youth Versus Age.....
Dec. 12—Small Trades in Malacca (Scenic)..
Dec. 13—The Flower Girl of Las Palmas (Dr.)
Dec. 14—An Episode of the Early Mormon Days (Dr.)
Dec. 14—The Magic Suit Case.....
Dec. 15—In the Grip of Alcohol (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—A Mother's Remorse (Dr.).....
Dec. 18—Pathe's Weekly No. 51.....
Dec. 19—Princess Charming
Dec. 19—Landscape in Japan (Scenic).....
Dec. 20—The Fatal Posing (Dr.).....
Dec. 21—Dad's Smash Up (Com.).....
Dec. 22—Providential Bread
Dec. 22—In Japan, Nara, the Park of the Sacred Does (Scenic).....
Dec. 23—Actor's Hearts (Dr.).....
Dec. 25—Pathe's Weekly No. 52.....
Dec. 26—The Burglar's Hard Luck (Com.)..
Dec. 26—Aboard a French Battleship (Scenic)
Dec. 26—The Kromats
Dec. 27—Mother-in-law Raises xx! (Com.)..
Dec. 28—His Daughter's Bracelet (Dr.).....
Dec. 28—Mushroom Culture (Edu.).....
Dec. 29—Yann, the Troubador (Dr.).....
Dec. 30—The Idol (Dr.).....

SELIG

Dec. 1—Seeing Cincinnati (Scenic).....	500
Dec. 4—A Diamond in the Rough (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 5—A Frontier Girl's Courage (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 7—The Maid at the Helm (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Plumber (Com.).....	600
Dec. 8—A Day with a Circus.....	400
Dec. 11—The Chief's Daughter (Dr.).....	500
Dec. 11—April Fool (Com.).....	500
Dec. 12—A Romance of the Rio Grande (Dr.) 1000
Dec. 14—George Warrington's Escape (Hist. Dr.) 1000
Dec. 15—Industries of the South and West (Edu.) 1000
Dec. 18—Evangeline (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 19—For His Pal's Sake (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 21—Brown of Harvard (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 22—The Little Widow (Dr.).....1000

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

Oct. 4—A Jealous Wife (Com.).....	338
Oct. 4—The Grand Chartreuse (Trav.)....	292
Oct. 4—Ezra and the Fortune Teller (Com.)	348
Oct. 11—Pardoned by the Governor (Dr.)..	646
Oct. 11—Making Cheddar Cheese (Ind.)...	342
Oct. 18—Ordered to Move On (Dr.).....	605
Oct. 18—Madeira, Portugal (Travel).....	385
Oct. 25—A Woman's Slave (Dr.).....	950
Nov. 1—Trapped (Dr.)	975
Nov. 8—An Eye for an Eye (His. Dr.)....1000
Nov. 15—The Hindu Jewel Mystery (Dr.)..1015
Nov. 22—Guy Fawkes (Dr.).....1010
Nov. 29—The Mysterious Stranger (Dr.).... 610
Nov. 29—Salt Industry in Sicily.....	372
Dec. 6—The Luckless Banker (Dr.).....1002
Dec. 13—The Tragedy of Old Age (Dr.)...	798
Dec. 13—Harbor of Marseilles, France (Sc.)	215
Dec. 20—The Miracle (Dr.).....1040

VITAGRAPH

Dec. 2—The Husking Bee (Com.).....1000
Dec. 4—Saving the Special (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 5—The Hypnotist (Com.).....1000
Dec. 5—A Slight Mistake (Com.).....1000
Dec. 6—The Black Chasm (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 8—The Sick Man from the East (Dr.).1000
Dec. 9—His Wife's Secret (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 11—One Touch of Nature.....1000
Dec. 12—The Military Air Scout.....1000
Dec. 13—The Ventriloquist's Trunk.....1000
Dec. 15—Love at Gloucester Port.....1000
Dec. 16—Sick Man from the East.....
Dec. 18—Vitagraph Monthly
Dec. 19—Vanity Fair (Three Reels).....
Dec. 20—Fires of Driftwood.....
Dec. 22—A Reformed Santa Claus.....
Dec. 23—The Old Doll.....
Dec. 25—Some Good in All.....
Dec. 26—The Patchwork Quilt
Dec. 27—Testing His Courage.....
Dec. 29—A Doubly Desired Orphan.....
Dec. 30—In the Clutches of a Vapor Bath..

THE CARL BARCKHOFF CO.

BUILDERS OF PIPE ORGANS

With or Without Self Playing Attachment

POMEROY, OHIO, U.S.A.

Established 1819

Over 3000 Barckhoff Organs in use, which testify to their superiority and durability in construction, workmanship and sweetness of tone.

We make a specialty of Organ Chimes, made by no other builder.

You are dealing with the Manufacturer, no commission.

THE WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE

OF NEW YORK

CITY CUSTOMERS ARE ALL SATISFIED

NOW READY TO CATER TO OUT-OF-TOWN BUSINESS

LET US HEAR FROM YOU

Telephone 2892 Bryant 2893

Forty-Fifth St. Ex. Bldg.

145 WEST 45th STREET

THINK!!!

Buying heavily of all the Independent films best calculated to pack your house every day in the week; and with every department of every Laemmle Film Service office in charge of bright, alert, brainy, energetic men—is it any wonder that my customers are the best satisfied bunch of exhibitors in the business? Why don't you climb onto the Laemmle bandwagon right this very day? WRITE OR WIRE!

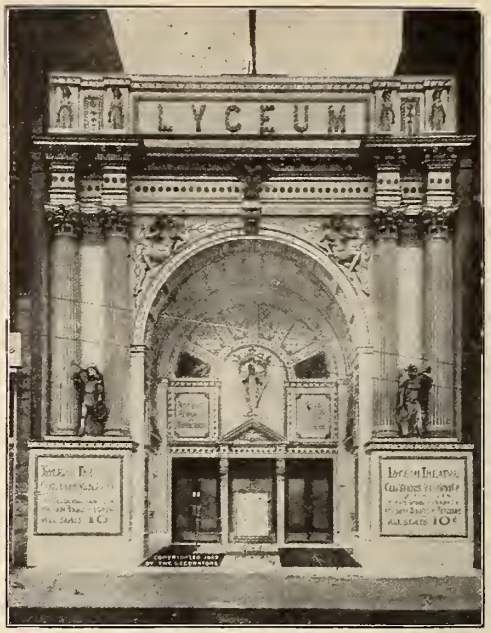
CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters:
New number 204 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.
Sykes Block, Minneapolis, Minn.
1312 Farman St., Omaha, Neb.
1110 Wyandotte St., Kansas City, Mo.
515 Mulberry St., Des Moines, Iowa.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

(My Free Employment Bureau is yours to command, always and forever)



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The* Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

BLANK LEADER
from $7.50 per 1,000 feet. Shipments subject to approval.
WASTE UTILIZATION CO.
500 Fifth Avenue NEW YORK

QUICK—CHEAP—GOOD

OPERA CHAIRS

Ask for Catalog 306
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.,
218 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Theatre Sales Co.
211 Dearborn Street, opposite Post Office
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
Long Distance Phone, Harrison 341
Dealers in Theatres anywhere in the United States and especially Chicago. Write or Call.
Make Known your Wants

BARGAINS BARGAINS
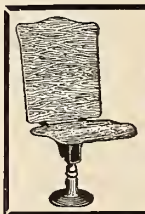
Edison Kinetoscope, $70. Lubin Cineograph, $65. 20th Century Marvel, $100. Powers Cameragraph No. 5, only $110. Edison Model B, $140. Standard Machine, New, $150. Motion Picture Machines, $35 up.
Send for Supplement No. 33 Bargain List.
Motion Picture Machines Wanted.
HARBACH & CO.,
809 Filbert St., Philadelphia, Pa.



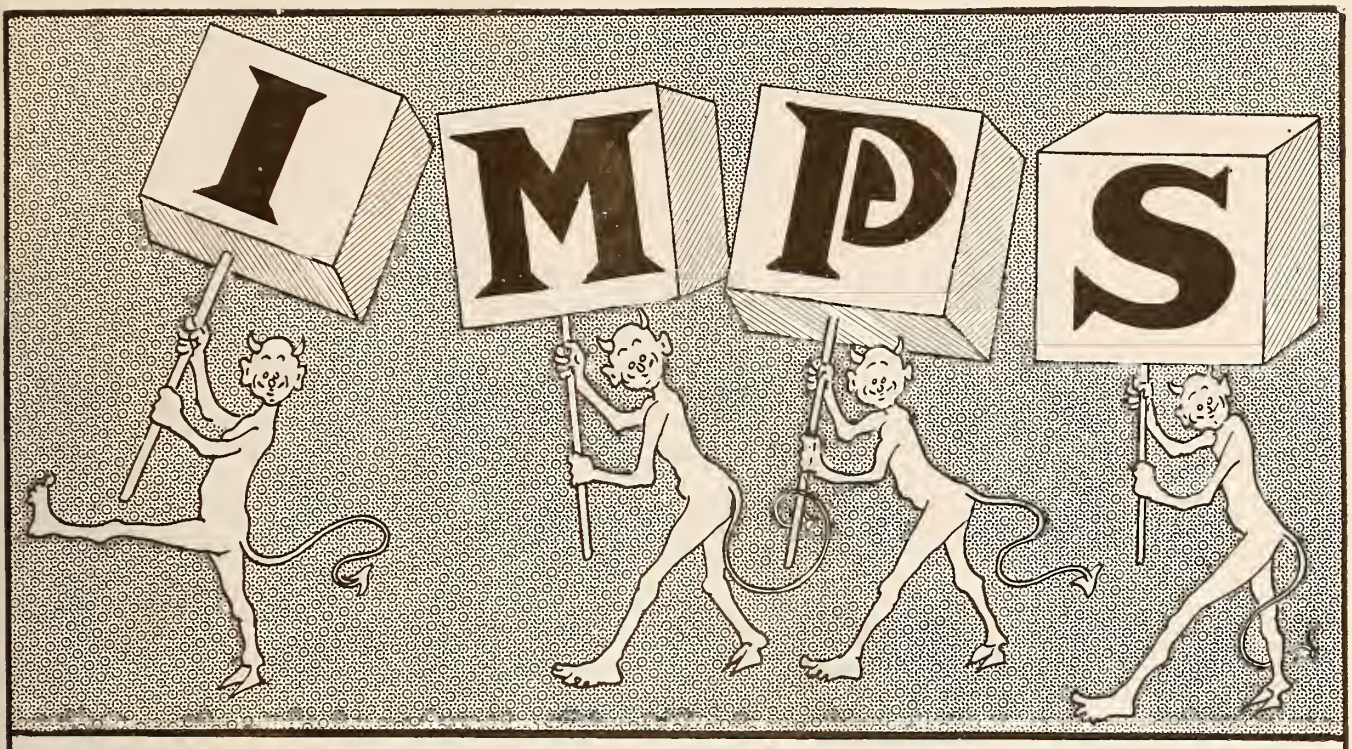
THE WORLD'S GREATEST THEATRE CHAIR
Sanitary, Space-Saving, Life-Saving, Money-Saving.
To Use This Chair Is to Make Your Business Grow.
Write Today for Circular W.
HARDESTY MFG. CO.
Canal Dover, Ohio.

Telephone: 1664 Spring
Kitab Engraving Company
Makers of MOVING PICTURE NEWS HALF TONE CUTS
401 Lafayette Street, NEW YORK

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE
Our price is right and the service is right, that's why you ought to write right now for our Film List.

Two Reels, 6 times per week	$14.00
Two Reels, 7 times per week	15.00
Three Reels, 6 times per week	16.00
Three Reels, 7 times per week	17.00

NATIONAL FILM BROKERS :: 186 N. LaSalle St., Chicago



FOUR IMPS ON 3 REELS

Bringing out a "split" reel every Saturday means that we are really producing FOUR different Imp subjects every week—a plan which represents a terrific outlay of money and which you should take fullest advantage of by MAKING SURE YOU GET THE MONDAY IMP, THE THURSDAY IMP AND THE SATURDAY "SPLIT" IMP e-v-e-r-y w-e-e-k! T. T. Lynch, Ottumwa, Iowa, says:—"I think so much of Imps that I have changed the name of my theatre to the "IMP'." Chas. J. Snelling, Alva, Oklahoma, wrote to his exchange, and said:—"What would you want for a 12-reel service and MAKE IT ALL IMPS?" I. Feinstein, Jefferson Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., says:—"Keep up the good work and THREE IMPS A WEEK WON'T BE ENOUGH!"

"AT THE STROKE OF THREE"

A peach of a love story, thrilling and exciting throughout. Released Monday, December 25th. Copyright 1911. Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.

"THE PORTRAIT"

One of the best dramas the Imp ever produced. Original and powerful. Released Thursday, December 28th. Copyright 1911. The Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.

"A LESSON TO HUSBANDS"

This is the first half of our Saturday Split of December 30th. On the same reel you will get a corking farce entitled with a real laugh in every one of its 600 feet. Released Saturday, December 30th. Both subjects copyright 1911. The Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.

"BROKE"

HINT:—Be sure of AT LEAST THREE packed houses every week by using THREE IMPS EVERY WEEK. Picture post cards of KING BAGGOT are mighty good souvenirs to give your patrons. Ask about them.

The Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.
102 W. 101st St., New York. Carl Laemmle, Pres.

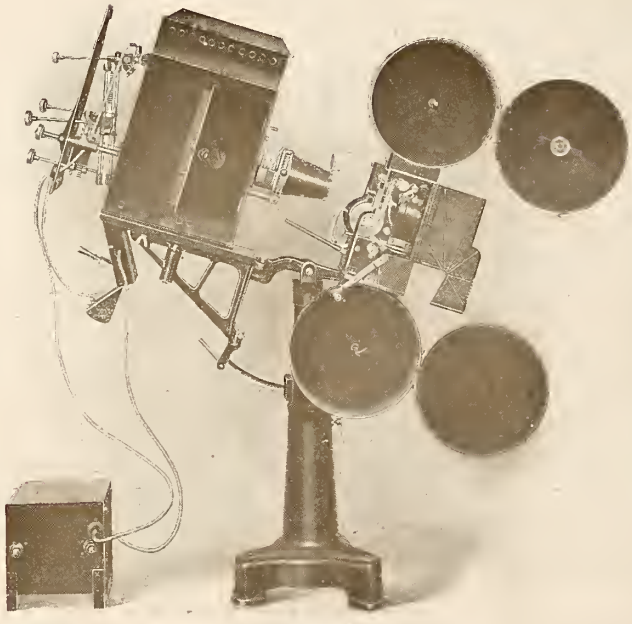
ANNOUNCEMENT NO. 7

Simplex

THE PEER OF ALL

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

The table for lamphouse is provided with a substantial swing movement which instantaneously brings the lamp into optical centre either with the M. P. Projection or Stereopticon lenses, and the Tilting arrangement, giving ample latitude, is governed by the moving of the support through the arc provided at the back of the stand.



The base, at its centre, rests on a device by which the machine can be swung to right or left, and the centre of gravity of this stand, together with its table support, and in conjunction with the Head and lamphouse, owing to careful calculation provides a machine of perfect rigidity and freedom from all vibration.

NO MORE TROUBLE WITH CITY EXAMINERS IF YOU USE THIS

THOROUGHLY FIREPROOF MACHINE

Lyric Amusement Co., Champaign, Ill., Nov. 8.

PRECISION MACHINE CO., New York.

I wish to say that the "Simplex" is the greatest machine on the market, after having used four other makes. If you care to use my judgment as a recommendation you may do so. It is from the heart, and I have had lots of experience with machines. Considering everything it is several years ahead of anything on the market today.

Yours very truly,
H. H. JOHNSON.

"Just the Machine the Department has been looking for."
—N. Y. City Official Inspector

EASIEST OF ALL MACHINES TO HANDLE, THREAD AND OPERATE

Sales Office: 23 East 14th Street, New York

DEC 28 1911

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

Volume IV
No. 51

December 23
1911

PRICE
TEN CENTS

SCENE FROM DANIEL BOONE
REPUBLIC FILM CO. RELEASE

THE MAJESTIC

Announces Two Releases A Week!

SUNDAY, JAN. 7th

"Training A Husband"

A high class comedy. The husband complains of his wife's and mother's cooking—gets his stenographer to cook a meal, then claims he cooked it himself—gets caught in the act—wife and mother then cook a meal and make him eat it to his sorrow.

ASK YOUR EXCHANGE FOR THIS REEL

FRIDAY, JAN. 12th

"Gossip"

A DOUBLE EXPOSURE COMEDY FILM, showing interior and exterior scenes at once on the screen. A story of an innocent escapade grown to large proportions as told by one to another, and so on, until it reaches the sweetheart—then the trouble begins.

ASK YOUR EXCHANGE FOR THIS REEL

REGULAR SUNDAY AND FRIDAY RELEASES THEREAFTER

TO THE EXHIBITORS!

¶ Majestic Pictures are at least the equal of any in the Independent market.
¶ With each new picture you will see entirely new stage settings.
¶ The finished product is the result of a carefully selected scenario with a new and novel plot, capably portrayed, and—perfect photography.
¶ If your Exchange will not supply you with our pictures, you are being deprived of one of the best available and you are entitled to the best for your money. ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS TO DEMAND THEM AND YOU WILL GET THEM.

CAUSE——and——EFFECT

MAJESTIC RELEASES

Sunday, Nov. 20—The Courting of Mary (Com.).
Sunday, Dec. 3—Love Heeds Not Showers (Com.).
Sunday, Dec. 10—Keeping Mabel Home (Com.).
Sunday, Dec. 17—Little Red Riding Hood (Juvenile).
Sunday, Dec. 24—The Actress (Dr.).
Sunday, Dec. 31—The Caddy's Dream (Com.).
Sunday, Dec. 31—Will You Marry Me? (Com.).
Sunday, Jan. 7—Training a Husband (Com.).
Friday, Jan. 12—"Gossip," Double Exposure Comedy film.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD SAYS:

"Sheer merit compels us to again notice the product of The Majestic Motion Picture Co."

"If Independent Exhibitors are looking for good comedy, they will find it in the releases of the Majestic Company."

TO THE EXCHANGES!

¶ If you will take the time to display our pictures on your screen, you will see why we respectfully solicit your standing order on both the Sunday and Friday releases.

PLEASE WIRE YOUR ORDER TO THE SALES CO.

The Majestic Motion Picture Co.

145 W. 45th ST. NEW YORK CITY

Sold through the Sales Co.

THE CHAMPION FILM CO.

Mark M. Dintenfass, Mgr. 145 West 45th St., N. Y.

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

WE OFFER
FOR NEW YEAR'S DAY,
JANUARY 1st, 1912,

"THE BLOOD OF THE POOR"

It is a picture that will take hold upon the hearts of the people, and make a lasting impression long after the day seen on the screen. It is a Great Sermon.

All who read the notice of its release should not simply make a desk memo of it, but Go See It and Get It.

COMING FEATURES

ROBERT G. FOWLER
"The Famous Aviator"

in amazing and fascinating flights over cities, hill and dale. Wonderful pictures taken from the aeroplane of the Earth below.

"Sherlocko & Watso's Absorbing Adventures"

will soon be pictorially unfolded, Mr. Exhibitor showing startling exposures of baffling mysteries.

The Kid of Roaring Camp

RELEASED JANUARY 3rd will interest you immensely. She was a little girl—an orphan. Robert Page found her and took her under his wing. Education and refinement developed her charms, and then—Dan Cupid appeared.

BETTER SEE the PICTURE

"An Aviator's Success"

RELEASED JANUARY 8th is an aeroplane story.

MISS BLANCHE SCOTT, the woman aviator, leads.

DID YOU SEE IT?

THAT MYSTERIOUS GAG

LAW OFFICES OF KENYON & KENYON
49 WALL STREET
NEW YORK

PATENTS, TRADE-MARKS
COPYRIGHTS

SM.

December 8th, 1911.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co.,
111 East 14th Street, New York.

Gentlemen:

The Edison Reissue camera patent No. 12037, owned by the Motion Picture Patente Company, has just been a second time reissued as No. 13329, December 5, 1911, for the balance of the term of the original patent, that is to say, to Auguet 31, 1914.

In our opinion this new Reissue is invalid and void.

The new Reissue chiefly consists of a disclaimer (by omission) of claim 4 of Reissue No. 12037, which claim was held invalid by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in March, 1907, (151 Fed. 767) and the delay in disclaiming which was referred to by the same Court in May, 1911, (187 Fed. 1007) as the reason for refusing preliminary injunction on any claim of the patent.

The Motion Picture Patents Company, in order to secure the new Reissue No. 13329, was under the law obliged to surrender the old Reissue 12037, and with that surrender all existing litigation for alleged infringement and all claims for alleged infringement of that Reissue 12037 abate and come to an end. The new Reissue can be enforced only by entirely new litigation. In our opinion the new Reissue was granted by the Patent Office without authority in law. and further, in our opinion, if the new Reissue is litigated it will be declared invalid and void.

Very truly yours,

Kenyon & Kenyon

DID YOU READ IT?

EDISON RE-ISSUE No. 13,329

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES CO., 111 E. 14th Street, New York, N. Y.

THE THANHOUSER "GREATEST JANUARY"

A New Year's Resolution:
The Thanhouser 2-a-Week
EVERY Week

CUT THIS OUT AND KEEP IT ON YOUR DESK

MEMO—Unless I want to miss them, I must ask my exchange NOW for

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE," Robert Louis Stevenson's Most Powerful Story (Tues. Jan. 16)

"A NIAGARA HONEYMOON," First of the Niagara Falls Scenic Gems (Fri. Jan. 19)

"EAST LYNNE (2 reels)," Greatest Filmization of the World's Greatest Drama (Fri. Jan. 26)

"AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING," Another Wonderful Make-You-Think Picture (Tues. Jan. 30)

RELEASED TUESDAY, JAN. 2
With New York's Great Columbus Day Parade

A COLUMBUS DAY CONSPIRACY

Features a Stunning Girl Reporter Who Sets Out on an Interview and Finds a—Conspiracy.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JAN. 5
Another "Thanhouser Psychological"

THE PASSING

As to the Natural Query the Story Suggests: "Can Such Things Be?"—we Leave That to You.

OUR XMAS PRESENT TO YOU is a continuance of the releasing of four one-a-month features ALL in ONE month, making the first month of the New Year our GREATEST

JANUARY

16 (Tuesday) DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE
19 (Friday) A NIAGARA HONEYMOON
26 (Friday) EAST LYNNE 2 REELS
30 (Tuesday) AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING

THANHOUSER COMPANY

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Sales Company Agents for U. S. and Canada

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

Are You Getting the Tuesday AND the Friday Thanhouser?

©CI.B250492

"The contents of this issue are copyrighted"

The Moving Picture News

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

Sole Agent and Correspondent for advertisements in Great Britain B. Allan, 8 Sherwood St., Piccadilly Circus, W., London

Chicago Representative: Warner Kennedy, 844 Waveland Avenue. 'Phone 3818 Lake View.

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor.

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President; John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City.
ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Volume IV December 23, 1911 Number 51

We Offer Our Readers the Wide World O'er fraternal Greetings and Hearty Good Wishes for the Yuletide

CHRISTMAS GREETING—1911

"LET not a man glory in this, that he loves his country, but rather let him glory in this, that he loves his kind," so said one of the present-day teachers, Baha'ullah.

"Peace on earth, good will to all men," said another great Teacher. With these sentiments in our mind we offer the heartiest fraternal greetings to all engaged in teaching by motion pictures. We want to give an expression of good will and peace to the whole trade, and we are wondering if a message, or messages, as outlined in the above quotations, are appropriate to both sections of the trade to-day. We are wondering, if, after all the war, hard words and turmoil of litigation, we could instill in both sections of the trade the sentiment of peace and good will to all men. The motion picture to-day has become such a factor in the lives of all nations that it seems to us a fitting time to ask the Motion Picture Patents Company, and the members of the Sales Company, to get together, shake hands, give hearty greetings, smoke the pipe of peace, bury the hatchet, and work together in harmony and unison for the good and uplifting power of motion pictures. We may be reminded that this is an age of commercialism, where sentiment don't count. An age when dollars are King and Lord of all, wherein so many are bowing down and worshiping the Golden Calf of Mammon, that it is out of place to preach a sermon in a trade paper. To this we would reply that if the Moving Picture News does not express these sentiments to the trade at large, no other paper will, and as we have stood for the advancement of all that is good and right and just, we feel that as the Patents Company have been beaten in every section of the fight on the patents question, also taking the latest case of the day, that of the Greater New York Film Rental Company against the M. P. P. Co. and others, an injunction has been granted through Rogers & Rogers, attorneys for Wm. Fox, wherein the Patents Company has been enjoined from discriminating against any one for the sales of their films, we would like to ask, Is not this the handwriting upon the wall? Is it not the beginning of the end? If so, how much easier it is to forgive and forget, to apologize gracefully, and acknowledge the wrong at this period of the year. What would be more fitting than to start the New Year full of good wishes to each other, all striving after that which is best and highest in motionpicturedom, letting the best manufacturers be chosen for the quality of their goods, by the exchange man, and the exhibitor, and letting the manufacturers who are turning out crude, unsatisfactory films to-day, simply pass away from the field which they are unable to hold.

We know that animosities are strong, and some exceedingly bitter, owing to past experiences. We also know that it is hard to shake hands with a man or men who have defrauded us out of just rights and dues, but at the same time it is better, when such an industry as the art of cinematography is in question, to put all these behind us, and pass into fairer fields and pastures new, with old friendships renewed and recemented by a true fraternal spirit such as is breathed forth by leaders and reformers at this time of the year. Manufacturers of both sides, think it over, and let the true spirit of "the universal brotherhood of man" reign to-day.

ANOTHER FOOL FIRE

We read with amazement in our evening papers this week about the film fire of the Columbia Film Company (now under the auspices of the National Association), and we are very surprised thereat. A statement was made that after the fire underwriters had examined the building and passed it, some fool operator carried wires loosely about the ground and there was a break in the insulating material; this caused a sparking which ultimately attached itself to a few strands of old film, and so caused the fire. Very specious reasoning, is it not?

Another story is to the effect that a girl in splicing the film dropped the electric bulb which set fire to the film. Good gracious me! (or should we say us!) Do the people of nowadays think we are so half-witted as to take in such a story as this? The same complaint was made concerning another fire, and we tried to get the same result in quite a dozen instances afterward; that is, in a walled-in yard, we put a stock of loose film in a corner, and broke electric bulbs attached to the wiring all alight and utterly failed to get a fire. Then, again, the damages they claim to be from $50,000 to $750,000. Which is correct? We are inclined to think that if our readers will take off the last three ciphers from the first figure, that it will be very much nearer the mark, but why such foolishness is allowed to come into existence is more than we can understand. Hence, as we commenced, we call it "another fool fire," that only brings odium upon the cinematograph industry.

KILLED OFF HIS CHARACTERS

Bloodthirsty Books Banned from Children in Dresden

"Banned" books will shortly make a collection of some dimensions. An original institution has been organized at Dresden with a view to showing the public the sort of books which should not be placed in the hands of children. In the first rank of these banned books is a story entitled "Waldroeschen," by the famous Karl May. It consists of 2,612 pages, and the author kills off no fewer than 2,293 of his characters. Of these—

1,600 meet their death by fire,
240 are scalped,
249 are either poisoned or asphyxiated,
130 are stabbed,
61 are pommelled to death,
16 are drowned,
8 are condemned to die of hunger,
4 are hanged,
3 are given as food to crocodiles, and one is buried alive.

The remainder succumb to various kinds of torture. The scenes of thefts, burglaries, incendiarisms and outrages of all sorts are so numerous that they have not yet been registered by statistics.

We wonder how our readers like the above clipping from the "Pall Mall Gazette," and would like to ask how those who belittle moving pictures to such an extent, that it has become a chronic disease with them, feel about books as described in the excerpt? Not only in England, but America also, books are published which do far greater injury to the readers, especially the young mind, than do the moving pictures, and we think it would be wise if the film censors would also censor the yellow story books and particulars of crime in the daily newspaper, believing that by so doing they would advance the cause of the youth of the day.

DISGRACEFUL FAKE PICTURES

The War with Italy and Turkey

In our last issue we made out a very strong case against the Vitagraph Company for issuing fake pictures of the war now proceeding between these two countries. We were rather severe in our strictures, but feel we were none too strong, taking all things into consideration. When we can, and feel justified in so doing, we always give the other side of the picture, and now take the greatest pleasure in informing our readers that the Vitagraph Company have made an amende honorable to the Italian government, and also the Italian-American citizens wherever they may be, by withdrawing from exhibition the offending film.

We understand that the Italian Consul received a letter from the company embodying all the above particulars, and expressing regret at the manufacture of the same, at the same time stating that it was owing to the exhibitors themselves that the trouble came, in-as-much as they were advised that these pictures were fake pictures, specially prepared from the written descriptions of the newspaper correspondence. We congratulate the Vitagraph Company for the attitude they have taken in this matter.

THE NEWS WILL ANSWER YOUR QUESTION

Are you in any doubt as to the identity of some player who pleased you in an Independent Picture? Have you anything on your mind regarding the moving picture business that needs some light from us? Any queries not relating to the strictly mechanical side of the industry will be answered by "Filmore," in the Moving Picture News. Relieve your mind! "Pop the question" TO-DAY to

MR. FILMORE, Moving Picture News, 30 W. 13th St., New York.

MENTAL FILMS OF CHRISTMAS SCENES AND NEWS ITEMS OF GREATER NEW YORK

By Mary Lawton Metcalfe

At this season streets are thronged with happy children celebrating with all the enthusiasm of childhood a great festival established by the Christian Church. Parents are too busy with external duties to take the time to impress a mental picture on the minds of little children. But child-study demands that reasons be given to little ones for happenings of joy and sadness. In simple language, those who have the care of the young may begin from the earliest years to teach children to think.

What is a more beautiful mental picture than that described in the Bible, telling the story of the Wise Men from the East; the guidance of the Star of Bethlehem, which led the Magi to the lowly stable, to the manger?

One of the earliest films of a Christmas long ago floats out from the memory box. In the chapel of a church school in Carolina, the dear Sisters who taught me A, B, C, worked out the reproductions of the First Christmas in Judea. There was the manger, the stuffed animals, the wax figures of Joseph and Mary and their blessed Babe. The bright star of the East glinted through the window and adoring visitors laid costly gifts for the new Babe. It was the sight of the wondrous scene, with shining wax angels hovering over the heads of the inmates—men and beasts—which attracted children from all over the country for miles to church. Unlettered servants, who could not read the Holy Book, saw the picture in form, as the story was told during the Christmas Eve of the first awakened Son of God. He who came with the message of brotherly love and lived and died for that truth, that for as many as are led by spirit are verily the sons of God. Only from his mental picture of wrong thinking does a man establish himself a miserable sinner.

There is a powerful suggestion to the manufacturer, let me say, if he has not caught it at a glance. Get the artists at work with the Christmas pictures for next year. There are waiting hundreds of progressive ministers who will use the stereopticon views in the Sunday schools when they are told they are ready.

Just as American history, Mother Goose, Dante and Shakespeare are being vitalized, so we insist that the most inspiring book of the old world's history, that book of the wonderful evolution of the human race, must be vitalized. The rantings and ravings of dramatic camp-meeting preachers have ceased to attract congregations of sinners to listen to the bright prospect of fire and worms, but pictures on the canvas cannot fail to draw in and uplift men, women and children, who must have encouragement and hope projected from Alpha to Omega.

* * * *

The Dante pictures from Doré, I mean the great Gustave, should not be on the Christmas calendar, or any old time. Most people have enough hell without seeing on canvas the wild imaginations of a warped, diseased, revengeful old Italian gentleman.

A volume of Dante was among the gift books of a Christmas Day some years ago. The binding edition de luxe tempted ambitious housemaids to ask for permission to look in the handsome book. So depressing was the result from the mental films impressed from the pictures that finally I was obliged to send the prized volume from the reach of the impressionable minds and relegate it to the attic.

"Sure, Miss, I have been after keeping me eyes popped open all night dreamin' of them poor critters in the Hell Book, with the sleet freezin' their naked bodies forever and iver and iver an no endin' to the freezin' and not a rag on" —so deplored good-hearted Katy from Killarney. The pictures are awful.

The mind must not have mental films of gloom.

* * * *

Perhaps not one manufacturer in a thousand has thought of the power for good or evil that he has. We do hope the fraternity will take the time and digest the psychological power of his work.

I am sure in the exchanges the gentlemen will be glad to know that we have some very creditable moving picture theaters in the Borough of Richmond, Staten Island. Now, do not hide a sardonic smile behind a program, for the realty people are saying: "You wait, and picture men will be thick as alfalfa when they know what we press people are doing over here to put your trade to the good."

Yesterday, I went into the new office of the Advertiser, a weekly newspaper at Stapleton, S. I. After felicitations with the editor, a copy of the Moving Picture News was shown him and a rapid-fire lecturette on my especial work of serving to the press the whole truth of this valuable industry. Mr. Editor showed me the advertisement of the Park Theater, Stapleton, and some splendid feature write-ups which he had given. This theater is directly opposite the Carnegie Public Library and a block from the office of the Advertiser. Around the corner is Public School of Greater New York, with a thousand pupils. Mr. Sam Hyams, the manager, is an affable young man and was most cordial in accepting my suggestions of presenting an especially selected assortment of reels to give the parents, teachers and children of Staten Island genuine pleasure during the holidays. I know that the time is here to consider the Neighborhood Theater as a valuable annex to the schools. It seems to me that it is the particular department of the press representatives to establish these helpful co-operative entertainments between the picture theaters and the principals of the schools. This good-will matter can be best secured by the exchanges placing advertisements in the local papers, which give the right to feature articles. At the Park Theater, Mr. Hyams will have a billboard with the films for Christmas week, which as a mother, teacher, club and press woman I suggest.

It is my purpose in constructive thinking to reach the manager of every Staten Island and Perth Amboy theater. The experience of the past week shows that some gentlemen have forgotten the art of answering a letter. Interviews do more good to convince men that women can develop the moving picture trade in ways that the masculine fraternity have not yet entered as pioneers.

* * * *

It seems to me such a pity to take good type and space to publish all the ugly remarks that emanate from some shots of preacher-men. If I were an editor of a picture commercial magazine I should not try to explain away, or reply to attacks on the moving picture trade. Every page of copy, if it is worth any reading, leaves a mental film of either a Christmas feeling or the opposite—that black Friday film, which haunts a fellow in his dreams.

New Thought people order us to write only to the good. If both films are created in two articles, the gentle readers may get them mixed in his memory-box and forget whether he ought to believe pictures are sending children to perdition or making good citizens.

In my classes in English, I never permitted the girls to correct the bad English into grammatical sentences, precisely for the reason which I have just given in begging our press people to keep in the middle of the road to ideals and not to report adverse criticism from any source. The eye takes the pictures of written and printed words, whether correct or wrong.

* * * *

The Staten Island Academy is one of the finest private schools in the state of New York. It has been established twenty-seven years. There is a board of trustees, which are represented by Mr. Frank Page, headmaster, who is a Harvard University man. The school has more than two hundred pupils and is only twenty minutes across the bay. There is a large Lyceum called after George William Curtis, one of the patrons of the first efforts for higher education in New York. At the academy there is a picture apparatus for the classroom to teach geography. The pupils take the pointer and recite the story of each city, as the projector sends the picture on the canvas. It goes without saying, that the associative quality of the mind connects the facts to be remembered with the picture illustrating it.

There is an able faculty of a dozen and more teachers and a course of supplementary Mid-winter forenoon lectures in the Lyecum, which are illustrated with dissolving views and which are well attended by the parents and friends of the academy. The trade will find Mr. Page interested in the educational development of the picture teaching films. The academy is but a few minutes' walk from South Ferry municipal boats.

* * * *

Dr. P. G. Juhl, of Richmond Valley, Staten Island, called on me recently to show his brilliant plans for hygienic school building. This gentleman is from Denmark and of scientific experience as teacher and physician. His ideas were expressed in pictures mounted on rollers. In the science of botany he showed the development of seed from its first germinating sprout to a flower and seed.

In the schoolhouse, with its glass sides and splendid ventilation, he proposes to put the indispensable picture lecture room, where the sciences of earth, sea and sky can be taught intelligently and more forcefully than ever in the history of education. In the basement of each building is a map of the United States, perfect in detail and so big that boys and girls can learn geography by putting on roller skates and, gliding from one city to another, have the practical and definite idea fixed in the mind of the location and relative position of one part of the great United States to the other.

There is everything to recommend this original plan of buildings and apparatus to progressive manufacturers, identified with the school system of this nation.

* * * *

One of the pleasantest opportunities of the live press woman is to bring in touch persons who need each other in progressive ideas for practical human betterment.

Pleased as Punch shall we be to receive and to connect parties of the first and second parts for the distribution of knowledge that clever people are making Old Mother Earth spin on faster to keep up in the race.

Interesting Correspondence

Canton, Mass., Dec. 12, 1911.

To the Editor of the Moving Picture News:

I have just made the acquaintance of your magazine through the kindness of the Greene Film Exchange of Boston, in handing me a copy. I have perused it carefully and found much to interest me.

Two articles in particular drew my special attention. I refer to the Censoring of the Motor Picture Theater, by Margaret I. MacDonald, and Side Lights on the Cinematograph, by Leonard Donaldson. The article by Miss MacDonald seems to be a defense of the moving picture industry against the uncalled-for attack of Miss Kate Davis, who brands the moving picture theater as "a training school for iniquity." Someone, indeed, must take up arms in defense of the moving picture business in the face of such an unjust assertion, but I am afraid that Miss MacDonald goes almost as far on one side as Miss Davis does on the other; and, sweeping and outrageous as the charges made by Miss Davis certainly are, they are only matched in narrowness and bigotry by the words of Mr. Donaldson.

There is much good in moving pictures. They have at last been recognized as of educational and social value. There is also some harm. Why deny it? The truth should not be denied, for "truth is mighty," and "murder will out." Better a housecleaning when necessary than to wait until the spread of disease and the appearance of the red flag of quarantine. And the red flag of quarantine in this case would be the howl of the public reformer who is always waiting for a chance to howl.

I have been in touch with the moving picture industry for the past eight years. Each year has witnessed an advance in the elimination of the undesirable. But why not go a step further and eliminate all the undesirable and questionable.

Does Miss MacDonald really mean what she writes when she quotes: "I believe that even the worst picture has some educational value." Isn't that pretty broad, especially from one of the sex who are recognized as the standard bearers of our nation's morals? Would she take a child to a motion picture house where one of these questionable films was being exhibited? Would she explain to the little mind that was trying to fathom some of the mysterious actions of the people on the screen, the true meaning that they were endeavoring to convey to their audiences? Would she explain those sensuous incidents that appeal only to the baser passions? Oh, no! And I have faith enough in humanity in general to believe that nobody else would.

The child does not understand, but the child has seen, and anything that comes within the scope of the eyes of a child is a stimlant to the reasoning powers of the child. The ill-bred laugh of the vulgar who may occupy seats adjoining will give the child the idea that there must be something amusing in the scene. The look of disgust on the face of the well-bred individual will leave the impression that something is wrong. Then the reasoning powers of the child, and few reason so long and so well as a child, will be called into play, and little by little the truth dawns upon them. "Familiarity breeds contempt," and by the time the child has developed into manhood or womanhood there has been awakened not a knowledge of passion, but a sense of passion.

I am not prejudiced either in favor of trust or independent films. Yet this has been my experience. It is my duty to select the films for a moving picture house operated in connection with a church hall. Massachusetts has set the pace in this regard, and I predict that in five years the country will be dotted with picture houses controlled by various church organizations. I have no rigid, hard and fast rule of censoring. Anything that is clean and wholesome will do. This house in particular uses five reels at a performance, generally two comedy, one Western and two dramatic of any description. Occasionally, but not often a scenic or a travel film will be used. This house has used trust pictures the past two years. I call at the film exchange, am given five reels and by permission of the management I am allowed to run them off in their operating room; 90 per cent of the pictures handed to me at random are accepted. A short time ago we wished to try some of the independent films. I was allowed the same courtesy by the management of running the films before I left the building. I ran thirteen reels before I secured four that were acceptable. The fifth, which was accepted for the simple reason that I had no more time to waste, was an Imp. I always liked the Imp pictures, and believed them one of the leaders in the independent class. I do yet, for that matter. Perhaps to some people the objection to this certain film would be highly amusing. It portrayed two college men in love with the same girl, and opened with a graduation day scene and the two swearing loyalty forever. The one who won the girl proves to be a defaulter at the bank where both are employed. The other, to shield him and for the sake of his former love, informs the officials that it is he and not the married one who has falsified the accounts and stolen the money. He is sent to jail. The other, overcome with remorse, goes through some remarkably fine acting (it is a masterpiece) and then—goes upstairs AND BLOWS OUT HIS BRAINS. Now, why should American manufacturers follow the European producers of two years ago and cater to the morbid, the sensual—anything that portrays the lowest evils of the age? Wouldn't it have been much nicer, with a greater moral if that man, instead of blowing out his brain, had dropped dead as a result of his remorse? Wouldn't it have been much better to have portrayed it as an act of the Almighty than the cowardly deed of a remorseful sinner? What is uplifting or exemplary in that suicide? What is gained by portaying it? There is much in the power of suggestion, especially to the young mind. And I hope that, if this is published, it will catch the eye of Laemmle, the Imp man, for Laemmle is a man of progress.

I recently witnessed another reel, released by the Rex people. It was a story of a young man amusing himself with the affections of the maid in his own home. An illegitimate child was the outcome, and the story was woven in and out until the child eventually was sent from an orphanage to the home of the father, who had married but who was childless. Of course, the mother of the child was shown committing suicide by jumping into the river. Leaving aside the objection to the suicide, a very serious objection was the sensuous actions of the young man in making love to the maid. One of these, so disgusting that it could not be expressed in public print, was certainly an indication of passionate desire, and could not be interpreted in any other way by even the most pure minded. It was greeted with an especially meaning laugh by a number of young men in the theater. In talking with the manager after the show in regard to the matter, he said emphatically: "If I ever get another film of that sort, I'm through with Independent service." And still I must admit that I have seen Rex pictures that were magnificent. I have not picked out these two concerns to convey the belief that they are the great sinners. In fact, these are the only two produced by those companies with which I can find fault. They are cited as examples of pictures that could be improved. I am going to give Independent pictures another trial, and I will include Rex and Imp just as readily as the others; in fact ,a little more readily, as I believe their films possess full photographic value, which is an essential thing in the moving picture industry. I cited the last one especially,

(Continued on page 32)

HELLO! FATHER CHRISTMAS

By Margaret I. MacDonald

THERE is something in the approach of the Christmas season that stirs old memories. The first little fluffy flake of snow that comes tumbling down like a lost little bit of innocence from somewhere up above awakens in my heart, and maybe it does also in yours, a slight, childish thrill. If I could go on dreaming I might perchance find myself searching vainly for my old sled, or my spring skates that perhaps are knocking about among the old iron.

But as time has flown there is something more to Christmas, and something less than in the childish days of the sled. And as we grow older our minds dwell not alone on our own Christmas stockings, but a great many of our thoughts fly from one to another of our friends and acquaintances. A Christmas greeting is planned for each according to our purse. Somehow the Christmas season brings with it a peculiar feeling of fellowship. Even the disagreeableness of our enemies is glossed over somewhat by old Father Christmas' smile, and our hearts exude a general greeting to all the world. Even the tiny bird that comes morning after morning to the dining-room window-sill gets a little extra attention.

I want to say to all my friends of the trade—those whom I have met and those whom it has been my misfortune not to come in personal contact with, that my Christmas thoughts include you all. There may be many among you who are alone and have little Christmas cheer. Among actors, operators, camera men, I know that all are not blessed with happy homes of your own. And those of you who are not, kindly consider that on Christmas morning you will have at least one kind thought from somebody, and that somebody will be me.

This little greeting is for those of you who are alone and have no cheer save your own little room, and a hotel or restaurant dinner. The little children of the great city are well looked after—but not always so the big, lonely grown-ups. Even money cannot always bring cheer. Genial companionship plays the biggest part in the Christmas cheer—genial companionship and a good dinner. Somehow none of us want to do without that turkey and plum pudding. It is one of the extravagances of the one greatest feast day of the year—the anniversary of the birth of the individual in whom our Creator made manifest to man His intention for the development of the human race.

Then Hello! old Father Christmas! We welcome you as a joyous, care-free visitor. Bring us all you've got of the good things of life, and let us all feel at least for one short day the joy of living.

ECLAIR MAKES TEMPERANCE FILM

The ravages of drink are shown in the Eclair Film Company's latest production, "Alcohol, the Poison of Humanity," in a strikingly spectacular manner. Not only do they illustrate the effects of strong drink on the person addicted to the habit but its hereditary influence as well.

The subject is produced in three reels and carries a strong plot, beautifully told. Upwards of forty scenes are shown and much novelty in settings, effects and transformations predominates.

The Eclair Company's wonderful film has been dedicated to the Women's Christian Temperance Union and will no doubt prove universally popular with the better class of picture patrons, as well as the masses.

No date has been announced for the release of "Alcohol," as the Eclair Company has not yet decided on the method of distribution.

Coronation Again in Kinemacolor

The popular demand for the natural color motion pictures of the Coronation has been so overwhelming that their run will be resumed on December 21st, at the Kinemacolor Theater, 40th street, near Broadway, New York. The program will include every event of the brilliant and spectacular ceremonies of the forty-day period of festivities in honor of the crowning of King George and Queen Mary of England, while all the music of each occasion will be reproduced by the famous Southwark Glee Singers, who will render appropriate music during the holiday season. The performances are twice daily, at two-thirty and eight-thirty, prices ranging from twenty-five cents to one dollar, the best matinee seats being fifty cents.

INVITATION

Is the Sincerest Form of Flattery!

We invite you to compare Rex Quality to the next-best. And we will FLATTER YOUR JUDGMENT enough to prophecy your conclusion!

Mr. You, if you're on the HUNT for real brilliant comedy, here's a POINTER! On

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28th,

we are releasing

A CHRISTMAS COMEDY

"An Unwelcome Santa Claus"

a picture just about equivalent to tickling you in the fourth rib!

All the merriness and mirth, all the joy and jubilation of the season, are crowded into the thousand feet, and there's room left for a ha! ha! after the final flash!

Its good cheer will bring cheers!

It's a laugh-lassoer!

REX MOTION PICTURE CO.

573 ELEVENTH AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

Sales Co. says Rex is never "An Unwelcome Santa Claus"

UNIQUE CONDITION IN THE AMUSEMENT WORLD

By Robert Grau

ALTHOUGH here in New York, owing to special conditions, there is no evidence of the catastrophe facing the theatrical business, the state of affairs outside of the metropolis has reached the appalling, in that producers of high-grade plays and operas are facing deficits such as can be met only by a few of the larger magnates, and even this class realize that the problem confronting them at this time is one that defies solution.

In New York, where an effort is made to congregate the successes of the entire nation and where the floating population is a unique asset, the theaters are prospering save those housing failures, or quasi-failures, and in such houses receipts of $25 a night are not unusual, and two theaters in the heart of the theater zone played an entire week without one audience representing as much as one hundred dollars.

Out of the city such plays as "Baby Mine," "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," "The Gamblers" and "Seven Days," which drew capacity audiences in New York for an entire season's run, are playing this season in cities of large size to beggardly receipts, while in the districts known as one-night stands, one hundred dollars is an average gross result of a single performance.

A new York manager, with an investment of more than one million dollars at stake and controlling a score of attractions, has the following to say of the present conditions:

"Even a year ago I was unwilling to attribute to the moving picture such slumps as were apparent in the regular theaters, but to-day I unhesitatingly pronounce this prolific industry as the greatest menace to the legitimate playhouse that has developed since the beginning of time. Moreover, we are now witnessing an upheaval of colossal proportions in the very infancy of the vogue of the moving picture. Up to a year ago it was the custom to console ourselves with the notion that the small five and ten-cent theaters would pass away, and the public that was wont to patronize these little theaters would sally to the regular playhouse where a solid fare was offered.

"But," continued the manager, "these moving picture men are by no means the sort that contribute to a retrograde movement and instead of this wonderful industry going tobogganing a deep-seated scheme of monumental proportions lays behind the inauguration in several large cities of the exclusively motion picture theater. These are now in the course of erection in Pittsburgh, Detroit, St. Louis, Cincinnati and elsewhere, and all are to have a seating capacity in excess of two thousand. In another year I look to see this feature expand to such an extent that it is a question if the theatrical managers of this period will not have to evolve new methods for the conduct of their operations, for certain it is that the system of traveling combinations that has held sway for generations is no longer one to conjure with."

The writer has always been reluctant to give utterance in a prophetic vein, yet the reader has only to refer to back issues of this periodical in order to establish the fact that present conditions were persistently predicted. The only wonder is not that the upheaval has come so soon but that it has not been of a more sensational nature.

The development in the motion picture industry that is to be watched with more anxiety by the theatrical caterers than that of the creation of new theaters for special film releases is the gradual capitulation of the world's greatest players and playwrights to the sway of the camera man. Here indeed is a serious situation, for if the day comes when the Maude Adamses, the John Drews, the Ethel Barrymores and the Billie Burkes follow the example set by the Sarah Bernhardts, the Rejanes and the Coquelins, then will indeed witness the fulfillment of that dreaded prophecy, recently uttered by a writer in the New York Times to the effect "that the legitimate playhouses will be cast into oblivion through the superior competition of the theater of science and artifice."

No day goes by that some extraordinary uplifting endeavor is not revealed by one of the many public-spirited gentlemen now in the limelight of cinematography. The other day Mr. J. Stewart Blackton was elected chairman of the motion picture department of the great, ennobling Philharmonic Society, an organization with sixty years' superb record and whose leading factors are Marcella Sembrich, Victor Herbert and Madame Ternina.

The significance of this affiliation is of an epochal nature. Already the Vitagraph Company are preparing the series of educational pictures which will illustrate in the most appealing manner the part that the motion picture is to play in the musical progress of our nation.

The saving grace of the distressing theatrical situation has been the demand for players by the film manufacturers, and one can only conjecture as to the spectacle that would be on view on New York's Rialto were it not for the fact that hundreds of the country's best players have succumbed to the lure of the camera man, and this is a phase of the cinematograph industry that is on the eve of expanding to much larger proportions than those now obtaining. In fact, instead of the better class of thespians regarding the silent drama as degrading, as many surely did not so very long ago, they now consider themselves fortunate if they can obtain an audience with the film producers.

The difference between the theatrical managers and the film manufacturers is that the former are endeavoring to solve problems confronting them, while the latter have solved their problems, the greatest of which is the creation of a vast public patronage, and they propose to hold this patronage fast by constantly raising the level of their offerings on the screen.

How serious is the theatrical slump can best be conveyed to the lay reader by the statement that seventy traveling companies closed their seasons prematurely in a single week. Moreover, the number of stars now featured at the head of such companies is the smallest it has been in thirty years, and this statement is amplified in the mind of the skeptical by a reference to a recent hard-luck banquet given at the Lambs Club, at which eighty-five of the best known actors, the creme de la creme of the profession, sat down to discuss their condition. All were out of engagements, and one-third of the number were stars that had started out early in the fall with high hopes, but found their position so untenable that they, or their managers, were forced to disband their companies and ship their paraphernalia to the storehouses.

This is a state of affairs that has not been recorded in theaterdom since the days when managers and actors were wont to do their business on the sidewalks, having no offices for the conduct of their business affairs.

A BEGINNER'S NEEDS

Here's to the beginners who think they'd take life with ease, write a few stories whenever they please. Who are sure the editors will be "tickled to death" upon the arrival of their manuscripts, to send them a check.

Here's to you, dear beginners. I am traveling the road and I know to be successful buck hard or your disappointments will goad. When your cherished ideas into plots you have planned and your hopes are high, then to have them come back again and again. Don't to some other more practiced hand give one inch of your sand.

"The world hates a quitter."

Here's to you, beginners, for every hour of hard work you've spent, for the untiring practice with seemingly no results.

Your ability will surely grow, you will become more than efficient. The editors, as the old saying goes, will "Look up and take notice"; then into the world at large you will have anchored your successful barge.

A last word to beginners (if): When success seems to smile your way, hold out a helping hand; there are many not so well off in talents as you this very day; and last, though not least, never be satisfied with ought else than your very best efforts. Keep your head, your heart, if you can, your tongue and your nerve. Beginner, you've just begun.

By Miss Mabel Irvin.

An Appreciative Letter

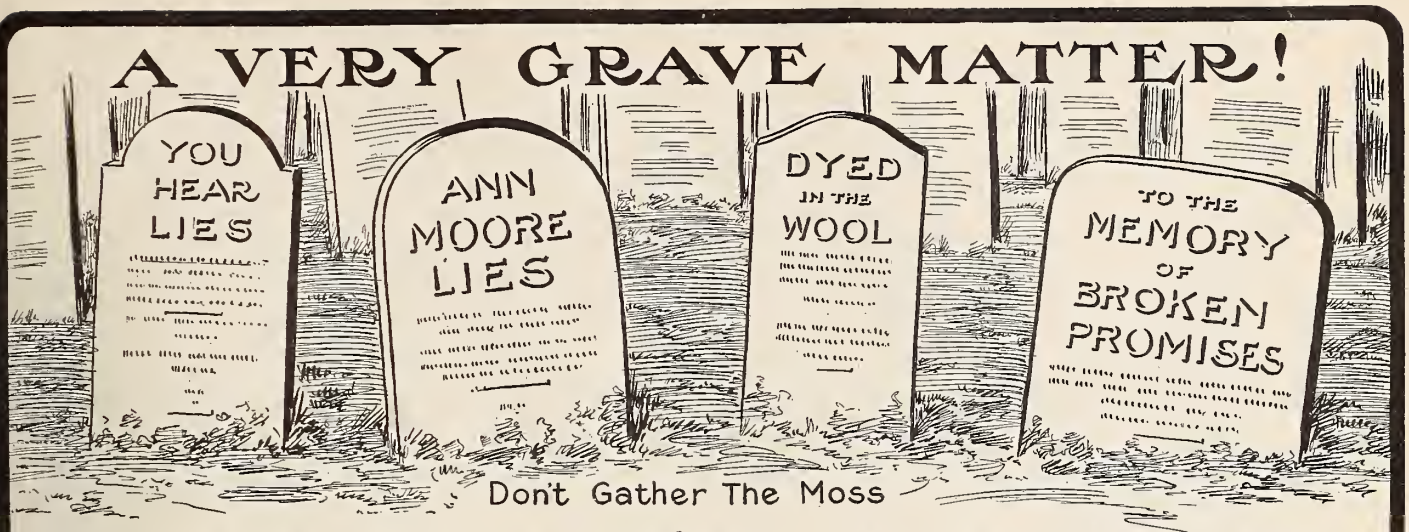
Richmond, Va., Dec. 13, 1911.

The M. P. News, New York City.

Gentlemen:—I failed to receive my copy of the "M. P. News" for Saturday, December 9th. As it always reaches me on Monday I expect it has gone astray in the mail.

Therefore will ask you to kindly mail me a copy of the issue for December 9th. Your periodical is so interesting that I cannot afford to miss a single issue.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,



WE KNOW WHAT WE'RE UNDERTAKING

THE RESURRECTION OF A DYING HOPE!

SAVE YOUR SOLES and just after Church on Sunday, January 21st, 1912, GO TO YOUR EXCHANGE for the FIRST RELEASE of

THE GEM MOTION PICTURE CO.

Yes, the Sales Co. has decided that all independent exchanges deserve Gems!
P. S.—The Sales Company is preparing for an increase in Sales.

CURRENT EVENTS TOLD IN PICTURES

According to former prophecies the picture bids fair to outdo the press as a means of news distribution. The picture is a more aggressive method of impressing the importance of certain events on the mind. Where yesterday this mode of enlightenment as to the happenings in parts of the earth more or less remote from us, was but a dream, to-day we find exchanges which are actually making a business of supplying the news in pictorial form to the thousands.

Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., 1328 Broadway, New York, have recently placed themselves at the service of all public institutions, theaters, hotels, etc., in the matter of supplying them with the famous Underwood and Underwood slides—slides from the great news photographers. From this reliable firm can be had daily four slides on current events; that is twenty-four per week, and we find they agree to furnish these to patrons at the rate of $12 per week. And also three current event photos, 14x17, for outside display, with printed news titles, will be furnished for an extra $5 per week. Is this not a wonderful sign of the advancement of the times? All the news of wars, sports and all national and international happenings can be told to the hotel guests, theater patrons and the busy pedestrian, while they saunter through hotel corridors, sit in comfortable theater chairs, or hurry along the crowded thoroughfares attending to the business of the day.

In the tremendous hurry and bustle of our day, this seems to us to be one of the crying needs of the times answered. It is also a great educational feature, as well as a saver of time. In these days which have not sufficient hours allotted them wherein to accomplish the modern day's work, think of being able to acquire at a glance what would take several minutes possibly to read in the daily newspaper.

The Hunton-Fell-Elliott people, who have just recently begun this line of service, have for some time past been supplying large numbers of interesting slides to the public. Now they are prepared to be a veritable news bureau to exhibitors and theater managers. The employment of this reliable firm to furnish daily news slides and pictures should be a large card for the business man.

JUST A CELLULOID SLIP

Only a celluloid slip, my dear—
  Just a celluloid slip.
But we sit and dream, as across the screen,
  The varied characters trip.
Look at the maiden, all forlorn;
  The aged mother in garments worn.
That handsome man, with fiendish grin,
  Is tempting the unsuspecting to sin—
See! He tightens his grip!

Only a celluloid slip, my dear;
  Just a celluloid slip!

Just a celluloid slip, my dear—
  Only a celluloid slip.
But we sit in glow from lantern's throw,
  With sharp and ready wit.
There is a cowboy, gay and free,
  How he'll win that girl is mystery.
He's riding to rescue mighty fast,
  True love's bound to triumph at last.
  Gee! Don't let her slip!

Only celluloid, never fear;
Just a celluloid slip, my dear!

New York Turn-out of Leading Italians Shown in Film

The recent parade of eminent American Italians in the New York Columbus Day festivities has been reproduced in a Thanhouser film called "A Columbus Day Conspiracy," dealing with Italian life in the American metropolis. An Italian nobleman, visiting this country, is invited to view the parade from the grandstand, and he takes a seat there unaware that a crazed servant whom he discharged plans to blow him up with a bomb. A pretty girl reporter, who learns of the madman's plan, tracks the latter, but unfortunately he evades her. Then, through a novel scheme, the girl locates her madman and he is prevented from throwing his bomb. The picture is full of action and the city "local color" is very accurate. The release day is Tuesday, January 2d.

THE MODERN HISTORIC RECORDS ASSOCIATION

First Meeting of the Organization—Address by George F. Kunz, Ph.D., Sc.D., on Ancient Records and How They Were Kept

THE first regular meeting of the Modern Historic Records Association, which was incorporated on November 9, was held on Saturday evening, at The National Arts Club, No. 14 Gramercy Park. An organization was effected and Herbert L. Bridgman, of the Brooklyn Standard-Union, was elected temporary chairman and W. T. Larned temporary secretary. Alexander Carter, the founder of the association, was then introduced and briefly set forth the aims and objects of the society. He pointed out the lamentable truth that many valuable facts of the greatest value regarding the past are now unknown because of the loss of records that should have preserved them for our use. Whole epochs are represented solely by blanks in so far as we are concerned. Some of the manuscripts that have come down to us cannot be deciphered and they are in consequence of no value. And yet we are printing books on paper that will not last. What a flood of light would have been cast upon Egypt and the probable use in that country of mechanical power if we only had proper records regarding his matter. The value of records concerning Greek drama and music was incidentally referred to by the speaker. In order to avoid the mistakes of antiquity and to preserve proper records of the history that is to-day in the making, the Modern Historic Records Association came into existence. It aims toward the following:

1. The promotion, organization and systematization of the use of modern scientific inventions in the preparation and for the preservation of historical records for the benefit and enlightenment of posterity.
2. The advocating of the employment of the photographic plate as the most durable means of preserving records and documents.
3. The employment of the phonograph for the preservation of the voice and words of contemporary celebrities.
4. The use of moving picture machines for securing records of important current events and the application of all other suitable means for the purpose of bequeathing to posterity a vivid and many-sided record of the life and civilization of the day.
5. The erection of suitable fireproof buildings for the purpose of keeping and preserving such records as shall be made in conformity with the foregoing objects.
6. The duplication of records made for use for educational purposes throughout the country.

Dr. Kunz's Address

Dr. George F. Kunz, president of American Scenic and History Preservation Society, was then introduced. He spoke as follows:

As one interested in scenic and historic preservation, and in sympathy with the purposes of the Modern Historic Records Association, the question arises as to how records can best be preserved in the future, and this naturally suggests the consideration of how records were preserved in very ancient times, and with what degree of success.

Some twenty-five years ago I began to collect newspaper items upon the subjects which most interest me, and I noticed some ten years later that the cuttings could not be handled without falling apart, showing that the material upon which our records are preserved is so flimsy that many of our books and newspapers will be useless after a hundred years. People interested in exploring ancient Babylonia found certain cone-shaped protruberances in the sides of buildings which proved to be slanting pegs with rounded heads. On the inner side, protected from the elements, were cuneiform inscriptions chronicling the lives of kings and events of national importance. These cylinders were used to impress upon clay what in reality were documents, letters, bills of sale, receipts for money and other transactions. If they were fired they were more enduring than before.

While some of the clay tablets of Babylonia date as far back as 3000 B. C., or about 5000 years ago, the characters, indented while the clay was soft, are as distinct and legible as though they had been made yesterday. Some are a foot across; they are quite hard, and if burned would only become harder; even if they were broken they could be joined together again and most if not all of the inscription preserved. Some of the small tablets were pillow-shaped and the inscribed surface was incased in a layer of clay, making a kind of envelope that could be broken off when the tablet was to be read.

Thousands of these tablets were guarded in the great royal and temple libraries of Assyria and Babylonia, and some of these collections have been unearthed in our day, and have afforded invaluable material to the historian. The famous Rosetta Stone, made under the direction of Ptolemy Epiphanes, and composed of a black basaltic rock, 3½x2½ feet in dimensions, is one of these records. It was created in 195 B.C., and cut into its surface are three parallel groupings composing three languages, one Greek and two forms of the Egyptian tongue. This stone was the first clue to the decipherment of the Egyptian hieroglyphs. While the British Museum preserves a large number of these treasures, including those from the great library of Assur Canipal, our Johns Hopkins University, and especially the University of Pennsylvania and our own New York Public Library, which possesses a small but valuable collection, contain very valuable and extensive collections, among them the so-called "Nippur Library," which have not yet been fully utilized. Certain of these tablets record historic events that happened at a date as early or even earlier than that traditionally assigned to the Biblical Deluge. Many important records were incised on stone pillars, notably the famous laws of the old-time Mesopotamian king of Hamurabi, dating from about 2000 B.C. These may well call to mind the ten Mosaic commandments carved on two tablets of stone.

The Egyptians inscribed their records on papyrus, made from the stem or pith of the papyrus plant, and many of these records, which may be seen in the Metropolitan and other museums, date back 3,000 years or more; they are particularly clear and legible when found in dry places, and had been protected from the air. In Western Asia papyrus was not used because it does not grow there. In Egypt it only grows on the upper Nile and was used there very early, whereas clay was used in Western Asia. One of the new Egyptian rooms in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, was probably used by the superintendent of the treasury of Upper and Lower Egypt, and in which the objects date from the XX Dynasty, 1200-1090 B. C., is entirely covered with historic inscriptions; in fact, enough to fill a number of columns in a good-sized newspaper. As this buried chamber, the offering chamber of the tomb of Seb ek-mes, was found where neither cold nor heat could affect it, it could have existed for 10,000 years longer without injury to its mural inscriptions. The superintendent was either a faithful servant, well esteemed and trusted, or else his position was lucrative as treasurers' positions sometimes are.

The Inscriptions of the Fifth Dynasty, 3400 B.C., appeared on limestone, slate, ivory, etc.; the earliest papyri are said to date from about 2400 B.C. Inscribed scarubs have come down to us from the period of the VI to XII Dynasty, approximately 2600-1800 B.C., and we have texts engraved on glazed soapstone and baked glazed clay from the XX Dynasty, 1200-1100 B.C. Hence a great variety of material was used by the ancient Egyptians to perpetuate the memory of great events, and these materials were in general so well chosen that after the lapse of several millenniums they can be read with little difficulty by Egyptologists to-day.

I was struck in going through some of the European museums to find tablets made of thin sheet-lead of a thickness of not more than one-sixteenth to one-eighth of an inch with words of commendation inscribed upon them, one in particular a Hungarian soldier who had fought with great credit in the Roman service in the 4th Century. These historic evidences of merit had lain buried for from 1,400 to 1,800 years, but they were still legible, and would last thousands of years longer. Their preservation was due to the fact that while lead is readily oxidized, the slight surface oxidation serves to protect the lead under it, just as the inside of a water-pipe is rarely affected more than skin-deep, as it were, and on the same principle that white lead paint preserves the woodwork of a house from fifty to one hundred years, if it is really lead and not one of the near substitutes for the metal.

Of the various metals that have been used for inscriptions, iron is absolutely impossible for a preserver of valuable records because it rusts so readily. Copper often deteriorates entirely, becoming a rough carbonate; silver, however, is an excellent metal for this purpose, the surface altering into a black sulphide. When exposed to the action of salt water this metal becomes a translucent chloride of silver, known as serargyrite or "horn-silver." Gems are durable, but they are too small to engrave a treaty upon, or the message of a president or the description of an invention. Modern science, however, has provided us with a simpler yet thoroughly efficient method for assuring the perpetuation and correctness of valuable records. In some of these, the inscription can even be made by direct dictation.

A handful of antique coins and gems scattered about in the various museums of the world afford in themselves abundant evidence that the art of coinage and gem-engraving in Greece and other ancient civilizations had attained the very highest standards of beauty and fidelity to nature; indeed, the finest work of this kind has rarely been equalled and never surpassed. These give to us, well preserved, the gems from 4000 B.C., as well as portraits and records of kings, queens, cities and art. These are in gold, silver and bronze and are often valued a hundred times more for their rarity and beauty.

There are many ways of preserving history. Portraits executed by the medalist and the sculptor, the painter, the engraver and the etcher, printed on vellum or paper, give us ideas of the individual as others have seen him, and therefore furnish us with only a one-sided aspect of his appearance and general character. But with the invaluable aid of the phonograph record and the moving picture we have a view taken from actual life, and as true to it as a lifeless production can possibly be. The record, therefore, should be compact, intelligible and indestructible. If pure linen cloth or asbestos in combination with cloth were used it might possibly be suitable to produce a very permanent record.

The destruction by fire of the famous Alexandrian Library by Caliph Omar in 641 A.D., including as it did the loss of the 600,000 or more priceless volumes, gathered in the course of many centuries, was felt to be a world-wide catastrophe—the disappearance of the last intelligible link between the ancient and modern civilizations; and much literature which would have thrown considerable light on the more intimate life of the people of those days and their systems of government has now passed away forever. After the late English-Egyptian war, during which the hospitals over which Red Cross flags were flown alone escaped bombardment, an international agreement, due to the Geneva Conference, was made to exclude hospitals from bombardment in time of war, and these buildings were also to be protected in other ways from attack.

If at the next meeting of The Hague Tribunal an agreement is reached by which libraries and museums will always be exempted from destruction during a war, one great source of danger to the records of history will be removed. It would be most desirable that some such international agreement should be made in regard to the preservation of libraries or museums from wanton destruction in the case of the bombardment of a city. Would that an international agreement of the kind had existed when the Alexandrian library was in jeopardy! Indeed, even as recently as the English-Egyptian war of 1882 the existence and enforcement of regulations for the protection of valuable records might have saved untold trouble regarding land titles, caused by the loss or destruction of legally recorded documents.

A number of clay tablets were shown by Dr. Kunz by way of illustration, and one of the largest and finest papyri from Asioot, with a Greek inscription thereon, appeared as Exhibit A.

Dr. Kunz then read a letter from Thomas A. Edison expressing sympathy with the aims and objects of the association and regretting his inability to be present. By way of substitution Mr. Edison sent a phonographic record of his speaking voice, which was then put on the phonograph and reproduced. The cylinder will form a part of the new society's records.

Dr. Talcott Williams, of Philadelphia, being called upon, spoke briefly in a reminiscent manner describing his meeting with Edison when he visited Washington to obtain a patent on his phonograph.

A paper by Arthur Dillon on the proper kind of a building to be used by the young society was then read by Charles R. Lamb, the decorator.

Certain records of the association were then placed by Arthur Dillon and Karl A. Heber in a glass jar, which was deposited in a tile cylinder and embedded in concrete, many of those in attendance helping to place the concrete in position. A brass inscription was set in the top of the cylinder as a finality and a flashlight photograph was then taken of the assembly as grouped about the newly filled cylinder.

Among those present were John Barrett, Director International Bureau of American Republics, Washington, D. C.; Alex. Konta, William T. Evans, Col. D. L. Brainard, U.S.A.; John DeWitt Warner, Roger Foster, Frederick S. Lamb, A. S. Van Westrum, Edward Hagaman Hall, Joseph E. Chamberlain, Editor the Evening Mail; E. M. Cravath, Justin McGrath, Geoffrey Konta, Alfred H. Saunders, editor The Moving Picture News, and Henry Collins Walsh.

Indianapolis, Ind.—William Haueisen will erect a new theater at 326 Indiana avenue, to cost $12,000.

Chicago, Ill.—M. Daley, 1755 Garfield avenue, will erect a moving picture theater at 5527 South Halsted street at a cost of $5,000.

Complimentary Letters by The Hundreds Reached Us

After the release of "Santa Catalina," the sensational AMERICAN containing the wonderful pictures of the famous Pacific Submarine Gardens.

An "Eye Opener" to many, this film conclusively proved our contention that the American public is "California Hungry," anxious to see and know more about the Sunset State.

We SPECIALIZE in Western film. Our company couldn't be improved upon—charming pantomimists, carefully drilled for a certain kind of work. The studio, in beautiful, enchanted, El Cajon Valley, Southern California, is the Dream Home of the Motion-picture manufacturer.

Watch future AMERICANS. They'll cover all that's Best in California—her giant irrigation projects, fruit orchards, and her unrivalled playgrounds.

And remember—

THE STORY
PHOTOGRAPHIC TECHNIQUE
PANTOMIME

Are THREE mighty essentials closely watched in all AMERICAN PICTURES.

"Mid-Winter Trip to Los Angeles"

(Release Date, Jan. 1. Approx. Length, 1,000 Feet)

Ever go to Los Angeles in Mid-Winter? Here's your chance to see the Nation's Playground. Beautiful Pasadena, too, with tantalizing glimpses of romance-encrusted Spanish Missions, the pigeon farm, the alligator farm, some world-famous gardens, a trip up Mt. Lowe, the Gate Above the Clouds, and the longest curving trestle in the World with glorious panorama of surrounding country. Then, there's the ostrich farm, Marengo Avenue in Pasadena, and a perfect Wonderland of charming views found only in gorgeous California. If you've never seen California you'll enjoy it. If you have, you'll enjoy it all over again.

"The Claim Agent's Mis-Adventure"

(Release Date, Jan. 4. Approx. Length, 1,000 Feet)

After years of patient work, Jim struck it rich. He filed his claim, hut no witnesses were present. Then he told the good news to his sweetheart just when that claim agent was about to propose. So the agent stole the claim. Jack was powerless; but his sweetheart didn't feel that way. A hlack mask, a "45" and a threatening voice do wonders, sometimes. She got back that claim. How? Well, you should see.

ON THE SAME REEL: Some extraordinary pictures of broncho-busting for "Flying A" pictures. See how it is done.

American Film Mfg. Co.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK CHICAGO, ILL.

ON THE STROKE OF THREE

Imp Release of December 25th

This picture will rank prominently in the series of dramatic subjects now being released by the Imp Company on Mondays and Thursdays, as it is full of well sustained action from start to finish, giving the performers the very finest opportunities for making strong points.

John Thornton, an ex-forger, begins a new life by getting a job on a farm. There is a run on the local bank while Farmer Custer is absent in New York City. John Thornton is confronted by a grave problem. He sees a way of saving the old farmer's money and, consequently, also saving the old man's daughter from ruin.

So he forges the old man's check for $12,200, makes it payable to himself, rushes off to the bank for the money and obtains it right on the stroke of three.

Meanwhile Farmer Custer in New York City reads of the closing of the bank and returns home, believing himself ruined.

John Thornton also believes himself ruined. But confessing his fault is, of course, forgiven and rewarded with the hand of the farmer's daughter.

The scene here reproduced shows the principal moments in this absorbing story, John Thornton receiving payment of the check; Farmer Custer reading of the closing of the bank.

A CRITICISM

By Captain Clifford J. Baker

A frequent visitor to a motion picture house is sure to often see plays on the curtain, the subject of which he is more or less familiar with. Perhaps the West is more familiar with the Western life plays but the whole country is more or less with the military life, city and rural plays. For this reason the producers of motion plays should be more than careful of the details. The West knows her ways and the West is large; the East knows her ways and the East is large. And at every production of a motion picture play there are more or less in the audience who are familiar with some part of the program.

A few nights since, myself, together with several other former military men, attended a picture theater and among the plays was a semi-military one, by a well-known and usually popular firm, but to us this play, which for plot and acting was good, was made flat and insipid by the gross disregard for true portrayal.

The hero is passing one of the recruiting stations, in front of which was standing the guide or giver of information. Any man of the street knows that only a private is used for this purpose and yet this man had on trousers with a sergeant's stripe, a private's blouse and a cap with no service insignia. Next, we find the hero studying for a commission, a notice of his appointment is brought in by a—what shall I call him, a mongrel? Great stress is laid on his salute, and it is not in vogue for enlisted men to salute each other, and the hero was still a private; but this messenger's costume—the same cap with no cap ornament, a blouse with but one chevron, that of a sergeant and of enormous size and of a kind never worn by a United States soldier, but from military college, and private's trousers, (no stripes).

Next we see him entering the office of his superior officer, and while the message read that he was appointed second lieutenant, he appears in an enlisted man's cap, and instead of a plain field in his shoulder straps he is wearing the two bars of a captain. In this costume he appears several times, and then again at a military ball he, as well as all of the other officers present, have failed to comply with military etiquette, and their hands are encased in no gloves where white ones should be. This mistake is also repeated at the wedding services where the hero is being married to the colonel's daughter.

These are the faults to be found with one military play, and when it is taken into consideration the number of soldiers, ex-soldiers, national guardsmen and ex-guardsmen, their wives, mothers, fathers and sweethearts, who are all more or less acquainted with the goings and comings of the soldier, is it not worth while to have these plays as true to life as possible?

Then in other lines, we see a cowboy ride up and tie his pony to a post. Any boy knows that he ties him to the ground in reality; the kissing of Indian lovers, (what tribe of American Indians kiss?); the policeman with his nightstick hung on the wrong side; the farmer milking at the cow's left side, (how do they get Boss to stand for it).

True, motion pictures are still in their youth, but would it not be a long step in the right direction to have a person of actual knowledge and experience to criticise and correct the defects in the different productions?

CINES CO.

OF ROME

ITALIAN-TURKISH WAR

No. 3

THE THIRD SERIES CONTAINING A GREAT MANY EXCITING INCIDENTS, WILL BE RELEASED DECEMBER 28th. SEND FOR SYNOPSIS.

445 BROOME ST.

NEW YORK

Telegraphs, Cines New York Telephone, Spring 9232

The DELHI DURBAR

FIRST

GAUMONT INDEPENDENT

RELEASE

On or About January 15th, 1912

A MAGNIFICENT SUBJECT

A WONDERFUL SUBJECT

A FEATURE SUBJECT

The Greatest Film of the Last Ten Years

Gaumont

KING GEORGE V

Crowned Emperor of India, Showing 200 Princes of India and Their Suites, With

1,000 ELEPHANTS

1,000 ELEPHANTS

In Their Trappings of Gold and Precious Stones

AFTER THE ELEPHANTS WE WILL RELEASE

40 ROARING LIONS

embodied in one of the most sensational dramatic features of the day, entitled

THE CHRISTIAN MARTYRS

A story of the suffering and final triumphs of the Christians in Pagan Rome. Hand coloured throughout.

REMEMBER—These are our first REGULAR releases, and although we could obtain more money by selling exclusive state rights, yet we prefer to let the regular exchange obtain these features in the same way as an ordinary reel.

GAUMONT CO., Flushing, N. Y. Agents

GETTING A REP UNDER DIFFICULTIES

By "Our Roving Commissioner"

IN the hills about Saranac Lake a little city has sprung up like a mushroom in the night. This city is not like the modern conventional idea of city—it is a city in miniature—a city for the accommodation of moving picture actors and actresses—a city built for the convenience of the "Republic" Stock Company during their sojourn in the hills for the purpose of picture making.

MR. HERBERT L. MILES

A company of fourteen people have been sent there under the leadership of Director Davis, with no less than twelve scenarios to work their way through.

In this little beehive of moving picture industry there at present dwells, in the services of the Republic Film Co., a unique individual—unique in his accomplishments. Wm. F. Cooper, "Caribou Bill" as he is commonly called, happens to be quite well known to the writer, and it was with an exclamation of surprise that I greeted the pictures of himself and his noble dogs when handed to me, for the memory of a pleasant evening spent at my home with him and several other Alaskan pioneers is alive in my memory.

"Caribou Bill," the well-known Alaskan mail carrier, who with his fifteen dogs is making a tour around the world, and whom we hope will be enabled to win the $10,000 reward offered by the Nome Sweepstakes Association to the successful contestant, has had a most interesting and varied career. He was one of those rolling stones who roam from place to place, until at last they find their proper niche, which "Caribou Bill" seems to have done when to his lot fell, in the early days of Alaska's gold strike, the carrying of the mails, which happened in the year 1900. On his trips out from Cape Nome he carried 740 pounds of mail by dog team, over 2,340 miles of the most treacherous territory of the North.

And we find that it is none other than this famous dog musher that the Republic Film Company have pressed into service in obtaining some of the most interesting pictures of the kind ever put out. There, away from all modern conveniences such as we in the city are accustomed to, the "Rep" Stock Co. is braving the cold blasts of winter in the hills near Lake Saranac. They have also arranged for the services of Fort Ticonderoga with its soldiers, and in addition to all the other novelties to be introduced into the "Rep" films, in the wilds of the hills they have run across a man who has four trained wolves and also a herd of deer; therefore "Rep" will be expected to produce something of a high order. The first picture sent down from the little city in the hills is said to be of marvelous photographic quality. Among the stories to be produced at and about Lake Saranac are "A Brand from the Burning" and "The Lone Trail."

The Republic Co. are getting out a fine quality of advertising matter as the accompanying cut of one of their poster samples will show.

The "Rep" are doing good work; their "Daniel Boone," to be released January 13th and 14th, is looked forward to with a great deal of interest, as are also "Before Yorktown," "The Council of the Six Nations" and the many others to come.

Mr. Herbert L. Miles, the able manager of the Republic Film Co., and his assistant, Mr. Isador Bernstein, are men who, owing to their past record of usefulness in the indutsry, are bound to inspire confidence in the patrons of moving picture entertainment and trade.

The securing of the services of "Caribou Bill" is good business on the part of the Republic Film Co. The public is looking for novelties, and the exhibitor and exchange man looking wearily for something new will welcome this new venture of "Rep" with a great deal of warmth. There is somehow always a certain glamour about the hero that fascinates the ordinary individual. The hero worshipper is a large quantity in the stream of humanity. They will have their fill when "Caribou Bill" appears upon the screen, for he is a

MR. ISADOR BERNSTEIN

MR. FRANK McGLYNN

MRS. W. F. COOPER

MR. WILLIAM DAVIS

MR. T. HAYES HUNTER

REPUBLIC'S ALASKAN DOGS CUTTING A PATH AT SARANAC LAKE

AN EXACT REPRODUCTION OF THE FAMOUS FORT AT BOONESVILLE WHERE 45 PIONEERS REPELLED SEVERAL ATTACKS OF OVER 500 INDIANS, KILLING MANY—IN "DANIEL BOONE"

very hero among men, having many times come near, very near, the jumping off place; and having many times risked his life to save others. There is a fascination about the pioneer hero of the frozen North. Coming from that land of mystery we hail the traveler with a great deal of curiosity as one approaching from the very jaws of death. Howevei, some of us could tell pleasant stories about the far north Alaska, from whence has hied "Caribou Bill." There is a beautiful summer season in that north land when vegetables will thrive, and wild flowers bloom—blowers of such brilliant beauty as we have not seen here in the East. And the gold and the copper and the wonderful wealth of timber and other valuables of Alaska are bringing about at last a more civilized, modern mode of thought with regard to our northern possessions. And this is the land from whence the latest drawing card of the Republic Film Company has come, with a wealth of material in its train to be worked into pictures by the scenario writer.

Be on the lookout for the Alaskan and his dog teams.

CARIBOU BILL

Caribou Bill and His Dog Team at "Rep's" Winter Quarters at Saranac Lake : : :

ONE OF THE DOGS

CARIBOU BILL AND DOGS

PATHFINDERS—SEVERAL OF THE REPUBLIC CO. SEEKING LOCATIONS

DOG TEAMS RESTING DURING A TEDIOUS JOURNEY

BUILDING CABINS FOR REPUBLIC PRODUCTIONS

FACSIMILE OF REPS POSTER FOR DANIEL BOONE

Ministers and Educators Review Film of Daniel Boone as Produced by Republic Film Co.

Something in the way of a novelty in censorship took place a few evenings ago in the projecting room of the Republic Film Co. when the management invited a number of ministers, settlement workers and educators to review the picture of Daniel Boone, recently produced by this firm, which will be released on Saturday and Sunday, January 13th and 14th.

After the picture has been thrown on the screen and the guests made thoroughly acquainted with the story, all with one accord made the statement that if the film companies would only put on such historical pictures and with such accuracy moving pictures would soon become the greatest factor in the education of the coming generation.

The picture follows the life of America's foremost pioneer from early childhood to his death, which occurred when Boone was eighty-four years old. It accurately portrays his first battle with the Indians, his courtship, marriage, his heroism in time of danger, rescue of pioneer trains from the savages and the many hardships he endured on his journey across the Cumberland Mountains. The visitors forgot their dignity entirely when the famous battle of Fort Booncsville was shown. They applauded enthusiastically the heroic men and women in the fort as they bravely kept up the uneven battle. One settlement worker, braver than the rest, confessed that she was entirely carried away by the scene.

It behooves the other producers to sit up and take notice as this picture is not alone of value to the people who have the advantage of education, but to those who have no advantages of learning other than an evening spent at the picture houses.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Fern Amusement Co. will erect another picture theater at Third and Clarke streets.

Longview, Ohio.—Plans have been prepared for a new theater and auditorium at this place to cost $75,000.

POSTPONED POSTPONED

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

FROM SUNDAY, DECEMBER 24TH TO SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31ST.

A Big Sacred Sunday feature that will interest 365 days in the year—A story of love, sorrow and happiness. The first on the three-a-week horizon.

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3RD.

HIS MUSICAL SOUL

A fat man develops a love for a magical trombone because his rival is an accomplished violinist. The fat man's soul is not very musical, but he is persistent and tries hard to be a musician, but his neighbors interfere.

RELEASED SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31ST.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

The story deals with an irascible old miser, a dull-headed policeman, a good-natured sergeant and a benevolent woman of wealth. These characters directly influence the life of a widow and her little wide-eyed daughter.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JANUARY 5TH, 1912.

OUR POOR RELATIONS

In his opulence a son forgets his poor mother in the country. In fact, he tells his wife and wealthy friends that he is an orphan. His suffering mother is brought to his side by fate, and the snobbish son is made to see how wrong has been his way of living and thinking.

READ THE BIG NEWS: BILLY QUIRK IS WITH US. WATCH OUR COMEDIES.

Solax

CHRISTMAS EVE IN PICTURE LAND

By William Lord Wright

The Stars and Stripes

'Twas Christmas Eve in Pleasant Grove; the night was bitter cold.
A stranger wandered down the street, his form was bent and old.
He paused before a building bright, and stood there in the snow
Watching the merry villagers as they entered a picture show.

"Come in, friend," said the manager, as he noticed the figure drear,
"There's light and warmth for such as you, this season of good cheer!"
Timidly, with faltering step, the old man entered the place,
No greetings kind for the shabby tramp—but many a sneering face.

A vocalist burst forth in song, 'twas about the Union Jack,
And the auditors with wild applause then demanded the singer back.
Lights flashed; the song was done; then pictured upon the screen
Was a story of the United States—a playlet of wartime scene.

A battlefield was pictured there, and a banner came into view.
Star-bespangled was its folds, with red and white and blue.
Unconsciously, the stranger aged, raised feeble hand to salute;
His action was greeted with hisses, loud laughter, derisive hoot!

The bent form then became erect, the faltering voice rang clear,
"Friends," the old man shouted, "there's a banner that I hold dear!
I've followed it in battle; through bloodshed wrong or right;
Do not insult the stars and stripes, I ask of you, this night!"

'Twas Christmas Eve in Pleasant Grove; the night was bitter cold.
The stranger tottered up the aisle, his form was bent and old.
He paused without the building bright and stood there in the snow
Listening while the audience cheered his flag in the picture show.

* * * *

Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. This means YOU!

* * * *

Ohio National Exclusive Film Exchange Co., Cleveland, incorporated; capital, $15,000.

* * * *

Nursery Jingle

Jack and Jill went up the hill
Both wading in the snow.
All Jack would say, "'Tis Christmas day;
Let's visit the picture show!"

* * * *

First Christmas Shopper—Come on, let's take in the Virginia reel.

Second Christmas Shopper—I do not believe in dancing.

F. C. S.—Who said anything about dancing? There's a Southern film on at the "Happy Moments" Theater!

* * * *

Last Sunday afternoon Toledo newsboys were treated to Mutt and Jeff, Grant and Lincoln and hand-colored slides of Roosevelt in Colorado.

* * * *

Broke Up the Show

'Twas the night before Christmas, and all through the house
Not a creature was stirring excepting a mouse!
With a squeak and a scramble it ran up the aisle,
And hosiery displays embraced every known style!

A Request Refused

Kriss Kringle sat in his easy chair and he smoked his pipe of clay. He turned the leaves of a well-thumbed book—'twas approaching Christmas day. "The boys are asking for much this year; 'tis not like the grand old times, when many a present went the rounds at the cost of a few stray dimes."

"Let's see," and jolly old St. Nick blew forth a cloud of smoke. "I wonder, now, what I can do with the prayers of these picture folk! Here's a picture show man in Lonelyville—it's a popular place these days. This man requests as a special gift the stopping of Wild West plays. I'm mighty sorry for this poor cuss, there isn't the slightest chance of killing the merry cowboys off or choking the Indian dance!"

Kriss Kringle rose from his easy chair, and he put the big book aside. "This proprietor of a picture house requests too much," he cried. "I might give to him a palace grand, a bank or an automobile, but I have no power at all to stop a release of the Wild West reel!" And dear old Santa mounted his sleigh and sped over ice and snow, and he finished his work early Christmas eve and took in a picture show.

* * * *

A band of angry Italians invaded a Cleveland picture show and threatened to demolish the place unless the proprietor should withdraw at once a film depicting alleged atrocities perpetrated by the Italian soldiers in Tripoli. The place was not demolished. 'Nuff said.

* * *

Troubles between the United States Amusement Co., operating picture theaters along Fifth street, Cincinnati, and the Moving Picture Operators Union were formally settled in court. The company is employing union operators.

* * *

The Cleveland Plain-Dealer, editorially, denounces so-called "Murder Films." Says the Plain-Dealer: "Catering to the morbid fascination of mankind to show an interest in scenes of a harrowing nature, the moving picture makers have on several occasions prepared films of this character. It is gratifying to note, however, that in almost every instance the exhibitor of such pictures has been barred by the authorities."

* * * *

New Year Resolutions

Writer of the picture dope does honor to the screens.
Walking arm in arm with Hope, he'll burn old magazines.

Owner of the film concern, on coming New Year's day,
With determination firm, vows better picture play.

Manager of the picture house fills us all with joy;
Pledges self in 1912 to choke the drummer boy!

Editors of the manuscripts also get the bug.
Promise before many days to kill the kiss and hug.

Editor of the Picture News tried to do his part.
Will eliminate this bunk from the very start!

* * * *

The interest shown in the cinematographic department now being carried by many of the larger Sunday newspapers has resulted in carrying the features to the daily editions. There appears every day in a Cleveland daily newspaper a list of the best picture plays, both Licensed and Independent, and where they may be seen. The films are listed according to information furnished by the film exchanges and exhibitors.

* * * *

The Star Theater, Independent, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, thinks nothing of using a half-page display advertisement in the daily newspapers when the management has some extra good films to display. The Solax film "For Big Brother's Sake," and the American release "The Blotted Brand" are played up lately in a large display ad.

* * * *

The Man Behind

After you eat turkey and enjoy the Christmas meal,
You walk into a picture show to view the latest reel.
Delighted with the picture, you wish others of that kind
Projected there upon the screen by the busy man behind.

The man behind! The man behind!
A hard-worked individual you will find.
He will get no Christmas turkey—
Just continues being jerky.
Always try to please the man behind!

After you see the show, inspect the clearest views,
Search for the proprietor and ask him all the news.
"In that operator, Mr. Jenks, you certainly have a find!"
"Indeed," replies the manager. "Why, he's just the man behind!"

The man behind! The man behind!
A toiling individual does the grind.
He will get no Christmas eatings—
Nor merry Yule-tide greetings.
Always try to please the man behind!

* * * *

What They Wish in Their Stockings

Manufacturer wants more business.
Exchanges would like a good buying theater at every cross-roads.
Editors would appreciate more original plots.
Theater proprietors are looking for the S. R. O. sign.
Authors would like one hundred dollars a manuscript.
The public would be glad to receive less Wild West plays.

* * * *

Our good friend Kin Hubbard, of the Indianapolis (Ind.) Daily News, is world-famous as the originator of "Abe Martin." Every day, "Abe" has a few witticisms under an execrable single-column chalk plate. Every year "Abe's" funny sayings are embodied in "Abe Martin's Almanac," which commands an extended sale and is eagerly sought for by lovers of humor. "Abe" has accomplished a great deal toward promoting the popularity of the moving picture. Several times a week he has something to say on the subject. One of his comic pictures recently gave the interior of a country restaurant. Over the lunch counter was suspended a sign reading as follows:

"Bell rings one minute before the film starts."

Here's another: "Th' Two Orphans packed th' Idle Hour last night. Th' reel went from here t' Morgantown."

* * * *

Some scenario writers are strenuously objecting to what they term mutilation of manuscripts. It is claimed that one or two film concerns, when returning rejected manuscripts, return the scrips in such shape that they must be rewritten before being presentable. If this is a fact, condolence should be extended to the authors. A majority of the writers take great pains in preparing presentable scenarios and when they are submitted, carefully typewritten and possessing attractiveness, it is rather discouraging that the copy shrould be returned to the writer, discolored, bearing thumbmarks and with lead pencil scribbling on the back. It is complained that one film company has a system by which a number is written across the front page of the manuscript in indelible lead pencil. Authors submittting clean, attractive scrips should be encouraged. Those careless in preparing their plots—well, that is another story.

* * * *

According to the Dayton (Ohio) Daily News, P. H. Selig was in that city recently and admitted his visit there was directly connected with the idea of opening a central branch of the company in Ohio. Selig is quoted as asserting that the motion picture had not only won its way into the liking of the public but that in a few years it will totally eclipse the standard playhouse.

* * * *

We know of one city of 9,000 inhabitants that has but one moving picture theater, which seats but 300 people. This city is picture-shrow crazy. There are no business rooms wide enough to conform to the State laws regarding new picture theaters. There are several desirable sites where theaters could be erected, and another picture theater in this particular city would prove a paying investment. Write to me, care of the News, inclosing postage, and the name of the city will be divulged.

COMET

RELEASED MONDAY, JAN. 1st, 1912

SIMPLE LIVES

(1,000 FT.)

A Happy New Year picture with a Happy New Year ending of the love affairs of a beautiful country girl who is induced to visit the great metropolis and pose as an artist's model and her rustic suitor. Nothing has been left undone to make this reel one of the catchiest of bucolic stones.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JAN. 5th, 1912

TEMPERAMENTS

(1,000 FT.)

A musical love story. Everybody loves music, and everybody who sees this picture will love poor Hans, the gifted but down-on-his-luck violinist. Entirely unlike anything you have ever exhibited, and a sure-to-please subject that will make itself felt at the box office window.

Through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

COMET FILM COMPANY

344-346 EAST 32d STREET NEW YORK, N. Y.

Oak Park, Cal.—The new Mikle Theater, on Thirty-fifth street, is being erected at a cost of $14,000.

Richmond, Va.—The W. A. V. Amusement Company will erect a theater.

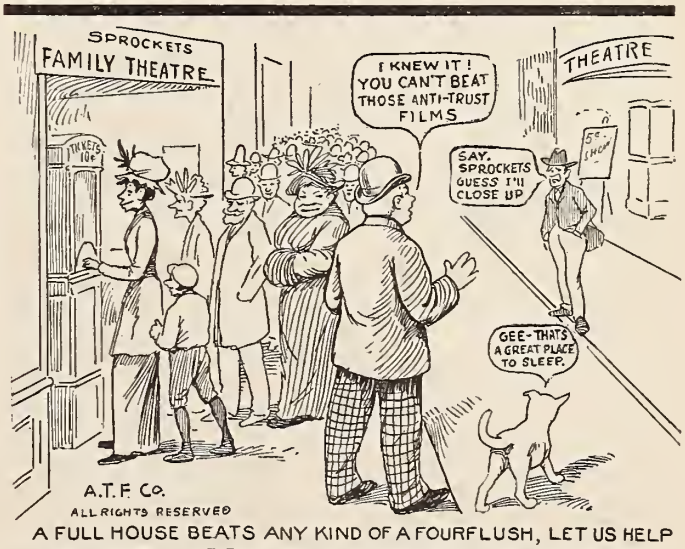
Virginia, Minn.—R. A. McLean is erecting a new theater building at a cost of $20,000.

Galion, Ohio.—A new opera house is to be erected here at a cost of $50,000.

Seattle, Wash.—Sullivan & Considine will erect a new $250,000 theater at Yamhill and Seventh avenues.

McAlester, Okla.—The Busby Theater was damaged by fire to the amount of $500.

Butte City, Mont.—Nelson & Peterson will erect a new theater at a cost of $35,000 for the Montana Amusement Company.



A FULL HOUSE BEATS ANY KIND OF A FOURFLUSH, LET US HELP YOU TO GET THAT FULL HOUSE. ANTI TRUST FILM CO. CHICAGO.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

FROM THE OBSERVATORY

By G. F. Blaisdell

THE Modern Historic Records Association is forging ahead. Herbert L. Bridgman, the editor of the Brooklyn Standard Union, is the president and W. T. Larned is the secretary. It outlines its plans as follows:

"The Modern Historic Records Association, employing the inventions of our age, purposes to preserve in imperishable form the record of history, heretofore 'writ in water,' in order that future generations may know the exact measure of our wisdom and our ignorance, our achievements and our failures."

* * * *

A number of New York Italians journeyed 'way, 'way out to Cleveland to arouse the Italians of that town against the Vitagraph's film entitled "War." Several hundred descended on the Cameraphone, tore up advertising matter and forced the manager to agree to stop the exhibition of the picture. The Italians claimed the pictures were posed in Brooklyn and that the men in the pictures did not wear the uniforms of the men now fighting in Tripoli.

It is only fair to the Vitagraph people to say that they did not advertise the picture as the real thing. What was said by the producers of "War" in advance of its exhibition is rather interesting viewed in the light of events subsequent to its release. The periodical "Vitagraph" announced it as "An incident of the siege of Tripoli. A faithful reproduction of scene described by an eye witness."

The advertisement goes on: "The Vitagraph Company of America respectfully dedicates this picture to the International Peace Conference and to all civilized and intelligent human beings as a plea for UNIVERSAL PEACE. 'What is war?' We realize what war means when we look at this overpowering picture of the slaughter of the innocent and helpless." As a clincher the boost closes with this: "An eloquent and resistless argument for peace. This is a capacity and waiting line film."

The film has proved hardly a peace argument up to date. Rather it has been provocative of riot.

* * * *

Since the foregoing was written the newspaper Il Giornale Italiano has received letters from the Vitagraph Company and the General Film Company stating that no more films of "War" will be put on the market and furthermore that those already in circulation will be withdrawn. The letters state that a misunderstanding has arisen through the action of exhibitors unwarrantably advertising the pictures as "actual scenes."

* * * *

The new People's Settlement Building in Wilmington, Del., is to be equipped with a complete moving picture plant, the gift of Mrs. Dexter A. Hall, of Boston. The apparatus is to be installed in the gymnasium, seating 800 persons, and is expected to be ready for use during the holidays.

* * * *

The Boston Record tells of an amusing incident that brought laughter from several hundred persons recently in a moving picture house in Dorchester. Two stout women, each probably capable of tipping the scales at 200 pounds, tried to pass each other between the seats. They became firmly wedged, and try with all their might neither could budge an inch. The occurrence struck the women as funny, and they joined in the laughter with the spectators. Two ushers finally released them.

According to the Engineering Review, the only states which have specific laws on ventilation of moving picture houses are Ohio and Kansas, while only two cities, San Francisco and Chicago, have taken up the subject. At a recent meeting of the New York chapter of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers there was read a paper relating to the necessity of ventilation in picture show places.

* * * *

John Schliniski, a boy of eleven, was so impressed by a train-wrecking scene in a moving picture—so he told the judge, anyway—that he placed an obstruction on the New Haven's tracks at Unionville, Conn. The first engineer along, however, saw the dangerous object in time to stop his train.

* * * *

A cable message from Charles Urban to the American Kinemacolor Company says the ceremonies of the Durbar passed off according to schedule, and that Mr. Urban, who is the official photographer, will have as complete a set of pictures of the Indian pageants as he made of those connected with the Coronation in London last June.

* * * *

A negress in Denver has been awarded $500 damages against a picture show proprietor because he refused to allow her to sit in the particular part of his house she desired to ornament.

* * * *

Operators in Youngstown, Ohio, have organized, with A. J. Roshell as president and Joseph Steadman as secretary.

* * * *

The Government Consular and Trade Report announces that a moving picture plant, the first to be established in the Orient, will be erected in Manila in the near future if the plans of the Oriental Moving Picture Co., recently incorporated, are carried out. The new company intends to establish branches where moving pictures may be shown in nearly every town in the Philippines, besides in the larger cities of China and Japan. Branches in Hongkong and Shanghai have already been planned for.

* * * *

The Alexander Amusement Company plans to build sixty picture show buildings in and about Cleveland. They are to be fireproof and modern.

* * * *

A majority of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has handed down a decision affirming a fine of $20 imposed on a moving picture exhibitor for displaying on Sunday "The Life of Christ," at which an admission was charged. This, it may be assumed, means there will be no more Sunday picture shows in the great State of Texas.

The presiding judge, in a dissenting opinion, after calling attention to the fact that the House Judiciary Committee recently killed a bill prohibiting Sunday shows, thereby proving the intent of the legislators and also indicating their disbelief in the truth of the claim that picture houses were theaters within the meaning of the existing statutes, says:

"No one ever heard a moving picture called a theater, and if they did their sense certainly deceived them if they thought when viewing a moving picture exhibition that they were witnessing a theatrical performance. By no stretch of construction or even of imagination can this be correct."

* * * *

The Louisville Photoplay Association has been organized, with the following officers: Louis Dittmar, president; M.

START THE YEAR RIGHT
THERE ARE TWELVE MONTHS OF SUCCESS IN THE NEW YEAR FOR THE MAN WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6

Profit by the experience of thousands of users of POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6. The machine that is built like a rock, the machine that runs like a clock, with freedom from noise and absence of flicker.

It is the machine the wise ones are buying. That's why its sales exceed the combined sales of all other machines on the market. Would this be so if it were not the best machine in the world to-day?

POWER'S NO. 6 have found a home in every corner of the civilized world, and are recognized everywhere as the very highest standard of motion picture machine construction.

You must "deliver the goods" in order to keep your house full, and the only machine for this purpose is POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6.

Write for catalogue D and special proposition.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, NEW YORK

For fourteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

Switow, first vice-president; Irvin Simons, second vice-president; Joseph Stuerle, secretary; Max Simons, treasurer.

* * * *

When John R. Binns, the wireless operator who distinguished himself in the exciting events following the collision between the Republic and the Florida nearly three years ago, declined to pose in moving pictures, the Vitagraph Company went right ahead and put out a film purporting to contain the real Binns. It did not, however,. Binns sued. He got $12,500 damages. The verdict was set aside as excessive and a new trial ordered unless Binns would consent to accept $2,500. Binns declined. He carried the case to the Appellate Division, which has now declared that the lower court erred in setting aside the verdict. Unless the Vitagraph carries the case to the Court of Appeals it looks as if Binns will collect.

In which event he will get his reward for a heroism greater than that which he displayed on the sinking steamships—refusing to capitalize a performance of a plain duty, even though that duty was unusually well carried out.

* * * *

Here's another line of business suffering from the inroads of the pictures. Thomas Heuston, of St. Louis, former pool and three-cushion billiard champion of America, says that moving pictures have hurt the pool and billiard business. "I have found," he says, "that the business man who used to play billiards or pool for relaxation now drops into a picture show."

* * * *

It cost William Bergin, twenty-one years old, of Waterbury, Conn., just three dollars a minute to turn the crank of a projector for five minutes while the licensed operator went out for a sandwich.

* * * *

"It seems to me," says Charles J. Lukin, superintendent of schools of San Antonio, Texas, "that the advantages to be gained in education by moving pictures are unlimited."

* * * *

A $25,000 fire in New Rochelle, N. Y., was utilized by a picture manufacturer to work off a fire scene. The work of the actor fireman carrying out a little girl and again a "mother" and two doll babies was interrupted by four real firemen carrying out an aged and feeble man. We'll probably soon see in a Thanhouser release the result of the work of the three cameras.

* * * *

Thomas A. Edison recently entertained 150 visitors from the annual convention in New York of the American Mechanical Engineers with an exhibition of his new home moving picture apparatus.

The outfit without the lighting device is no longer than an ordinary camera case. Seventy-eight feet of the reels are equivalent to 1,000 feet of the ordinary reels. They can be carried in the pocket of the operator, while the ordinary reels to give the same number of "feet of story" would weigh twenty pounds. On a film barely half as wide as those now familiar to the public three strips of pictures are printed, not one of which is larger than three-sixteenths of an inch square. The operation consists of winding the strip first one way and then another and back again.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE

Washington, D. C.

Tom Moore is expounding a novel plan for local advertising as well as local interest, in which he will take motion pictures before notable places in the Capital City and throw the same on the screen the following day. The first of these will be before the Plaza Theater, the announcement of which has been placed in the local papers. The public is invited to be present at the taking, and see themselves as the camera caught them during the days following at the various theatres under Mr. Moore's control. This will furnish both amusement and interest to patrons.

* * * *

The third release of the Imp Company has been welcomed, and there is also interest being manifested in the additional weekly release of the Solax Company.

* * * *

The condensed version of Dante's Inferno, prepared for the small theaters, was discarded from the show at the Plaza by Manager Moore himself, as not being up to the standard of material he wished for his patrons. This is a subject too philosophical, allegorical, gruesome, and deep for the frequenters of the five-cent show, who wish to be amused, entertained and quickly instructed. Dante's Inferno belongs on the screens of the high-priced theatres for people of letters, artists and philosophers to appreciate.

* * * *

Manager Davis, of the M Street Theater, is strong for a union among the exhibitors, and he hopes this will be accomplished in the near future. "It will mean much to the industry in Washington when it comes," he says. Mr. Davis welcomes the Sunday release of the Majestic and is looking for the Sunday reel of the Solax.

* * * *

The attendance of the religious services of the Sunshine Temple, under the pastorate of Rev. Zed H. Copp, continues to increase. The Miller Bros., managers of The Leader, have donated their theater and machines for this purpose between the hours of eleven and twelve every Sunday morning. Religious motion pictures are thrown upon the screen, accompanied by a sermon and explanations by the pastor. This new sect of Sunshine Temple finds this animated presentation of the Bible in pictures very effective and impressive. This is practically the turning of a motion picture theater into a church. If the opposers of the industry want to see one of the elevating sides of motion pictures, let them call at The Leader any Sunday morning.

* * * *

"Raising the Maine" is having a week's run at the Belasco Theater, operated by the Schuberts.

Great Northern

THE "KING PIN" OF QUALITY FILMS

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23RD

THE TWINS

A corking good comedy film with a laugh all the way through. On the same reel:

FROM OSTERSUND TO STORLIEN, SWEDEN

A superb travel subject. A magnificent as well as realistic picture which is bound to delight everybody.

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30TH

A REALISTIC MAKE-UP

A laughable comedy in which by the kindly intervention of a real burglar, an actor is enabled to play his part to perfection. Length 752 feet. On the same reel:

SEA AND LANDSCAPES, (DENMARK)

A charming selection of scenic views. Length 246 feet.

ALL FIRST-CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

7 EAST 14TH STREET, NEW YORK

ALL FILMS SOLD THROUGH THE SALES COMPANY

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

We had the extreme pleasure of viewing the Majestic Company's second release, "Love Heeds Not Showers," which was shown at the Optic the first part of the week.

The Majestic people have certainly made good their many promises and have won a place in the exhibitor's heart right from the start.

The program at the Optic, in addition to the Majestic, included a Reliance drama, "A Daughter of Italy," and one of Great Northern's masterpieces, "The Penalty of Her Ambition." These first-run feature pictures, together with one of Miss Roma Scott's excellently rendered songs, composed a most enjoyable bill.

One of the latest features to be introduced by Mr. Woodley is a Mexican Orchestra of ten pieces. These musicians were formerly the principal soloists of a band of sixty pieces, in Mexico City, which was forced to disband during the recent trouble, and in securing these musicians Mr. Woodley has added doubly to the attractions of his popular house.

* * * *

One of our enterprising evening papers came out with an article a few days ago, which said in part, "Superintendent of City Schools J. H. Francis, announced Friday that he has planned a new special school for girls who neglect their studies to patronize moving picture shows. The school is to be somewhat along the same lines as the boys' special schools, instituted for truant and unruly boys."

Did you get that? If not, read it over again. They would put the fair maidens of Los Angeles in a reform school because they forgot themselves to such an extent as to visit those AWFUL picture theaters.

It's the same old story, no matter whether it's a bunch of kids playing hookey, or murder in the first degree, they always blame the picture show. Will they never cease?

* * * *

Tuesday, December 5th, was election day and every theater in the city did capacity business. At night, several of the houses gave the returns and this drew immense crowds.

Incidentally, the people of this enterprising burgh have decided to "Let George Do It," as Mayor George Alexander was re-elected by a big majority.

* * * *

Long Beach has a municipal water system, municipal water frontage, docks and railroad; municipal band and band stand, and a municipal comfort station about to be built, the next move contemplated there is the establishment of a municipal moving picture exhibition where the school children and other young people of that city may be provided with free entertainment.

A meeting was held by the Board of Education, at which the probable cost of such an institution was considered.

Of course the Long Beach exhibitors are tickled to death at the prospect.

* * * *

The Ascot Theater at Ascot Park has changed from Trust to Independent. Service is supplied by Miles Bros. Exchange. This suburban house was one of the General Film Company's stand-bys, having run Trust service for over a year and a half.

* * * *

Mr. H. W. Weston will open his new suburban house Saturday. This theater, which is to be named the Westlake, is situated opposite West Lake Park in one of the finest residential districts in the city. This house is first class in every respect, and as Independent service is to be supplied by Miles Bros., it is sure to be a success.

* * * *

Tally's Theater, 833 South Broadway, has been taken over by the Kinemacolor Company, and from now on will be known as the Kinemacolor Theater. Two shows are given daily.

* * * *

"Arrah Na Pogue," Kalem's three-reel Irish drama, was shown at Clune's Broadway the first part of the week. The Kalem Company certainly did some fine work on this film and it was accorded much enthusiastic applause.

Talking about applause, why don't the people give a little more of it to the silent drama? There are lots of rotten acts in vaudeville, yet they always receive a big hand.

True, the actors in the picture play are not in the house to hear it, but it affords the management the knowledge that you liked the show.

Here in Los Angeles there are several houses down on Main and East First streets that cater to mostly Mexican and Japanese trade, and in these theaters when a heroic action is depicted they applaud most vigorously.

Now, why is it that the foreigner is more appreciative of the most popular form of amusement than the average American?

If these people, some of whom cannot even read the titles of the pictures, are so enthusiastic, don't you think that we are a little slow in giving the photo-play its just dues?

* * * *

The following is dedicated (with all due apology) to the managers and owners of picture theaters:

If the light goes down for an instant
Or the picture gets out of frame,
Don't run up and bawl out the operator—
He is not always to blame.
It might be some bum photography
Or a patch that has come in two;
Don't think that he is forever wrong,
For sometimes it might be you.

And Saturday night when the rush has begun
Don't tell him how fast the reels should be run,
He's putting them through as fast as they can go
Without tearing to pieces and crabbing the show.
Just let him alone and with you he'll stay,
Providing, of course, that you keep up his pay;
The cheapest man is not always the best—
Get a real operator and he'll do the rest.

P. W.

THE TURMOIL—A PLAY IN ONE ACT

By Lindsay Bancroft

(Continued from December 2d Issue, Page 34)

Carl the Caroller:
Good Sirs, ye seem not overjoyous here,
What ails ye? Why this absence of good cheer?
Is it that war is on, and ye debate
What's held in store for you by fickle Fate?
Your hearts should lighten at our cheerful song,
For ye are all honorable men, eschewing wrong
And taking honest tribute every year
From these your victims, one hundred and four per—

A Captive:
A Daniel come to judgment, tell us more
O worthy Carl, of what's for us in store.

The Star Rancho Everybody:
Why waste ye time on this pugnacious Imp,
Who in our sales has put full many a crimp,
And brought me to the verge of letting go
The whole damned business, things have got so slow?
I did intend this eve to quit my work—

The Rock of Wages (A Big Everybody):
Dear Gaston, I will hire thee for a clerk.
Henceforth thy glorious star by night shall shine
Where th' eagle soars by day, and joy be thine
In some quiet nook 'neath California's sun,
Thy fame's not ended, it has but begun.

Carl:
Good sirs, I pray you listen yet awhile,
My comrades now without will ye beguile
With much sweet music, not far need ye seek
For jest and jollity when Imps come three a week.

All the Everybodys:
Strangle this knave, destroy him, put him out;
Such talk as this will put us "up the spout."

A Kingly Stuart:
Nay, comrades, if ye fight, fight fair,
For th' Ailsa Rock an' I are on the square;
We never championed much this shameful course
That 'stead of bettering, leaves us worse and worse:
Fight fair, or by the oaths our fathers swore
The Star and Eagle shall far from ye soar.

First Everybody:
Calmly, S. B., 'tis but a little jest,
We love our enemies, but selves the best.
Let now the carols on, and we will hear
The sort of bluff from which we've naught to fear.

The Carollers Without:
Once there was a Wizard old
Whose wisdom was a wonder;
So wise was he, so we are told,
He never made a blunder.
He chose a dyer for his chief
To keep his minions under,
And then there came a wicked Imp
Who stole the wise man's thunder.

Once there was a mummer who
Was very good at mumming;
Hard times there came, and it was hard
For "Ed" to keep things humming.
Invaded he the Wizard's realm;
Now wasn't this a rouser?
And now the best of pictures made
No better is Than houser.

The Wizard waved his wand above
An island in the sea;
"These English proud shall now be bowed
As serfs," said he, to me.
He's wiser now, since he has crossed
The pond on a Cunarder,
So now's the joke, he's goin' to soak
Us Yankees all the harder.

First Everybody (aside to the Wizard):
Great Seizer, why should we endure all this,
When we have done not anything amiss?

The Wizard:
Have done, do not my o'erwrought mind oppress
With bluffs and bickerings of your dyer distress;
Methinks 'twere better now to call a truce
And talk it over with them:

Bill Diamond:
What's the use?
But still, let's give em hearing, and find out
What plans are theirs, and what they are about.

First Ev.:
Enough, throw wide the doors, and let them in,
We'll quickly stop their sacrilegious din.
(Lawyers, Servitors, etc. Open doors, and now enter the Independents.)
Welcome, good carollers, within our gate,
We now will quick decide your hapless fate.

Bill Diamond:
Shut up, thou blundering idiot, such abuse
Can gain us nothing, and we've much to lose.
(To Independents)
Kind sirs, come in and take your place
At our joint conference there is no disgrace
In meeting foes who fight so well as ye
'Gainst Loup and Sprocket and e'en th' Royaltee.

The Wizard:
Mark well these filmers, they be valiant foes;
We'll speech have with each one, as by he goes.
(Advance Solax)
What! "Votes for women?" Look who advances here:
Great joy is ours to talk with you, my dear.

Solax Suffragettes:
Before your wizardship we make our bow,
The Solax sun still shines.

Bill Diamond:
Who's loony now?
(Advance Rex)

The Wizard:
Great Gods, comes now in royal garb my Porter,
He left my service when he hadn't orter:
How long hast known the business, worthy Kink?

Edward Rex:
Since Edisons developed films in ink.

First Ev. (to Wizard):
'Tis true, for Schneider said it, and he knows:
We'd best go easy on these touchy foes.
(To be concluded)

MAJESTIC FILM COMPANY

Owing to the great demand made upon this Company for their releases and so many enconiums from the exhibitors asking for more of the same quality, they have decided to issue two reels a week, full notice and particulars of which will be given in future issues of the News.

GREATER NEW YORK FILM COMPANY VS. M. P. P. CO., ET AL

We have received from the attorneys of the Greater New York Film Company a printed copy of the Summons, Complaints, Affidavits, Injunction and Order to Show Cause why they should have their license cancelled and why film should not be supplied to them in quantities as heretofore. The brief occupies 125 pages of matter, rather too long to produce in this issue, but commencing with our January issue we will publish the full details to be continued in each issue until complete. Readers interested in legal matters will do well to order the News at once so as not to miss these copies.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—M. Ford will erect a new theater here.

Denver, Col.—G. F. Harvey will change building into picture house at 1629 Curtis street, at a cost of $4,000.

Oak Park, Cal.—P. G. Mikle will erect a new theater here at a cost of $6,000.

Rhinelander, Wis.—Dominic Grevetti has purchased the moving picture theater at Wausau, owned by Hanson & Taylor.

Iowa Falls, Ia.—J. P. Carimichael will erect a new playhouse in Dows.

MEMBERS OF THE CHICAGO CENSORSHIP BOARD

CHICAGO CENSORSHIP BOARD

We have often spoken of the Censorship Board of Chicago in terms of the highest praise. It has been our pleasure to become personally acquainted with every member of the Board, and in general conversation with them to learn their methods of work. They all seem to us to be a set of fair-minded men who are trying to do all they possibly can to uplift the industry, and see that nothing of a damaging character to the audiences is exhibited in Chicago. We saw several reports, the methods of their selection of good subjects, and the elimination of portions of bad films, and knowing the films as we did, we were in hearty accord with their work. In presenting our readers with a photographic group of this body, who are well known to Chicago, we want to introduce them to our readers, and reading from left to right, standing, are T. E. Moran, J. L. Tischart, J. P. Moran. The sitting group, left to right, J. F. Foley, J. J. Farrell, J. W. O'Connor (the sergeant in charge of the Bureau), J. O'Callaghan and F. G. Hirsch.

We think that if "moving pictures must be censored," an authoritative board like that of Chicago is the most powerful, the most useful and the most to be approved.

We want also in this same review to introduce our readers to Sergeant O'Callaghan's daughter, Miss C. O'Callaghan, who is wonderfully versatile as a poetess, a composer of music, and also a very successful scenario writer. Several of her stories have been accepted and have been made into very good pictures. It seems hard to us that we are not able to give the titles of the films produced from her versatile brain, but such is the position of various manufacturers they do not wish credit given to writers of scenarios. Why, we cannot for the life of us understand. The author of a song, of a story, of an article is usually given, why not the name of a scenario writer? We think the time is rapidly coming when the names of the authors will be signed to the scenario, and full publicity will be given to their brains as are given every other author, composer, or story magazine writer.

Ada, Okla.—Plans have been completed for an opera house in this town.

Hutchinson, Kan.—Plans are being prepared by Mann & Gerow for a new opera house, to be erected here at a cost of $30,000.

Rockville Centre, L. I.—Plans are being made for the erection of a new theater here, to cost $25,000.

MISS C. O'CALLAGHAN

YOU, Mr. Exhibitor, Are THE Man!

Listen Why:

Every move that every director or actor in my new makes, is decided on from only one point of view—the Exhibitors'! If you were right here, alongside of my camera man every day, and on my pay roll, you could not more accurately direct the execution of the Exhibitors' View in film-making, than I do in the pictures we're making now.

Duplex Studio

Personally, I'm stuck on emotional work of a certain type. But the fact that I like it is no reason why I should expect you to like it—see my point? I'm giving you what I know you and your audiences want! And I can do it well now because I've got the facilities. Make your exchange show you the Picture Plays and then let my Boost Department help you. Write in for that free weekly envelope.

TWO GOOD STARTS FOR 1912:

TUESDAY, JANUARY 2 — Life's Supreme Treasure

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6 — With the Tide

READ THE SYNOPSES IN THIS ISSUE—THEN DEMAND!

Powers Motion Picture Co.

511 West 42d Street, New York City

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

ANOTHER PICTURE TURNER HEARD FROM

Coldwater, Kan., Nov. 27, 1911.

Mr. Saunders,

Dear Sir—I have been an earnest reader of the ———— for some time, but my short acquaintance with the News has won me over. I like it in every way and think it much more interesting to read than any other moving picture magazine I have had.

With an operators' column in the News, I honestly believe that it will add more operators to its subscription list than any other moving picture magazine published for their approval.

I assure you that by a careful search of your subscription list you will find my name among your—I hope numberless—subscribers, because the News has made a believer of me.

Trusting that this bit of praise to the News will soon have company from other operators, I still remain,

Yours very truly,

"A PICTURE TURNER IN THE STICKS."

POSTALS AND LANTERN SLIDES

The postals, which the Capitol Novelty Company, of Washington, is offering of photoplay stars, are beautiful specimens of art. Here is an excellent opportunity for the Independents to make use of such cards in advertising their theaters and the favorites to be seen at any particular show. These are something worth putting in your postcard album to keep.

The Capitol Novelty Company has also another offering which should appeal to every city, as well as institutes of learning. This is a large collection of excellent lantern slides of the various points of interest in the National Capitol of Washington, including public buildings, monuments and statues, beautiful parks, the presidents of the United States, and many other features. The picture camera has become a sort of text-book and silent traveler in this busy world of ours to-day and the slides prepared by this company furnish an entertaining means of learning lots of things about the Nation's Capital. A concise lecture is also prepared to accompany these views, which will be adaptable to schools and lecture halls.

LUX FILMS

The Crown of Perfection

Released Friday, Dec. 29, 1911

Caught by Cinematography—Drama—Length 636 Ft.

MAKING PIANOS

Industrial—Length 344 ft.

An interesting industrial describing the complicated processes involved in the manufacture of Pianos.

R. PRIEUR, 10 East 15th Street, NEW YORK CITY

TELEPHONE 3427 STUYVESANT

Sold only through Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

ONLY EASTMAN RAW STOCK USED.

THE "KNOCKER" AND THE NECESSITY FOR ORGANIZATION

By Sam Bullock

THE moving picture men of Cleveland in common with those of other localities have been subject to a great deal of criticism and censure, and quite frequently slandered by a certain class of would-be reformers and prudish "cranks" who are continually "knocking" away at the popular photo play house managers with the idea, apparently, that we are a bunch of moral lepers engaged daily in polluting the morals of the rising generation at a-nickel-a-pollute.

It has been quite the fad here and elsewhere for the aforesaid "cranks" to unburden themselves to the limit regarding the "awful consequences" to come in the future "unless something is done by the authorities," etc., etc. They are still living in the moving picture atmosphere of four or five years ago—the "dump" and dark era of moving picturedom; that awful period when censure was well merited in many instances. This particular class had their fling a long time for several reasons; first, the astute manager was too busy devising practical methods of uplifting the business in order to retain the patronage of the solid family man, to notice the "cranks." Secondly, lack of organization left him a helpless "mark" for every shaft hurled at him from whatever source. He was—and is yet—placed in the same category of questionable business enterprises as mentioned by the Baptist Brotherhood of this city recently, to wit: "Sunday illegal liquor sellers, low dance hall proprietors, disorderly houses and moving picture shows!" Now, however, things have changed. Conditions no longer prevail which make it necessary for a moving picture man to feel anything but proud of his connection with the business, and we are all working and hoping for greater improvement to come. We don't need help from impractical prudes and cranks either. We never got their nickel, nor never will. They never inspired or scared us to better things. Our incentive has been to please the family man. To do that means to give a clean show. We have suceeded to the extent of pleasing half a million patrons weekly in Cleveland, so far as carefully compared reports showed at our last meeting. The moving picture man is the peer of any man in any line of business. The grocer is sometimes open to the suspicion of "sanding the sugar," and "faking" his customers on many things handed over the counter. The butcher is often "long" on bone and fat and "short" on the paid-for steak. We dare not flunk at the honest product of the cold-storage-fresh-egg merchant. Our clothing dealer may fit us with London woolens, made in Philadelphia from cotton grown in Alabama.

The above and other esteemed members of the mercantile and business world may be open to suspicion along the lines suggested—but they retain their church membership without question while the moving picture man is made to feel as though he was a thing to be abhorred and yet he cannot "fake" anyone if he wanted to. He must expose by label (posters) just what he has for sale, and give (which he does) a big nickel's worth. Why should he not hold his head high among business men? Why should he not "kick" vigorously and as publicly as possible when he is assailed from pulpit and press, as was the case in Cleveland recently when Rev. Meldrum welcomed Miss Kate Davis, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., to speak in the Old Stone Church, on Public square, on "The Evils of the Moving Picture Theater." Her "sermon" has been forwarded the News as it appeared in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. It ought to be read by every moving picture man in America. Fortunately the managers of Cleveland are at last well organized and the Cleveland Local, after investigation, passed resolutions "calling down" this hasty and ill-advised reverend and the sensation-seeking sociologist from Wilkesbarre.

The writer of this was one of the committee who investigated the matter for the local. We were informed by Chief Officer Thomas Lewis, of the Probation office, Juvenile Court, that "Miss Davis had no authority to quote this office in any way whatever, and she had no foundation in fact to build her statements upon as regards Cleveland picture shows; this office knows more about these places in Cleveland than she can possibly find out; our duties take us among the classes who would be affected most, and we have no fault to find with the picture shows of Cleveland. We have not had a single complaint among the thousands of children who come within our jurisdiction annually."

One of Miss Davis' statements was—"The motion picture shows contribute a large per cent of the delinquency according to the report given me by the Cleveland probation officer." Mr. Lewis denies this.

Investigation at Police Headquarters and an interview with Chief Officer Williams of the Humane Society, shows Miss Davis preached her public sermon and uttered statements without consulting any city authorities, hence the resolutions which will undoubtedly appear in the "News."

This incident shows the necessity for organization. Here we have a "smart" professional sociologist who would like a soft berth as State Film Censor in a neighboring state, working up sentiment in Ohio for legislation entirely unnecessary. There are plenty of "fool" laws hampering the showman in the various states to-day that have been put there by just such "interested" people as Miss Davis, simply because the exhibitors did not know enough to organize and stay organized for their own protection. It is not so in Ohio any more. We are organized and ask no favors, and we will resent anything that is slanderous to our characters as citizens and fight any action we deem unjust. Can the individual showman do this? No! What is the answer? O-r-g-a-n-i-z-a-t-i-o-n.

(The press notices referred to in the above article follow.)

CALLS FILM SHOWS SCHOOLS OF CRIME

Hundreds of moving picture shows, as now conducted, are a hotbed of iniquity, a training school for criminals, a recruiting ground for the white slavers and the disorderly house, according to Miss Kate Davis of Wilkesbarre, Pa., contributing editor to the Woman's Magazine, in an address delivered before the Christian Endeavor Society of the Old Stone Church, Public square, last night.

Miss Davis spoke on "The Evils of the Motion Picture Shows," a subject she has talked about in cities in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Michigan. She attended the purity congress at Columbus, held a few weeks ago, and although no

NOW ON SALE

MOVING PICTURE TALES

COSTS YOU 3c

SELLS FOR 5c

5c

EVERY EXHIBITOR CAN SELL 1000 COPIES

ORDER FEBRUARY NOW

Increase Your Box Office Receipts

BY USING

The Greatest Educational Feature of the Day

4 DAILY

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD'S SLIDES OF CURRENT EVENTS
THIS SERVICE COVERS
EVERY EVENT THAT IS INTERESTING
EVERY OCCURRENCE THAT THRILLS

24 WEEKLY

News pictures of Wars, Sports and all National and International happenings by Underwood & Underwood, the world-famed news photographers. Flash these events daily while they are news and public interest is keenest. Everyone is interested in the news of the day, and this is a service of news pictures. COSTS NOTHING WHEN COMPARED WITH RESULTS.

4 SLIDES DAILY—24 PER WEEK, RATE $12.00 PER WEEK
2 SLIDES DAILY—12 PER WEEK, RATE 6.50 PER WEEK

3 current event photos 14″ x 17″ for outside display with printed news titles, rate $5.00 per week.
WRITE TODAY FOR THREE, SIX OR TWELVE MONTHS' CONTRACTS

HUNTON-FELL-ELLIOTT, Inc., 1328 Broadway, NEW YORK

provision had been made for her appearance, was given a place on the program.

"The motion picture shows contribute a large per cent of the delinquency according to the report given me by the Cleveland probation officer," Miss Davis said yesterday.

"Motion pictures are a good form of cheap amusement and in case they are limited to certain subjects do good rather than harm. Travel and harmless subjects, I would advocate, but I would censure everything that would tend to lower the moral standard of the susceptible child, such as murders, suicides, etc.

"Conditions in Columbus were fairly good, better than in Pennsylvania, but in Detroit the shows were the best I have encountered. Unfortunately I have not been able to visit any Cleveland shows as yet, though I shall to-morrow. The solution of the problem in my opinion would be to have a board of censors supported by acts passed by the legislatures of the states."

Miss Davis yesterday explained that her mission in visiting several cities to witness film shows is two-fold—to arouse interest in various states for establishing a state board of censorship and more particularly to keep alive the bill which provides for such a board in Pennsylvania.

Such a bill, Miss Davis stated, has been passed by the legislature and signed by the Governor, but as yet no appropriation has been made for the two members, a man and a woman, for which the bill provides. Miss Davis will remain in Cleveland until Thursday as the guest of Mrs. L. D. Stegman, 12302 Superior avenue N. E., juvenile court probation officer.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

CHARGES CRITIC IS SEEKING NOTORIETY

Moving Picture Man Refutes Woman's Statements That Films Are Immoral—Says She Needs Education and Offers to Pay the Bill

The moving picture shows of Cleveland are not "hot beds of iniquity," "training schools for criminals" or any of the other hard names applied to them by Miss Kate Davis of Wilkesbarre, Pa., in a recent address delivered before the Christian Endeavor Society of the Old Stone Church, but on the contrary are educative influences that warn young girls and innocent boys of the wicked lures laid for them, was the reply made yesterday by Samuel Bullock, general manager of the Erie Amusement Co., of this city.

Mr. Bullock is also chairman of the press committee for the moving picture show association and on reading the newspaper accounts of the speech of Miss Davis, he immediately prepared a reply to her charges, which he terms "slanderous and reckless" statements. He attributes many of the sensational statements of Miss Davis to the fact, as he says, that she is a candidate for the office of film censor for the state of Pennsylvania and is seeking notoriety simply as a campaign measure.

"The conditions which Miss Davis spoke of as aiding and fostering the 'white slave trade and the filling of disorderly houses' obtained during the early days of the picture show in New York, but have been done away with. Over two years ago a strict censoring bureau established in New York eliminated all of the objectionable features," said Mr. Bullock.

"To-day, when we are showing a particular film of a serious nature, mothers come and see for themselves. The second night we always have more mothers and their girls because the show is not only moral, but is actually one of the greatest forces against the evils of modern society that we have.

"As for the charge of Miss Davis that Cleveland show houses are of a lower moral tone than those in Detroit and other cities because of the nature of the films shown here, it is false on the face of it because the same films are shown here as in other cities. We all get our supply from the same sources. Each film is sent the rounds and foot by foot the same pictures are shown here as in Detroit and other cities."

Mr. Bullock concluded his answer to the charges of Miss Davis by challenging her to go with him to any or all of his shows and see for herself how the pictures are viewed by the mothers and daughters that attend.

"Miss Davis needs education along this line," he asserted, "and I am ready to foot the bills, if necessary, to give it to her."

Lead, S. Dak.—O. J. Trisler has purchased the Iris Theater from the Princess Theater Co., of Omaha, Neb.

Albany, N. Y.—Work will soon start on the new Clinton Theater, to be erected at Clinton avenue and Pearl street.

THE INDEPENDENTS IN THE SOUTH

Washington, D. C.

ONE of the leading advocates of the South is the Fichtenberg enterprises, with H. Fichtenberg as president. The interests of this company extend from Virginia into Texas, with theaters in most of the important cities. Two houses of this organization in New Orleans are the Alamo and the Dreamworld. The programs, which are changed three or four times a week, consist of three reels, two singers and a three-piece orchestra. It is a ten-cent show that is worth the money; but patrons are given a card which, upon presentation at the box office during certain hours, reduces the admission to a nickel. The audiences here are first class and capacity houses are the rule.

While not having the opportunity of meeting Mr. Fichtenberg, I saw several of his theater managers. With Mr. Goodman, of the Alamo, I had perhaps the longest interview. The appointments of this theater are worthy of commendation. Its orchestra has become one of its features, many patrons coming especially to hear its appropriate and classic music. The singers, which also operate in the other Fichtenberg houses, are artists in their especial line, many having been heard in high-priced theaters. The fact that the Fichtenberg chain of enterprises offers continuous employment and good prices has induced singers to enter this circuit where appreciating audiences are always found.

MR. H. FITCHENBERG

Manager Fichtenberg is not content to stand still, but he is even now building commodious and attractive houses in Lynchburg, Va., and Houston, Texas. Of the latter Mr. Goodman will be placed as manager. In this manner has Mr. Fichtenberg become a character in the development of the South in educational, industrial and social fields.

When I reached New Orleans I found a film war had just closed—a fight between the Independents and the licensed companies, which affected interests in several of the southern states. The various Independent exchanges combined and so united were enabled to hold their own and gather new recruits in a supposedly unequal battle with a stronger foe. Matters are about calmed down now and things running smoothly. Indeed, the machinery of business was humming so harmoniously in the offices of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company (as the united forces of the Independents are termed now) that one would scarcely believe a disturbance had occurred.

Manager A. G. Shear, of this exchange, has proved ably fitted for his responsible position; while his representative, whom I met during Mr. Shear's absence, could also steer the helm of affairs.

The Consolidated Film and Supply Company occupies offices in the Maison Blanche, one of the newest and largest buildings in the business district of the city. As its name implies, it is not only a film exchange, but has also a repair department and keeps in stock everything necessary for the equipment of the moving picture theater.

In Atlanta the Independents share about even with the licensed houses. The theaters in the business district have attractive entrances and are commodiously arranged for patrons. Shoppers from the neighboring stores were seen going in the shows with their bundles, as were also business men during their luncheon hour.

The projection in all cases was excellent, with the pictures not over enlarged. I saw fewer "rainly" films during my entire trip than I have sometimes seen in one day in Washington. This in itself shows care from the operators and exchanges.

In the small towns the entire population is too busy for day performances; therefore evening shows are the rule. Occasionally there will be matinee performances during the summer or on Saturdays. In New Orleans moving picture theaters open as early as ten o'clock in the morning, while on Sunday eleven o'clock is the rule. Oh, it is quite the proper thing to go from church services to the motion picture show and reach home just in time for noonday dinner. It must also be remembered that the French Grand Opera has its most important performances on Sunday afternoon and night.

From what I could observe in this hurried survey, the Indian and Western dramas are not popular in the South—a condition which is becoming universal. It is just possible that some of these states can so readily remember their Indian and frontier days that they don't relish make-believe performances. "Of course we have to use these pictures to fill up," said one manager, "but we wish we could leave them out." Another remarked that some of the Western heroes had been killed so often that human nature was rebelling at being called upon to believe that they are not dead or that they are real men.

The David Copperfield reels were being enthusiastically received in the Gulf states.

While the South is considerably warmer all the year round than Washington, still it will have its winter. Accordingly, the air domes that were so popular during the summer months are closed now, though the weather was delightfully warm. Some theaters were advertising steam heating plant as an inducement to patrons. Personally, I was ready to ridicule what some southern people called cold weather. And when I strolled down the street in summer attire, feeling very comfortable, and saw women wrapped in furs, I expect folks wanted to ridicule me.

I noticed that the posters used were those supplied by the manufacturers. Before the larger and better houses these were neatly arranged in brass frames and on the side billboards. Announcements of singers and orchestras were placarded on easels. The lobby display of the material used was attractive, but there was an absence of the artistic hand posters which have become so popular in the Capital City.

From what I could gather in this short trip, the Independents are holding their own in a very substantial way through the South in the moving picture industry. The Sunday reel of the Majestic will find a place in towns where Sunday shows are permitted; while the releases of the other Independent companies which have recently entered the field are welcomed as giving a larger assortment for selection.

"La Cinematografia Italiana ed Estera"
IS ITALY'S LEADING PAPER FOR THE
AIMATED PICTUE BUSINESS,
PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY.
28 Large Pages. Eight Shillings per annum.
Editor-Proprietor: Prof. GUALTIERO I. FABBRI,
1a, Via Cumiana, 31 (Barriera di S Paolo) (Italy)
"La Cinematografia Italiana" is the official organ of the Universal Exhibition of 1911 at Turin.

DER KINEMATOGRAPH, DUSSELDORF
The leading Organ for the Motion Picture Trade in Germany.
Special Supplement for Talking Machines, &c.
Published every Wednesday. Annual Subscription 11/- Post Free.
Advertisements (4 columns to page); 2s. 6d. per inch. Situations Wanted, 1½d. per line.
Reduced Price for a Series of Insertions.
Publisher—ED. LINTZ. Chief Editor—EMIL PERLMANN.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING
The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.
Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

Interesting Correspondence

(Continued from page 8)

because I thought it might be the one to which Mr. Donaldson referred as a perfect film, with pathos, humor and temptations. He said no portion of the film he referred to could be dispensed with. The one I mentioned could have had three feet cut out in one portion, and about ten in another, and then be fit to show to the average public—and I don't count prudes in the "general public." A prude, in my estimation, bases his or her claim on false modesty, but according to Mr. Donaldson everything is modest if it is true to life. If you have any children, Mr. Donaldson, or a wife, or sweetheart, there are a great many things in this world that are true to life that you would shield from their eyes if you thought it would come before their vision, and if you felt that it was your duty to tell about them, or explain them, you would do so in guarded language, and giving the explanation as a matter of knowledge to be stored up for personal protection if ever needed, giving it in a manner that would express the essentials of the case, and yet in a way that would not incite passion, or arouse passion.

Mr. Donaldson says: "We witness the impassioned longing of twin souls—is this debasing?" And again, "Life as it always will be—is this derogatory?" Do you realize, Mr. Donaldson, that articles like yours are just the ones that cause the public reformers to flaunt their banners with some justification. What do you mean by "impassioned longing?" Do you mean the portrayal of love—or baser passions—the kind that history tells us led the way to the fall of Rome in her glorious days, and caused the decay of other powerful nations. Is there anybody living who could, for an instant, entertain the thought of placing their children, or their relatives, in the company of those habitues of dens of sin and immorality, in order that their children or relatives would know life as it is? Think it over, Mr. Donaldson. I believe anything like that would be debasing and derogatory and—DAMNABLE. And placing a moving picture before them, with the same ideas, expressed on a smaller scale, and a little less openly is equally DAMNABLE, you and your opinion to the contrary.

Why do so many Western scenes have their barroom—no serious objection to the barroom—with women cavorting around with a thirst like a hippopotamus? Is that true to Western life? Go to a Western town and tell them so. Think you would come back alive? It wasn't true in the old days either, if the old-timers are to be believed, and they certainly should know.

And incidentally, before I close, why do a dozen Indians generally make up a tribe, and the same Indians, in the year 1849, use a 1911 take-down magazine rifle. O why! And why are half of them pure white and only a few dark. In this case give us life as it is, or life as it was. In all cases give us life—but let it be clean, and wholesome, and good, so that we can look to something better. If we are looking for dirt, there are some newspapers that can furnish any sort and every variety that any individual desires. If a pig revels in filth he shouldn't be made a criterion for the human race.

And regardless of Mr. Donaldson, Broadway and Fifth Avenue are equally interested in any story that has a good plot, is well acted, with sustained interest and proper photographic value.

Mr. Film Manufacturer of every description, size and standing, think it over—and decide.

EDWARD W. MURPHY.

(We publish the above letter in justice to both sides of a question. At the same time we think our correspondent goes to the other extreme from our correspondents whom he takes to task. They will be able to defend themselves in an issue or two. In the meantime we solicit the views of our readers on this subject and will gladly throw open our pages to them.—Editor, Moving Picture News.)

GAUMONT COMPANY OF AMERICA

Now that the Gaumont Company has fully resolved to exploit its far-famed Gaumont films in the Independent ranks, everything is rapidly forming itself in readiness. They announce the definite decision to sell their productions direct to the exchanges through the open market so that members of all and any existing organizations will find it possible to supply their exhibitors with Gaumont films.

The output of this concern will contain a very large proportion of feature releases, and it is their intention to sell these to exchanges in the same way that the ordinary releases of the various manufacturers are now being disposed of, instead of asking special prices. In order to convince the American market of the merit of the feature productions that they have ready for exploitation, they have decided to release as their initial independent attempt the Delhi Durbar as soon as it reaches this country. This procession and the incidents which accompanied the coronation of King George V. as Emperor of India, has already been faithfully photographed by representatives of this European manufacturer in the British possessions. The reel will reach this country about the middle of January, 1912, and will be put upon the market as soon as it arrives.

The grandeur and magnificence of the Durbar will easily raise this release above the best of the specials that have yet been put out. It will be a genuine principle of the Gaumont firm that none of their films will fall into the class of mediocrity. The best points of vantage have been taken by the camera men, so that a full and faithful record of the entire coronation procession will be projected on the screen. One thousand elephants carrying all the gradations of Hindoo royalty as well as glittering and gaily caparisoned equipages will give evidence to the homage with which the British subjects regard their sovereign. This is indeed a subject that can be billed specially, and two-sheet posters and pictorial and descriptive circular matter can be procured by writing to the Gaumont offices at Flushing, New York.

The second feature will be entitled "The Christian Martyrs," which will be hand colored throughout. The story depicts the sufferings and persecutions of the earliest exponents of modern civilization and gives a realistic idea of the manner in which the pagan Romans humiliated and tortured the early Christians.

The possibilities of this film as a follow-up to the Delhi Durbar will surely be realized by the trade throughout the country. They will be able to obtain an accurate idea of the quality and magnitude of Gaumont independent productions. This film will also be sold to the exchanges just as though it were an ordinary release; in fact, Gaumont Company announce that their releases will contain a very large proportion of feature films and that these will be sold to the exchanges in the same manner as the ordinary releases are now being sold. They will not ask special and undue prices.

The Gaumont representative will shortly make a tour amongst all the exchanges and acquaint them with the opportunities that this manufacturer has in store for them.

The Gaumont weekly film which will comprise all events of topical nature from week to week is slated for release on or about the 20th of January, 1912. The black and white films will sell at the recognized price of 10 cents a foot, while a nominal extra charge will be made for the hand-colored ones.

"The Problem Solved"

There is only one way to make that picture show pay
You must be Independent, so why the delay?
No longer will you pay that big license fee
And that you'll be satisfied is easy to see.
Imp, Reliance, Thanhouser and American, too,
All put out films that appeal to you.
These are not all, many more could be named,
That have won much credit and are far famed.
Your business will increase just fifty per cent
And to the landlord you can then pay the rent.
Believe it or not you will very soon see
That to be Independent means PROSPERITY.

—PHIL WHITMAN.

THE ART OF Scenario Writing

Second Edition By WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT

The MOVING PICTURE NEWS has secured the sole right to republish this standard work on Scenario writing, and offers it as a premium to all new subscribers of $2.00 for one year.

ART OF SCENARIO WRITING, separately, $1.00, post free.

Read what the Moving Picture World of February 25th, 1911, says of this excellent aid:—

The Art of Writing Scenarios

By William Lord Wright. Author of "Twixt Loyalty and Love," "Simon Kenton," etc., etc. Published by the Scenario Instruction Publishing Co., Bellefontaine, Ohio. Price $1.00.

In a very interesting series of articles published in our pages last month, Mr. G. R. Craw told the aspiring scenario author how to write scenarios. Those articles have been favorably commented upon as being of great practical value. Now comes Mr. W. Lord Wright with a little book of about 30 pages which still further adds to our knowledge of a subject that has perplexed many would-be moving picture authors, namely: How to set about work; how to acquire its technique; how, in fact, to prepare goods suitable for the market.

Mr. Wright, who is a successful scenario writer, first of all points out what is in demand by moving picture makers. Then he indicates what is not wanted. After reviewing the function of the scenario editor, he gives some of his own experiences, his failure and his successes. Then we come to some practical advice. He tells the author how to get ideas; where to market the completed scenario; how it should be written and presented, winding up by printing a sample scenario as a guide. Finally, he points out the value of action in this branch of dramatic work, and takes the view that though unhonored, the moving picture scenario writer may some day come into his own in the way of publicity, fame and fortune. We hope he will, though we think this agreeable state of things a long way off.

Meanwhile, we welcome Mr. Wright's little book just as we welcomed Mr. Craw's articles. These things relieve us of some responsibility. We are often asked how a scenario should be written; where it should be marketed and how much money there is in it? Mr. Wright answers all these questions for us. We invite all our readers who are interested in this department of dramatic work, to get a copy of this book and study the formula that he gives. Of course, it is one thing to give a formula for a moving picture scenario, or plays, or a novel. These things may be delivered to managers technically correct in every detail; and yet lacking the one essential which no book on earth can teach: The selection of a theme which will get over; this is the divine afflatus referred to long ago by the author of the phrase: Poeta mascitur non fit: The poet is born, not made. So we believe is the scenario writer. Still, for the benefit of those who are not born and who think they can be made, Mr. Wright's book should be of great value. It will sell well on account of that. It may have a negative value, too, in that it may possibly act as a deterrent to many people who think they can write scenarios and cannot realize their unfitness for the work. There are two or three books extant, and they have run through numerous editions on how to write plays. It is not on record that any playwright who has succeeded during the last quarter of a century, traces any of his success to these manuals, which, perhaps, have been instrumental in diminishing the output of unsuitable plays. It is no easy thing to write a good play; it is no easy thing to write a good scenario. So we hope Mr. Wright's book will encourage the aspirant who aspires to some reasonable hope of success, will discourage those who have no fitness for this form of work. There are too many of the latter kind in the moving picture field to-day.

Ask these authorities what they think of the book. GILES R. WARREN, Author, Playwright, Editor, Lubin Mfg. Co.; C. B. HOADLEY, Editor Scenarios, Imp Company; HORACE VINTON, Author, Editor, Shamrock Company. We have endorsements on file from THE ESSANAY FILM COMPANY, THE POWERS COMPANY, CHAMPION COMPANY, THE IMP COMPANY and THE AMERICAN COMPANY. Also dozens of unsolicited testimonials from writers who have been helped by this work.

THE ART OF SCENARIO WRITING contains a sample scenario recommended as the best form, by GILES R. WARREN, who is acknowledged as one of the most successful and original scenario editors of the present day.

"THE WHOLE SECRET IN A NUTSHELL"

SECOND EDITION IS LIMITED! Get it promptly! REMEMBER THIS IS AN ORIGINAL, not one adapted, a copied, or a plagiarized work. FROM JUST ONE PURCHASER. This booklet cost me a Dollar: The investment netted me over $100.00 in marketable manuscripts. (Name furnished on application.)

CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING CO., 30 West 13th St., N. Y.

Coldwater, Kan., Dec. 4, 1911.

Mr. A. H. Saunders,
Editor The Moving Picture News,
30 West 13th St., New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

This week's end has found me cheery and free from all trouble. Everything went off nicely, no stops, no waits and the manager's receipts brought him out with a great big smile. The Exchange man also must have had a warm spot in his heart for the Odeon this week, judging from the quality of our service the week past.

Someone said to me this week, "How can you people get the class of service you have for the money?" And I assured the gentleman that I had not tried to figure out any reason for it at all. He then said, "Well, you must have a stand-in with the shipping clerk at the Exchange, because you have got him won over." Of course there's lots of ways that the Exchange man can be won over; but the smoothest and best way, according to my estimation, is for each and every operator to do as I have done.

I went to my printer and had what I call an Operator's Film Report printed in blank form, like this:

OPERATOR FILM REPORT

No.....
Title "....."
Make.....Class.....Remarks: First.....Ft.....
Next .....Ft.....Balance .....

Yours very truly

JOHN H. CROWLEY.

Inclosed you will find one of my blank Operator's Film reports, which I am sending to you for the benefit of any operator who might feel that he wanted to take up this plan and do better by his Exchange, and also receive better service from them with just a few minutes' extra work each day.

Now this is what I do for my Exchange: I rewind, patch and carefully inspect each film after I have run it and then fill out the Blank Report in this manner:

OPERATOR FILM REPORT

No.....
Title "....."
Make.....Class..Dr.....Remarks: First 100..Ft...Good
Next....200....Ft.....Fair.....Balance .....Good

Yours very truly

JOHN H. CROWLEY.

Inclosed you will find an Operator's Film report filled out ready to be placed on the film, which will give you some idea as to what I do for the Exchange and what an advantage it is to them in the handling of the film when they receive it from me; that's the reason they send me good, spicy, clean, snappy films, I suppose.

Operators, get busy and let's hear from you. Hello! "Canuck" in the Catskills. Glad to see your letters in the News, they read as if you were in with your whole soul and heart for the betterment of the picture business.

Hoping that I have left space for others who might want to drop a line to the News, I will inclose $2.00 in money order to pay subscription to the News for one year, and desire as my premium Haviland's Moving Picture Pianists' Album.

Yours very truly,

JOHN H. CROWLEY.

Care Odeon Theater, Coldwater, Kan.

ECLAIR TO ADVERTISE THROUGH THE EXHIBITOR

The Eclair Company has adopted a novel means of advertising their films. A great deal of money will be invested in photos and other display matter and this will be supplied to theaters well in advance where Eclair releases are to be shown.

The plan is simple and easy to follow. Each week the Eclair Company announces future releases. The exhibitor-goes to his exchange and arranges booking for one or more of these subjects, whether he uses first run or older service, and then advises the Eclair Company about what date he expects to show this film.

On receipt of this information, the company sends to the theater, all charges prepaid, a liberal quantity of novelties in advertising matter to assist the theater in dressing up its lobby and making his theater attractive. The object, of course, is to popularize Eclair films by increasing the receipts of the theater where they are shown; however, the company could not afford to offer these inducements except to theaters who actually intend to use the films, as much valuable material would be wasted if mailed promiscuously.

AMERICAN PLAYERS AS FIREMEN

The studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company, in California, ordinarily a scene of activity, was greatly augmented by the appearance of the state fire warden recently. In Southern California martial law supersedes the civil law in case of brush fires, and it is only necessary for the warden to tag a man and say "your it" in order to obtain recruits to fight the fires that rage along the mountain sides and valleys when the sage brush, dry as timber, affords food for the flames.

Mr. Dwan, the director in charge, was busy rehearsing some scenes completing a picture, so that he could allow Thanksgiving Day to all the employees of the company, when the appearance of the fire warden greatly accelerated the action in the scene. Performers and cowboys who face the muzzle of a forty-five every day without flinching, faded away into secret hiding places before the advance of the man with a star.

In their hurry to seek other haunts where fire wardens are conspicuous by their absence, one of the cowboys fell down and the others behind him, stumbling over his prostrate form, soon made a human pyramid five men deep. The man with the star promptly approached the struggling heap and pressed them into service, regardless of the storm of protest that it would interfere with the making of motion pictures. They were hurried to the scene of the fire and for forty-eight hours, without sleep or rest, struggled against the advance of the fire fiend.

Their Thanksgiving dinner consisted of dried corned beef served them on the job. At last, dirty and smoke-begrimed, they were allowed to return to town and rest. The performers were more fortunate than the cowboys and hurried into town, for they realized if caught and forced to fight the fire it would sadly hamper the work in the studio, and the compensation paid by the state would never cover the amount lost to the company in time or money. It is a notable fact that the fire warden, gifted with the brains of the proverbial ass, should attempt to select the high-salaried company of talented people whose salary in a single week is greater than he could earn in a year, and the harm he could do a corporation like the American Film Manufacturing Company is almost incalculable. Without looking in the pool-rooms or places where men in need of employment congregate and actually seek the fire warden for a chance to carn the compensation given, he immediately descends on the studio of this company, not a single man of whom is a taxpayer or citizen of the state. For the future protection of the company, whose interest he represents, Mr. Dwan has taken legal steps to prevent a recurrence of the outrage. The entire damage done by the burning of sage bush would not compensate the American company for one single working day at this season of the year.

Powers Boost Pack Opens

Exhibitors all over the country have been noticing that something is promised them from the Powers' Boost Department, and this week marks the disappearance of the Powers Motion Picture Company's weekly "Talks to Exhibitors." In its stead the mail will bring a large envelope, and therein the anxious exhibitor will find a lobby display that ought to do credit to the most classic front. Special care has been taken in preparing the reading matter on these, so that they really constitute a message from the exhibitor to the passer-by, giving just enough of the story to make it appeal.

The contents of the "Boost Envelope" will change from week to week, and from what we can learn there are some pleasant surprises in store for the exhibitors. Mr. Powers has started on a campaign that ought to bring big results.

A Merry Christmas
TO ALL
YOU CAN BE MERRY ALL NEXT YEAR IF YOU READ
The Moving Picture News
EVERY WEEK

SCENE FROM "THE PROFESSOR"
Released by the Imp Company

A STRONG DENIAL

New Orleans, La., December 12, 1911.

Mr. A. H. Saunders,
Editor Moving Picture News.

Dear Sir:—My attention has been called recently to several rumors circulated in different parts of the country relative to the fact that I propose to use Trust pictures.

Permit me to say, that I would not use a Trust film in my house, if they were the only pictures made. I have always been a booster for the Independents and have always run Independent pictures in my theaters, and it is due to the Independent high-class films that I attribute my success.

I am now operating six houses, my latest being a $40,000 venture, The Alamo, at Vicksburg, Miss., which opened Thanksgiving Day with a tremendous success.

My Isis Theater, Houston, Texas, which is in course of construction, will open about April next, at a cost of $85,000, and nothing but Independent films will be shown.

You can readily appreciate that the rumors circulated are intended solely to hurt the Independents, for the reason that every exhibitor in this section of the country is personally acquainted with me and some question would naturally arise in their mind, if I ever anticipated using Trust pictures, and if my friends using Trust goods now, would use Independent films, they would begin making some real money, for Independent films have always been the real money-makers.

Trusting you will give this space in your valuable paper and with kindest personal regards, believe me to be,

Independently yours,
HERMAN FICHTENBERG.

Sole owner of the following theaters: Alamo, New Orleans, La.; Dreamworld, New Orleans, La.; Isis, Houston, Texas; Bonita, New Orleans, La.; Picto, New Orleans, La.; Alamo, Vicksburg, Miss.; Wonderland, New Orleans, La.

A Correction

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly allow us space to state that the name of the Imp Company's leading lady is Margarita Fischer, not Margaret Fisher as hitherto incorrectly given.

Thanking you for your attention to this, we remain,
Very truly yours, IMP FILM CO.

GET THE

Moving Picture News

EVERY SATURDAY

The Articles by ROBERT GRAU, WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT, MISS MARGARET MacDONALD, are alone worth a year's subscription.

W. E. GREENE
FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE IN NEW ENGLAND

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Start the Season right by using an Independent Service from a Reliable House. We are buying the Output of the Sales Co. and have some choice services open. Write—wire—or call To-Day at

W. E. GREENE FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.
228 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.
Telephone: 2187-3790 Oxford.

MAJESTIC FILM COMPANY PUTTING OUT CREDITABLE WORK

There is remarkably fine work coming from the Majestic Film Company, work which will reflect credit upon the entire trade. It was our pleasure to see some of their coming releases during the past week, and it certainly was a pleasure to view such all around good work from filmdom.

The split reel, "Will You Marry Me?" and "The Caddy's Dream," for release December 31st, contains two excellent subjects splendidly enacted and superbly photographed. "Will You Marry Me?" is a good comedy, where the young man thrown over by his sweetheart decides to marry the first woman who will accept him. In the course of several incidents he meets the cook of his sweetheart, who accepts him, and straightway goes to the sweetheart, gives her the ring, dresses her in her clothes, veils her and sends her to meet the young man. At the entrance to the church his courage fails him and he tries to get out of the predicament. In the girl's desperate attempt to keep him her hat falls off displaying her identity. Of course all goes well from now on.

"The Caddy's Dream" is more or less of a novelty. The dream of the forlorn man encompasses a period of nineteen years and 364 days, which time is passed by himself and two golf players in search of a ball that never is found. During the time of the wearysome search the two men grow gray, developing long gray beards. It is surely a novel idea and very good.

"Gossip" is an excellent lesson to the individual inclined to gossip, and also to the individual too eager to believe in reports without proper investigation. The subject is treated in comedy and is good.

Last but not least in order of merit comes "His Fate's Rehearsal," to be released January 12th, a wonderful lesson to the alcohol fiend, and one of the finest of the kind that we have ever seen. It has brought the tears to the eyes of almost all who have seen it. In telling the story one can hardly do justice—it must be seen to be appreciated. On the part of the actors it is a wonderful piece of dramatic work. Miss Trunelle and Mr. Prior have done superb work in this picture.

NESTOR FILM COMPANY BUY ACREAGE

The Nestor Film Company, which is temporarily located at the corner of Gower street and Sunset Boulevard, recently closed a deal through the Los Angeles Realty Exchange on Hollywood Boulevard, for a five and a half acre tract on Hollywood Boulevard, Benefit and Hoover streets. They will put between $15,000 to $20,000 improvement on the lot, which will front on Hollywood Boulevard.

The buildings to be erected will be used for making films for moving picture people throughout the world. The Los Angeles Realty Exchange tried to locate the Nestor Film Company in Hollywood proper, but were unable on account of the high price of acreage property, which is held by a few land owners, who refused to sell at a reasonable price.

This company has a pay roll of $3,500 to $4,500 a week, which would mean much to our city. They employ at least 150 men in making the films. This is one of the growing industries of the age.

Plans are now being made and the work will be rushed, as they expect to be in their new location in January. Mr. David Horsley is manager of the company and is a very energetic and progressive man.—From the Hollywood Citizen, Hollywood, California.

CHICAGO LETTER

I had an interview the other day with Mr. Wylie of the Sunlight Metallic Cloth Curtain Company, who has recently returned to Chicago from a visit to the most prominent exhibitors in the United States and he stated that there are many signs indicating an evolution in the moving picture business. Mr. Frank L. Talbot, who is a pioneer and one of the ablest men in the theatrical game to-day and who is manager of the new Hippodrome Theater at St. Louis, the largest all-star vaudeville and moving picture theater in the West, which has a seating capacity of 4,000 persons. Mr. Talbot is now using four reels of moving pictures in connection with circus and vaudeville acts. Mr. S. M. Hexter, president of the Gordon Square Realty Company in Cleveland, Ohio, will build a very up-to-date theater at Detroit and Sixty-third streets, in which high-class vaudeville and moving pictures will be shown for very high-class trade. In other high-class vaudeville theaters, where formerly pictures were used, merely as a chaser after vaudeviile acts, they are now being featured in three or four reels, no uncommon occurrence in the evening's program of some of the most up-to-date vaudeville houses. Mr. Wylie also stated that 60 per cent of his shipments during the last month have been to vaudeville houses, where the moving picture is taking the place of vaudeville and that the intention of the exhibitor to show the very best pictures possible is demonstrated by his ordering a Sunlight Metallic Cloth Curtain.

A church at 1132 Milton avenue will be converted into a moving picture theater, as the structure does not exactly conform to the Chicago building code; objections were at first manifested to the plan, but on recommendation of Henry Ericsson, commissioner of buildings, the council committee on the building department granted the permit to change the structure of a church into a moving picture theater.

Mr. Traub, the hustler and wide-awake general manager of the Amusement Supply Company, returned to Chicago this week from Wisconsin, after a successful business trip throughout the state. He stated that business is very dull in the extreme northern part, but is still good in the southern part of the state. The Amusement Supply Company, although not a buying exchange, has one of the best film lists of any of the renting exchanges in the city, outside of the buying exchanges. Mr. Traub reports a big increase in business, both in film renting and in machine supplies, etc., and stated that this year's business reports will show a wonderful increase over last year's report.

I dropped in the Chicago office of the Feature and Educational Film Company in the Delaware building this week and was cordially received by Mr. Jerome Abrams, who has been newly appointed manager of the Chicago office. Mr. Abrams' past experience as a bull slinger in Mexico speaks well for the future business of the new office, which, although it has only been opened several weeks, business has already shown signs of activity under the new Mexican athlete. He stated that any one wanting to buy a state right for the Feature films "Zigomar" and "Love and Aviation" should get in communication with him at once, as the states are selling fast and he is doing a phenomenal business.

Mr. Chatkin, of the Anti-Trust Film Company here, is causing much comment with his man Sprockets, who is appearing in the different weekly trade journals. Mr. Chatkin is jubilant about the business of the Anti-Trust at the present time, which is the biggest of their career.

Mr. H. C. Jones, who lives at 5616 North Ashland avenue, will build a moving picture theater at Balmoral and Clark streets in which it is rumored Independent pictures will be shown. The decorating and wiring contract has been let to the Active Electric Company.

Mr. Mulvaney has sold the Normal Theater, at 440 West Sixty-third street, to Mr. Langstrom, of the Langstrom Decorating Company. The theater has been renamed the "Gem" and has been redecorated; also a new piano and new machine have been installed by the new owner. When the theater was sold Independent service was used. The new manager stopped the Independent service for a try at Licensed, which lasted one week and he is again back into the fold, where we are all glad to welcome him.

WARNER KENNEDY.

During the past week the Feature & Educational Film Company, of Cleveland, sold exhibition rights for its two new features in six states.

Everywhere "Love and Aviation" and "Zigmar" have been shown, these subjects have made a good impression, and state rights men are receiving calls for return dates.

HIS MUSICAL SOUL

Solax

The Solax Company had a visitor over at the studio the other day. The gentleman was shown through the studio, factory, machine shop and offices. Finally he was taken to the projecting room where a first print of "His Musical Soul," the Solax release of Wednesday, January 3d, was being shown to the directors and players. Before a couple of hundred feet were exposed the visitor's state of mind resembled a gigantic question mark.

"His Musical Soul" is a comedy in which a fat man (300 pounds) undertakes the delicate task of wooing a slip of a girl about one-third his weight. The fat man has as much music in him as a buzzsaw or an obstreperous dumbwaiter, but a rival in the form of a curly haired violinist with nimble fingers and graceful masculine lines is the favored suitor, so the fat man decides that he must not be outdone in the arts of love. He buys a trombone possessing the magic of the proverbial flute, only instead of driving the rats to the sea the trombone drives people to destruction and animates inanimate things so that they also may manifest their protest.

The visitor was considerably baffled. He asked thousands of questions. "How do you get the pictures to move on the walls, what do you do to make the glassware dance on the tables and the clock to do a cakewalk on the mantelpiece?' All this trick work Madame Blaché, who staged the picture, tried to make clear to the curious visitor.

The visitor had an idea that strings were attached and a man behind the scenes regulated the movement of the furniture and other chattles. When told that it was also done by an automatic arrangement, our visitor gasped and looked upon the Solax contingent as wonders of creative genius.

NEW INSTALLATIONS BY HALLBERG

The Church of our Lady of Lourdes, on West 142d street, has installed a new Model B Edison moving picture machine with Hallberg Economizer, furnished by J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man." He reports also sale of Edison Model B machines with Hallberg Economizers, as well as all supplies, to L. Liebmann, 1379 Washington avenue, The Bronx, and Condit & Bartolini, Mariners' Harbor, Staten Island, N. Y.; Powers No. 6 and Economizer to Kurz & Levy, Amsterdam avenue and 145th street, city.

The Moving Picture News

SUBSCRIBE FOR 1912

Your choice of "THE ART OF SCENARIO WRITING," by W. Lord Wright, or "HAVILAND'S MOVING PICTURE PIANIST'S ALBUM," as a premium, at $2.00 per year.

A LEADING BRITISH MANUFACTURING COMPANY

The film manufactory in England has been steadily on the increase during the past few years and at last a British firm has achieved a pinacle of success from which it sheds forth its illuminating light over the cinematograph world and forces itself to be recognized as one of the leading firms in the film making industry.

Thus the British & Colonial Kinematograph Company, Ltd., of 33-35 Endell street, Long Acre, is making itself felt among the trade, and the demand for its productions are increasing daily. They have a real live subject in a series of naval adventures of which the hero is "Lieutenant Daring, R. N." This heroic lieutenant is depicted in many phases and three of his adventures have already appeared and taken the public by storm, while many others are to follow. Naval subjects are not the only theme of this enterprising company, for the sister service is equally represented and their great military drama, "A Soldier's Sweetheart," is enjoying one of the finest runs ever achieved by a British film.

Historical subjects are also made the subject for animated photography and the romantic times of the British commonwealth has been most ably depicted in "A Puritan Maid."

Both trick and straight comedies are also on the lists of this firm, while they are now commencing a most interesting and drawing series of Colonial Travalogues, beginning with a series of pictures of "Whaling off the Coast of Newfoundland," which will be released on December 28, 1911. This picture throughout consists of a series of rapid changes and creates an atmosphere of healthy activity and industry, from the loading of the harpoon gun for action till the arrival of the carcass at the whale factory. The chances and difficulties to secure a film of this kind were many and the operator on his way to ship his precious burden to the London market had a narrow escape from death for, while traveling at a speed of fifty miles an hour across country, the rear coach left the metals, ploughing into the soft soil to a depth of four feet. After having such a narrow escape from death, observing the fore part of the train on fire, he rushed to the blazing coach and saved his valuable films.

Last but not least to be numbered among this firm's interesting and now famous films, are their natural history series, of which their "Bee" films, depicting the life of the bee and making of honey, was exquisite, and their latest release, that of "Natural History Studies at the Zoo" is spoken of as one of the finest films ever yet placed on the market.

ECLAIR ENGAGES ARNAUD, FAMOUS DIRECTOR

The American Eclair Company announces the acquisition of one of the world's most noted stage directors, the great Arnaud.

His masterful work is well known to America through his many years' association with Gaumont. This firm's large and important productions were staged by Arnaud.

He comes to Eclair with a reputation for big things accomplished and will prove a valued addition to the already notable staff of producers and directors.

Mr. Arnaud is expected in New York early in January.

Baltimore, Md.—Frederick W. Schanze will erect a new moving picture house at 2426 Pennsylvania avenue.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Mikado Theater Company, capital $45,000; O. T. Crawford, James Hagerman and W. C. Coss, theater will be erected at Hamilton and Easton avenues.

PRESTO

Poster frames, the best poster frame made, $1.75 each in quantities up to five. Six or more $1.50 each, cash with order.

ELECTRA Pink Label Carbons 5/8 x 6 soft cored, $2.00 per 100. $19.00 per 1,000, cash with order.

Swaab Film Service Co.

INDEPENDENT FILM ONLY

129 N. EIGHTH STREET PHILADELPHIA

Power's and Motiograph Machines

SOLAX ENGAGED BILLY QUIRK

Famous Pathe and Biograph Star Is With the Rising Sun Contingent. This Is Another Progressive Solax Move

Billy Quirk, formerly of Pathé and Biograph, and concededly the best-known picture comedian, has been engaged by the Solax Company. In the last few months the Solax Company has been steadily forging ahead. It has already announced several progressive changes. This latest acquisition to the stock company centers the interest of the trade in the coming Solax comedy productions.

In talking of Mr. Quirk's engagement, Madame Alice Blaché, president of the company, said, "We are making an emphatic effort to organize a perfect comedy stock company. We want to be known as the best comedy producers in the business. We already have with us some of the best comedians, comedians who have won success and place. With Mr. Quirk among us and the other competent members of stock company working superbly we soon hope to have everyone in the picture business applauding and praising our product. Some time ago I announced that I would engage the best I could get. I think the trade will agree with me that I am keeping my promise."

Mr. Quirk is a suave, light, clean-cut and boyish looking comedian. When he tells people that it is thirty-five years since his eyes first sighted Jersey mosquitoes, people stare at him with incredulity. For Mr. Quirk really looks like a kid of nineteen. He has had four years in motion pictures. Pathé Frères and the American Biograph Company are the only firms with which he has been associated.

Talking about himself, Mr. Quirk said, "Comedy acting before such an unresponsive audience as a camera is perhaps the most difficult task an actor has to face. It isn't like acting before the footlights, where the comedian feels and is encouraged by the appreciation, applause and laughter of an alive audience. With an audience in front of him, the comedian can play with his listeners' sympathies. He can speak his lines slowly or rapidly according to the average brightness of his hearers. He can use his tricks for prolonging a laugh or cutting one short and then make the laugh come back with increased volume and heartiness. Only a polished and experienced comedian can use footlight tricks before the camera. He has to gauge his effects and use his imagination. I think, however, that I owe my success in motion pictures to my habit of being natural. I never force my comedy or overdo things. I let things move along easily and without seeming to help them."

Mr. Quirk has been in vaudeville, in musical comedy and in legitimate drama. He played in Belasco's original production of "The Rose of the Rancho." He played in Pathé's Billy series and in Biograph's Muggsy series.

WITH THE WESTERN PRODUCERS

Santa Monica canyon is a scene of much activity this week. The entire forces of Miller Bros. 101 Ranch Show are hard at work in that popular locality under the direction of Mr. T. H. Ince, who, by the way, is undoubtedly working harder than any one in the company. The Bison Company certainly slipped one over when they secured this Wild West show.

* * * *

Mr. W. N. Selig arrived this week from Chicago. While in the city Mr. Selig will supervise the work that is being done at the Selig animal farm which is to be established near Eastlake Park.

Mr. Selig will also be a witness at the trial of the Japanese gardener that shot Francis Boggs.

* * * *

The Nestor Company are busy as bees and out at the Hollywood studio fair Rosamond and her loving Claude are to be seen escaping from the cur Desmond. Mutt and Jeff are also much in evidence. PHIL WHITMAN.

Catholic Churchmen Praise Psychological Moving Picture

That the good and pure in motion pictures finds no opposition on the part of the churches, but rather hearty approval, is evidenced in expressions from Fathers Greene and Halpin, of St. Gabriel's Church, New Rochelle. Recently they saw a print of Thanhouser's "The Passing" and were highly pleased with the theme. "It is good to know," said Father Greene, "that when we die we are united to our dear ones who have gone before, and in its conveyance of this 'The Passing' appeals to me greatly."

The story, a remarkable one and quite unusual for the films, tells of a mother's love for her departed son and how that love kept the child constantly with her. As the years went on, the spirit child grew up, or so it seemed to the mother, who grew old with him. She watched his progress as a youth until, finally, he attained manhood—though no other eyes than hers saw the presence of whom she spoke. And, even in the end, when she crossed the great divide, he was there to show her to the throne. The story, aside from its value as a significant psychological study, is a strong lesson in mother love. An indifferent husband—of the type common in big cities where club life is often detrimental to home life—is well portrayed. The reel releases Friday, January 5th.

CHAMPION ENGAGES KID CANFIELD

The well-known gambler commonly called Kid Canfield, who has been exposing the gambling bunco game for the entertainment of vaudeville goers, has been engaged by the Champion Film Company to appear for them in filmdom in the thrilling story of his eventful life

OUR WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., December 20.—If there is one profession that regrets the approach of the Yuletide season it is the theatrical interests, for it is a well-known fact that the bottom seems to drop out of things theatrical, especially the week before Christmas, and were it not for the fact that managers can look forward to the increased receipts Christmas day and the time following, the present week would be even more lurid than it is.

Past experience behind the footlights has taught me that this is the week of half salaries or lay off altogether, and many a time in years gone by has yours merrily been called on to decide whether it would be better to romance in leads at the head of a "rep" show on just one-half the amount in the weekly envelope or, taking what little cash was in the "grouch bag," if near old New York town, go in there for the week before Christmas.

The local theaters and picture shows are not turning 'em away this week, but the advance guard of the great army of winter visitors has made its appearance and the stores are all busy, the streets lined with people, but they haven't much time for select vaudeville or even more select moving pictures. However, the past winter hasn't been a losing one and there is no kick.

The Princess Theater has an exceptionally good show on this week, featuring the Four Killarney Girls, who were here a few weeks ago, and they are worthy a return date, for without doubt it is one of the best singing acts of its kind that this house has ever played.

The Photo Play Theater, where moving pictures alone are shown, is also a winner so far as the program goes. This house, like the Lyceum, is delighted with the Independent output, and they are getting a most excellent picture on their curtain. The run of reels is new, and they are making a big feature of the American product.

Had the pleasure the past week of looking at "The Courting of Mary," by the Majestic Company. It was the initial reel of this firm seen in this city. I do not know who selected the scenic environments of this reel, but will voice the general sentiment of those present when the Lyceum operator, Leo King, ran it off: "My, what beautiful scenery." Mary appeared as her old happy self and, giving this charming little artiste the right kind of material, there is sure to be a demand for the Majestic output.

I was seated at my desk one day during the week when the 'phone rang and, picking up the receiver, a voice called over the wire:

"Come up to the new Central Theater and behold the only antiseptic and perfumed floor in the world. We want you to see it and then write it up."

I wasn't aware that the new Central had acquired a press agent so early in the game. Press agents, you understand, are a necessary evil after the doors are opened, but, later in the day, after we had run off the city edition, I went up there and beheld the latest wonder. I will admit that there are all kinds of delightful odors coming from beneath the floor. The material that the management was putting down resembled tar paper to a great extent, and it was not alone guaranteed to prevent all kinds of germs getting busy in one's system, but would keep the feet warm and at the same time delight the sense of smell by oozing out some remarkably pleasant perfume. Furthermore, the management of the new house stated that they had a written guarantee that the floor would make the pictures brighter, compel the patrons to like the show and make a man almost love his mother-in-law. Work on this theater is progressing rapidly. The new front has been put in and it is a beauty. In my next week's letter I will give a full description of this house, which promises to be a most important factor in the local theatrical world.

For the special benefit of the local Kindergarten work, the Lyric Theater the past week gave a special matinee, which was largely attended by the little ones, who were busy selling tickets, the proceeds of which went to the fund to help carry on this work. A special reel, showing the kindergarten of New York, was run and a snug sum, thanks to the generosity of Harry Hale, proprietor of the Lyric, was realized.

I note in last week's Moving Picture News that Brother Blaisdell expressed the wish that my dear little side partner and myself had been present at the Eagle spread, to which sentiment I scribble my thanks for the remembrance and regret that we were not numbered among those present. I know that it must have been "some event." The next time you see Mr. Yeager, the baseball wizard and sporting editor of the Eagle, Brother Blaisdell, give him my kindest regards. Met him last season when he was here with "Bad Bill" Dahlen and his crowd of "Dodgers," and tell him the next time he calls he will see a great diamond opposite the one where the Brooklyn and Pittsburgh teams intend getting into condition and using.

The last newspaper banquet I had the pleasure of attending was in Atlantic City several years ago. The Press Club there gave a spread. It was Saturday night and all the correspondents registered a solemn vow they wouldn't wire a line out of town but would quit work and attend the pure food show. When we were in the midst of the "steenth quart" the manager of the Postal Telegraph Company rushed into the room and said:

"Would you boys mind handling a good story?"

"We'll do no work to-night," roared the crowd.

"What is the story?" asked Mayor Franklin P. Stoy, who was our president.

"Charlie Schwab, the steel trust magnate, has been stricken with nervous prostration and is not expected to live."

Yes—believe me when I say we worked. Exit the bunch and the banquet went to glory.

But all that isn't moving picture items, is it? Well, I saw a good Biograph picture the past week at the Princess Theater, "The Miser's Heart," and it was a dandy. It held the crowd from beginning to end and the Biograph scored one more point as a result of its clever child actress. One thing I like about this firm's pictures, they never overlook the least little detail.

"The Master of the Vineyard" was at the Photo Play and pleased, and "A Western One-Night Stand," by the Bison Company, awakened one to a realization of what "trooping" in the early days of the "wild and woolly" really was. Champion sent an interesting military picture to the Lyceum in their scenes in and about Fort Riley. With the Great Northern Company we wintered "In Switzerland" for a brief period, admired the magnificent scenery, quaint characters, but were glad that the trip back to Arkansas wasn't so long.

In closing I desire to extend sincere congratulations to those who are so successfully guiding the policy of the Moving Picture News, as well as wishing all its contributors and the great army of earnest soldiers in moving picturedom the merriest kind of a Merry Christmas and increased prosperity, happiness and good health in the coming new year.

The moving picture industry owes Mr. Saunders a debt of gratitude. I doubt if there is one man in this profession who has been as conscientious as he; who has stood for the uplift of moving pictures and the general advancement of the industry along the lines that would enhance the value of the pictures. He is a fighter, too, make no mistake about that, and what would the Independent cause have been without a man of his ability to fight its battles and boost its worth? To you, Mr. Saunders, special greetings for Christmas from

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

The Kinemacolor Company's offerings for this week include several splendid scenic pictures. "A Visit to Berlin" proved highly interesting and "Picturesque Spots Along the Nile" gave us many beautiful views of that noted river. The other reels that were shown were, "The Exmoor Stag Hunt," "Rambles Through London" and "The Reedham Drill." All of these pictures were accompanied by an instructive lecture.

* * * *

American's film of Catalina Island, "The Magic Isle," was shown at the Optic the last part of the week and it certainly was excellent. Anyone who has visited the island can readily see that the American Company has given us a faithful reproduction of the wonderful submarine gardens that are world renowned. When we see the work that is being put out by the American Company we wonder how they do it.

Open to Represent Good American Film Manufacturers for

England, English Colonies and Europe

Cable or Write Terms:

Universal Film Company, Ltd.

5 Denmark St., Charing Cross Rd., London, W. C.

Cable Address, "Ufilmico, London" 'Phone, 13674 Central

BACK TO HIS HOME TOWN

Imp Release, Saturday, January 6, 1912

This picture throws a little light on the business of outdoor moving picture making while at the same time it relates a diverting story. Mr. Abner Brown, in paying a visit to his home town, had the doubtful honor of being mistaken for a moving picture actor by the members of two or three moving picture making companies working out of doors. The result is that poor Abner has a very bad time of it over in New Jersey and gets himself into all sorts of scrapes before he escapes and returns to his wife and family.

A moving picture joke, that is what "Back to His Old Home Town" unquestionably is, and we think that "those in the know" as well as the general public will heartily enjoy the humor of the film.

GOOD ENTERPRISE ILLUSTRATED

Denver, Col., December 12, 1911.

Moving Picture News,
30 West 13th Street,
New York.

Dear Mr. Saunders:—I am enclosing three photos that we thought might be of some interest to the readers of your valuable journal.

Photo number one is of a float used in an industrial parade by Mr. J. M. Probst, an enterprising exhibitor of Durango, Col.

THE THRIVING CITY OF SILVERTON, COLORADO

Number two is a photo of Mr. Probst, transferring the Swanson service from Durango to Silverton, Colorado. It show the length of extremity that the Swanson Film Company of Denver, Col., will go to to supply a customer with their film service. During a recent washout between Durango and Silverton, our customers, Messrs. Miller & Ennis, of FLOAT USED IN AN INDUSTRIAL PARADE BY MR. J. M. PROBST, AN ENTERPRISING EXHIBITOR OF DURANGO, COLO.

Silverton, would have been deprived of programs for their daily show for a period of thirty days until the railroad could have been repaired, had it not been for the courtesy and the exceptional accommodation rendered to Silverton and this exchange, through the unusual and exceptional courtesy shown to our customer at Silverton by the extraordinary method we used in supplying our customer at Silverton.

Mr. Probst delivered a full week's program to Silverton for four straight weeks, transporting service on a pack horse forty-five miles over a mountain trail. Silverton shows went on without interruption during the delay caused by the washout on the railroad.

The Swanson company will install an airship service for any exhibitor that they cannot reach otherwise, if necessary.

MR. PROBST TRANSFERRING THE SWANSON SERVICE FOR DURANGO TO SILVERTON, COLORADO

The pack horse in photo number two is loaded with Swanson service only. We wired Mr. Probst to get service to Silverton from Durango at any cost and in photo number two it shows the way we obtained the desired result.

Photo number three shows the thriving city of Silverton, Col.

We are receiving the Moving Picture News weekly, and have been distributing the sample copies at points where we thought it would do the most good, and sincerely hope that exhibitors in this section will patronize your valuable journal.

With very best wishes for your continued success, we remain,

Yours very truly,
WM. H. SWANSON FILM COMPANY,
Per H. T. Nolan, Manager.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Cahill Bros. are contemplating the erection of a new theater in the 400 block on Salina street.

Minneapolis, Minn.—J. E. Rogers, one of the owners of the Unique Theater, is planning the erection of a new theater at Fifth and Hennepin.

I WON'T!

I won't promise any customer anything unless I KNOW I can make good on it. I'd rather give you more than I promise than less. If this sounds good to you, if it's something different than you're accustomed to, hook up immediately. Write this very day. Try Laemmle films, Laemmle service and "Laemmle luck."

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters:
New number 204 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.
Sykes Block, Minneapolis, Minn.
1312 Farman St., Omaha, Neb.
1110 Wyandotte St., Kansas City, Mo.
421 Walnut St., Des Moines, Iowa.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

25c IN STAMPS GIVES YOU ONE COPY OF

HALLBERG'S

1912 MOTION PICTURE CATALOGUE AND REFERENCE BOOK

Special Jobber of

EDISON
POWERS
MOTIOGRAPH

Moving Picture Machines

The "Hallberg Economizer"

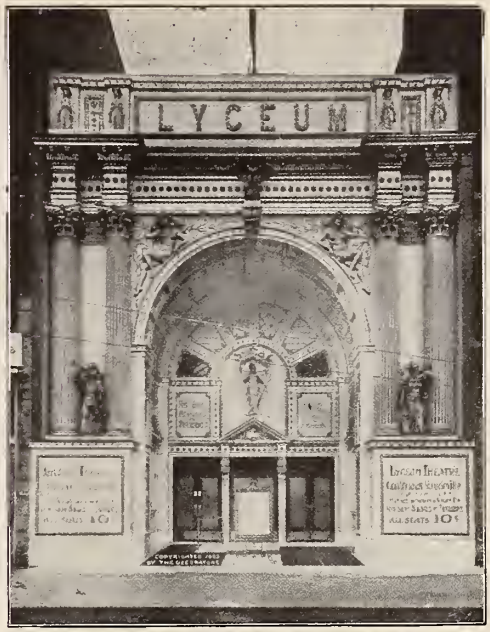
Used in connection with any of the above moving picture machines, produces the finest results on your screen that money can buy.

I Equip Theatres Completely

And carry in stock only the highest grade goods required for your theater.

Free catalogues, circulars and pamphlets furnished of individual items you require.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Free Catalogue No. 2.



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The* Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

Our price is right and the service is right, that's why you ought to write right now for our Film List.

Two Reels, 6 times per week	$14.00
Two Reels, 7 times per week	15.00
Three Reels, 6 times per week	16.00
Three Reels, 7 times per week	17.00

NATIONAL FILM BROKERS :: 186 N. LaSalle St., Chicago

QUICK—CHEAP—GOOD

OPERA CHAIRS

Ask for Catalog 306

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.,
218 So. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

BARGAINS—BARGAINS

Motion Picture Machines $35 up. Lubin Cineograph $65. Edison Two Pin Kinetoscope $65. Edison Model B, cost $225, only $140. Powers Cameragraph No. 5 for $110. Motiograph $75. Motiograph $100. Edison One Pin Kinetoscope (new) $130.

Get Sup. No. 33 Bargain List of M. P. Machines, Stereopticons, Etc.

Motion Picture Machines Wanted.

HARBACH & CO., 809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST THEATRE CHAIR

Sanitary, Space-Saving, Life-Saving, Money-Saving.
To Use This Chair Is to Make Your Business Grow.
Write Today for Circular W.

HARDESTY MFG. CO.
Canal Dover, Ohio.

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

THE PASSING

Thanhouser Release, January 2

Sometimes a man who thinks he is a be surprised to see model husband would himself as others see him. For in certain cases, brutality is no worse than neglect.

In this particular case the husband had a loving wife and a child of whom he was fond in his own careless way. But he saw very little of them, social engagements taking up most of his time while the two were left to live their lives together.

Naturally the bond of sympathy between them grew stronger, and in the course of time the husband was tacitly regarded as an outsider. But he never suspected it.

Then crushing sorrow came into the wife's life. Her child sickened and died, as she sat at his bedside, helplessly trying to aid him. The husband was not there at the time, having spent the evening with some friends outside, only returning with them at a late hour. The game of cards that they started to play was broken up by the announcement that death had visited the house. While the father was laughing and chatting in one room his son expired in another.

The wife, alone in the world, although not a widow, passed a life of misery. Garbed in the deepest mourning, she wept constantly for her lost treasure and refused to be comforted. The husband easily recovered from his grief, which was short-lived, and they were farther apart than ever. Then happiness re-entered the wife's life. The vision of her son appeared to her. He shrank from the mourning she wore, and to please him she arrayed herself in garments like those she wore when he was alive. And the happy hours of her life were those passed with him.

As the years passed, the child from the spirit world grew up, or so it seemed to her, and the mother grew old with him. She watched him progress as a child, until finally he became a young man, but no one else ever saw him. And the woman jealously guarded her secret.

When the time came for her to pass to the other world, her husband was at her side but not in her thoughts. She stretched out her arms but they were not for him. Her dying remarks were addressed to her child in the other world, and she thankfully welcomed the chance to join him there, where they could never be parted.

The husband grieved when his wife died, but he never dreamed for one moment that they had been separated for many years, and that her life had been passed, not with him, but in the spirit land.

A COLUMBUS DAY CONSPIRACY

Thanhouser Release, January 5

An Italian nobleman, famed for his family and wealth, is among those invited to attend the Columbus Day celebration in New York. His high standing causes him to be the recipient of many attentions, among them the honor of being interviewed by the press of America.

A bright, wide-awake young girl reporter is assigned by one of the newspapers to learn from the Count what he thinks of the city and its inhabitants. She calls at his hotel, and is graciously received. Her visit is paid very shortly after the nobleman arrives, and while they are talking, one of the hotel porters enters with a trunk belonging to the Count. When he sees the owner he drops it with agitation, and there is a mutual recognition.

The reporter learns that the porter was formerly a servant of the Count in Italy, but had been discharged for dishonesty. She is suspicious of the man, and is convinced that he means harm to his former employer. So the girl warns the Count, but he laughs at her fears. The man is simply a thieving dog, he says; why worry about him. Then he dismisses the incident from his mind.

The girl, however, decides to keep an eye on the man, if only to prove that she is not a false alarmist. When the porter is discharged, which happens as soon as his former crime is made known, she cautiously follows him from the hotel. She sees him enter an Italian restaurant in the poorer section of the city, and knows that the place bears a very bad reputation. All of which determines her to do some detective work on her own part.

Disguised as an Italian dancing girl, she enters the place and finds the former porter, slightly intoxicated and in a garrulous mood. He gladly tells her his troubles, and boastfully declares that he will get even. He means to blow up the Count with a bomb while he is seated on the grandstand during the parade, and is indifferent as to whether any other persons are injured or not.

The girl is unable to detain the man at the time, and loses him when they get out on the streets. So she goes to police headquarters and tells her story. Several officers are assigned to assist her, for the task is a difficult one. The girl is stationed on the roof of a low building near the grandstand, where she can see the people in all the sections around. It has been arranged that when she locates the man she will give a signal, and indicate the criminal.

Her efforts are crowned with success. The half-crazy foreigner is neatly captured and taken away by the police. Later they bring him before the Count for identification, and the story of the girl's heroism comes out, and the Count and his friends realize what she has done for them.

The Count takes from his coat a decoration that had been awarded him by his King for bravery, and pins it on the girl's breast. The others applaud and drink the young woman's health.

And the girl? Well, she has a "dandy story" to tell the crowd in the "city room" when she returns to her office.

LIFE'S SUPREME TREASURE

Powers Release, January 2

To each of us life holds some one supreme joy—something in the light of which all the other pleasures of existence dwindle into insignificance. In the case of Mrs. James McIntyre, her domestic happiness and her home are her all—and his, too. So one can imagine how happy she is when her husband is chosen to run for mayor of their native city. And even more so, when, after an exciting campaign, he is elected to that high office.

All goes well until it is found that his time is severely taxed—so much so, in fact, that he is almost a stranger to home and wife. Also, the political life has won him enemies, the kind any honest official would incur, so that when his term is up he is facing a crisis. He has refused to do the bidding of the unscrupulous bosses, and now the very men who endorsed him have arrayed their powerful political machine to defeat him.

The campaign is a hotly-contested one. He fights hard with his personal record as his paramount issue, but in present-day politics that is a weak weapon, and the well-organized machinery of the professional politician overwhelms him at the polls.

Then the great light dawns on him—that the patient, neglected little wife at home, the cozy little apartment and the delightful rest of the evening hours —with her—those are the real pleasures and treasures of life, which only God's own political machine can defeat.

TEMPERAMENTS

Comet Release, January 5

Hans Mahler is a musical coxcomb, and after traveling all over town in search of rooms finally finds suitable quarters in a modest house in the upper part of the city. The first one to greet him is Martha, a pretty little maid. Hans' only companion is his violin, and in the seclusion of his abode he finds considerable recreation playing on it. The strains of his melodies attract Mrs. Hahn, a rich widow who lives next door with her blind daughter, Gretchen. Mrs. Hahn seeks an introduction and after the meeting tells her daughter about it. Mrs. Hahn, as well as Gretchen, fall desperately in love with the musician. Gretchen, keeping her feelings from her mother, asks what he looks like. She is told that he is ugly, uncouth and unworthy.

Martha also is in love with Hans, but dare not tell him. However, her heart pines to reveal her secret when she sees the widow and her idol talking in the garden in the back of the house.

Gretchen is having her eyes treated, and after an operation her sight is restored. When she sees Hans for the first time and realizes that he is not ugly, but good-looking, she gleans the truth from her mother. Then there is a struggle between the women to capture the heart of the coxcomb. They throw their arms around his neck, kiss him and make his life miserable. Finally he releases himself and tells them that he is going away, that neither interest him and that he is wedded to his art. Then adding insult to injury, he reveals the fact that he is going to marry Martha, the maid, to whom he has proposed and been rapturously accepted.

SIMPLE LIVES

Comet Release, January 1

Jewel Mason likes to read novels, and in this way she establishes a code of ideals. At any rate she decides that if they really exist they must be found in the big city. She has lived in the country all her life and when she elects to go to New York she is dissuaded by her parents and her sweetheart, Raymond Wheeler. Jewel is a wilful girl and eventually has her way. Raymond has ambitions to become a painter and also, unknown to Jewel, comes to town. He visits various artists with samples of his work tucked under his arm, but receives little encouragement. Finally he meets William Carleton, a young and well-known artist, and the pair become well acquainted. Jewel secures a position as waitress in a lunch room. Her first customer is Carleton. When he asks her to give up her job and pose for him she is only too willing to accept. Carleton makes love to her and tries to kiss her and she learns to despise him. She makes up her mind to quit him and goes behind a screen to dress herself for the street. While she is putting on her cloak Raymond enters. He shows Carleton a picture which he has just finished. Carleton after looking at it in a perfunctory sort of way tells him that it is worthless and that he should not waste any of his time trying to become an artist. The heartlessness of his remarks fires Jewel and she comes from behind the screen and denounces Carleton then and there. Then she points out to her sweetheart the futility of remaining in the city and they agree to both return to the country, fully convinced that it is the only place where they can find real happiness.

AN UNWELCOME SANTA CLAUS

Rex Release, December 28

To the kids—and we're all kids on Christmas—there is no such welcome arrival as Santa Claus. Old Kris Kringle, bringing his toys and joys, is the real lord of ceremonies, playing the double if enigmatical role of toastmaster and guest. And even if he has grown progressive of late, and has discarded his ancient means of locomotion for the more modern buzz-wagon, the sound of the honk is as welcome a noiselet to listening ears as the merry chime of the heretofore sleigh-bells. But—and here's the point—no Santa Claus is better than an unwelcome one—there's such a thing as joy in not having our desires gratified; there's so much more to wish for! But an unwelcome Santa!—of course you can't conceive of one, but listen:

Mrs. Burton decides to spend Christmas with her family and Mr. Burton is all by his lonesome. But there's no particular law compelling one to be lonely on Christmas if one can help it—and Mr. Burton can. 'Cause besides being lonesome, Mr. Burton is a New York Clubman, and you know what that means—or you've never met a co-respondent in a divorce suit. He selects the choicest lot of the four thousand and eighty chorus girlies and general scandal manufacturers that he knows, and just enough of the bon vivants among his male friends to still have the girls know he is present and arranges to beat old Parent Time to it and celebrate New Year's Eve a week in advance. He gets the butler to impersonate Mr. Claus, an awfully undignified part for a staid and sedate butler to be inveigled into, and plans are made for a full-grown revelry. As 'twere,

'Twas the night before Christmas, and all through the house
There was planning and plotting, to prepare for the souse.

But calamities don't care whom they happen to—Mrs. Burton misses the train and comes home. She—enters—the—house! Read this slowly and solemnly, and make a noise like a funeral procession), and thunderstruck is too mild a word to describe. The butler confesses, and is forthwith assigned a new and less strenuous role—to play part of the well-paper in the background. Mrs. Burton dons the Santa Claus costume, and there never was a more cheerless Santa since he first got the job. Instead of the costly gifts Mr. Burton had intended for his guests, Mrs. Burton substitutes old shoes, old corsets, and items of the same gender, and after the irate and insulted guests fall upon the stunned Burton to do a few stunning stunts on their own account, Mrs. Burton uncovers the Santa Claus and reveals—the true situation. Confronted with the awful reality, Mr. Burton gives an infant gasp, and his heart migrates to his thorax.

Suffice it to say that Burton saw more than the Star of Bethlehem that night; but of the dire happenings and dismal details let no cruel chronicles be made.

BROKE

Imp Release, December 30

Poor old Timothy finds himself in his hotel unable to pay his bill. Vulgarly speaking, he is broke. He tries to beat it but is prevented. In sheer desperation he evolves a bright, bold scheme for ending his manifold troubles.

He writes himself a letter (in a feigned name,) appointing himself manager of a restaurant. Showing this document to the servants he obtains money from them on the promise of giving them good positions.

Timothy's ingenuity is only commencing. He invites them all to a jolly good dinner and while they are enjoying it he returns to his room, secures his grip and escapes.

He is pursued, of course, by the deluded servants, but triumphantly vanishes in a fast automobile.

Broad farce all through, "Broke" gives Mr. Cumpson and his fellow-players an opportunity of putting in some highly humorous acting. On the same reel,

A LESSON TO HUSBANDS

Jack Armstrong's affections for his wife have cooled of late. One morning he leaves home in no particularly good humor with things in general. While he is in this mood Mrs. Aubrey calls upon him at his office. She is a charming woman and Jack is easily influenced by her. She wants him to grant her a little favor which he does. He cashes a check for the lady and he is so charmed by her that he improves upon the acquaintance. He escorts her home, on the way giving her another check for a new hat. They part. Jack Armstrong goes home elated with his success in making a conquest of a pretty woman. Of course, in his new-found happiness he shows indifference toward his wife, and the domestic atmosphere is therefore cool. But at the dinner table Jack Armstrong takes up a paper and reads a graphic account of the doings of a woman who is victimizing business men by persuading them to cash worthless checks. This brings him to his senses; he is a good fellow at heart, and realizing how badly he has behaved toward his wife, resolves to have nothing more to do with Mrs. Aubrey and takes every pains to reinstate himself in the good graces of his unsuspecting wife.

HIS NEW WIFE

Imp Release, January 1

Ebenezer Sage, after a year of widowerhood, decides to marry again.

Theatre Sales Co.
211 Dearborn Street, opposite Post Office
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
Long Distance Phone, Harrison 341
Dealers in Theatres anywhere in the United States and especially Chicago. Write or Call.
Make Known your Wants

When the lady of his choice arrives in Eben's home town she is received with acclamation by Eben's fellow-townsmen, but she has barely established herself in her new home before she evinces signs of Bohemianism. She is musical and she likes cider not wisely, but too well, so well indeed that she succumbs to the influence of it.

Eben's straight-laced neighbors are somewhat scandalized by the lady's free and easy manners. Eben, himself, finds it hard to tolerate them. However, in the long run the wife is cured of her propensity for cider and peace reigns in Eben's home.

THE TRINITY

Imp Release, January 4

This is the first of the third release a week by the Imp Company and is a delightful little comedy.

The plot has to do with two Germans, August and Heinrick, the former a taxidermist and the latter a painter. They live in the same apartments and are inseparable companions, notwithstanding the disparity in their ages, August being elderly and Heinrick in the bloom of young manhood.

They are congenial, and when August receives a letter from an old friend in Germany announcing that he has only a short time to live and is sending his baby to be cared for by him there is consternation. August has dearly loved his old friend and is eager to care for the baby. Heinrick is disturbed and rebels. He does not care to tolerate the presence of a child to break in upon their confidence. He is finally mollified and they go to the depot to meet the child. Heinrick has purchased an armful of toys for a baby, anxious to give the child from the Fatherland a warm greeting. A buxom young German girl alights from the train, but no child appears. Accosting August, she asks his name. He tells her and she explains that she is Lena, the daughter of his old friend. Heinrick is made acquainted with the situation and he hastily hides the toys. The two companions are up against a more perplexing situation.

The trio returns to the apartments which contains but four rooms, the kitchen, the taxidermist room and two bedrooms. The problem of sleeping is solved by August. The young people are assigned to the beds and he sleeps on the floor against the protest of Heinrick.

Two months later, as August in chasing a butterfly, he comes upon Lena and Heinrick in a love scene and he is obsessed by grief. He is in a fair way to lose his baby and his friend by the union that is inevitable. He reflects for some time and then appears and shows the young couple blue-prints of a plan to add an addition to the house so that the trinity cannot be separated by the marriage.

The plan is perfectly satisfactory to the trio and the old German is again happy, assured that his friend and the daughter of the friend will continue to be his companions.

PLAYING THE GAME

Imp Release, January 6

Club men resort to all sorts of strategies to deceive their wives but it remained for Jackson, weighing 200 pounds and addicted to late hours, to devise a means of escaping the wrath of his wife. The women friends of Mrs. Jackson commiserate with her on account of the dissipation of her husband.

The story opens at a meeting of the Welcome Idea Husband's Club in which the women jangle and Jackson's wife learns that she is abused. Coincident with this, Jackson is enjoying himself with the boys, and the drinks come fast and furious. He leaves the club and in inebriated condition reels home. At the sight of him the wife softens. He tells her he is ill and she, in her ignorance, believes him. A physician is summoned, who takes in the situation in a glance but tells the wife that Jackson needs exercise in the open. He advises golf and Jackson is forced to acquiesce.

The next day the ponderous husband engages the services of some friends and repairs to the golf course, attired in regulation golfing costume. The party has also taken the precaution to bring along a wheel chair. Jackson makes ineffectual swipes at the ball, misses and perspires freely. He is a failure as a golfer and decides to play the game by proxy. Wheeled about the course, his assistant lands on the ball and they follow. They approach a hill and the chair and its freight gets away from the helpers and Jackson is precipitated to the bottom and lands between two rocks.

He finally returns home to announce to his wife that he has had a delightful day's play and is much improved in health by the exercise. She has implicit faith in him and is overjoyed. On the same reel,

BACK TO HIS OLD HOME TOWN

Mr. Abner Brown, in deciding to revisit his old home town, never dreamed of the series of adventures that lay before him. A sedate, respectable, middle-aged member of society, who would have thought that in the home town Abner, at the time of his supposed arrival, should be represented by a double; somebody who looked so like Abner that he might be mistaken for him. Well, he was. And this double was a moving picture actor.

It also happened that Mr. Abner Brown's home town was a moving picture center, at which various producers gathered their respective companies to work out their plays. The actor, who looked like Mr. Abner Brown, was duly instructed in his part by the producer and disappears for the time. When unsuspecting Abner appeared he was mistaken for the moving picture actor whom he resembled. The resemblance was that the Western actors held him up; he was chased across the prairie by cowboys and Indians; he was shot by French soldiers—in fact he went through a whole lot of extraordinary adventures at the hands of the moving picture actors before he escaped and got home to his wife and children.

THE CADDY'S DREAM

Majestic Release, Dec. 31

Mr. Browntop and Miss Kelsomine go out to play golf. They engage Andrew McTavish, a long, lean Scotchman, as caddie. After teeing the ball, Browntop hoists it with a tremendous drive into the atmosphere. They search and search, but still no ball. At length wearied with the quest they lie down in a haystack to sleep. They wake 20 years later, aged and forlorn, but still pursue the search through all sorts of places.

The caddy feeling the need of a wee drap has sneaked off under a tree and fallen asleep. Mr. Browntop indignantly awakens him, telling him that he has searched half an hour and found no ball. The caddy wakes up, looks around wonderingly and as he understands the circumstances, chuckles to himself, saying, "Mon, but it was a funny dream."

On same reel—

WILL YOU MARRY ME?

After a long and attentive courtship, George has at last succeeded in persuading Mabel to name the day and accept the engagement ring, which he places upon her finger.

He leaves her for a few moments, and rushes to the nearest florist to obtain a bunch of her favorite chrysanthemums before they depart for the football game of the year.

While he is busily engaged with the florist, Mabel's cook on her afternoon out coquettes with her friend the policeman outside the florist's door and carelessly drops her long white gloves on the sidewalk and departs for a walk in the park.

George comes out loaded down with chrysanthemums and a very attractive lady passes him, evidently on her way to the flower store. George sees the gloves upon the sidewalk, and ever gallant, picks them up, assuming that the lady has dropped them. She has her gloves on, however, and thinks George is trying to flirt with her and calls a policeman and threatens to have him arrested. She leaves the policeman with George and indignantly sails away. George manages to square things with the officer and hastens back to Mabel, who receives the flowers with proper appreciation.

A friend is announced, and to George's dismay, it is none other than the lady who had accused him of attempting to flirt with her. She is introduced by Mabel to her fiancé, and at once recognizes George, and denounces him. Mabel promptly returns his ring and orders him from the house. George is ushered out the front door by the officious butler, and in dismay sends a note to Mabel asking her to let him explain, and threatens that if she does not, he will take a solemn vow to marry the first girl who accepts him. Urged on by her friend, Mabel writes upon the note to go as far as he likes, that she is done with him.

George being no quitter, is bent on fulfilling his rash vow—he sallies forth and proposes right and left, creating trouble and dismay wherever he goes, but he is everywhere refused. He at last meets one lady of ample proportions, who while startled by his sudden suit, coyly accepts him and tells him that she will return at once in proper finery to go with him to the church.

It is Mabel's cook—she returns to her mistress and promptly shows the engagement ring. Mabel at once recognizes it, and explanations ensue, which bring out the fact that the gloves which caused the trouble belong to the cook and that George's story about finding them was evidently true.

Mabel realizes that she has forced George to his rash action and resolves that their young lives shall not be blighted, and by a mirth-provoking device enables George to not only keep his vow, but marry the right girl—and they lived happily ever afterward—maybe.

THE BEST MAN WINS

Nestor Release, December 25

Gordon, the foreman of Bassett's fifty-acre farm, is seriously in love with Dottie Bassett, the charming daughter of the house. The girl, however, fails to reciprocate and remains heart-whole and fancy free. This attitude of hers greatly displeases her old dad, who is attached to his foreman. The boys for many miles around, however, rejoice, for each sees the possibility of winning fair Dottie.

The big farm has to be ploughed, and old man Bassett urges his recalcitrant daughter to smile on poor Gordon's suit, so that the inspired hope may cause him to wake from the lethargic state into which her indifference has plunged him. Dottie, however, fails to see things through her papa's glasses, and continues to cold-shoulder Gordon.

A barn dance is about to be held; it is the event of the year. All the boys fight for the privilege of taking Miss Bassett to the dance. She decides to give every one an equal chance, and incidentally have the farm ploughed. The man who wins the ploughing bee shall take her to the dance. This makes Gordon happy, so sure he is of victory.

Harold, a dashing young man from the Agricultural Department at Washington, makes his appearance and is promptly smitten by Dottie's sweet charms. This time the girl does not fail to reciprocate. Papa raves and Gordon sullenly nurses his bruised feelings.

While going to town, the horse takes fright and runs away. Gordon jumps out of the carriage, leaving Dottie at the mercy of the maddened animal. Harold dashes to the rescue and saves the girl in the nick of time. Papa Bassett is still obdurate and favors Gordon.

The ploughing bee proves both amusing and exciting. The race finally lies between Gordon and Harold; it is stubbornly contested to the finish, but Cupid is with Harold, who is acclaimed the best man. He has won fairly and claims the prize. At the barn dance the climax is reached, and Harold gains the old farmer's consent to the marriage of his daughter. Gordon acknowledges defeat and steals away from the lovers, who are happy in each other's arms.

MUTT AND JEFF BREAK INTO SOCIETY

Nestor Release, December 30

Mutt and Jeff decide to go to work. First they must learn a trade. Automobile driving seems to appeal to their roving dispositions. Chauffeurs are so close to the mazuma kings, whose charming daughters now and then fall under the spell of the goggled boys at the wheel.

Mutt and Jeff accordingly take automobile lessons. The former successfully passes the examination and receives his license to take joy rides, to maim and to kill, while poor Jeff is told to "try again."

The lanky chauffeur answers an advertisement and makes a decided hit with Banker Russell and his family. Apropos, the inevitable "girl" is a big part of this wealthy family. Her name is Helen. In the early Grecian days there was another Helen (of Troy) whose association with the original Mutt and Jeff created some big stir.

To come to Hecuba, Mutt appears to have settled the ticklish problem of making a living by becoming a chauffeur for Mr. Russell. With little Jeff, things are different. He roams about the streets in an aimless fashion. Small as he is, he has a human breast, and hope springs eternal there.

Helen, who owns autos of every description, is a good pedestrian. She takes a ramble in the park and for a moment lets her dainty person rest upon a bench. When she leaves, she leaves (unintentionally, of course) her well-filled purse. Jeff, still wandering and still hoping, finds the purse. The young lady's visiting card leads Jeff to her palatial home. Here he is received with joy. The old banker showers cigars upon him; the Mrs. offers him all sorts of choice delicacies, and Helen—well, her romantic soul goes out to the rotund little chap. She takes him for a spin in her auto with Mutt doing the "wheeling." The ride is an eventful one. Fifty miles from the city limits, the snorting thing stops and Mutt makes a tour of investigation. When under the auto, Jeff decides to take the wheel in his own hands. He does and the "Yellow Dash" zig-zags away leaving Mutt behind.

Helen and Jeff reach home safe and happy. Mutt manages to reach a pole bearing the legend, "Ten miles to the city limits," and collapses. Jeff embraces the girl and Mutt embraces the—pole. On the same reel,

THEIR AFTERNOON OFF

Jack is off and so is Mary. Both being off, they go for a stroll. Jack and Mary have never met. They meet now at the fountain. Jack is kind and Mary promises to see him on her return from abroad. Next morning Mary is told by her mistress that a new milkman is coming. The milkman is John. Tableau! Jack and Mary decide to deceive each other no more. This picture abounds in beautiful California scenery, and is virtually a scenic.

A WESTERN GIRL'S LOVE

Nestor Release, December 27

For her daughter, Edna, to refuse wealthy Godfrey Ainslee and accept a poor pony express rider like Ned Hayden, appeared to Mrs. Nolan to be the height of folly. Accordingly, Edna was formally betrothed to Godfrey. But no sooner did Sheriff Nolan hear of his wife's interference than he sternly insisted that the girl should select her own husband, and Edna very gleefully handed back Godfrey's handsome ring and replaced it with Ned's more modest one.

Firmly determined to marry the girl at any price, Godfrey, accompanied by Bert Hill, galloped after the pony express rider, overtaking and attacking Ned as he reached the most dangerous part of the road. Then followed a hand-to-hand conflict between the two men, ending in Ned being forced over the edge of the cliff. Feeling assured that his rival was well out of the way, Godfrey commanded Bert to dispose of Ned's horse as soon as possible, and then calmly rode back to the Nolan hotel.

As Pete, the half-breed, to whom Bert had readily disposed of Ned's horse, rode past the scene of the struggle, he spied the young man's hat, and going to the edge of the cliff, was astonished to behold its owner, whose fall had been broken by the ledge below, holding his head and staring around in a bewildered condition. Hurrying down on the other side, he helped Ned to mount his horse. Then taking the wounded man to his cabin, Pete offered the pony express rider what humble hospitality lay in his power.

Here, physically recovered, but with memory gone, Ned remained for two months, and the time might have run into two years, had not Sheriff Nolan and his men recognized Ned's horse, followed his tracks, and discovered their lost friend in Pete's cabin, from whence he hurried them to Nolan's hotel, where the sight of Edna and Godfrey (who had spread the report that Ned had been seen in another part of the country) completely restored his memory, enabling him to give a full account of Godfrey's treachery to the horror of foolish Mrs. Nolan, who at that moment had the minister ready to make her daughter Mrs. Ainslee.

Without loss of words, Sheriff Nolan hustled Godfrey off to prison, while Ned, greatly to the satisfaction of all present, quietly took his place as the bridegroom.

A MIDWINTER TRIP TO LOS ANGELES

American Release, January 1

The tourist visiting Los Angeles usually returns with marvelous stories concerning California and the beautiful city of Los Angeles. But where one American is enabled to see the wonders of the Southern California, a hundred never even hope to make the exquisite journey. This film was designed to give those Americans that opportunity through the medium of the motion picture camera. With that thought in mind, a carefully planned voyage to Southern California was executed by the American company, taking in those places that the visiting tourist never fails to see.

Marengo avenue, in Pasadena, is first on the canvas. Its overarching pepper trees make a sight not equalled elsewhere in America. Westmoreland Place, Pasadena, home of California millionaires, is followed by a view of the famous Busch gardens, property of the wealthy St. Louis brewer. Then follows delightful glimpses of the ascent of Mt. Lowe, a journey never overlooked by traveling tourists, and a sight not soon to be forgotten. This journey takes in the longest curving trestle in the United States, the Gate Above the Clouds, and finally we reach the top of Mt. Lowe, 6,100 feet above the level of the sea and 2,000 feet higher than Lick Observatory.

The world-famous Cawston Ostrich Farm is next, where we see the visitors feeding Mr. and Mrs. Taft, largest ostriches in the world, with oranges. There is an ostrich-riding exhibition, too, very funny to the little folks and highly entertaining to the big ones. Also the California alligator farm, with its 1,000 alligators of varying years and sizes. We see Okeschobee, 500 years old and over 16 feet in length. We see those same alligators "shooting-the-chutes," too, an odd sight that will amuse anyone.

Then we are taken to the famous California oil well, where we note with amazement that oil is being pumped even in the front yards of residences. Historic San Gabriel Mission is next, and our only regret is that we cannot hear its famous chimes. We observe that magnificent home of Paul de Longpre, America's most famous flower painter. His home is truly a wonderwork, with its superb Moorish architecture and its beautiful gardens.

Then for the Los Angeles pigeon farm, where 500,000 white pigeons make a fairy snowstorm as we stroll through the yard. The picture closes with a scurrying of soft white bodies through the air. It is a delightful journey from start to finish and will go a long way toward satisfying that longing for a glimpse of beautiful California.

THE MISADVENTURES OF A CLAIM AGENT

American Release, January 4

When young Jack Neivell found the evidence of pay-dirt while prospecting he decided at once to purchase the claim lease from the owner. If the mine paid as well as the samples he would soon be in a position to ask a certain question of the only girl.

He called at the office of the landman and by turning over his savings obtained the leases from the owner who was much pleased to surrender what he considered a useless property.

Jack pitched his camp on his claim and started work. He soon made a respectable showing as far as hard work was concerned, but Dame Fortune was elusive.

It happened that Dad Curtis, the landowner, was also enamoured of, Williams and he called to pay his respects and urge her to become Mrs. Curtis, on the morning that Jack struck a pay streak. In his excitement Jack hurried to Tess's home to tell her of his success and incidentally hers if she so willed.

Tess so willed, and poor old Dad returned home to cook a scheme to neutralize Jack's success.

He payed a visit to Jack's camp and secured the lease that the young prospector had carelessly left and employed a bunch of squatters to work the claim for him.

When Jack returned from his successful wooing, he was ordered off his claim by the squatters unless he could show his lease, and as it was resting in the inside pocket of Dad Curtis' coat poor Jack was compelled to return to Tess empty-handed. Tess did some rapid thinking and then some rapid work. She called on Dad Curtis, not conventionally but through the window incog., and requested the return of the lease at the point of a gun. She notified the sheriff and by her efforts the claim was promptly restored to Jack, and Tess then agreed to fight his battle for him for the rest of his life. A bright, breezy comedy with the snap and go.

BRONCHO-BUSTING FOR "FLYING A" PICTURES

Showing Hiney Snow, the champion broncho buster of the state of California and a "Flying A" cowboy, breaking an outlaw horse for use in "Flying A" pictures. Full of excitement from the moment the saddle touches the back of the wild horse until Mr. Snow has conquered the vicious animal. It's a thriller.

WHEN MARIAN WAS LITTLE

Solax Release, December 27

Marian's brother Rob invites home with him his chum at college, Dick Morton. Little Marian, Rob's sixteen-year-old sister, has read many novels and as a consequence is filled with peculiar romantic ideas. When she learns that her brother's chum is expected, she decides on a plan by which she may captivate him.

A part of her plan is to "primp up" as a "big girl." She gets long skirts, rats for her hair, corsets and such other accessories which help to emphasize feminine charms. She succeeds in a measure, but not after she bribes into silence her kid brother, who has learned the secrets of her boudoir.

Then Marian begins to lay siege to Dick's unwary heart. She practises her alluring coquetries on him with such telling effect that before long Dick is entirely submerged. But he receives a jolt when he attempts to kiss her. She boxes his ears good and proper. She shows him, as any big girl would, how entirely improper is "promiscuous osculation," or in other words, stolen kisses.

Years later, when Marian has blossomed out as a young lady of winsome personality and charm of manner, she meets Dick again. This time his compelling and eloquent professions of undying affection win her consent to become his wife.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

Solax Release, December 31

Widow Johnston is "up against" a hard struggle for existence. She and her little wide-eyed daughter are followed by a relentless nemesis until the spirit of Christmas, with its joyousness and good cheer spreading over God's world, brings happiness into her home.

The widow seeks work, but luck being against her, she does not secure a position. During her wanderings she is falsely accused of theft by an irascible and insistent old miser, but with the aid of a good-natured sergeant she escapes the indignity of false imprisonment.

Her little daughter, like other girls, wanders off to see the big Christmas displays in the shop windows. While gazing with hungry and envious eyes upon dolls and houses and toys she makes the acquaintance of a benevolent woman of wealth. This woman is moved by the child's longing glances and so buys for her a big French doll.

The plot is complicated by a dull-headed policeman who arrests the child, but it all turns out happily at the widow's humble home on Christmas Eve, for Santa Claus is the harbinger of hope and love besides material gifts.

THE DIVIDED RING

Solax Release, December 29

Two children are left orphans. They become a public charge and are sent to an orphan asylum. When they grow up and reach the age of twelve, they are adopted by two different families and thus are separated. Before they are parted, they break in half a ring which their mother had left them as a keepsake and each pledge to wear the divided ring in a chamois bag around their neck.

The little girl is adopted by a wealthy family and is reared in an environment of refinement and culture. The boy is adopted by a thoughtless and ill-tempered farmer, who treats him cruelly and imposes on him the labor which would naturally revolve upon a much older man.

The boy revolts and makes a break for freedom. The farmer intercepts all of the boy's mail and withholds all of his letters from him. In this way, when the boy's sister moves to another city, he loses all trace of her.

The boy, after he runs away, gets free passage on a freight train and before long finds himself in a small town. He falls in with a robber. The robber treats him royally. One night, the robber decides to rob a dwelling. He uses the boy as his helper. The house which is being robbed is the home of the boy's sister. She interrupts her brother while he is in the act of rifling a desk. He struggles with her and during the struggle she tears from his neck the half of the divided ring. Brother and sister are then brought together after years of separation.

A REALISTIC MAKE-UP

Great Northern Release, December 30

Mr. Boig, an actor, has to study for the part of a burglar in a new drama. Whilst engaged in making up, his apartments are invaded by a genuine burglar. The later is of small stature, while Boig is of huge proportions, yet the burglar ties Boig's hands behind him, eats his dinner, drinks his wine and annexes his clothes, afterwards reposing on his bed. Boig manages to use the telephone and summons the police, but on their arrival, the burglar assures them that Boig is the one they want, and he is led away a captive. In the street, however, he convinces the custodians of law and order that he is the tenant of the premises, and eventually the tables are turned on the real burglar. Boig, however, is generous and buys him off as recompense for the services rendered him in showing him what a real burglar should be like. On the same reel,

SEA AND LANDSCAPES, DENMARK

A charming selection of views of scenes by sea and land. Most remarkable are the series of wave pictures, which show what great strides have been made in presenting the restless ocean on the cinematograph. Views of yachts in full sail, of cliffs, and inland hills and valleys are included, and finally is given a picture of an aeroplane and sunset.

THE BLOOD OF THE POOR

Champion Release, January 1

This photo play before us tells the story of how God's poor have been devilishly treated, and it vividly pictures for us the common, every-day occurrences of life of both the poor and rich, placing them in such juxtaposition that we at once realize their full meaning and value. We see the young girl in her father's tailor shop, sharing the meagre morsels of bread with her little brothers and sisters; and the old father, worn and attenuated, toiling on the bench, striving to earn a scanty subsistence.

The constable serves notice on him to pay his rent or get out on the morrow. Pay his rent! And his children and himself starving. Outside the shop the girl is sweeping when a rich man's auto glides by. "What a pretty maid she would make for me," says the daughter of wealth. "She is yours for the asking," replies the father. And thus into the shop troop these lilies of the earth! "I own this place" says the rich man to the poor tailor. "I want your daughter as maid for my child. Let her come along with me, and thus you may cancel your indebtedness, otherwise——"

The poor child becomes a maid in the rich man's home. And there comes a youth to woo the wealthy daughter. But seeing the poor maid is good to look upon also, he marks her for his victim. The innocent child discovers that his honeyed promises were but a tissue of lies—appeals to her mistress to have justice done her for the heinous crime committed. The latter laughs at such presumption on the part of her servant. She condones the offense—and so the poor child is driven out, and she seeks her father's home.

Meanwhile, the father is working hard on a garment that has been allotted to him by a tailoring concern of greater pretentions, and it must be done at a certain time. This garment is part of a full-dress suit which a young man is to wear at a grand reception announcing his fiancée's engagement. That young man is the very man who wrought the ruin of the poor maid. And so the tailor, hungry and famished, works and works to get it done on time, not knowing, great God! not knowing of his daughter's degradation at the hands of this wretch.

The work was completed, and with it the life of the tailor, for he died. Another tailor, accompanied by the rich youth, appears for the garment, the young scion storming at the delay. They find it. Also the dead tailor and his crying little ones. Then the youth is startled by the appearance of the girl he had ruined. He offers her his purse, but she refuses it, and he betakes himself to the grand reception, leaving behind him misery.

THE KID OF ROARING CAMP

Champion Release, January 3

The most hardened of mortals may not resist the appeal which is made by a child; that cannot be gainsaid. Well, then, in the Kid of Roaring Camp we have a little one whose claim upon us is exceptional.

(Continued on page 50)

GROWING! GROWING! GROWING!!

Heavens, how that "third Imp" is growing! A mere baby only three weeks ago, he is strong and husky now. Within another week or two he will be as big and popular as "Monday Imp" and "Thursday Imp." The widespread and insistent demand for all three Imps every week is proving irresistible. Keep at it, gentlemen, and make sure of at least three good houses every week by showing at least three Imps every week. D. R. Whitman, Doan Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, says: "I wish there were many times three Imps a week. Whatever success we have achieved I unhesitatingly give Imps a large share of the credit."

"HIS NEW WIFE"

Copyright, 1911, INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES COMPANY. Released Monday, Jan. 1. A rapid-fire story involving a woman who loves hard cider too well. Book it!

"THE TRINITY"

Copyright, 1911, INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES COMPANY. Released Thursday, Jan. 4. In which you see King Baggot, your one favorite, at his best. Book it!

"PLAYING THE GAME"

Copyright, 1911, INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES COMPANY. Released Saturday, Jan. 6. A fat man plays golf by proxy. It's terribly, terribly, terribly funny. On the same reel you will get "BACK TO HIS OLD HOME"

Copyright, 1911, INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES COMPANY. Everybody who has seen advance exhibitions of this film says it is without exception the

"FUNNIEST IMP EVER MADE!"

The above "Saturday Split Imp" will simply coin money for you. Will you take the necessary steps to get it? No film maker in the world is producing such rollicking comedies. Think what such pictures will do toward increasing the popularity of your house!

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES COMPANY.
102 West 101st Street, New York. Carl Laemmle, President.

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

FILMS that will BRING back LOST TRADE. A little higher in price but twice as good.

Look at these prices.

2000 ft.—6 times a week.....$14.00
2000 ft.—7 times a week..... 15.00
3000 ft.—6 times a week..... 18.00
3000 ft.—7 times a week..... 20.00

Songs and lithographs Free—Express one Way.

SEND FOR LIST.

STOCK ROLL TICKETS—7c per M in lots of 20M or more.

Bargains in Second-Hand Machines—Write Today.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY COMPANY
109 NO. DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Data from Manufacturers' List of Releases

MEMBERS OF SALES CO.

AMBROSIO

	Feet
Nov. 22—The Golden Wedding
Nov. 29—The Little Duke
Dec. 6—Jorio's Daughter
Dec. 13—The Marquis of Lantenac
Dec. 9—Tweedledum in High Life
Dec. 9—The Accusing Dog
Dec. 20—Tweedledum Marries an American Girl
Dec. 20—The War in Tripoli

AMERICAN

	Feet
Dec. 7—The Smoke of the Forty-Five (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 11—The Man Hunt (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 14—Santa Catalina, Magic Isle of the Pacific (Scenic and Educational)	1000
Dec. 18—The Last Notch (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 21—The Gold Lost	1000
Dec. 25—The Duel of Candles	1000
Dec. 28—Bonita of El Cajon	1000
Jan. 1—A Midwinter Trip to Los Angeles	1000
Jan. 4—The Misadventures of a Claim Agent (Com. Dr.)	1000
Jan. 8—The Winning of La Mesa	1000
Jan. 11—The Locket (Dr.)	1000
Jan. 15—The Relentless Law (Dr.)	1000

BISON

Dec. 1—An Easterner's Peril
Dec. 5—The Empty Tepee
Dec. 8—A Range Romance
Dec. 12—Bar Z's New Cook
Dec. 15—The Foreman's Courage
Dec. 19—Cowgirls' Pranks
Dec. 22—An Indian Martyr
Dec. 26—The Run on the Bank
Dec. 29—Getting His Man

CHAMPION

Dec. 4—Yankee Doodle and Our Navy
Dec. 6—The Indian Fortune Teller (Dr.)	950
Dec. 11—A Traitor on the Staff	950
Dec. 13—The Saving of Dan	950
Dec. 18—The Coward's Flute	950
Dec. 20—By the Decree of Fate	950
Dec. 25—Bonnie of the Hills	950
Dec. 27—The Doctor's Close Call	950

COMET

Dec. 1—The Late Mrs. Early (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 4—Billy's Letters (Com.)	1000
Dec. 8—The Dead Canary (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 11—The Ups and Downs of Rafferty (Com.)
Dec. 15—Just in Time for Dinner (Dr.)
Dec. 18—A Game of Bridge (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 22—The Man with the Camera (Dr.)	985
Dec. 25—The Tie that Binds (Com.)	1000
Dec. 29—The Crude Miss Prude (Com.)	1000

ECLAIR

Dec. 7—There Fell a Flower (Com.)	660
Dec. 7—Manners and Traditions of Piemont (Edu.)	660
Dec. 12—The Musician's Daughter
Dec. 14—Her One Day's Dream
Dec. 19—A Tragic Joke (Dr.)
Dec. 21—A Heart Bowed Down
Dec. 26—The Wrong Bottle
Dec. 28—A Silent Call
Dec. 28—Little Willie's Cure for Uncle (Com.)
Jan. 2—Divorcons (Com.)
Jan. 4—Old Papers, Old Souvenirs
Jan. 4—Charley's Holiday (Com.)
Jan. 9—The Doctor's Duty
Jan. 11—The Inventor

GREAT NORTHERN

	Feet
Nov. 18—High Scotland (Scenic)
Nov. 25—The Theft of Mona Lisa (Com.)
Dec. 2—The Penalty of Her Ambition (Dr.)
Dec. 9—Buttons and Hooks (Com.)
Dec. 9—Winter in Switzerland (Scenic)
Dec. 16—His First Monocle (Com.)
Dec. 16—Greece
Dec. 23—The Twins (Com.)
Dec. 23—From Ostersund to Storlien

IMP

Dec. 2—President Taft Dedicating the Naval Training Station at Chicago, Ill.	350
Dec. 4—The Dumb Messenger (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 7—Tony and the Stork	1000
Dec. 9—Her Birthday (Com. Dr.)	750
Dec. 9—Columbia Interscholastic Chase	350
Dec. 11—Why the Check was Good (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 14—The Little Stocking (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 16—Billy's Seance
Dec. 16—The Bungalow Burglars
Dec. 18—The Girl and the Half-Back
Dec. 21—The Professor
Dec. 23—A Pair of Gloves	600
Dec. 23—Niagara Falls Celebration	400
Dec. 25—A Winning Miss	1000
Dec. 28—The Portrait	1000
Dec. 30—Broke	600
Dec. 30—A Lesson to Hushands	400
Jan. 1—His New Wife	1000
Jan. 4—The Trinity	700
Jan. 6—Flying the Game	600
Jan. 6—Back to His Old Town	400

ITALA

Nov. 18—Foolshead, a Professor of Innocence
Nov. 18—The Life of Bees
Nov. 25—The Tailor Wants His Pay
Nov. 25—The King of Noose Throwers
Dec. 2—Severed from the World
Dec. 16—An Up-to-Date Doctor

LUX
By Prieur.

Nov. 24—Bill and Bertie Get Married (Com.)	325
Dec. 1—Bill as a Veterinary Surgeon (Com.)
Dec. 1—The Making of an Aeroplane (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Man in the Auto (Dr.)	650
Dec. 8—The Adventures of an Amateur Hypnotist (Com.)	350
Dec. 15—Bill and His Chum Tire of Married Life (Com.)	521
Dec. 15—Mistaken for the Culprit (Dr.)	459
Dec. 22—A Japanese Love Story (Dr.)	977

MAJESTIC

Dec. 8—Love Heeds Not Showers
Dec. 10—Keeping Mahel Home
Dec. 17—Little Red Riding Hood
Dec. 24—The Actress
Dec. 31—The Caddy's Dream (Com.)	400
Dec. 31—Will You Marry Me (Com.)	600

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Dec. 2—Western Feud
Dec. 2—Mutt and Jeff and the Scheme that Failed
Dec. 6—Struck Gold (Dr.)
Dec. 9—Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond (Com. Dr.)
Dec. 11—Only an Iceman (Com.)
Dec. 13—The Law of the Range (Dr.)
Dec. 16—In the Early Days (Dr.)
Dec. 16—Mutt and Jeff Make the Feathers Fly
Dec. 18—The Love Chase (Com.)
Dec. 27—A Western Girl's Love (Dr.)
Dec. 30—Mutt and Jeff Break Into Society (Com.)
Dec. 30—Their Afternoon Off (Com.)

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Dec. 2—Views of Lake Como (Scenic)
Dec. 5—The Little Thief (Com. Dr.)
Dec. 5—The Secret Order of Horns (Com.)
Dec. 9—Two Men and Girl (Dr.)
Dec. 12—The Little Chaperone (Com.)
Dec. 12—Views of Genoa, Italy (Scenic)
Dec. 16—When Heart Wires Cross (Com. Dr.)
Dec. 19—Cupid's Big Sister (Com. Dr.)
Dec. 19—Touring Brussels (Scenic)
Dec. 23—Hearts of Italy (Dr.)
Dec. 26—The Sign of the Helmet (Com.)
Dec. 26—Where Steel Meets Cloud (Ind.)
Dec. 30—A Mail Bag Romance (Dr.)

RELIANCE

Dec. 2—The Poison Cup
Dec. 6—The Turn of the Wheel
Dec. 9—The Turnstile
Dec. 13—Love and Charity
Dec. 16—The Playwright
Dec. 16—Just Smile
Dec. 23—The Doctor's Dilemma
Dec. 23—A Pair of Shoes
Dec. 30—The Birth-Mark
Jan. 3—Resignation

REPUBLIC

Dec. 16—Six Nations (Part I)
Dec. 17—Six Nations (Part II)
Dec. 23—Before Yorktown (Part I)
Dec. 24—Before Yorktown (Part II)
Dec. 30—The Pride of Lexington
Jan. 13 & 14—Life of Daniel Boone

REX

Nov. 30—The Strangers
Dec. 7—The Measure of a Man (Dr.)
Dec. 14—Logging Industry in the Northwest
Dec. 21—The Martyr
Dec. 28—The Unwelcome Santa Claus (Com.)

SOLAX COMPANY

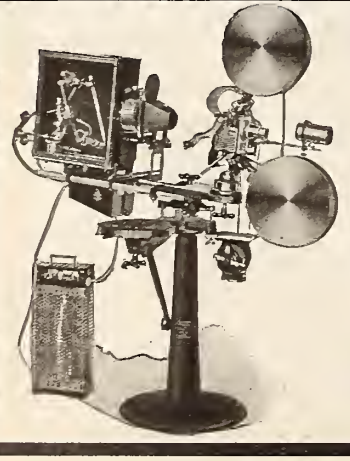
Dec. 1—A Revolutionary Romance (Mil.)
Dec. 6—Bahy's Choice (Com.)
Dec. 6—The Paper Making Industry (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Little Shoe (Dr.)
Dec. 13—Fickle Bridget (Com.)
Dec. 15—The Little Kiddie Mine (Dr.)
Dec. 20—Love, Whiskers and Letters
Dec. 22—The Violin Makers of Nuremberg.
Dec. 24—Christmas Presents
Dec. 27—When Marian Was Little
Dec. 29—The Divided Ring
Dec. 31—Christmas Presents

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Dec. 1—Beneath the Veil (Dr.)
Dec. 5—The Newsy and the Tramp
Dec. 8—Brother Boh's Bahy (Com.)
Dec. 12—The Lady from the Sea
Dec. 15—Deacon Dehhs (Com.)
Dec. 19—The Tomhoy
Dec. 22—Cinderella
Dec. 26—She (Part I)
Dec. 29—The Expert's Report
Jan. 2—She (Part II)
Jan. 2—The Passing
Jan. 5—A Columhus Day Conspiracy

FEATURE AND EDUCATIONAL

Nov. 20—Love and Aviation (Dr.)
Nov. 20—Zigomar (Dr.)
Dec. 18—The Love Chase (Com.)



One Hundred and Fifteen Thousand People in the First Fifteen Days

was the attendance at the lectures of the Southern-Union Pacific Railway System at the Land Show, Chicago, Novemher 18th to Decemher 9th, 1911.

This great railway system has given suhstantial proof of their unhounded faith in the moving picture as an advertising medium by investing over Twenty-five Thousand Dollars for an exhihit of only three weeks. This company had erected for their purpose two complete moving picture theatres seating ahout 500 people in each and conducted alternately one-half hour lectures.

THE MACHINES USED WERE ONE 1908 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH AND ONE 1910 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH—"NUF SED."

1912 MODELS NOW BEING SHIPPED.

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO., 564 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO

For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

	Feet
Nov. 30—A Woman Scorned (Dr.)
Dec. 4—Why He Gave Up (Com.)
Dec. 4—Abe Gets Even with Father (Com.)
Dec. 7—The Failure (Dr.)
Dec. 11—Saved from Himself (Dr.)	999
Dec. 14—Taking His Medicine (Com.)	673
Dec. 14—Her Pet (Com.)	323
Dec. 18—As in a Looking Glass (Dr.)
Dec. 21—A Terrible Discovery (Dr.)
Dec. 25—Caught with the Goods (Com.)
Dec. 25—A Mix-Up in Rain Coats (Com.)
Dec. 28—The Voice of the Child (Dr.)

EDISON

Dec. 15—Brocton Fair and Horse Show	990
Dec. 16—Stage-Struck Lizzie (Com.)	650
Dec. 16—A Trip from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek	350
Dec. 19—Santa Claus and the Clubman (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 20—The Sign of the Three Labels (Com.)	1000
Dec. 22—How Sir Andrew Lost His Vote (Com.)	1000
Dec. 23—Pat Clancy's Adventure (Com.)	1000
Dec. 26—Papa's Sweetheart (Dr.)	625
Dec. 26—Modern Weapons for Fighting Fire, New York City	375
Dec. 27—The Stuff that Dreams are Made of (Com.)	1000
Dec. 29—A Romance of the Cliff Dwellers (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 30—Uncle Hiram's List (Com.)	1000
Jan. 2—Eleanore Cuyler (Dr.)	1000
Jan. 3—The Two Flats (Com.)	995
Jan. 5—Freezing Auntie (Com.)	660
Jan. 5—Codfish Industry, Newfoundland	340
Jan. 6—Please Remit (Com.)	995
Jan. 9—Thirty Days at Hard Labor (Com.)	1000
Jan. 10—Max and Maurice (Com.)	1000
Jan. 12—Lead, Kindly Light (Dr.)	1000
Jan. 13—A Question of Seconds (Dr.)	775
Jan. 16—Jack and the Beanstalk	1000
Jan. 17—St. Johns, Newfoundland, and Its Surroundings	225

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Dec. 1—The Quinceville Raffle (Com.)	1000
Dec. 2—The Mountain Law (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 5—The Madman (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 7—The Long Strike (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 8—Getting Even with Emily (Com.)
Dec. 8—Stray Bullets (Com.)	1000
Dec. 9—A Frontier Doctor (W. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 12—The First Man (Com.)	1000
Dec. 14—The Hack and Schmidt Bout (Com.)
Dec. 14—A Polished Burglar (Com.)	1000
Dec. 15—A Goodfellow's Christmas Eve (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 16—The Cowboy Coward (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 19—The Three Bears (Juvenile)	1000
Dec. 21—Winning an Heiress (Com. Dr.)	300
Dec. 21—The Foiling of Red Dugan (Dr.)	700
Dec. 22—The Millionaire Barber (Com.)	1000
Dec. 23—Broncho Billy's Christmas Dinner (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 26—A Story of the West (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 28—For Memory's Sake (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 29—A Bird in the Hand (Com.)	1000
Dec. 30—Broncho Billy's Adventure (W. Dr.)	1000

GAUMONT

G. Kleine

Dec. 2—The Promoter (Dr.)	1140
Dec. 5—Jimmie Tricks the Landlady (Com.)	475
Dec. 5—The Challenge (Dr.)	525
Dec. 9—Camoens, the Portuguese Shakespeare (Dr.)	610
Dec. 9—Important Scenes in Paris, France (Travel)	320
Dec. 12—Heroism (Dr.)	610
Dec. 12—Arabian Customs (Ind.)	366
Dec. 16—A Queen's Treachery (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 19—Through the Enemy's Lines (Dr.)	985
Dec. 23—The Maid of Argos (Dr.)	980
Dec. 26—From Pity to Love (Dr.)	826
Dec. 26—Scenes Off the Coast of North Africa (Travel)	124
Dec. 30—Curing a Reckless Student (Dr.)	1010
Jan. 2—A Royal Romance (Dr.)	975
Jan. 6—Evils of Impure Literature (Dr.)	1035
Jan. 9—The Winged Messenger	800
Jan. 9—Gorges of the Verdon River	200
Jan. 13—The God of Wine Gets Stung (Com.)	806
Jan. 13—The Ardennes Forests, France (Travel)	194
Jan. 16—Uncle Ned's Diplomacy (Com.)	956

KALEM CO.

Dec. 1—How Betty Captured the Outlaw (Com.)
Dec. 1—A Glimpse Into the Yellowstone National Park (Sc.)
Dec. 4—Arrah-Na-Pogue (3 reels) (Dr.)	3000
Dec. 6—The Long Arm of the Law (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 8—Too Much Realism (Com.)	1000
Dec. 11—Molly Pitcher (Hist. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 13—Norma from Norway (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 15—Bill's Flute (W. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 18—He Who Laughs Last (Com.)	1000
Dec. 20—The Flash in the Night (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 22—Between Father and Son (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 25—The "Revenue" and the Girl (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 27—The Higher Toll (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 29—The Maid's Double (Dr.)	1000

LUBIN

Dec. 2—Western Chivalry (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 4—A Head for Business (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 6—Sins of the Father (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 7—Love's Labor Lost (Com.)	1000
Dec. 9—The Teamster (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 11—A Girlish Impulse (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 13—Mr. and Mrs. Suspicious (Com.)	400
Dec. 13—Quick! A Plumber (Com.)	600
Dec. 14—The Substitute (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 16—A Timely Lesson (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 18—Love Decides (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 20—Art Versus Music (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 21—Kiddies' Christmas (2 reels)	1800
Dec. 23—The Sergeant's White Peril (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 25—One Way to Win (Com.)	1000
Dec. 27—The American Girl (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 28—The Soldier's Return (Dr.)
Dec. 30—Father and the Girls (Dr.)

G. MELIES.

Dec. 7—A Western Girl (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 14—The Better Man (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 21—The Mission Father (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 28—The Ranchman's Debt of Honor (Com. Dr.)	1000
Jan. 4—A Woman's Gratitude (Dr.)	1000

PATHE FRERES

Dec. 7—The Poisoned Arrow (Dr.)
Dec. 7—French Cuirassier Manoeuvres (Sc.)
Dec. 8—Eva's Faithful Furniture (Com.)
Dec. 8—Gathering and Preparing Cocoanuts in the Philippines (Scenic)
Dec. 9—Her Little Slipper (Dr.)
Dec. 11—Pathe's Weekly No. 50
Dec. 12—Youth Versus Age
Dec. 12—Small Trades in Malacca (Scenic)
Dec. 13—The Flower Girl of Las Palmas (Dr.)
Dec. 14—An Episode of the Early Mormon Days (Dr.)
Dec. 14—The Magic Suit Case
Dec. 15—In the Grip of Alcohol (Dr.)
Dec. 16—A Mother's Remorse (Dr.)
Dec. 18—Pathe's Weekly No. 51
Dec. 19—Princess Charming
Dec. 19—Landscape in Japan (Scenic)
Dec. 20—The Fatal Posing (Dr.)
Dec. 21—Dad's Smash Up (Com.)
Dec. 22—Providential Bread
Dec. 22—In Japan, Nara, the Park of the Sacred Does (Scenic)
Dec. 23—Actor's Hearts (Dr.)
Dec. 25—Pathe's Weekly No. 52
Dec. 26—The Burglar's Hard Luck (Com.)
Dec. 26—Aboard a French Battleship (Scenic)
Dec. 26—The Kromats
Dec. 27—Mother-in-law Raises xx! (Com.)
Dec. 28—His Daughter's Bracelet (Dr.)
Dec. 28—Mushroom Culture (Edu.)
Dec. 29—Yann, the Troubador (Dr.)
Dec. 30—The Idol (Dr.)

SELIG

Dec. 8—The Plumber (Com.)	600
Dec. 8—A Day with a Circus	400
Dec. 11—The Chief's Daughter (Dr.)	500
Dec. 11—April Fool (Com.)	500
Dec. 12—A Romance of the Rio Grande (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 14—George Warrington's Escape (Hist. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 15—Industries of the South and West (Edu.)	1000
Dec. 18—Evangeline (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 19—For His Pal's Sake (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 21—Brown of Harvard (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 22—The Little Widow (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 25—A Modern Rip (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 26—The Bully of Bingo Gulch (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec. 28—Paid Back (Dr.)	1000
Dec. 29—Their Last Chance (Com.)	1000

URBAN ECLIPSE

G. Kleine

Dec. 6—The Luckless Banker (Dr.)	1002
Dec. 13—The Tragedy of Old Age (Dr.)	798
Dec. 13—Harbor of Marseilles, France (Sc.)	215
Dec. 20—The Miracle (Dr.)	1040
Dec. 27—The Stolen Treasure (Dr.)	680
Dec. 27—Fair Exchange Is No Robbery (Com.)	322
Jan. 3—True to Their Trust (Dr.)	656
Jan. 3—A Cotton Goods Factory in France (Ind.)	325
Jan. 10—Lazy Bill and the Strikers (Com.)	702
Jan. 10—Pottery Making in Thoune (Ind.)	273

VITAGRAPH

Dec. 11—One Touch of Nature	1000
Dec. 12—The Military Air Scout	1000
Dec. 13—The Ventriloquist's Trunk	1000
Dec. 15—Love at Gloucester Port	1000
Dec. 16—Sick Man from the East
Dec. 18—Vitagraph Monthly
Dec. 19—Vanity Fair (Three Reels)
Dec. 20—Fires of Driftwood
Dec. 22—A Reformed Santa Claus
Dec. 23—The Old Doll
Dec. 25—Some Good in All
Dec. 26—The Patchwork Quilt
Dec. 27—Testing His Courage
Dec. 29—A Doubly Desired Orphan
Dec. 30—In the Clutches of a Vapor Bath

SOLD!

The best recommendation for our feature films is that they are being SOLD. Last week we disposed of six states, and every state rights buyer who has dealt with us is satisfied. They're all making money. One man started with $350 worth of bookings, secured through our offices. You can do the same thing. GET INTO THE STATE RIGHTS GAME AND MAKE A MINT OF MONEY. Get films that stand the acid test—the kind we produce—of two, three and four reels each, and build up a circuit in your state. Then you'll have a steady income. We want you to see our films before you buy them. We pay railroad fare to those who buy rights. Come and see us.

ZIGOMAR—the king of sensational pictures. LOVE AND AVIATION—Beautiful spicy and moral drama. WRITE FOR BOOKING—WIRE FOR STATE RIGHTS PRICES

E. MANDELBAUM, Pres. THE F. & E. FILM COMPANY

GENERAL OFFICES: 112 Prospect Ave., Cleveland, O.
CHICAGO: 36 W. Randolph St., Jerome Abrams, rep.
DETROIT: 305 Equity Building, G. W. Weeks, rep.

(Continued from page 47.)

First and foremost, John Carrol betakes himself to the Western wilds for the sake of his wife's health. Carrol is a miner, and we do not see that he has a cinch of the good things of life. But yet he is happy with his wife and little one—and who could not be happy with that youngster about. The miners worshiped her, her parents adored her. God be praised for sending such angels of happiness down here among the poor and lowly, for little else have they in this badly balanced world, with its Morgans and Rockefellers and its East and West Siders.

To see this joyous kid ride home "a-piggy-back" on her father's broad but stooped shoulders was indeed a treat. But one day she had taken her last ride on that dear old back. He was not as usual digging and blasting, something suddenly went wrong. How could this man, who was carefulness personified, have made a mistake. Perhaps it was not his fault—who knows? At any rate, there was a premature explosion, and poor John Carrol, bleeding and mangled, sank to earth, just as his little fairy came rushing up to him, as was her wont.

What a harrowing scene was then presented as the old miner with the last spark of life took farewell of his little one. The mother then came to add her lamentations over the body of her beloved one. The rough miners knew naught of it. They were many, many miles from human habitation, so it fell to the lot of the mother and child to bury their dead. But it was only a covering of earth thy placed on the form of the poor miner—they had not the strength to do more, and then the wife and mother succumbed to the shock, and the poor little Kid was an orphan indeed. But "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," and this poor little lamb was indeed well shorn.

Along came a young prospector, and found the Kid in her terrible dilemma of grief and tribulation. Robert Page grew wonderfully fond of the little one. No child to a parent could be dearer. Then it happened that rich pay dirt was struck in Roaring Camp, and vultures there were who came and who would rob the orphan of her inheritance, so dearly purchased.

But Bob Page fought them tooth and nail, and protected in every way his young charge from their sinister designs. Then he saw to it that she was placed where refinement and education would be her lot; and he beheld her a few years later, a most delightfully charming young woman. A great love for her then dwelt in his breast, but he concealed it, as one might do a wrong—for he felt it would be wrong to impose his mature years upon this sweet girl. Oh, if he had only been cognizant in the beginning of the fact of her love for him, what a world of anguish he would have been spared! But so it came about one day that he surprised her into a confession which made his heart leap for joy that he had won as his own forever more "The Kid of Roaring Camp."

BROTHERLY LOVE

Reliance Release, Dec. 27th

RELIANCE.

John Ford and Charles Wisner are chums, their boyhood and young manhood having been spent in such close relationship that they were termed by their friends and acquaintances "the brothers." John had fallen in love with Marjorie Drew and tells Charles that even though he is going to be married there is no necessity for their friendship to be broken. Charles is rather pessimistic for he has seen so many friendships between men irrevocably destroyed by one or the other marrying. John introduces Charles to Marjorie and Marjorie is not slow to notice that when Charles is around she plays second fiddle in his interest and affection. It hurts her but she smothers her resentment and is courteous and friendly to Charles for John's sake. After they are married John longs for the friendship of his chum and broods over their separation. Again Marjorie is hurt to think that she is not all sufficient to him. He decides to look Charles up that night and finds him lonely and morose. John insists that he come and live with them and Charles finally agrees. Marjorie opposes the move but John overrules her and Charles is established as one of the household. Marjorie finds herself neglected and her anger reaches the breaking point when Charles becomes shiftless and imposes upon his friend's bounty. He gets out of work and one morning being too lazy to go out and search for work tells John he is ill and stays home. After John has gone he seizes the opportunity to make love to Marjorie, who repulses him and compels him to leave the house. He goes to a saloon and with the money John gave him starts drinking heavily. He writes Marjorie a letter telling her to meet him. Marjorie gets the letter but hides it from John, simply telling him that it has come to a point where it is either Charles or herself. They quarrel and Marjorie leaves the house. Charles returns looking for Marjorie and finds John there. John receives him with open arms and tells him Marjorie is out but will return soon. He goes to his room and John finds the letter in Marjorie's book. In a flash he sees his mistake. He goes to Charles' room as Marjorie returns to plead once more with her husband. She hears the fight in the next room and pounds futilely upon the locked door. The door breaks in with the two men in locked embrace. A terrible struggle follows in which the room is completely demolished and Marjorie, unable to get out, crouches to one side, watching it. John having thrashed Charles within an inch of his life kicks him out of the house and takes Marjorie in his arms, and receives her forgiveness.

THE BIRTHMARK

Reliance Release, December 30th

Destitute, the grief-stricken man decides to go West to build up a fortune. His little babe in arms he leaves on the doorstep of a wealthy man's home. The child has a distinguishing birth mark that he hopes to trace it by if he ever makes good and returns. A crook, however, finds the child first and takes it home to his childless wife and they bring it up as their own daughter. The father returns rich and is unable to trace the child. The girl is made to follow the vocation of her foster father, the crook not knowing it to be wrong. She meets a young, wealthy chap and begins to realize that she is not doing right. The two are mutually attracted. Her "father" has a "job" on soon after and insists that she go with him. Reluctantly she does so but for the last time she tells him. The "job" happens to be the rooms of the young chap and finding they are his rooms through his photo she compels the crook to leave without touching anything. She is prevented from following by the young man's entrance. He mistakes why she is there but when he seeks to take advantage of her presence she repulses him and he, ashamed, begs her pardon. She will not tell him why she is there and he having full faith in her, does not insist upon any further explanation. He goes to her home shortly after and asks her to be his wife. She refuses, although admitting that she loves him. He writes her afterward that her reasons must be good ones, that he has full faith in her and will wait. The crook insists that she marry him so that he can blackmail the man, but she refuses and tells him she is through with him. He accuses her of ingratitude and then she learns that they are not her parents. She runs away. Starving and destitute she finally falls into the temptation of one more theft. It happens to be her own father's home and after she has entered and has a revulsion of feeling and is leaving without taking anything, the father discovers her. He disarms her and gets from her part of her life story despite the sobbing that overwhelms her. Instinctively, feeling that it is his child, he seizes her in his arms and roughly tears the dress from her shoulder, disclosing the birthmark. After the reconciliation, we see her happy in her father's love and the return of the young sweetheart into her life.

MAKING PIANOS

Lux Release, December 29

An interesting Industrial describing the complicated processes involved in the manufacture of pianos. The film follows the course of construction from the very beginning, and we do not leave the piano until it is ready for a tune. The manufacture of this popular instrument should prove of the highest interest. On the same reel:

CAUGHT BY CINEMATOGRAPHY.

Whilst a company of actors are playing a drama before the camera of a cinematograph company a thief breaks into a farmhouse nearby. He breaks open a cupboard and steals a large sum of money. Hearing footsteps, he makes a hurried exit by means of the window. The following scene, in which one of the trusted servants of the household is suspected and arrested, is cleverly conceived and well carried out. The magistrate dealing with the case learns of the presence of the camera men at the time of the crime and asks to be shown the film which they were taking. Upon seeing the film, he observes a figure emerging from the window of the house. Thus the all-powerful cinematograph is again instrumental in establishing the innocence of the servant and assisting Justice to gain its ends.

ECLAIR

3,105 SAY SUNDAY!

ECLAIR IS GRATEFUL TO 5,610; ALL Intelligent, Progressive Business Men who take Moving Pictures Seriously and are willing to Work with us to Improve Conditions. Nearly 1,000 want The THIRD ECLAIR to be issued on Saturday. Some mention other days, but the Vast Majority Select SUNDAY FOR THE NEXT ECLAIR—And So it Must be. ECLAIR Appreciates the Tremendous Interest shown and the Many Valuable Suggestions offered. Much Good Will Result From This Co-operation.

THE FIRST SUNDAY RELEASE WILL BE ANNOUNCED NEXT WEEK

$10,000.00
FOR ADVERTISING

TELL US WHEN YOU WILL SHOW THESE FEATURES AND WE WILL SEND PREPAID VALUABLE PHOTOS
And Lobby Displays Especially Made
TO SWELL YOUR RECEIPTS

YOU GET THESE AT OUR EXPENSE

BOOK THEM NOW YOU NEED THE MONEY

BOOK THESE FILMS

TUE JAN 2 — SARDOU'S GREAT COMEDY
DIVORCONS

TUE JAN 9 — IMPRESSIVE DRAMA
A DOCTOR'S DUTY

TUE JAN 16 — A WALL STREET LAUGH
"MAMIE BOLTON"

TUE JAN 23 — OCEANS OF SENTIMENT
LOVE FINDS A WAY

PARIS ECLAIRS

OLD PAPERS—OLD SOUVENIRS — THU JAN 4
AN UNUSUAL DRAMA OF STRENGTH AND POWER

THE INVENTOR — THU JAN 11
A STORY OF MAN'S INHUMANITY

READ LIST OF CURRENT RELEASES IN THIS PAPER

IMPORTANT!

WHETHER YOU USE FIRST RUN OR OLDER Service, This Great Offer Applies the Same

ARRANGE BOOKINGS NOW
Then Notify us What Date and Name of Subject
WE DO THE REST

YOU WILL BE SURPRISED AND PLEASED WITH THE RESULTS

BE THE FIRST TO TRY THIS NOVEL PLAN IN YOUR OWN CITY

WE PHOTOGRAPH IN MAMMOTH MULTI-PRISM DAYLIGHT STUDIOS, Which afford Opportunity For Perfect Results (not possible under artificial light), Ample space for large and complicated settings and wire scope for NOVEL EFFECTS, rarely found in the average picture.

COMPARE ECLAIR SETTINGS WITH OTHERS AND NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

It Will Pay You to Get on Our Mail List Now. Whether You Use Eclair Films or Not.

TUESDAY THURSDAY
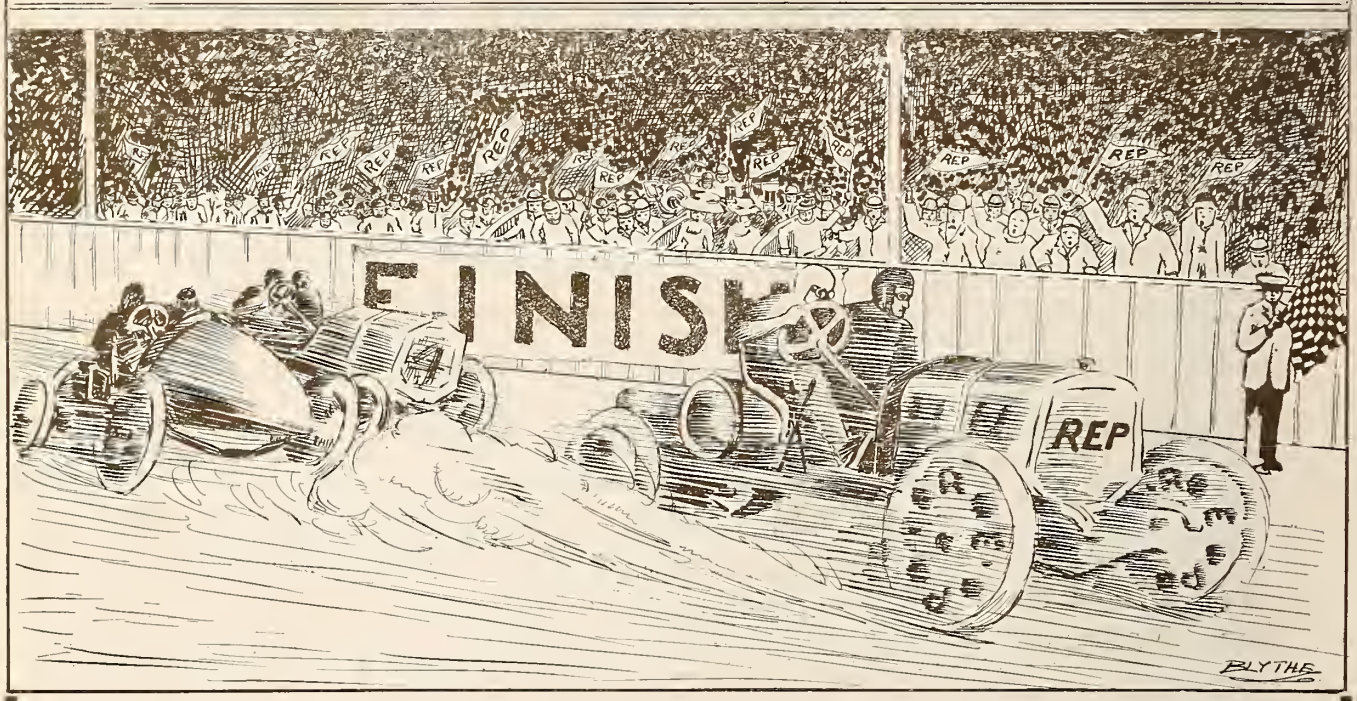
SUNDAY

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY

AMERICAN STUDIOS AND WORKS
FORT LEE, N. J.

PARIS, LONDON, BERLIN, VIENNA, MOSCOW, MILAN, BRUSSELS, BARCELONA—OTHERS

FOREMOST IN THE RANKS FOR QUALITY AND ORIGINALITY



Released Saturday and Sunday January 13 and 14

DANIEL BOONE

A Pictorial History of America's Foremost Pioneer, Trapper and Guide

Endorsed by Educators and Historians

Republic Film Co., 145 West 45th Street New York City

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

JAN 5 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

Volume IV
No. 52

December 30
1911

PRICE
TEN CENTS

SCENE FROM
"The Defender of the Name"
THE FIRST GEM RELEASE
January 21st, 1912

ALL ABOARD!

EVERYBODY RIDES!

THE MONTHLY SOLAX FEATURE IS COMING

MIGNON

OR

THE CHILD OF FATE

FROM THOMAS' FAMOUS OPERA—RELEASED SUNDAY, JANUARY THE 28th

A classical photopera, produced for the first time with American players, on American soil, and worked out along lines that would be most appreciated by American audiences.

The picture moves with the rhythmic action and inspiring harmony of the opera. Indeed, the production has been so arranged that all the important pieces from the opera may accompany the exhibition.

Just a line about CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

This release has been postponed from Sunday, December 31st, to SUNDAY, JANUARY 7th. Send in your orders if you haven't done so. The picture is an all-year-round winner.

Economical Brown

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10th.

Economical Brown is a man who spends his money in the lavish entertainment of friends on the outside, but tightens up as soon as he reaches the threshold of his own home. He preaches constantly to his wife on the principles of economy, but she listens to him without patience. She soon teaches him that it is better economy to be extravagant at home and economical on the outside.

Black Sheep

RELEASED FRIDAY, JANUARY 12th

A never-do-well son of a poor inventor pursues and blackmails his sister, who has married a wealthy man. This woman is ashamed of her brother, so she pays him not to claim relationship. Not satisfied with the little he gets, he breaks into his own sister's home and is about to burglarize the place, when detectives, who have shadowed him for a former offense, interfere. The black sheep tries to make a get-a-way, but is shot dead in the attempt.

Solax Company CONGRESS AVE. FLUSHING, N. Y.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

SALES COMPANY Agents in U. S. A. and Canada

ECLAIR SUNDAY COMEDY

NOW MAKES POSSIBLE A WELL BALANCED PROGRAM FOR THE SEVENTH DAY OF THE WEEK, AND AFFORDS CLEAN AND WHOLESOME SUBJECTS PARTICULARLY SUITED TO SUNDAY AUDIENCES.

First Release SUN. JAN. 14

A NATURAL Domestic Tale, witty, snappy, effervescent with gaiety, yet Pure in theme as December's Snows.

JEALOUS JULIA

WITH GUSSIE HUNT LATE OF THE VITAGRAPH CO.
IN THE LEADING ROLE

JEALOUS JULIA proves conclusively that time and money coupled with able direction and capable talent may produce pictures of more than passing merit.

Novel settings, unique effects, acting of a high order and rare photography, beautifully treated in tints and tones, go to make a clever story worth while.

A SET OF REAL PHOTOS FREE

for your lobby showing, with each ECLAIR SUNDAY COMEDY, if you tell us the date you will show it and name of your Exchange.

POSTERS IN ADVANCE 5c EACH.

TELL YOUR EXCHANGE YOU WANT "JULIA" and an ECLAIR EVERY TUESDAY, THURSDAY AND SUNDAY.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOK.

ECLAIR FILM CO. OF AMERICA. STUDIO AND WORKS FORT LEE, N. J.

THE THANHOUSER "GREATEST JANUARY"

A New Year's Resolution:
The Thanhouser 2-a-Week EVERY Week

CHECK 'EM AS YOU GET 'EM—"GREATEST JANUARY" AT A GLANCE

JAN. 16 [Tuesday]
"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE," Robert Louis Stevenson's Most Powerful Story.

JAN. 19 [Friday]
"A NIAGARA HONEYMOON," First of the Niagara Falls Scenic Gems.

JAN. 26 [Friday]
"EAST LYNNE" (2 reels), Greatest Filmization of the World's Best Known Drama.

JAN. 30 [Tuesday]
"AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING," Another Wonderful Make-You-Think Picture.

RELEASED TUESDAY, JAN. 9
"Greatest January's" Cutey Reel

"Just a Bad Kid"

The kid is none other than the cunning Thanhouser Kid. This is an exceptionally "cutey" picture. Get it.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JAN. 12
"Greatest January's" Mystery Sensation

"The Twelfth Juror"

is a spectacular mystery story that will keep you guessing and puzzling until you reach the great jury room scene, near the end.

GETTING 2 2 A WEEK?

THANHOUSER COMPANY

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

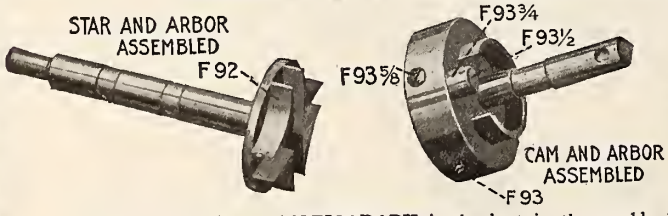
Sales Company Agents for U. S. and Canada

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES CORPORATION

Are You Getting the Tuesday AND the Friday Thanhouser?

PERFECT HARMONY OF ACTION BETWEEN ALL PARTS OF THE MOTIOGRAPH

IMPARTS A MECHANICAL PERFECTION EXPRESSED IN ALMOST NOISELESS OPERATION



THE 1912 FRAMING DEVICE

A HEAVIER CAM — A HEAVIER PIN
A HEAVIER STAR — A PIN WHICH CAN BE REPLACED IN A FEW MINUTES—A PIN FITTED WITH SLEEVE—NO WEARING FLAT.
THE MOST ECONOMICAL CAM NOW IN USE—REMEMBER—THIS 1912 FRAMING DEVICE CAN BE FITTED IN EARLIER MODELS OF THE MOTIOGRAPH.

The material used in the MOTIOGRAPH is the best in the world—It costs more to make than it would if we were less particular—Other makers save money by using vastly inferior material but they cannot equal the MOTIOGRAPH—The MOTIOGRAPH picture is acknowledged best by every test.

1912 MODELS NOW BEING SHIPPED

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY :: 568 West Randolph Street, CHICAGO

For Sale by Live Dealers

© CLB250774

"The contents of this issue are copyrighted"

The Moving Picture News

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

Sole Agent and Correspondent for advertisements in Great Britain B. Allan, 8 Sherwood St., Piccadilly Circus, W., London

Chicago Representative: Warner Kennedy, 844 Waveland Avenue. 'Phone 3818 Lake View.

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor.

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President; John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Volume IV December 30, 1911 Number 52

New Year's Greeting

Health, Happiness and Prosperity to All for Nineteen Hundred and Twelve

RETROSPECTION AND INTROSPECTION.

WITH the above wish for 1912 we greet all our readers both near and far. We trust that many differences in the trade will be settled during the coming year and that peace will reign in the ranks. We have been more than gratified with the number of letters received thanking us for our editorial in last week's issue. It evidently touched a tender spot with many of our readers whom we thank for their good wishes to ourselves and for the numerous expressions sent to us in Christmas and New Year's cards. Some 200 odd came to hand and we take this opportunity of thanking them, one and all, and reciprocating their good wishes.

We feel in looking back upon the year 1911, that wonderful advance and progress has been the rule and that the art of cinematography advanced by leaps and bounds. The eyes of the educationalists have been upon the manufacturers. The public schools, high schools, and colleges have looked with the greatest delight upon the moving picture as an educational factor, and many firms are now laying plans to meet the demand for these high class educational films. We are pleased to note this progress, and feel sure that during the next year still greater strides will be made in the art. To make a prophecy, the article appearing on another page on non-combustible film will give our readers some idea of the progress being made along these lines. Another phase is the manufacture of real singing and talking pictures. We do not mean the crude efforts that we have witnessed during the past two or three years of manufacturers who have gone on entirely wrong and divergent lines to accomplish this work. We refer to an instrument which does actually record and project synchronously the voice and action of all taking part in the performance or interview. This machine is so far in advance of anything we have seen, or know, that we ask our readers to hold their opinion until we give a full report in an early issue.

Another line of progress is the process by which action can be photographed, almost in the dark, or in other words, two or three lights doing the work of twenty or thirty. Is not this progress?

Another point we want to touch upon is the progress made by the MOVING PICTURE NEWS, and we want to thank every reader, subscriber and advertiser for helping to make it such a success. The sun never sets upon the NEWS. It is read in every country the world over and a photograph on our desk shows one of our subscribers reading it in the land of the Midnight Sun. The letters we get from all parts of the world are very gratifying to us. When we threw up the paper we founded and started the NEWS we knew we had a hard task on our hands, but pluck, courage, and the conviction that we were in the right sustained us, and helped us to the present. We want to call attention to the fact of results from our circulation. One advertiser who did not advertise in any other paper in the trade, received direct replies numbering 3,810 and indirectly bringing the full total to nearly 5,000. If our advertisers or any one doubt these statements we will prove it to their satisfaction. The following letter by one of our advertisers is one we think will interest our friends who have so loyally supported us.

Dear Editor:

As an advertiser in your journal I feel that you should receive a larger and better support from the Independent film manufacturers.

It goes almost without saying that we in the ordinary walks of life do not hand our adversary a knife, knowing his intention is to cut our throat at the first opportunity, and yet I notice that some of our number are so doing by giving liberal patronage to a trust periodical, thereby furnishing them with sinews of war to blow our heads off.

I hear some of these advertisers complain that your circulation is not as large as that of the trust periodical, which may be true, but I obtain excellent results from the News, far better than a year ago. Your circulation must have increased very rapidly and without doubt has doubled in interest, and I appeal to my brother Independents to get together and push the News which supports their cause and fights for clean and decent films, and it will be very easy to obtain the circulation results to make our cause and our journal control the situation, and become as they should, leaders in the field of film manufacturers.

Let us get together in this game of "tug-of-war" and see who has the best pulling power.

It would be to our mutual interests to hear from some others on this very important matter, unless we all want to get down and "kotow" to the Trust, its periodical, and its bank account.

Truly yours,
SELF PRESERVATION.

We give the letter verbatim as it seems to us to put the whole situation in a nutshell, and in answer to it we will make our statement by saying, the Constitution of the United States reads "All men are created free and equal" but in this day of tremendous combination we find that this portion of the Constitution is lacking.

The statement reads to us, or might be made to read, that "all Trusts are created free and equal" with unlimited power given to them by our present system of government, still there remains just one business, that of our own, which will not be controlled absolutely by any particular man or company.

We would like to state that there are to-day 3,000 Independent exhibitors more than there were in the year 1909 and they are growing rapidly in numbers each day.

Why is the Moving Picture News so Popular?

First—Because the Independents are now producing results equal to that of the Patents Company.

Secondly—Because readers and exhibitors are faithfully supporting their own organ, The Moving Picture News.

If our readers will turn back to November 1909 they will find we produced a comparatively small edition. The total cost to get out was approximately $200 per week. The same month in 1910 we more than doubled the edition, the cost of production being $335 per week. In 1911 we again more than doubled the News with a cost of production amounting to $735 per issue.

We want our readers, especially our advertisers, to take these figures into consideration, and we further want to say, we have a mailing list of over 16,000 names of people who are interested, directly or indirectly, in the cinematograph industry. We would like to mail a copy every week to each of these individuals but our pocket is not filled well enough for this, but it can be made so if every reader will help.

We have been the best friend of the Independent cause. There have been no half measures with us. We have been all or nothing. Allow us to predict or prophecy for 1912, "no theater in the United States will be complete without Independent pictures," and, that, in a great majority, both licensed and Independent will be running side by side.

Is this too much to ask? We trow not. We ask your co-operation to the full extent that is possible, and results will prove our statement to be correct. Send in your subscriptions, your articles, your full modicum of advertising, and we will do the rest.

THE CHRISTIAN MARTYRS

Gaumont-Independent Release in January

Much has been promised by the Gaumont Company in the feature release that they will exploit through the ordinary channels, "The Christian Martyrs," a one-reel production which portrays the sufferings and humiliations of the persecuted Christians in pagan Rome, and it is with pleasure that we can affirm that all that was promised has been fulfilled, even to the careful hand-coloring that easily distinguished the products of this manufacturer from that of any other independent concern.

The story shows the despised and hated Christians living in seclusion in a dense forest, hiding from the intrusions of their Roman persecutors. The leading character is Marcellus, who soon learns that the wild inhabitants of the woods, the lions, tigers and leopards are by far kinder and more humane friends than the tyrannical Romans.

At his counsel the Christians bend their efforts to the taming of their wild companions so that their association with these animals may be without slaughter on either side. The ferocious lions soon learn that the devout Christians are their friends and in this respect no film can equal the one that the Gaumont Company has manufactured. The sight of the ferocious lions at first lurking about the haunts of the Christians, yearning with open mouths at the thought of human flesh, and later lapping milk from pans in the presence of their benefactors, is one that renders the picture unique and without parallel.

The savage beasts soon learn that they, too, have a common enemy with the Christians in the Romans, as the story in its development shows the maurauding of the Roman soldiers, who pounce upon the hovels of the Christians and carry them victims to the markets of Rome, to be sold into bondage or to be devoured in the amphitheater. Great is the festivity and spirit of holiday in honor of Nero, and for his pleasure a small cluster of Christians are to be turned into the amphitheater to be left to the fury of the lions.

The sincerity of the prayers of the victims in the catacomb adjoining the amphitheater is one of the most beautiful scenes that has yet been depicted in any film. With such faith in their God, one is not alarmed to learn that the lions, instead of devouring their human prey, recognize in them their former friends of the wilderness and leave them untouched, without drawing blood. The tyrant Nero himself is overcome with awe for the Christians who could possess such domination over the wild beasts and by Imperial edict the sufferers are granted their liberty.

Volumes upon volumes have been written upon this subject, one that does indeed, upon first thoughts, seem difficult to be boiled down to a mere thousand feat of photography. This, however, the Gaumont Company has ably taken care of, so that the production pleases to the extreme and is without a doubt one of the utmost satisfaction. They deserve the highest commendation. Any other manufacturer would hark to the call of the state right proposition, but in so much as the Gaumont concern early announced their intention of making this film an ordinary release they will not deviate from their promise.

WANTED! WANTED! WANTED!

Printers, assemblers, splicers and dark room assistants to send in their names and addresses and to say if they are opened for positions and the amount of salary they would require. The News has frequent applications for these assistants and it seems hard to fill the situations at a moment's notice. We have one of the most complete lists of camera men and would also like the above. In addition to this we would like a list of the directors, and of actors and actresses who are opened for positions and can show good records. Send at once.

FACTS RE THE MANUFACTURE OF NON-EXPLOSIVE FILM GLEANED FROM AN EMINENT CHEMIST—AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY SOON TO BE MADE KNOWN

By Margaret I. MacDonald

IT has been my good fortune during the past week to meet with a Bohemian chemist of note, but whose name will be for some time yet kept a secret by me, and who has been for years engrossed with the subject of the manufacture of non-explosive film. The subject is so intensely interesting to manufacturers and to the public at large, that I straightway set about gathering what crumbs of knowledge I could from the brain of the chemist. The following is the result of the extraction.

There is such a strong demand for a safe and cheap photographic film in the moving picture market, and such a great financial reward is waiting for him who can meet the requirements of the consumers, that we are not surprised to learn of a new invention which within a short time will render it unnecessary to endanger human life and valuable property any longer through the use of pyroxylin or gun cotton films.

The evolution of the film from the glass plates in photography has been a slow one, although many efforts have been made by inventors, scientists and practical men alike, to help it along. And yet every investigation, every experiment, every failure even to accomplish the much desired result, combined safety and cheapness, has brought us nearer to the goal, nearer the perfect and cheap moving picture film.

We owe a great deal to the old pyroxylin film, and not only the owner of the theater for whom it has been coining money, but the scientist and the manufacturer also, because it has taught them how to insure absolute uniformity of the final product by the proper preparation of the raw material, cotton. It has shown them how to use the various machines now employed in the business, it has caused them to work out the most minute mechanical and chemical details, in preparation for the great event when some inventor would be able to give them what is needed outside of cotton for a quarter or less of the money that they have to pay for it at the present time.

In a year or two from now the pyroxylin film will be a thing of the past, like many things of yesterday, and no longer will the use and storage of moving picture films be comparable to the handling of gun cartridges on a battleship. Owing to similar chemical composition they both are liable to "go off" from various causes: and it does not take much to make them "go off" either, as the reports of many accidents and fires in the daily press will show.

There are now non-explosive films, made from cellulose-actetate, on the market, but both as to price and durability they leave very much to be desired; in fact, their lack of strength and the very high price renders their use almost prohibitive.

And yet it would not be difficult for any film manufacturer who has the necessary equipment to make a non-explosive film that is not only equal, but superior in every respect to the nitro-cellulose film, if only he could buy cheap acetate-cellulose, or else the chemicals by means of which the acetate-cellulose is produced.

Both the explosive and the non-explosive film of the present day are very similar as far as the method of production is concerned. The principal raw material for both is cotton, which is cheap enough. In order to convert cotton into a soluble form, it must first be rendered absorbent by the removal of small quantities of fat and wax from the fibre, and this is done by bleaching, scouring, etc., according to well known methods. In this purified form the cotton fibre consists of a body known to chemists as cellulose.

Now this cellulose is treated with an acid. In the old process of making nitro-cellulose, also called pyroxylin, or gun cotton, when the process of dipping was continued to a finish, nitric acid or a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acids was employed, very much in the same manner and with the same effect as in the manufacture of dynamite and other high explosives—a long death list was the unavoidable consequence.

Nowadays we know that certain forms of acetic acid, the acid contained in and constituting vinegar, also will render cotton soluble by combining with the cotton for the formation of a product known as acet-cellulose, acetyl-cellulose, or cellulose acetate. The chemicals which will do this are acetic acid, anhydrid and acetyl chlorid.

The production of photographic films of any description, and particularily of moving picture films which are perfect as to price and quality, depends mostly on the low price of these chemicals.

After the soluble cellulose has been formed, it is washed, pressed and dried. The next step consists in dissolving it in a suitable solvent and thereby producing a solution which on evaporation leaves a coating or skin very much like some varnish or paint, only the physical properties are naturally quite different.

A coating of cellulose solution applied on a smooth sheet of glass, dried and peeled off, represents a film made by the original methods of film manufacture. Now the manufacture of films enjoys the advantages of greatly improved methods and special machinery.

The inflammability of the old style film is truly remarkable. Only consider the fact that neither flame nor spark is required to ignite it; that a heat of only 50 degrees Centigrade above the boiling point of water will decompose it, and that a temperature just a little higher will cause what is usually termed a spontaneous decomposition with all the effects of a violent explosion.

A film fire cannot, as a rule, be extinguished with water, sand or chemical fire extinguishers; the decomposition of a part of the film itself produces enough heat to start the rest; no air is required for it to burn, but just as soon as the temperature has reached the critical point, the gases formed by the decomposition of the pyroxylin film will likewise explode.

The new and modern acetate film, more harmless even than the cotton from which it is made, will combine with the quality of non-explosiveness all the good qualities of the pyroxylin film.

There is no doubt that the moving picture industry will receive a powerful impulse from the production of cellulose acetate by means of cheap acetic anhydrid and cheap chlorid, and it has been predicted that if this invention can be kept from becoming the property of interests who would use it for the creation of a monopoly, then there is no reason why you should pay more for a safe than for an explosive film. The advantages are all on the side of the modern non-explosive film made from acetate cellulose, and we trust that our readers will soon be able to enjoy the benefits of this new invention.

(Communications from interested parties for the inventor will be received and forwarded by the Editor, who is in full possession of all the facts relating to the process which will do all the inventor claims.)

ADVENT OF THE ONE-MAN ORCHESTRA AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE TO THE SILENT DRAMA

By Robert Grau

THE advent of the "one-man orchestra" is the natural solution of the problems of science and artifice that began with the phonograph, the moving picture and the player piano, but no one ever dreamed that the day would come when an instrument simulating and achieving the effect of a symphony orchestra would present itself as a rival to the moving picture—in the drawing of crowds. Yet this is so true that we are now on the eve of an affiliation between the inventor and manufacturer of this epoch making device and the element known as the exhibitors in the field of the silent drama.

The unit orchestra is the life work and creation of Robert Hope-Jones of Liverpool, England, a master electrician—with a passion for the organ—the development of which to its modern state has been his "labor of love" for sixteen years.

We will pass by the early struggles of the inventor. The writer spends his summers at Asbury Park, N. J., and it was at the vast auditorium in Ocean Grove that he first had revealed to him the amazing evolution of the erstwhile pipe organ into the one-man orchestra. Here tens of thousands were attracted by the marvelous melody poured forth from an instrument 36 feet wide and 18 feet deep, which was so installed in the big auditorium that the player seated at the console alone could be seen, but the volume, the richness of tone, the symmetrical expression and the true phrasing were as foreign to the outpouring from an organ, even in the latter's advanced state, as the modern symphony orchestra when compared with the "little German band" of pleasant memory.

But the one-man orchestra at Ocean Grove is not the basis for this writing. Mr. Hope-Jones has been adding to its component parts and to its distinctly musical value in the last two years with a result that theatrical managers, wearied of the abuses and extortions they have had to submit to from the musical union, were quick to contract for the installation in their theaters of the new device, and this provided the inventor with so much incentive that the present output is far superior to his previous efforts. John Cort already has one of the Hope-Jones unit orchestras in his Chicago theater and William A. Brady is placing one in the Playhouse, on West 48th Street. Of course, this means the abandonment of the orchestras of musicians in the flesh; in fact, the Messrs Shubert are considering a similar procedure in all their vast chain of playhouses.

The inventor and the manufacturer a few weeks ago became possessed of the idea that their instrument had many of the potent qualities which have made for the moving picture the sensational vogue it is having, so they decided to test its drawing capacity by itself, without any added features, and without outside aid. The Baptist Temple, seating 2,000 persons, in Philadelphia, on North Broad Street, was secured for a series of eighteen recitals. The prices of admission were 25 and 50 cents. At the first concert there were a few hundred persons attracted through curiosity; at the second the attendance reached one thousand, and the enthusiasm was of that character one hears only at a grand opera representation when a Caruso or a Tetrazzini sings. At the fifth concert every seat was sold in advance and not an inch of standing room was available. Moreover, the crowd that was turned away unable to obtain admittance was so great that the police were called out to disperse them, and this was a condition that existed after the fifth day until the end of the series.

So demonstrative were the crowds that several public spirited gentlemen became interested, among these Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Schwab, of steel fame, and they expressed themselves as ready to co-operate in any movement to establish the one-man orchestra along lines of operation similar to those that prevail in the motion picture industry, but it is the writer's opinion that instead of the new invention becoming a menace to the moving picture industry it is more likely that the expert showmen who hold sway in picturedom will quickly realize the significance of Mr. Hope-Jones's creation, and I look to see the better class photo-playhouse installing the unit orchestra. And the day that this is recorded, that day will see the inauguration of a musical renaissance in connection with the field of cinematography—for it must be borne in mind that the music that is evolved is not stereotyped in the sense of mechanical inventions, but as a result of the school of instruction presided over by the inventor himself the one player at the console is enabled to control expression at will, and it is this phase of the wondrous musical effect that has caused the sensational furore wherever the unit orchestra has been heard.

In another article, if requested to do so by the editor, I will treat of the modus operandi of this device, its electrical features and its wonderful diaphone, the last of which is the all-compelling feature of the whole.

REPUBLIC'S DIFFICULTIES.

Out in Saranac Lake, Alaska, the Republic is making some special films and, to break into slang expressions, they're having a tough old job to keep their canine performers in anything like order. As is well-known, these dogs are half wolf and half dog, and any tame dog, or anything of a live stock nature, coming in their view, causes trouble. This happened while they were filming one of their special pictures. A half mile away these dogs scented another, and from the time they started until they got to the other dog, there was nothing but a trail of blood all along the line. They chewed up one of their own fellows and nothing was left of the other. The only way they could be separated was by clubbing them with the butt-end of their guns, and some of their actors also came in for a mauling. Who says after this that taking pictures by cinematography is easy?

ATTENTION, MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF MICHIGAN

A special meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors of the State of Michigan, will be held in Lansing, Mich., on January 8th, 1912, at 2 p.m. The headquarters will be the Wentworth Hotel. All moving picture exhibitors of Michigan are invited to attend this meeting as matters of the utmost importance concerning their affairs will be taken up. We have every reason to believe that this will be the largest gathering of moving picture exhibitors ever held in this or any other state.

Every exhibitor is invited.

PETER J. JEUP, President.
W. LESTER LEVY, Secretary.

Chicago, Ill.—William Trancas will erect a one story theatre at 5016 South Ashland Avenue at a cost of $5,500.

Purcell, Mo.—J. W. Eddy and John Lee are establishing a moving picture theatre in Eagle Hall.

Tombstone, Ariz.—A new amusement theatre will be erected here.

Palisade, Colo.—The Kauffman Kelly Co. of Seattle, Wash., will erect a new $20,000 theatre on East Third Street.

Laporte, Ind.—George W. Aller & Son are preparing plans for a new Princess theatre here.

New York, N. Y.—David Hauser will erect a three story moving picture theatre at Seventh Avenue and 131st Street.

Waseca, Minn.—B. E. & Elmer Dawson have purchased two lots here and will establish a moving picture theatre here the first of January.

Geneva, Ill.—Bert Johnson of Libertyville will have charge of the Geneva Theatre, which was purchased by Robertson & Co. from John Rayman.

SEND IN YOUR SUBSCRIPTION FOR THE
Moving Picture Tales
FIFTY CENTS PER YEAR
DON'T DELAY

THE PICTURE PLAY

By Robert Grau

THE demand for scenarios in the moving picture industry has brought about an active if not lucrative line of endeavor for perhaps the largest number of writers known to any literary calling, though it does seem certain that few have mastered the problems that the technique and philosophy of the silent drama abound with.

A veritable genius, however, has been discovered in the person of Emmett Campbell Hall of Glen Echo, Maryland, who, although he had been a contributor to many magazines and periodicals was quite unknown in the amusement field until in January, 1910, Mr. Hall's first scenario was accepted by the Lubin Company at the maximum price then prevailing and of the first one hundred scenarios written by him ninety-eight were sold to the various manufacturers. Mr. Hall also has to his credit the first two reel photo-plays ever produced in America—produced by the Biograph Company and entitled "His Trust" and "His Trust Fulfilled."

At the time of this writing the scenario question is one that is arousing much discussion owing to the policy of according a rather uniform rate, wholly ignoring the average of merit and the reputation of the writer in arranging compensation, but this is a status that cannot be in order for any length of time because the progress of the moving picture has been on such a scale that the desire for superlative material has already attracted the better known authors, while the playwrights affiliated with the legitimate theaters and with the vaudevilles are being sought and will be found gradually active in the newer field.

The fact that the author of a photo-play is not advertised is a great barrier—for the incentive which comes from fame is now lacking—but these are conditions existing in the infancy of an overwhelming industry, where the problems of supply and demand are in the process of solution.

Schools where the art of scenario writing is taught are springing up all over the country, but the pioneer institution is the one presided over by E. F. McIntyre in Chicago, and known as "The Associated Motion Picture Schools." The layman would be astonished were the vogue of these schools completely revealed. It is a fact, however, that while Mr. Hall's success has been quite unusual, there are many others who dispose of an average of one scenario a week. On the other hand, as evidence of the wide range of activity, one manufacturer states that of the more than two hundred scenarios accepted from January 1 to October 15, 1911, the average was less than three to one author. It must be understood that in this country alone there are forty-two manufacturers with an output of from one to five reels each a week; the larger number being released by the Vitagraph, Selig and Essanay companies, but all are gradually increasing their number of releases, while in one month in 1911, four newcomers entered the field, viz., The Republic, The Majestic, The Comet, and The St. Louis companies. Moreover, the foreign film companies, realizing the constantly increasing expansion of the industry, are installing branch plants in America. This is true of the Eclair, Pathé Frères and the Gaumont companies.

One must marvel at the growth of the industry itself when it is realized that the average film release is seen for one day only in the more than ten thousand theaters where cinematography is the attraction. Often a photo-play involving an outlay of $25,000 and which had been in preparation for more than a year will have but one day's showing. But this unique condition has aroused considerable protest, and has also caused the advent of the special release, such as "The Crusaders" and "Dante's Inferno," as well as the evolutional Kinemacolor pictures, and these have created such a furore that their exhibition in the larger cities has produced a serious competition with the regular houses where photo-plays are on view.

One hundred thousand dollars is said to have been the amount expended on the "Dante's Inferno" film, and two years of preparation were required. The reader can comprehend the vastness of such undertakings when it is declared that this sum is in excess of what it cost Klaw and Erlanger to evolve "Ben Hur," a play now in its twelfth year, and which has realized a profit of more than two million dollars in that period. The cost of the film depicting the Coronation festivities by the Kinemacolor Company was far greater—in fact, no spectacle in stage history, not even the Hippodrome offerings, ever involved the outlay of this colossal combination of science and artifice. The Kinemacolor Company is capitalized at six millions. As yet the company is in the primitive period of its gait, but it is predicted that Kinemacolor theaters are to be erected in every large city in the world in the next five years and that the 1911, So Long!

Yet it wasn't so long! Every seven days we had a new week, and the first Thursday of each week we had a new Rex, which gave the exhibitors a week-end that was a strong one. 1911 passed—but Rex did more than that! 1911 is a dead one, and we will not associate with it any longer. 1912 is up-to-date, so for about twelve months we will release in 1912.

For You

we wish all the prosperity, happiness and contentment it is possible for the just-arriving young year to yield. May your heart be happy and your spirit light!

We wish you success!

S-u-c-c-e-s-s is one way of spelling it. R-e-x is another!

For our first release in young 1912 we have a theme as old as the years, but as new as January! It's a good start, and you'll start at its realism.

"The Parting of the Ways"

RELEASED THURSDAY, JAN. 5, 1912, is a picture with heart interest—but you'll remember the PRINCIPLE too. It's a heart-barometer!

How are YOU going to start the year?

Rex Motion Picture Masterpiece Company

573 ELEVENTH AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

Sales Co. says Rex quality on the scales of merit with other brands shows "The Parting of the Weighs."

WARNING!

THE TWO AND THREE REEL FEATURE FILMS OF THE GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO.

ARE COPYRIGHTED!

No one can rent, use or exhibit them, or copies of them, without our authority, without violating the law.

This applies to imported as well as American made copies.

Infringers lay themselves liable to the full penalty of the law.

Only those films supplied by us, or some one having authority from us, are genuine.

The Monopol Film Company of New York now have our authority to handle the subject entitled "Temptations of a Great City"; and the Feature and Educational Film Company of Cleveland, Ohio, the subjects entitled "Love and Aviation," and "Lady Mary's Love."

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 East Fourteenth Street, NEW YORK company will stand alone in a policy almost unbelievable as to its scope and purpose.

The Eclair Film Company, though an independent force, has set the pace all over Europe by its daring exploitations. Always noted for superior projection as well as the excellence of its stock companies, selected from the creme de la creme of the Parisian theaters, the great French manufacturers of films fairly astounded their colleagues when in October, 1911. announcement was made to the effect that the divine Sarah Bernhardt had contracted with the Eclair Compeny, by which future generations will be permitted to rave over the artistry of a player who for half a century has been a force in theaterdom.

Sarah Bernhardt has established a precedent for posterity that must have its effect, for who shall say nay to the camera man when with grace and dignity the greatest actress of her generation has been content to act "Camille" before the camera?

In America we have not yet witnessed the stampede of players toward cinematography, but it was quite the same with vaudeville until such superb artists as Maurice Barrymore, Rose Coghlan, Clara Morris, Robert Hilliard, John Mason, Marie Wainwright and others showed the way, until to-day no surprise would be manifested if a John Drew or even a Maude Adams were to change their artistic environment temporarily with grace and distinction.

The American film manufacturers, however, are watching the legitimate stage with an eagerness that is amplified by what has developed in the last few months. McKee Rankin was engaged by the Selig Company to stage "The Forty-Niners," and the production disclosed that such picturesque spectacles lent themselves admirably to the silent drama. The Essanay Company, presided over as it is by one of the pioneers of the moving picture industry, George K. Spohr, is a tremendous institution with an influence so great that it is constantly referred to in the public press as one of the striking illustrations of Western energy and thrift. The resources of the Essanay Company are such that it often is enabled to achieve great "scoops" over its rivals. Moreover, it is a custom of this company to set apart a fair proportion of its capital and facilities for the release of educational and industrial films, a policy in which they might well be emulated.

The Selig Company, also of Chicago, is perhaps the most expansive organization in this country for the production of film, and it has also the largest plant in the Windy City, covering an area of nearly four square blocks. W. N. Selig, the founder of this colossal enterprise, was one of the first to grasp the significance of the silent drama and his achievements indicate the ceaseless toil he and his army of aids have expended in order to arrive at the state the house of Selig enjoys to-day. Besides the vast Chicago plant, Mr. Selig maintains in Los Angeles, Cal., a studio of almost equal proportions, where a stock company of players are engaged the year around. It was while visiting his far Western studio that Mr. Selig came near being the victim of a tragedy in October, 1911. In fact, while Mr. Selig himself was miraculously spared from the shooting attack of a Japanese employee, one of his most valued aids, Francis Boggs, gave up his life while defending his employer's cause.

Mr. Selig showed a fine discernment when he selected Miss Mabel Taliaferro to assume the title role in the film production of "Cinderella." Surely the utilization of this fine theme for motion pictures opens up a prolific field for the producers and one can only conjecture how great will be the vogue of the camera man if the dear old fairy plays and the entrancing pantomimic spectacles that were wont to hold sway in England around "Boxing Day" time should really become transferred to the screen.

The indefatigable Vitagraph Company even before the era of the photo-play was a decisive force, for in its quest for "actualities" for portrayal on the screen its officers seemingly defied Nature's laws and there has never been a period in the fifteen years of their activity that the Vitagraph has not been the choice of vaudeville managers, and this is still true to-day in theaters where the motion picture is merely a program number.

One may recognize more well-known players of the Broadday type in the releases of the Vitagraph Company than are to be seen in a Frohman production of this period. This is so true that there has been a constant wail of late in the sanctums of the theatrical magnates over the inavailability of so many potent players who until recently were always at the disposal of these gentlemen. The roster of the Vitagraph Company contains at least twelve actors and actresses whose weekly honorarium has been listed at from $100 to Just think of it!

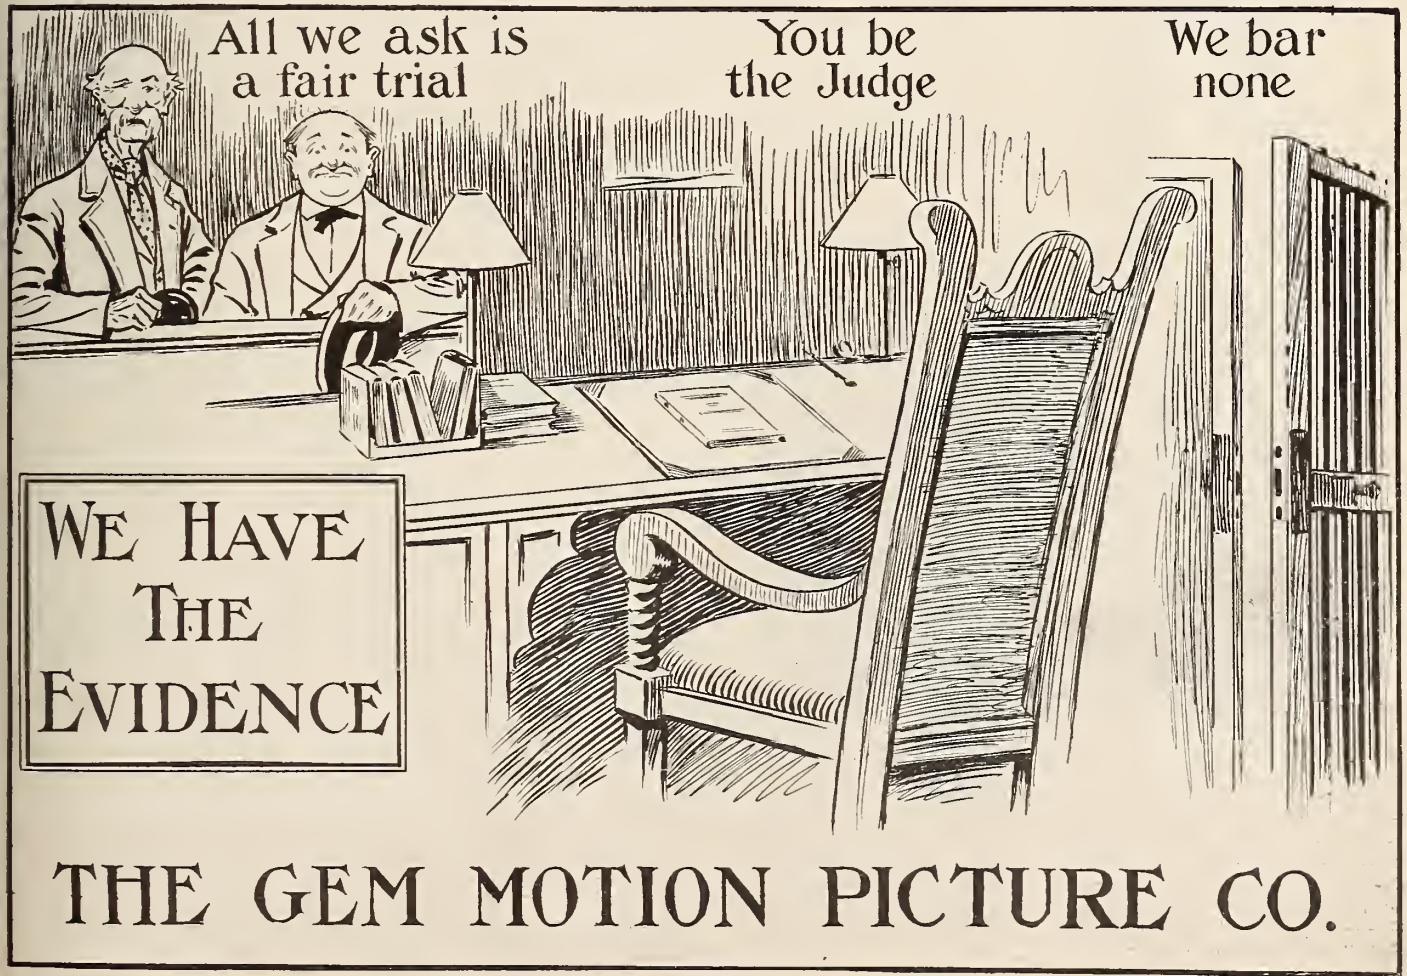
Sunday, Jan. 21, 1912

The First Holiday of the New Year

"GEM"



LUX FILMS

The Films the Exhibitor Demands

Released Friday, January 5, 1912

THROUGH THE AGONY COLUMNS

Comedy—Length 632 feet

An amusing Comedy showing that "True Love" never runs smooth

ARTISTIC EARTHENWARE IN THE MAKING

Industrial—Length 347 feet

R. PRIEUR, 10 East 15th Street, NEW YORK CITY

TELEPHONE 3427 STUYVESANT

Sold only through Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

ONLY EASTMAN RAW STOCK USED.

$200 each. Scarcely one has an unfamiliar name, and the producers or stage directors are all of the Broadway caliber.

The Edison film releases are always recognizable from that intellectual atmosphere so suggestive of the guiding mind of the Wizard of Menlo Park. In the last year the Edison producers have resorted to every conceivable uplifting theme in their determined purpose to constantly raise the artistic caliber of their productions. Some of the very best players are to be found posing before the Edison cameras; among these one Booth, a nephew of Edwin, is prominent, while one of the patriarchs of the American stage is easily recognized in Robert Brower, whose portrayals indicate that he has thoroughly studied the philosophy of the silent drama. At least one of the Edison players is being watched with a view to stellar honors in Miss Mabel Trunelle, who possesses that rare gift of simulating extreme youth without that exaggerative method so close to burlesque.

PARSON SUE

To get comedy out of a Western subject without resorting to moth-eaten methods is quite an achievement. In the production "Parson Sue," a Western comedy, such a result is really achieved. Events and characters are given a new twist with the result that the production stands out triumphantly as a distinct winner.

Even without Billy Quirk, the story would commend itself on its own merits, but with the genial and irrepressible Billy at his best, doing a comedy stunt, this film will make a man laugh even if he has been soaked for a double-admission.

The story is about a town and a bunch of cowboys who feel that they need the spiritual leadership of a parson. They send for one and all go to the station to receive him. The boys keel over in astonishment when they find that the parson is a girl. Of course the chivalrous cow-punchers, who live in a section where the delicate influence of a woman is scarce, fall all over themselves in an attempt to "get in right" with the new parson.

As time goes on, the new parson is the center of a plot which is laid by a villainous cowboy. The plot fails and Parson Sue is rescued by her lover at the expense of a bullet wound, which almost proves fatal, but Sue's nursing brings her rescuer around all right.

This is the first release in which Billy Quirk appears. The comedy is infectious. Billy puts things over in his inimitable way.

AMERICAN POPULARITY IN EUROPE

Frank W. Woodward, the well-known American amusement promoter, has just returned to Chicago after a two-years' sojourn in Europe. Of course, Mr. Woodward was busily engaged in a number of amusement enterprises while living abroad. He was general manager for the big American amusement syndicate of Crawford & Wilkins, who are owners and proprietors of the famous Paris Hippodrome.

Mr. Woodward had a number of interesting things to say concerning the popularity of American pictures. "While I had charge of the Paris Hippodrome," said Mr. Woodward, "we had turned the big pavilion into a giant skating rink. I conceived the idea of showing motion pictures while the skaters flew over the floor. So I constructed a mammoth curtain, measuring about fifty feet wide by thirty feet long, and strung it down the center of the building, as the structure was entirely too large to show pictures in the ordinary way. No machine could project a light entirely across that big floor. Thus the picture could be readily seen by the skaters on either side of the curtain. There was a gallery of seats stretching around the interior and we threw the pictures on the screen so that the subtitles could be read most easily from the higher-priced seats.

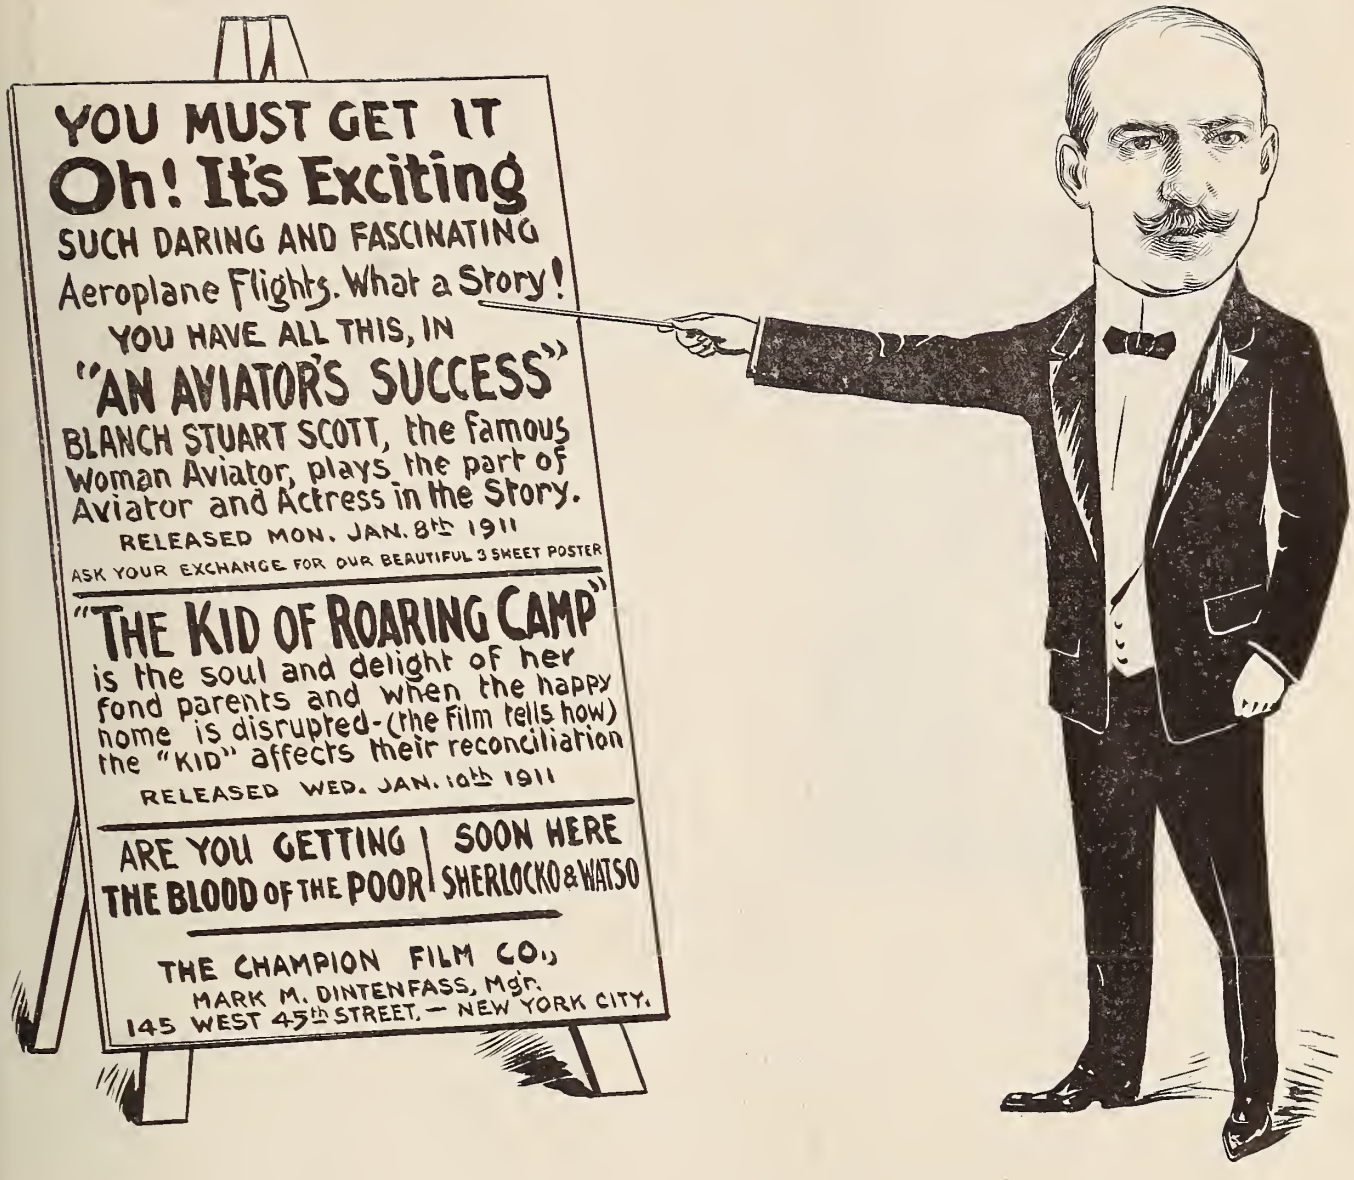
"I was the owner of a theater in Cologne, France, and also had houses in Paris and Berlin. The latter was located in the New Welt Park, close to the Socialist center of Berlin. I found that the Teuton was very fond of drama. I simply could not get enough American pictures to supply the demand. The Western cowboy films, manufactured by the American Film Manufacturing Company, were the most popular of all and I ran them constantly in all the houses over which I had jurisdiction.

"My house in Paris was located at No. 17 Boulevard Strassbourg. Aside from the Western subjects of American manufacturers, I found that the Parisian public was most fond of comedy. The French temperament seems to take kindly to only one brand of picture aside from the comedy, and that is the Western cowboy film.

"The British were most fond of spectacular, where it dealt with anything military. Show the British public soldiery or shooting and you have a delighted audience.

"Since my return to this country, I had more occasion to watch the product of the American market closely. I do not think most American manufacturers appreciate the magnificent field in Europe for the sale of their pictures. The American Film Manufacturing Company is an exception to the rule. They seem to be alive to the heavy European demand and to be taking excellent care of it."

Concord, N. H.—The Globe Moving Picture Theater was destroyed by fire.



YOU MUST GET IT
Oh! It's Exciting
SUCH DARING AND FASCINATING
Aeroplane Flights. What a Story!
YOU HAVE ALL THIS, IN
"AN AVIATOR'S SUCCESS"
BLANCH STUART SCOTT, the famous Woman Aviator, plays the part of Aviator and Actress in the Story.
RELEASED MON. JAN. 8th 1911
ASK YOUR EXCHANGE FOR OUR BEAUTIFUL 3 SHEET POSTER
"THE KID OF ROARING CAMP"
is the soul and delight of her fond parents and when the happy home is disrupted-(the film tells how) the "KID" affects their reconciliation
RELEASED WED. JAN. 10th 1911
ARE YOU GETTING THE BLOOD OF THE POOR
SOON HERE SHERLOCKO & WATSO
THE CHAMPION FILM CO.,
MARK M. DINTENFASS, Mgr.
145 WEST 45th STREET. — NEW YORK CITY.

OPENING OF NEW QUARTERS OF CLEVELAND LOCAL NO. 1

The Moving Picture Exhibitors League of America

On Wednesday, December 20, the Cleveland Local of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America held their first meeting in their beautiful new quarters, located at No. 1459 West Sixth Street.

Great surprise was expressed by the members when they came to the meeting and viewed for the first time new and elegantly furnished quarters, which they could really call their own.

The committee in charge of securing and furnishing quarters consisted of Mr. S. Lustig, C. M. Christenson and S. Bullock. They were given full power to act, and it is needless to say that they made the most of their duties.

The meeting room was artistically decorated with Christmas greens, heavy green streamers hung across the large room from the corners of the ceiling, encircling an immense welcome sign, which hung directly above the president's chair, which was a large upholstered leather arm chair, in front of which was a quartered oak stand and gavel.

President S. E. Morris accepted his chair with much satisfaction. A large roll top desk of the latest design awaited L. H. Wilk, secretary, and a desk of the flat variety for F. M. Kenney, the able financial secretary.

An enormous rug covered the center of a parquet floor, and six large brass cuspidors stood ready to receive the ash from the Havana perfectos which the committee had on hand for the members. Thirty-six oak chairs were provided, with plenty room for more, as the occasion demands.

It is the intention of the organization to install a supply department in the near future and carry a full line of machine parts, carbons, tickets, etc.—and furnish same to the members at actual cost.

Cleveland Local No. 1 was the first organization of motion picture exhibitors in the country, and called the first national convention, which was held in Cleveland, Ohio, August 1, 2 and 3, 1911.

L. H. WILK, Secretary.

DR. RAMON REYES LALA

Filipino Author, Lecturer and Publicist

By Margaret I. MacDonald

BORN of a Spanish-Filipino mother and a British East Indian father, Dr. Ramon Reyes Lala, with a sparkling personality and brilliant intellect, comes to us as a specimen of what environment an' education can do for the human race.

This interesting gentleman, whose birthplace is the city of Manila, received his early education in Singapore,

DR. RAMON REYES LALA

Straits Settlements and in Hongkong, China. Later on in the course of his absorption of knowledge he attended colleges in France, Germany, Switzerland, and England, being a graduate of St. John's College, London, England, and winning in his careful application of study the degree of Ph.D.

It will be interesting to American people to know that Dr. Lala is the only Filipino American citizen. It is well known that the United States government has not yet made it possible for the Filipino people to become American citizens. "But," said Dr. Lala, "Uncle Sam has done a very great deal for the Filipino people. He has done more in thirteen years than Spain did in three hundred years. Manila is a very beautiful city—her parks, her public buildings, her automoble drives, all are beautiful; yes, Manila is one of the most beautiful cities in the world."

For thirteen years Dr. Lala has been delivering illustrated lectures on the Philippine Islands, including the following subjects:—"The Philippines and Their People," "A Trip Through Luzon," "Talks on Mining," the lumber possibilities, tobacco, coffee, sugar, rice, hemp, etc., etc., also figure in the series.

Dr. Lala was selected by President McKinley, who was a personal friend of Dr. Lala, after the battle of Manila to lecture throughout the country on the Philippine Islands, and was personally indorsed by him. He has also been indorsed in nine states by the Teachers' Institute course, which honor he has won through merit in lecturing. Previous to his career as a lecturer, this worthy gentleman was interested in the export business, and afterwards followed the vocation of teacher, giving private lessons in the Spanish language.

With regard to his right to American citizenship, Dr. Lala said, "I became naturalized before the United States Government ever thought of the Philippine Islands. For twenty-five years I was an inhabitant of your city. It was Supreme Court Judge Prior who gave me my citizenship papers, and if any of my friends doubt me I will be happy at any time to produce my papers as proof of the fact."

Dr. Lala is also an author, having written all the leading magazine articles in this country on the Philippine Islands. The Saturday Evening Post, Collier's Weekly, The Forum, Independent, The American Monthly Reviews of Reviews, Travel, Success, and many other well-known magazines have printed articles by this distinguished Filipino brother. He has also delivered ten to fifteen banquet speeches in New York City and elsewhere.

Said Dr. Lala, "The Filipinos are not yet ready for their independence. They will not be capable of self government for some twenty years to come. It is out of reason that the Filipinos, with 3,000 islands, 600,000 tribes, and 8,000,000 inhabitants, considering their condition when taken over by the United States, should be as yet far enough along the road of civilized development to be able to govern themselves."

Continuing, he remarked, "The islands are self-supporting. The population of Manila is a little over 400,000 people. We have 3,000 schools, the finest electric railroad system in the East, steamship piers, steam roads in construction, new government buildings, clubs, hotels, etc."

Signor Lala wishes to call the attention of his enemies to the fact that the Philippines could not today be bought for $500,000,000. The commercial values of the Philippines have increased remarkably since Uncle Sam has made his official advent there. Event General Emilio Aguinaldo, whom Americans have been prone to look upon as a terribly bad man, is showing loyal sentiments toward Uncle Sam. Says Dr. Lala, "General Aguinaldo, which name, by the way, means, 'Christmas Box,' ex-chief of the Filipino Revolutionary Government, is making a good citizen, and is employed in farming and the cultivation of sugar in the Province of Cavite. He is a very good-hearted gentleman, and more loyal than many of the other high class Filipinos. When the American soldiers captured him and did not kill him, it changed his ideas toward Americans, whom he thought were just like the Spanish people and ready to grab up all they could get."

In conclusion, Dr. Lala, after many effusions to our editor, said, "I believe there is a bright future for moving picture concerns in this country, and any of the leading manufacturers who are desirous of gaining any information in connection with the moving picture in the Philippines, if they will please address all communcations to the editor of the Moving Picture News, will get the necessary information, which I will be only too pleased to give.

The Filipinos, according to Dr. Lala, are very fond of the moving picture—they like all kinds of moving pictures, and in Dr. Lala's words, "I think manufacturers should concentrate a little more on educational subjects."

Chicago, Ill.—S. Berkenstadt will erect a new $5,000 moving picture theater at 2708 W. Division street.

Portland, Ore.—Plans will be prepared for the new Sullivan & Considine theater to be erected at Seventh and Yamhill streets at a cost of $275,000.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

By Leonard-Donaldson

The Picture Theater and the Festive Season

BY the time these lines are read by my American brethren it will be due and proper time to wish them all the good wishes for the joyous season. That brief space, when all combatants in the great industrial conflict cry peace, will be hard upon us. At the moment of writing I have to hand particulars of various films which will go to comprise the English programmes at Christmastide. Dicken's famous "Christmas Carol" claims special mention. It is an admirable adaptation of the Edison Company; well acted and admirably staged. It will be released on December 9th, and it is being looked forward to with considerable interest on my "side." "The Babes in the Wood" is a Powers film which will delight the children. Yuletide is the children's festival and for the elders a large part of the pleasure they undoubtedly derive from it is due to the mirth and the whole-hearted enjoyment of the young people in this great annual function. The pantomime is undergoing a rapid evolution; for the modern child there is now the picture theater. A visit to the filmic pantomime during the Christmas holidays now takes the place to a large extent of the erstwhile visits to the pantomimes offered on the legitimate stage, which in many cases are above the heads of young people. The picture theater is already adapting itself to the festive season and reviving for the young some of those special features of Christmas which appear to have been lost in the process of evolution the modern pantomime has undergone.

A beautiful and pathetic Christmas legend is offered in film form by the Urbanora Company entitled "The Little Princess' Christmas Gift." The story is reverently portrayed amid gorgeous setting, and it is a subject which is suitable for old and young alike. "A Miser's Christmas" is a Cosmopolitan film which comes aright for the season. The theme is an intensely human and pathetic one, teaching a strong moral lesson.

Comedy films there are in abundance. Of course many are of the impossible knock-about variety. Perhaps this is excusable for the fact that they are pantomimic and therefore appropriate, but there is nothing original; everything ludicrously exaggerated. Speaking generally, however, producers and exhibitors have risen to the height of their opportunities in providing really seasonable programmes. Christmas subjects should not be incidental to the programme, but should be a leading feature for the Yuletide period, and should continue so during the time allotted for the children's school vacation.

By the way, shall we ever have talking pictures—real comedies and dramas enacted by characters whose voices would lend actuality to the mimic scene? Of course, pantomime as we know it in the theatrical sense, becomes more forcible when wordless. Christmas films should be colored where possible. The glitter and glare of the footlights; the myriad scintilations of star-bespangled costumes, all lend charm to the legitimate pantomime. These are denied the filmic representation; but they can be "suggested" in a thousand different ways by judicious coloring.

This season of good will comes but once a year. Some of us deride it, for some it is anything but a season of happiness, but everyone comes more or less under its influence. I plead guilty to having succumbed to the same temptation, but I know I am in good company. I feel as I write Cousin America that I grip your hand in true industrial friendship and that we exchange congratulations—for a Happy Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

SUGGESTIONS FOR A BUILDING THAT SHOULD MEET THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE MODERN HISTORIC RECORDS ASSOCIATION

Prepared at the Request of the Association by Mr. Arthur Dillon, of Dillon, McLellan & Beadel, Architects

Gentlemen:—The first meeting of a society may seem an early one at which to discuss a building for it; yet when you consider the purposes of this society and reflect on the value of the things it intends to collect and the necessity of adequately protecting them, it does not seem so untimely; and it will at least do no harm to consider the conditions that should be met by a building for an association such as this. If sufficient consideration had been given to this question by the state, we should not have lost in the recent fire at Albany so many documents that never can be replaced.

An equally important matter is the help, in ease and comfort of use, and the aid to growth, that is given by a building specially designed for its purpose. It is analagous to, but far more important than, having a well designed filing system instead of trusting to a miscellaneous collection of pigeon holes. The owners of valuable records will be more inclined to contribute them if they can see that there is a suitable building in which to keep them.

It must be a building to serve several different purposes. It must be first of all a storage place, where records can be preserved indefinitely; and so it must be more durable than the records themselves. Secondly, it must be a place where records, duplicates perhaps of those in permanent storage, may be examined and consulted—being in that way analagous to a library, but having as permanent records things themselves instead of books, which too often are but man's ideas of things.

Thirdly, it must be a place for displaying and studying records and for making them. It should have an amphitheater for this purpose, and for lectures and large meetings.

W. E. GREENE

FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE IN NEW ENGLAND

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Start the Season right by using an Independent Service from a Reliable House. We are buying the Output of the Sales Co. and have some choice services open. Write—wire—or call To-Day at

W. E. GREENE FILM EXCHANGE, Inc.

228 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.

Telephone: 2187-3790 Oxford.

It should also have smaller rooms such as directors' and committee rooms, curators' rooms, and rooms for the staff, workshops and laboratories.

The last of these three divisions calls for nothing new or remarkable either in design or materials. The obvious principal requirement, architecturally, is the amphitheater; and around it should be grouped the other minor rooms in such a way that they could all be used together on special occasions, such as receptions in honor of distinguished guests, public exhibitions, and similar entertainments. This part of the building, in fact, should be what any public or semi-public society needs for its meetings of all kinds, and of which we have numerous excellent examples, both here and abroad.

The problem of permanent storage is not so simple. The first example that comes to mind is, of course, the pyramids of Egypt. They are, in a way, permanent enough in themselves, but permanent in their climate only. Built, as they were, without cement, had they been exposed since their erection to the rain and the snow, the heat and the cold of our climate, it is doubtful if anything would now remain of them except heaps of stone, in which it would be difficult to find a trace of the ancient burial chambers. And none of the pyramid builders, I believe, succeeded in protecting their contents from man for more than a comparatively brief period; they were all rifled before the time of modern exploration.

We can, even under the rigors of our climate, build to last practically forever, by using different and better methods than the Egyptians; but we cannot, any more than they could, build up what our descendants cannot tear down. For what man can make, man can break. For protection against the destructiveness of man we must rely on a civilization that appreciates the records this association intends to preserve. But there are times when civilization relaxes, and so we must guard against the sudden violence of mobs, against riot, and against the excesses of revolution. Yet, as all these forces have but little time in which to work, all we need to do is to pile such obstacles against them that they will not be able to overcome them before they are repressed and again brought to order.

We can find examples for this in the construction of modern bank vaults. There is none of them that cannot be broken into, given tools and time. It has happened that it has been necessary to do so in a number of cases where something has gone wrong—perhaps a lock, perhaps a cashier. None the less, they do afford an efficient protection against temporary outbreaks.

Vaults such as these, however, are generally more durable than the buildings that contain them. It is very seldom that an architect looks ahead more than a hundred years; but I take it that a building such as we need should be as nearly everlasting as it can be made. The site in such a case is an important consideration. It should be such, for instance, that there would be no danger of flooding, either from natural causes, such as underground or surface water, or from accidents, such as the breaking of water mains. It should be so situated that it would not be exposed to excessive meteorological extremes, and should be sheltered as much as possible from the deleterious matters present in the air in the vicinity of many of our industrial establishments. It should afford a substantial foundation, and in this respect should be examined not only as to its solidity, but as to its susceptibility to earthquakes. The site, moreover, should be sufficiently extensive to guard against danger of fire from neighboring buildings. All of these things point toward a rural or suburban situation, but they are not impossible to obtain in a city. The Hispanic Museum and the Museum of Natural History, for instance, have sites that fill most of these conditions.

The building itself should be made to withstand the harmful influence that such a site can modify but not entirely obviate. It should be massive in construction, and low rather than high. The material of which it should be built seems to be the obvious one, concrete. Reinforced concrete—that is, concrete with steel imbedded in it—might be better still, for it has greater resistance to tensile stress; and if it were certain that steel so imbedded were unalterable, it would undoubtedly be better. Theoretically, it will last forever; but that implies theoretical perfection such a way that the building will be strengthened by it, in its protection from oxidization. In practice that is not yet certainly obtainable. So far, we can only say that reinforced concrete will last as long as the term of life required by ordinary buildings, probably a great deal longer, and possibly, forever; and it is quite feasible to use it in but will not depend on it. It offers many advantages over stone or brick masonry, and for vaults and floor spans permits a solid and fireproof construction that is not otherwise easily obtainable.

For an exterior surface, concrete is not desirable. Theoretically it is waterproof; actually it is somewhat absorbent, so that it will in time be worn away by the constantly recurring attacks of frost. It would take, to be sure, an indefinitely long period for frost and weathering to destroy a concrete building, but their effects would be apparent in the course of time. Moreover, concrete is not desirable æsthetically. It assumes an unpleasant color. The best that can be said of it is that it looks something like stone; and stone is, as it always has been, the one material for distinguished and imposing exteriors. It is true that terra-cotta is superior in durability, but when one considers that glacial scratches on some granites show that these have not been seriously injured by the weather in a period measured by tens of thousands of years, it would seem quite durable enough.

The design of the exterior is a matter that would take care of itself. It should be dictated by the interior arrangement and construction, and it should not be forced into looking like this, that, or the other style of past times. It would necessarily be very substantial and solid in appearance as in fact, and would show that it was built to last.

Many minor details would need careful study. The construction of the vaults, while following in general that of bank vaults, would require some modifications; and a construction of bronze, concrete and glazed tile would be more durable than steel. The lighting should be by artificial means and from a source that generates no destructive rays. The ventilation would be an important feature in the vaults whose contents were to be inspected. The air should be given the proper temperature by heating or cooling, as might be needed, dried to the right degree of humidity, and purified of obnoxious elements. The entire supply of air should be obtained through such a system, and where vaults were to be opened frequently, the entrances should be through air locks. Where the storage was intended to be permanent for long periods, such a system would not be needed. In that case the vaults could be made air-tight, filled with an inert gas, such as nitrogen, and provided with an automatic arrangement that would regulate the humidity, and so guard against any dampness that might come in, in spite of all precautions.

There are other matters that should be considered, but they come more within the province of the records themselves, rather than that of how to preserve them. But I have touched on the principal things that should be borne in mind; and these, I have tried to emphasize, bear on the question of durability. That is the question that architects must daily solve.

Generally it is a question of only a very imited durability. But the experience we have gained in such building makes it possible for us ("acts of Providence" aside) to plan for practically unlimited time, as human time is measured.

Louisville, Ky.—A new vaudeville and picture hippodrome is proposed for this city by the Talbott Syndicate of St. Louis.

New York, N. Y.—The German American Opera Company; capital, $10,000; Isaac Cohen, Morris Levy and J. A. Barkey.

Salem, W. Va.—The Salem Amusement Company, capital $10,000, will conduct theaters, etc.; L. C. Washburn, Frank Carney and C. W. Prince.

PRESTO

Poster frames, the best poster frame made, $1.75 each in quantities up to five. Six or more $1.50 each, cash with order.

ELECTRA Pink Label Carbons 5/8 x 6 soft cored, $2.00 per 100. $19.00 per 1,000, cash with order.

Swaab Film Service Co.

INDEPENDENT FILMS ONLY

129 N. EIGHTH STREET PHILADELPHIA

Power's and Motiograph Machines

THE WALRUS AND THE CARPENTER.

From John Bull, London, England

"If these were only cleared away,"
They said, "it would be grand."

THE CAPTAIN'S TREASURE

Mental Films for a Picture Story

By Mary Lawton Metcalfe

SCENE 1

A reef-bound coast. A rocky promontory on which is built a giant lighthouse.

The sea is lashed into great waves and the surf throws the spray hundreds of feet high.

Black clouds hang low and sea-birds fly to the shore. An iron bridge connects the lighthouse with the mainland. An old sailor with bundles from the village store is battling against the force of the increasing storm.

SCENE 2

Inky blackness of night settles over land and sea. One long beam falls on the roaring waters from the great white light in the tower.

An ocean liner heaves in sight; the violence of wind and waves have driven her from the course. She nears the reef.

SCENE 3

The ship strikes the rocks. Terror fills the faces of crew and a thousand passengers.

Some are climbing up the rigging; others are leaping into the wild, angry waves. All is confusion. The ship is on fire!

SCENE 4

Explosion. The vessel is burst in pieces. Men and women are struggling in the waves, holding to spars and wreckage.

SCENE 5

A great ball of fire rises over the stormy waters. The rocks and sands are strewn with cargo, human bodies, animals. Village folk are swarming the rocks to hunt for treasures. Piles of ships stores are being watched by groups of women and children. Canvas-covered heaps mark the places where are borne the nameless dead.

SCENE 6

The old sailor, lighthouse keeper, stoops to pick up a bundle. It is two life-preservers tied together with strong rope. He pulls out his jack-knife and cuts the rope. In it he sees an infant in long clothes. It is apparently dead. The old man takes off his coat and lays the babe on it.

He puts his hands to his mouth and hallos for help. Men and women run to the spot. A fire is built. There is life in the little storm-beaten body. The women work on the baby. They clamor to get possession of it. The captain steps among them and takes the treasure for himself.

SCENE 7

The old sailor crosses the bridge with his precious bundle and climbs up the steep iron stair to the light tower. Its one room is furnished like a ship's cabin. Two berths are fastened to the wall. He lays the baby in the lower berth, while he throws wood into the open stove and makes a blaze.

He pours milk out of a can into a saucepan and puts it to heat on the stove.

Then he takes off the fisherwoman's coarse petticoat and wraps the baby in his new red flannel shirt. "Cap'n" pulls his own big chair in front of the fire and makes a warm nest for his treasure.

SCENE 8

Six fishwives cross the bridge and climb the lighthouse stair. They enter the "Cap'n's" cabin and see him feeding the baby. Makes a funny face, and shows he has no experience with "leetle gals." The visitors make merry at his awkward handling and feeding of a baby. Again they put out their hands to offer to adopt it. "Cap'n" shakes his head and hugs the baby to his breast.

The women go down the steep stairs and cross the bridge, disappearing over the rocks. The long beam of light from the tower shows them the way.

SCENE 9—(Ten Years Later)

Daddy and Pearl are on the rocks. She has a crabbing-net and he carries a big wicker basket of live crabs. They stop and look out to sea. On the horizon a ship heaves in sight. Daddy takes a field glass from his pocket and puts it to his own and then to Pearl's eyes. He looks down in her face anxiously; she shakes her head violently, throws down the net, and leaps on the old sailor's back. Thus he picks his way carefully over the slippery rocks, crosses the bridge and climbs the long stair.

SCENE 10

The cosy lighthouse living-room. The supper table is set, and Pearl pours a mug of steaming coffee which she hands to Daddy. She sits on the arm of his chair, while he feeds her with tid-bits from his plate. A happy scene of youth and age in home happiness.

SCENE 11

A calm summer's day. A beautiful young girl in bathing costume dives from the iron pier of the lighthouse and swims far out in the waves. A coast steamboat passes, makes big swells, and Pearl is swept out into the stream. She disappears under the water, and rises to the surface. A young sailor leaps from aft of the steamer and seizes the drowning girl. A boat is put off the steamer and Pearl is again rescued from a watery grave. Great cheering as Dick and the girl are taken on board.

SCENE 12

The village store and post-office. Four city strangers are talking to the postmaster; he points to Pearl as, bright and beautiful, she brings in a basket of wriggling sea-crabs to exchange for groceries.

SCENE 13

Lighthouse living room at forenoon. Pearl is cleaning the giant lamp and fills it from a big can. Daddy is mending a seine. Enter postmaster and city strangers. Introductions follow. Letters and photographs are shown to the old man and a picture of a big ocean liner in an old newspaper.

Daddy blows his nose in a big red handkerchief and wipes his eyes. He takes Pearl by the hand and leads her to her uncle. She breaks away and rushes back to the old captain and hangs around his neck. She decides, without hesitating, her choice.

SCENE 14

City visitors pick their way carefully down the winding stair; they cross the bridge and get on the yacht anchored at the end of the pier. Pearl and Daddy stand at the port-hole of the lighthouse and wave to departing guests. She kisses the old man and they continue with their morning work.

SCENE 15 (Ten Years Later)

Daddy and Sailor Dick are playing checkers after supper in the lighthouse. Pearl is eagerly watching the game. Dick is looking at Pearl and not at the board. His right hand makes the moves on the board, the left hand holds Pearl's own, passively hanging at her side.

SCENE 16

The old man is fast asleep in his armchair. Dick is urging Pearl to marry him. She shakes her head positively "No." She points to the old man and looks fondly at him. Again she shakes her head in positive denial to leave her lighthouse home.

Dick goes away angrily.

SCENE 17 (Two Years Later)

The Captain's in port.

A mound in the village graveyard. Pearl is kneeling with handkerchief to her eyes. Handsome Dick, the pilot, comes up from behind. He kneels beside the sad little mourner. Then he lifts her to her feet and whispers: "Pearl, the grand old 'Cap'n is safe in port."

She smiles through her tears and with her hand shades her eyes, looking far up in heaven's own blue.

SCENE 18

Drawing-room scene in a city home of wealth. Society wedding of Pearl and Dick, the pilot. Uncle Tom gives away the bride. Aunts and cousins smile and make merry.

SCENE 19

Touring car. Pearl and Dick, the newlyweds, depart. A shower of shoes, rice and flowers follow the retreating figures.

SCENE 20

All aboard for the Land of Honeymoon. The speeding auto disappears down the avenue.

Curtain

Seattle, Wash.—W. H. Brunner will erect a moving picture show at 1601 Fourteenth avenue, to cost $4,000.

New York, N. Y.—A theater exclusively for negroes will be built at 138th street and Lenox avenue.

Monrovia, Cal.—Ground will be broken for the erection of a new opera house here.

Idaho Springs, Col.—A new $20,000 opera house is to be erected here.

And Get a Rep

Republic films are as essential to the Motion Picture Theatre as red blood is to life.

Two Rep Features

THAT WILL HELP US MAINTAIN OUR REP AND MAKE A REP FOR YOU.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20th,

"Retribution"

An Exceptional Dramatic Picture portraying the stronger elemental emotions of Love, Hate, Cupidity, Hope, Fear, Bravery and Cowardice.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21st,

"A Martial Mirage"

Twenty Minutes of solid laughter on the TWO GREAT DOMESTIC QUESTIONS of the day.

JANUARY 13th and 14th

"Daniel Boone"

JANUARY 6th ad 7th

"Six Nations"

REPUBLIC FILM COMPANY

145 W. 45th ST., NE WYORK CITY

Sold Through The Sales Company.

Great Northern

THE "KING PIN" OF QUALITY FILMS

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30th

A REALISTIC MAKE-UP

A laughable comedy in which by the kindly intervention of a real burglar, an actor is enabled to play his part to perfection. Length 752 feet. On the same reel:

SEA AND LANDSCAPES, (DENMARK)

A charming selection of scenic views. Length 246 feet.

RELEASE FOR SATURDAY, JANUARY 6th, 1912

THE TEMPTRESS

A dramatic feature headliner of rare artistic quality. A film that will be featured more than once.

ALL FIRST CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT!

The Bear-on-the-Globe trade mark is the emblem of high quality

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

7 EAST 14TH STREET, NEW YORK

ALL FILMS SOLD THROUGH THE SALES COMPANY

NOTES BY THE WAY

By "Facts"

Look on this Picture

An exhibitor running a nice, clean little moving picture theater in a small town in Mississippi had not been to church for three years, when one Sunday he decided to go. When the preacher launched forth into his sermon, about the first thing our friend, the exhibitor, heard was this: "There is one thing sure, brethren, you can't get religion in a moving picture show nor in a lodge of Elks." The picture man when he got home said to his better half: "Wife, you will remember that it has been three years since I went to church. Well, it's going to be thirteen before I go to that church again."

And Then on This

In a prominent Georgia town a new church has been built and a fine big pipe organ installed. A prominent organist from New York had been engaged to give a grand recital. The church was packed on the occasion. The hour for the entertainment arrived, but no organist, he having missed train connections. After waiting a while in the hope that he might arrive, the pastor of the church arose and said: "It looks very much, brethren, as if we were not to have any recital to-night. Now, I see you are all fixed up in your best, and I don't know what you are going to do, but as for me, I am going around the square to the moving picture show." And with that the audience was dismissed and the motion picture theater had a full house that night. Now, it does not require much perception to tell which of the two clergymen is calculated to do the most good in this world of ours

Trust Methods.

A Trust exhibitor in Dothan, Alabama, wanted to run the "Fall of Troy," as he had heard how the Independent houses had been "mopping up" on that wonderful production, and so wanted to do a little "mopping" himself. He therefore wrote to his New Orleans Trust Exchange and says, "Please May I?" Back comes the answer: "As far as we are concerned you may run it, BUT (and please notice that but) it might come to the ears of the General Film officers in New York, and we don't know what they might do." And so with that veiled threat this exhibitor was scared off from making a couple of hundred dollars in the theater he had built and paid for, and with pictures which his own judgment determined would bring him splendid returns.

Another Case

A Trust exhibitor in a large Florida town ran an Independent picture. The Trust rule is to deprive such an exhibitor of his license. But it wasn't done in this case. So another Trust exhibitor wanted to run an Independent film, and when he called attention to the fact that he ought to have the same privilege as his competitor and be allowed to run an Independent film, the Trust people met him with this: "No, you can't run it, but if you will make affidavit that your competitor ran an Independent film we will revoke his license." They knew all the time that the first mentioned exhibitor had run the Independent film, as it was a matter of record in the newspapers, and their own representative saw it run, and yet they wanted to involve a brother competitor in a low-priced piece of work at which even their own souls must have revolted. Not even a "nigger" would have been guilty of such an attempt as here described, and when in the South you say that a "nigger" wouldn't do such and such a thing you can depend upon it that it is very low indeed.

A "Pinhead" Professor

In a Texas town is located a normal school, and in it is a student working his way through the institution. One of the ways the latter had of making ends meet was to sell tickets in the evening at the moving picture theater, which he continued doing until the principal of the school took it into his head that there was something highly immoral even about the box office of a moving picture show, and then declared that the young man would have to give up the little job of ticket selling. When remonstrated with and pressed for a specific reason for his action the professor said it "interfered with the student's studies," but he didn't maintain that the collecting of laundry at night, which the student also did, interfered with the studies. The fact is this man is so narrow, warped and prejudiced as to moving pictures that he is lost to all sense of honest judgment and should be awarded the highest niche among the pinheads.

Subjects for Sermons from Moving Pictures.

The manager of the Savoy Theatre, Jacksonville, Florida, received a call recently from a prominent clergyman of the city, who complimented him upon the fine pictures he was showing and said that he got his subject for a sermon from a splendid picture that had been shown a few days before. Here is a good "tip" for some of the fossilized preachers that may be found in many a pulpit. It might be said in passing that the Savoy is one of the prettiest and most up-to-date moving picture theaters in the South, and under the present progressive management has attained a standing and reputation that mark it as a model house, and where Trust exhibitors can see Independent pictures that will make doubting Thomases become believing Peters.

Looks Like One on Laemmle.

The Imp's release of November 16 is entitled "Breaking the Seventh Commandment." After seeing the picture your correspondent is unable to find where any infraction of the Seventh Commandment is involved, for that commandment has to do with that upon which almost all divorce cases are based, whereas the picture shows where a little stealing is done to keep the wolf from the door, and that is covered by the Eighth Commandment, as "Carl" can see by referring to his Catechism and to the twenty-second chapter of the Book of Exodus.

Eveleth, Minn.—The Empress Theater, owned by F. E. Carpenter, has been sold to E. A. Williams, of Jamestown, N. Dak.

REPUBLIC FILM CO. CAMP AT SARANAC LAKE, ADIRONDACKS, N. Y., WHERE "REPS" ARE BEING MADE WITH THE WEATHER AT 20 BELOW ZERO

THE MORMON

A Western Drama to be Released by the American Film Co. January 25

In the early days of the West it was customary for the Mormons to attack wagon trains, in order to secure new wives in the practice of their polygamous belief. This American release deals with such an attack. The young son of the Mormon elder was dearly beloved and faithful and was given the post of outlook, to locate wagon trains, ascertain the number of men and women in them and assist in the attack. One morning he spies through his powerful telescope a lone wagon crossing the prairie. He hastens to a council of the Elders and tells them of the approaching emigrants. He is sent to ascertain the number of men with the wagon and encounters the girl. It is a case of love at first sight. He gazes earnestly in the girl's eyes and sees an answering light in their depths. Then he realizes his mission and that the capture of those women will make them the wives of the prophet. A fierce desire overcomes him to possess her for himself—a thing not possible in the church. He renounces his faith and warns the emigrants.

He assists in fighting off his own people and at last they hold up the flag of truce. The old father learns that his son has become an apostate. Sadly he returns to his home to grieve over his erring son lost to him forever. The emigrant having been killed, the young Mormon takes his place, and with the girl by his side turns to a new life with the woman he loves.

THE COTTON INDUSTRY

Interesting Industrial Film by the Imp Film Company

On January 13, the Imp Film Company release a special film illustrative of the cotton industry in the Southern States. Everybody in the world should be interested in the film, as everybody puts cotton into practical use for some purpose or other.

First of all we see colored laborers at work in the field; then the cotton is packed, ginned, sampled, and sold. The panorama of its local progress is completed by the reception of the great bales of cotton onto an ocean liner in which it is conveyed to Europe.

The center of the world's cotton manufacturing industry lies in the North of England, where there are innumerable mills, devoted to the work of spinning. The cotton grown in the American Southern States supplies the larger demands of the foreign market.

Iowa City, Ia.—W. H. Englert, owner of the Bijou Theatre, has had plans prepared for a new $60,000 theatre.

Highland Park, Ill.—Joseph Dalhaye has the contract for the erection of a new $10,000 theatre.

Washington, D. C.—J. D. Coblentz, 1542 North Capitol Street, will expend $3,200 to remodel a theatre at 5 Q Street, N. W.

Open to Represent Good American Film Manufacturers for

England, English Colonies and Europe

Cable or Write Terms:

Universal Film Company, Ltd.

5 Denmark St., Charing Cross Rd., London, W. C.

Cable Address, "Ufilmico, London" 'Phone, 13674 Central

NOTES OF THE WEEK

FROM THE OBSERVATORY

By G. F. Blaisdell

WE were told not long ago that the prices of seats in the high-class theaters would be advanced from $2 to $3 before they would be reduced. That this statement would prove to be the truth was doubted on this page. The point was made that such talk was against the trend of the times.

The Lyric Theater, in New York City, is among the first to demonstrate the fallacy, if not the foolishness, of the interview "given out" by the optimistic theatrical man returning from across the water. Manager Henry W. Savage announces that beginning with the Christmas matinee balcony seats will be sold at the uniform price of $1. The price formerly ranged from $1 to $2. Also, the seats in the family circle will be reduced to 50 cents. The price of orchestra chairs remains unchanged at $2.

Mr. Savage says that the reduction is due to the fact that recently the balconies and family circles of theaters have been almost abandoned by the man of small income, who has discovered that he can procure moderate-priced entertainment at a moving picture show.

* * * *

After having taken pictures for three days at the scene of the Briceville coal mine horror, a moving picture camera man was prohibited by company officials from doing further work. Much might be said in commendation of the act of the mine officers. Carefully edited newspapers have a standing rule not to print the more shocking details of an accident. The regulation extends also to photographs. The multiplication of news "weeklies" by the picture manufacturers brings the same question to the front in cinematography. This is a problem that undoubtedly sooner or later will come before the Censorship Board for solution. Camera men should be warned not to take, and those making up the "weeklies" should be directed not to print, films that go too closely into gruesome particulars.

* * * *

The recent decision in Philadelphia that the state tax of $500 a year on theaters did not apply to moving picture houses, even though vaudeville was made a part of the show, has been appealed from and the case will next appear in the Superior Court. The fight against the imposition of the tax has been conducted by the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, and the league's lawyer announces that it will combat to the court of last resort any proposition to compel picture houses to pay a city fee of $100 and a state tax of $500.

* * * *

At the Kinemacolor Theater, New York City, 600 deaf-mute pupils were treated to a moving picture show recently by the management. Interpreters translated the words of the lecturer.

* * * *

It was on the evening of the same day that the writer witnessed the same program. Moving picture men — or women—who may for any reason have occasion to enter New York City should not take their departure without first paying a visit to Kinemacolor. Its home is in what in other days served as the superb hall of the Mendelssohn Glee Club. The great organ remains and is used during the program. There is a good-sized orchestra of women musicians—and they are competent. As an added musical feature a quartet, ranged behind the screen, at appropriate intervals sings numbers in harmony with the picture being thrown on the curtain, the result at times being deeply impressive.

The picture program consisted of "Lake Garda," "The Harvest," "Seville at Carnival Time," "Royal Horse Show at Richmond," "The Lost Ring" (comedy), "Sunset on the Nile," "Isle of Wight," "Exmoor Stag Hunt," "Telemaque," "Animal and Bird Studies" and "From Bud to Blossom." When, a half dozen weeks ago, the writer saw "Lake Garda" it seemed to him that never had he witnessed a more beautiful picture—of deep-blue lake and snow-crowned mountain. For marvelous beauty and impressiveness, however, it is excelled by "Sunset on the Nile," consisting of nine different views. Let us look at just one of these. Conceive, if you will, a scene where night has almost fallen. A fiery, scintillating ball is sinking below the horizon, causing me to wonder why it can be viewed without blinking. Around and above it, extending half way to the zenith, golden-tinted clouds bring into impressive relief out of the darkening landscape the ghostly shapes of pyramids; for a moment the only moving objects are the slowly-sinking sun and the tops of a few waving palms. Then in the mirrored surface of the river, the animals themselves being invisible in the gathering dusk, appear the reflected, inverted forms of two loping camels, each with a single rider, passing slowly around a bend in the stream.

* * * *

The Indiana Exhibitors' League has been formed, with H. S. Dickson of Winchester as president and F. J. Rembusch of Shelbyville as secretary-treasurer. National President Neff and National-Secretary Christenson addressed the organizers.

* * * *

A Salina (Kan.) minister has discovered that his auditors these days pay closer attention to his sermons than formerly was the case. He ascribes the lessening number of naptakers to the influence of moving pictures, which he thinks are training their followers to watch closely and to—keep awake. May be something in this. Also it is possible the minister is improving in his style of pitching. It is a fact, though, that some ministers, as well as some pictures, induce "balmy sleep."

* * * *

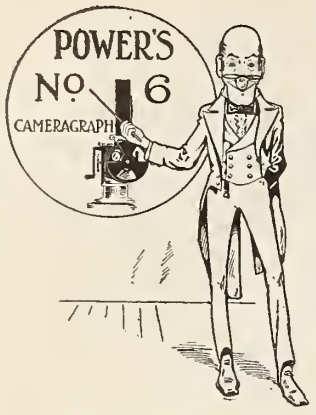
Superintendent of Police Taylor of Philadelphia is after the vaudeville performers. Judging from some of the offenses committed here, there should be enough work in the Quaker City to keep the superintendent busy. The chief also warned his lieutenants that there must be no repetitions of such scenes as were enacted in Vitagraph's "War," which, like the fake pictures in yellow sheets, was based on "descriptions of eye-witnesses."

* * * *

In New Jersey, a Paterson proprietor was fined $500 for charging a negress 25 cents to see a show to which he admitted the white folks for a nickel. The colored ladies are "sure" getting right on their dignity in Denver and Paterson.

* * * *

Mortimer D. Smith, of Sandy Creek, N. Y., was injured May 6, 1910, by reason of a street car starting before he reached the platform. He entered suit for $3,000 damages. When the case came to trial in the Supreme Court the railway company displayed moving pictures of Smith walking without the aid of crutches, which the plaintiff had claimed were a necessary part of his equipment at the time of the pic-



THE MACHINE THAT IS TALKED ABOUT

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6

POSSESSES POPULARITY WITHOUT PARALLEL

In no field, where moving pictures are utilized, are the best results so imperatively demanded as that of the illustrated lecture; and here POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH shines as a most important factor.

Dwight Elmendorf, Burton Holmes, Lyman H. Howe, Fred Niblo. You know them, perhaps have seen their work. THEY ALL USE POWER'S. Why? BECAUSE THEY MUST HAVE ONLY THE BEST.

For fourteen years POWER'S has stood for "BEST," and our No. 6 embodies the most advanced thought in moving picture machines.

It is perfect in construction, noiseless in operation, projects a picture absolutely without flicker, runs like a watch and firm as the hills eternal.

You can't go wrong with a POWER'S NO. 6. Catalogue D is yours on request.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, NEW YORK

For fourteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

tures were taken. A camera man and a number of detectives, posing as gypsies, camped in front of Smith's barn. Smith came out to expel the trespassers. The camera man, with his machine concealed behind canvas in a wagon, caught the plaintiff as he was chasing his tormentors, unaided by his crutches. The jury agreed that Smith should have $350.

* * * *

Willie Rhodes, 16 years old, an operator in a picture theater in Portsmouth, Va., was instantly killed when a current of electricity passed through his body. It is said a short circuit caused the accident.

* * * *

Away out in Washington State moving pictures are furnishing weekly entertainments to soldiers in isolated forts. Among the posts are Forts Casey, Flagler and Worden. The gymnasiums are used for the shows.

* * * *

Among new incorporations are the Kutner Amusement Company, New York City, theatricals and moving pictures, capital $10,000; Ohio National Exclusive Film Exchange Company, Cleveland, capital $15,000; Photo-Historic Film Company, Hoboken, N. J., manufacture of moving picture films, etc., capital $50,000.

CHICAGO LETTER

The Third Grand Reception and Ball of the Moving Picture Operators of Chicago, held at the Illinois Hall, Wednesday, December 13, was a tremendous success, both financially and otherwise. The operators themselves voted not to give the dance on account of various reasons of their own.

Mr. Jack (E. D. Miller), business agent of Local No. 2, Lee A. Forbs of the Progress Theater Company and Mr. J. M. Wolfberg of Hegewisch, Illinois, took full charge of the affair and it is our pleasure to compliment them for a most pleasant evening's entertainment. The entree was at 8.30 p. m., but as many of the operators were still working at this hour, the guests were few during the early part of the evening. About 10.30 the hall became more crowded and there were over 600 guests making merry at the time I left. The music by the Goldsmith Orchestra was the very liveliest and most popular rag hits of the day. Although there was an over abundance of rag-time in the musical program, the guests were very well pleased with it. Some of the most popular film men, accompanied by their wives and sweethearts, were present, namely, Mr. Dave Chatkin and Mr. Tom Norman, Fred Aieken, Wm. H. Havill, Miss Ida Brenner; also many members of the former order of the C. C. C. were well represented. The Grand March was led by Mr. and Mrs. Lee M. Hart, general secretary-treasurer of the I. A. T. S. E. of the United States and Canada. Herman Goldberg had full charge of the refreshments, which were served by dainty waitresses. Mr. Frank Murphy, the staff photographer of the Union, took several good flashlights of the guests.

I must not forget to mention the different entertainers who added greatly to the pleasure of the evening. Everyone enjoyed themselves and a happy and well pleased crowd left the immense Illinois Hall with pleasant recollections of a merry evening.

Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Film Company of Chicago, gave a lecture and address to an advertising club at South Bend, Indiana, last Friday, December 22. The subjects were "Illustrated Advertising Zone" and "Class Circulation." Mr. Rothacker is to be complimented upon his excellent and interesting address, that goes to show his ability is not over confined to interesting editorials, but also branches out into excellent speeches.

Mr. A. P. Johnson, advertising manager of the Chicago Record Herald, the most prominent daily in the city, has issued an educational book, entitled "Library of Advertising," in which some of the best known advertising men in their special lines throughout the country have contributed their views, including Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker, who has written a fourteen-page article on the subject, "The Moving Picture as an Advertising Medium." This is the first time that the moving picture has been recognized by a first-class publication of this kind and goes to show the stride of the moving picture in this special line.

Capt. Boeming, who at one time was connected with the ill-fated International Projecting and Producing Company, is now at the head of a firm here known as the Motiograph Supply Company.

At the land show in St. Paul, moving pictures of the Dupont Powder Company, Holts Caterpillar Company and the M. Rumley Company were the main features of the show. The Dupont Company exhibited a film which showed how simple it is for the farmer to get a good plot of fertile soil from a field full of stumps, in which a great deal of comedy is connected with the reel, and also much instructive matter as to the use of dynamite in this particular manner.

Mr. Tom Cochrone, of the Majestic Film Company, was in town last week, completing his plans and visiting the different exchange men here.

The Des Moines branch of the H. & H. Film Exchange, which was opened up last April has showed wonderful results. It is under the management of Mr. P. S. Boyoir, who is doing very well out there.

The pretty Queen Theater at 2543 W. North avenue was recently sold by Mr. H. Simon to Mr. Mendelshom. The theater will be under the same management, as the manager is very capable and well acquainted with the neighborhood.

The Victor Theater, at 933 East 43d street, just east of Cottage Grove, is one of the best little theaters on the south side. Mr. Fred Grune is the manager and Jim Schmieder is the operator, who throws one of the best pictures in Chicago and the success of the Victor is in a great measure due to the efficiency of Mr. Schmieder. The theater is well equipped with all necessary for a first-class moving picture theater. A Motiograph machine is used. The seating capacity is 299.

The Merit Theater, at 3451 S. State street is being enlarged with a 50-foot addition in the rear, which will make the seating capacity of the Merit close to 500. Three reels of Independent films are used, supplied by the H. & H. Film Exchange, which makes up the entire evening's program.

Mr. Jas. W. Sloneker, manager of this theater, stated that he has had a straight picture program there for the last five months and he is doing much better than formerly, when songs were also included in the evening's show. It is his intention to add a violinist and cornet player to his present orchestra of a piano player and drummer, which will add greatly to the already excellent Merit Theater. To Mr. Sloneker a great amount of credit is due for the success of his theater, as it was always a dead one, having been sold to nine different people the past three years, and during the past year business has steadily increased until now the Merit is doing twice the business of last year.

Mr. Tom H. Quill, general manager of the World's Best Film Company, in the past week gave sixteen demonstrations for the "Crusaders, or Jerusalem Delivered" picture for states yet unsold. Mr. Quill stated that after the first of the year he expects to put on the market another feature film, which will create a great demand throughout the country. The "Crusaders, or Jerusalem Delivered" picture is being played in Des Moines, Iowa, under the auspices of the Daily News to several thousand people. Even the Salvation Army and the newsboys are selling tickets for the "Crusaders" show. It is put on for a thousand dollars for a thousand kids.

P. S.—Best wishes to all for a happy and prosperous New Year. WARNER KENNEDY.

MIGNON (SOLAX)

Adapted from the Well-known Opera

All-star Cast. Staged and directed by Madame Alice Blaché.

MIGNON ..... Marion Swayne
Filina ..... Blanche Cornwall
GUGLIELNIO ..... Darwin Karr
Laerte ..... Gladden James
Lothario ..... Edgar Lewis
GIARNO ..... Lee Beggs
Federico ..... Billy Quirk and a number of attendants and citizens.

The story of "Mignon" is as fascinating as it is rhythmical. Mignon, the daughter of noble parents, is stolen when a child by a band of gypsies. Her mother dies from grief and her father, almost deprived of reason, gives up his ancestral home for the roaming life of a minstrel. He wanders from place to place in search of his child.

Mignon grows up without knowing her antecedents. She is ill-treated by the gypsies until her liberty is purchased by Guglielnio, a student finishing his education by traveling. She falls in love with her rescuer, but he is allured by the seductive charms of Filina, an actress.

Events come to a most thrilling climax at a castle where a grand fete takes place and where Filina is the lioness of the occasion. Guglielino's attentions to her enrages the untutored mind of Mignon into a frenzy of jealousy. She is about to commit suicide, when the soothing notes of a harp played by an unseen hand outside stops her. Lothario, her father, appears and she confides in the minstrel and implores his advice and protection. The half-crazed minstrel is carried away by the girl's story and sets fire to the castle.

This rash act is almost wrought with fatal consequences for Mignon. But it is the means of bringing father and daughter together and of opening the eyes of Guglielino to the affection which Mignon had for him.

Increased Orders Are the Best Proof of AMERICAN SUPREMACY

Where others lose we gain. AMERICAN sale-sheets show a MARKED increase from week to week, Clearly Proving Our Contention that the Public is DEMANDING THE WESTERN PICTURE.

It's an "Out-of-Doors" Age. The Automobile, Golf and Similar Sports are Rapidly Revolutionizing the Public Entertainment Proposition.

Action! "Out-of-Doors" Action—that's the corner-stone of AMERICAN PROGRESS—the central thought in all AMERICAN PRODUCTIONS.

The Western studio, in beautiful El Cajon Valley, Southern California, is the IDEAL spot for the motion-picture manufacturer. It yields backgrounds of surpassing beauty, Giant Mountains, Dream Valleys and Delightful Plains.

Our Stock Company is specially selected, drilled and equipped to produce the BEST POSSIBLE GRADE of Western Pictures. We're SPECIALISTS—and, as specialists, best able to serve you.

"The Winning of La Mesa"

(Western Drama. Release Jan. 8th. Approx. Length 1000 Feet.)

A young minister's reformation of Pretty Peggy and an entire mining town. Bristling with whole-hearted Western Adventure, scintillating with the quick wit of early West, this picture well illustrates the effect of environment versus instinct.

"The Locket"

(Western Drama. Release Jan. 11th. Approx. Length 1000 feet.)

Showing that gamble lust, soul-destroying, enervating, that bends the strongest will and makes its victims derelicts. A Drama that will clinch and hold to the very last picture.

"The Relentless Law"

(Western Drama. Release Jan. 15th. Approx. Length 1000 feet.)

A powerful story of the Law's relentless clutch, beautifully told and calculated to arouse the jaded sensibilities of the inveterate picture fan.

"Justice of the Sage"

(Western Drama. Release Jan. 18th. Approx. Length 1000 feet.)

Quick Western Justice—you've heard of it—the kind more governed by Primeval Instincts than Law. A wonderfully told Narrative of Hasty Passion, Circumstantial Evidence and Vengeance. A Picture that will Pack Your House.

American Film Mfg. Co.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK CHICAGO, ILL.

GEM TELLS WHEN!

The Date You've Been Looking Forward to Now Announced!

At last! We know! They've told us! G!

After feverish waiting and anticipatory eagerness, after frenzied expectation and strenuous suspense, the information is ours! We know when! We have searched the advertising of the Gem Motion Picture Company for a stray hint, for a clue, for a suggestion; we have read between the lines and around the margins, but our Sherlock Holmesian propensities and properties were futile. The secret was well guarded. So we just had to wait until the Gem Motion Picture Company heeded the supplications of the clamoring multitude, and informed us of their first release date. We have received more inquiries at this office during the past few weeks than were probably addressed to Santa Claus, begging, pleading, demanding us to ascertain and announce the big event. We brought our editorial influence (!) to bear; we tried to coax or coerce the Gem folks to release the secret of their release date; we attempted to use editorial privilege or prerogative as a means to that end, but we were told to watch and wait. This alone was our answer, and with this we had to be content. We returned to our desk, desperate and discouraged, and replied to our correspondents that the date would be in the very near future. But they would not be appeased, and threatened to do us violence if the information was not forthcoming. The situation was becoming serious, a crisis was approaching, when—it came!

MARION LEONARD
Leading Lady

Now! Come ye, all ye thousands of News readers (including the twenty who subscribed last week)—for the glad tidings are here. Peace on earth, good-will toward men. We know the date!

It came like a thunderbolt, as Gem itself did. It is—Sunday, January 21, 1911!

Sunday, January 21, 1911, is going to be a gala day. The trade, we know, is looking toward the first release with the conviction that its expectations will be realized, with almost unanimous optimism. Great things are expected, great things are predicted, and we are confident that an overwhelming and instantaneous success will be realized.

Marion Leonard, the moving picture star that radiates and scintillates more than other luminaries in the film firmament, has put all her heart and ambition and determination into the forthcoming productions, and these qualities in such quantities are going to revolutionize film circles to such an extent that there'll really be no end to it. (Circle—no end, get that? This is just to make sure it doesn't get by you!)

Yes, palpitating readers, we have seen a few advance reels of some of the first releases. Our opinion? Nothing less than wonderful! Story, execution, detail, appeal, motive, meaning, moral are far above the average—and the average, these days, is indeed good. One in particular we can emphatically and authentically pronounce the best film, for general merit, which combines all the qualities and qualifications that tend to make a film perfect, we have seen in our entire extensive and varied acquaintance with moving pictures. We will not tell the story just at this very minute, because we would not like to spoil the effect when you ultimately view it. It is a work of genius, and the product of a practiced hand. When the final flash came across the screen we sincerely regretted it, and we make this statement fully cognizant that opinions are often given in similar enthusiastic terms without a genuine belief to that effect. We are not merely in a hysterical ecstasy when we make this superlative criticism, however. It is genuine, accurate, and deserved. And we go on record now as stating that the product of the Gem Motion Picture Company that we have already seen is as near to perfection as we can ever hope to get.

STAMMER E. V. TAYLOR
Manager of Productions

January 21, 1912, you'll remember what we say here! And you'll agree!

The Gem Motion Picture Company is a harbinger of better film. It is an advance agent of the film millennium, when all will be perfect and none less than that. It is a promise realized, a desire attained, a hope fulfilled. We who have been looking for the morrow in filmdom, for the dawn that would usher in a new era in film manufacturing, realize it to-day and recognize it in Gem! And we welcome it all the more because perfection was not expected so early.

Look at the still pictures from the first four releases. Still pictures—but they're eloquent. They speak the message that know no contradiction, no refutation. They tell the tale of which there is no doubting. They are the verdict in themselves, and they are their own tribute.

Scenes from Coming Gem Releases

READIN', WRITIN' AND 'RITHMETIC
Released January 28

UNDER HER WING
Released February 4

Gem is destined to become one of the bulwarks of the Independents, and the Sales Company, in giving it a place on its program, evidences the earnest opinion the trade has already formed of the newcomer. We are certain the Gem will do credit to the Sales Company, and that body is to be congratulated.

We have just glanced over some advertising copy of the Gem Motion Picture Company for this issue. We note a sentence, "Sunday, January 21, 1912, the first Holiday of the New Year!"

What more can we say than agree with them?

To wish them success is superfluous. To offer them our congratulations, even though a little premature, is more appropriate. To offer them our sincere thanks is most fitting.

So we thank goodness and the Gem Motion Picture Company—for they are the same thing!

Scenes from Coming Gem Releases

THROUGH TWISTING LANES
Released February 11.

THE DEFENDER OF THE NATION
Released January 21.

THE FIRST HOLIDAY
OF THE NEW YEAR,
SUNDAY, JANUARY 21st

GEM

REACH HIGH!

I'm reaching for the highest in the picture art; YOU should reach high, too. You MUST. The public knows good films and THEY are reaching high, too.

I'm tickled to death with "Life's Supreme Treasure," the first from my new studio. It aims high—a corker, and my BOOST DEPARTMENT is backing it up. Are you getting that weekly Boost Envelope? It's free.

Get these: For Tuesday, January 9th, a split reel containing

"WHEN HUBBY WENT TO COLLEGE"

and

"Touring Venice"

For Saturday, January 13th, a full reel beauty entitled

"Her Heart's Depth"

Read the synopsis, in this issue, then clamor for them!

POWERS MOTION PICTURE CO., 511 W. 42d St., N. Y. City

Sold through Motion Picture Dist. & Sales Co.

Increased Demand for Direct-Current Economizers

The recent discussions in the columns of this paper, as well as other motion picture papers, on the subject of Direct-Current Economizers and Motor Generator Sets has awakened widespread interest. A large number of exhibitors did not know that Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," has had Direct-Current Economizers in successful operation in various parts of the country for over three years, although the fact has been generously advertised in this and other trade papers. Mr. Hallberg reports that his factory is very busy, especially on 220-Volt Direct-Current Economizers.

Webster City, Ia.—Plans for a new theater here are being considered.

Nanticoke, Pa.—The Dreamland Theater here was destroyed by fire.

Red Oak, Ia.—The Red Oak Theater Company will erect a new theater.

Davis City, Neb.—Jim Gilmore is establishing a moving picture theater here.

Washington, Pa.—The Nixon Theater was destroyed by fire at a loss of $25,000.

Chicago, Ill.—Hallman & Koch will erect a new $12,000 theater at 4515-17 N. Robey street.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—M. Ford will erect a new opera house on Second avenue early next Spring.

Farmersville, Tex.—The moving picture show of Lewis Bros. was destroyed by fire at a loss of $1,000.

Omaha, Neb.—Zlotky & Sokoloff will erect a moving picture theater at 2514 Cuming street at a cost of $4,500.

Iowa City, Iowa.—A new opera house to cost $48,000 is to be erected here by William H. Englert.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Mikado Theatre Co. will erect a new theatre at Easton and Hamilton Avenues.

Ottawa, Ill.—The Ottawa Photo Play Co., capital $10,000. G. K. Robinson, K. Gerdes and F. H. Tichenor.

Vicksburg, Miss.—M. J. Donovan is preparing plans for a three story building for the Lyric Moving Picture to cost $10,000.

Davenport, Ia.—B. B. Alford has purchased the Gem Theatre on Second Street from W. F. Blakemore, and will remodel it.

Baltimore, Md.—The Moving Picture Garden at 31 West Lexington Street has been sold by H. A. Fitzjarrell to Howard Bennett.

Chicago, Ill.—Clark Amusement Co., capital $5,000, to operate theatres. Julius N. Heldman, William N. Tannebaum and Edward Graff.

Milton, Ore.—Geo. P. Sanderson has leased the dime moving picture show at Milton, and the Wigwam Theater at Freewater from V. O. Kelly.

The Three Star Slide Co.

Makes 50 per cent of all the slides used in Chicago, both advertising and announcements.

LET US MAKE YOURS

THREE STAR SLIDE CO., High Grade Slide Makers

TEMPLE COURT BLDG. : : : CHICAGO, ILL.

DID YOU SEE IT?

THAT MYSTERIOUS GAG

LAW OFFICES OF KENYON & KENYON
49 WALL STREET
NEW YORK

PATENTS, TRADE-MARKS
COPYRIGHTS

SM.

December 8th, 1911.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co.,
111 East 14th Street, New York.

Gentlemen:

The Edison Reissue camera patent No. 12037, owned by the Motion Picture Patents Company, has just been a second time reissued as No. 13329, December 5, 1911, for the balance of the term of the original patent, that is to say, to August 31, 1914.

In our opinion this new Reissue is invalid and void.

The new Reissue chiefly consists of a disclaimer (by omission) of claim 4 of Reissue No. 12037, which claim was held invalid by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in March, 1907, (151 Fed. 767) and the delay in disclaiming which was referred to by the same Court in May, 1911, (187 Fed. 1007) as the reason for refusing preliminary injunction on any claim of the patent.

The Motion Picture Patents Company, in order to secure the new Reissue No. 13329, was under the law obliged to surrender the old Reissue 12037, and with that surrender all existing litigation for alleged infringement and all claims for alleged infringement of that Reissue 12037 abate and come to an end. The new Reissue can be enforced only by entirely new litigation. In our opinion the new Reissue was granted by the Patent Office without authority in law, and further, in our opinion, if the new Reissue is litigated it will be declared invalid and void.

Very truly yours,

Kenyon & Kenyon

DID YOU READ IT?

EDISON RE-ISSUE No. 13,329

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES CO., 111 E. 14th Street, New York, N. Y.

ANOTHER MYSTERY SENSATION FROM THANHOUSER

A young man, son of a retired merchant, enters his father's study and asks him for a loan. The father offers him some small change and the young man rejects the tithe with scorn. The father rages at the son, and a butler hears. Or at least, he claims he has heard, when examined by detectives who come when the father is found stark and suddenly dead on the floor of the study, and he tells the officers that the son has packed his suit-case and gone to the railroad station. Sure enough, the officers find the son there and "nab" him before he can board the train.

And, searching him later, they find a large roll of bills, known to be missing from his dead parent's wallet.

Still, as a matter of fact, he did not take his parent's life.

But the butler did—you guess.

No; he, too, was guiltless.

Then who, you puzzle, was the murderer?

As it came out in court, there was no murderer. There was no murder. There was merely an odd combination of circumstances that made things look black for a clean-handed young man until "The Twelfth Juror," in the picture of that name, told a simple enough story that cleared him. Thanhouser issues the picture Friday, January 12.

Chicago, Ill.—Big Four Amusement Co. will erect a new theatre at 3121-23 Lincoln Avenue at a cost of $12,000.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Plans have been prepared and work will soon commence on the new Belasco Theatre to be erected at Broadway and 8th Street.

Chicago, Ill.—Herman Gersten will erect a one story theatre at 1606 West Division Street at a cost of $4,000.

Chicago, Ill.—William Baker will erect a one story theatre at 1145 Garfield Boulevard at a cost of $9,000.

SOLVED AT LAST:

REID'S DIFFUSER

gives a Better than a Dissolving Effect with a Single Stereopticon. EVERY OPERATOR—EVERY EXHIBITOR—should have one. Can be used on any machine. Prepaid for $2.00. Write to-day.

REID'S DIFFUSER CO., 26 Waverly Ct., Chicago, Ill.

THE LATEST SONG HITS ALWAYS AT THE Western Song Slide Service

(Incorporated)

CHICAGO OPERA HOUSE BLOCK

32 NO. CLARK ST., ROOM 203

CHICAGO

A SONG SLIDE SERVICE THAT IS REAL

CATALOGUE ON REQUEST

THE VALUE OF THE MOVING PICTURE IN THE EDUCATION OF THE CHILD OF LIMITED MEANS

By Margaret I. MacDonald

A LITTLE boy of well-to-do parents was taken on an extensive trip through Europe and the countries of the Orient. The child, blessed with parents who understood and sympathized with the reaching out of the tentacles of the youthful mind for the absorption of knowledge, and who took care that each and every point of interest was explained to it, returned to its native land with the scenes of historical events to which its eye was treated impressed well on the walls of the memory cells.

Mrs. Westford, the mother of the little boy, and a sister of the beautiful Lillian Russell, who is herself a woman of great charm of personality and sweetly intellectual face, said to me, "Yes, the moving picture is a wonderful thing—perfectly wonderful. I think it should form a part of the lessons in every public school to-day. A good illustration of the value of eye teaching is in the case of my little boy whom I took abroad one season. I showed and explained to him all places of historical interest which we passed, and when he returned home his teachers marveled at the rapidity with which he progressed in his history and geography classes. As each lesson touching on anything he had seen was reached, a series of moving pictures were immediately set in motion in his brain—the lesson became a reality and not a mere story. The fact of his memory becoming previously impressed with the actual locations was the secret of his success, and such I feel sure would be the effect of the moving picture, used in the schools in connection with the lessons, on the minds of the children."

Continuing, Mrs. Westford told of how on a trip to London she had visited a theater where moving pictures were being exhibited. In this theater on this particular evening were many distinguished personages from different part of the world, such as the Khan of Persia, the representative of the Sultan of Turkey, and others. "To witness the expressions of intense interest on the faces of these people, while films were portraying scenes from different parts of the world," said Mrs. Westford, "was something long to be remembered."

I have recently been making it my business to bring the question of the value of the moving picture as an educator before women of common sense and intellect. Mrs. Herbert E. Knowles, a charming woman prominent in New York social circles and women's work, and who, at a time of her life when forced to step up in line with the rugged male strugglers and earn her living by her pen, was given her first literary work to do by William Cullen Bryant, when he was editor of the Evening Post, expressed herself most decisively and to the point when she said during a conversation which the writer had with her, "I believe absolutely in the moving picture as an educator—it is one of the greatest inventions of the day, and the value of the moving picture in the school is unlimited." Miss Amelia Somerville, a beautiful, talented woman, prominent in stage circles, displayed intense interest in the educational inclination of the motion picture, expressing herself in the same decisive manner as the aforesaid ladies. Miss Somerville has a family of her own whom she has reared most creditably, and for that reason, as well as for the fact that she is a woman of keen intellect, her opinion on the matter is of value.

There is absolutely no limit to the value of the motion picture in the education of the child of limited means. Each text book should be supplemented by moving pictures. The little one who sees naught beyond the brick walls of the city, the child who has no means of traveling beyond the horizon of his native hills, to whom a trip of even two or three hundred miles would be as a fairy tale, can be supplied with a great picture book in his memory, to be turned to over and over again at leisure; he can have the native coloring of every part of the world stored up in that living picture book, through the medium of the motion picture.

GAUMONT INDEPENDENT PROSPECTS

We learn that elaborate arrangements are being made for the release of the Gaumont Company's films in the new year on a very elaborate scale. In addition to the three regular releases and a topical in the form of a weekly news or an illustrated weekly film record, they are going to get out some special American subjects which will be of great interest to the exhibitors.

The name and fame of Gaumont is so well known that it is like painting the lily to offer them any praise, but we certainly think that a large portion of thanks and praise are due to them for the progress they have made and for what they intend to do in the future. It is well known that the Gaumont Company own exchanges in foreign countries and they will be able to use up all their own output. In addition to this we understand a number of special offices will be opened in America so that exhibitors will be able to have a good choice of film of a very superior quality.

It looks to us as though the new year is opening very auspiciously for the Independent cause, and as one correspondent writes us in to-day's mail, the Independent movement is strong and the class of Independent pictures are not to be ignored and are getting better every day. We therefore welcome any firm that tends to the elevation of the art of cinematography.

SCENE FROM "THE CHRISTIAN MARTYRS," GAUMONT RELEASE

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

WHEN YOUR SCRIPTS COME BACK

When your scripts come back, do not start complaining.
You cannot sell them all, you know.
Ideas will clash, and things appertaining
To Authorship confuse one so!
With pen in hand to Imagination Land
Journey the original track.
Just stick to the ship! Never mind a slip!
When your scripts come back.

When your scripts come back do not start repining.
Others do not sell 'em all, you see.
It's a heavy load on a troublesome road
And you must surmount Adversity.
Gird up your loins and count your coins,
Take in another yard of slack.
Just stick to the ship! Never dare to quit!
When your scripts come back.

When your scripts come back do not be discouraged
Others have their varied troubles, too.
Authors are sensitive, they must be encouraged,
And this is what some Editors do.
Stay in the game; just continue writing.
Some day you'll cease to be a hack.
Just stick to the ship! It's a free-for-all tip!
When your scripts come back!

* * * *

That's the dope! When your scripts come back "just stick to the ship," would-be scenario authors! Too many would-be writers are too easily discouraged. When their first effort is rejected they stop then and there. There is no broad highway to successful authorship. The road knows many turnings and twistings. Because your primary effort is rejected is no criterion that your next will not be just what the editors are looking for. Keep at it. If the game is worth entering it is worth trying out. There are a large number of producing companies now in the market for scenarios. One editor may like what another turns down. Start your first manuscript on its journey and keep on writing, endeavoring all the while to improve your output. If you have the talent, originality and the industry success is sure to come sooner or later.

* * * *

Moving picture entertainments and military drill have been introduced to vary the dull routine of life in the Michigan State prison. The moving pictures are to be shown in the prison chapel every Saturday afternoon, and the subjects are to be religious in character, with an occasional comic film that is clean and bright. The machine operator is one William Henshaw, who is serving a sentence for life for the murder of his wife.

* * * *

That excruciatingly funny joke of scattering sneeze powder has reached moving picture theaters in Indiana. It is an action that audiences cannot afford to sneeze at.

* * * *

Some scenario editors are complaining of carelessly written manuscripts. No matter how good the idea and construction, carelessness in presentation detracts from the chances of marketing manuscript. Good paper, clear typewriting and return postage all incline the editor in your favor, fellows!

* * * *

The two and three-reel subjects are becoming very popular in the Central West. The managers seem to like them because they mean extra business.

* * * *

The picture philosopher remarks: "An operator always has his shoulder to the wheel."

Screenings

The piano player has the key to every question.

A strong scene is often outclassed by the red-faced man who has eaten onions for supper.

The manager who "speeds up" the show for the coin there is in it is of few days and full of trouble.

Nothing new under the sun, eh? Ask any man in the audience. He'll tell you there are new styles in women's hats every other night or so.

The hard-working operator can always be depended upon to throw some light on any subject.

Although the usher is no Mathewson, he can be thrown off his stride.

There should be a law enacted against the bright young lady who sits just in front of you in the picture show and insists on informing her escort what the next scene is to be.

* * * *

The picture philosopher remarks: "Did you ever sit next that cheerful individual who always reads the titles in a monotone?"

A Sufficiency

We've had enough of Wild West stuff,
The Indian Brave and Rancher bluff,
The cowboy bold and the cowgirl gay,
The busy Sheriff in Western play.

We've had enough of Western plains.
Shooting irons and bloody stains,
Of cowpunchers; the pony chase;
And the helpless heroine's pretty face.

We've had enough of Wild West stuff,
The whisky flask and gambler rough;
Mammon worship; old stage coach;
Of Fearless Felix, above reproach.

Plenty of the wild and woolly West—
For the love of Mike, give us a rest!

* * * *

The ministerial associations of many cities in Ohio State are endeavoring to compel managers of picture theaters to close on the seventh day. Managers have retained attorneys and assert they will fight the movement.

A movement to fill in the stories of famous authors is growing in popularity. However, manufacturers in their search for masterpieces of fact and fiction have unaccountably overlooked many of the gems of thought written by Laura Jean Libbey, Bertha M. Clay, St. George Rathbourne and Georgia M. Sheldon. Why is this thus?

When the scenario written by some budding author has been produced he is naturally desirous of seeing the film. He never fails to notify the manager of his favorite theater. Right here is where some of the managers overlook a good thing. Managers, when convinced that a writer in their home city has had a playlet produced should take immediate steps to secure the film. By advertising the film and the author's name in the local newspapers the manager is reasonably certain to crowd his theater for special matinee and night. The name of the author gives the production local interest. Providing the man advertised is really the author of the film the manufacturer will not object to the local boosting of both author and playlet. A school teacher out in rural Illinois wrote a scenario. It was accepted and produced. The village theater manager secured the film for a first run. It went so well that the manager kept it for three days, showing to crowded houses each day. Every time the exchange wired for that first run film the manager answered by wiring money for its retention. Going some, eh?

THE FIRST HOLIDAY
OF THE NEW YEAR,
SUNDAY, JANUARY 21st.
GEM

ECLAIR

OFFERS EXHIBITORS DIRECT BENEFITS OF $10,000.00 TO BE SPENT IN ADVERTISING

PHOTOS VERSUS POSTERS

which attracts public attention and creates patronage most; a fine set of large size—actual photos or a single poster?

ECLAIR proved the immense drawing power of photos in

"Hands Across the Sea"

That set of six went like wildfire at 50c., and is still selling strong.

WE GIVE YOU PHOTOS FREE

for every subject you book from your Exchange, providing you tell us the date you show the film. These photos cost us 15c. each in immense quantities. We furnish a complete set for each subject without cost to you.

POSTERS IN ADVANCE, 5c. EACH.

WRITE FOR BOOK.

ECLAIR FILM CO.
OF AMERICA

STUDIO AND WORKS FORT LEE, N. J.

GET THESE FEATURES:

SARDOU'S COMEDY DIVORCONS

TUE JAN 2 ONE REEL OF FUN

A DOCTOR'S DUTY

TUE JAN 9 A DRAMA OF TODAY

"MAMIE BOLTON"

TUE JAN 16 A WALL ST. LAUGH

OLD PAPERS—OLD SOUVENIRS
A European novelty of rare excellence.

THE INVENTOR
A Drama of great strength and power.

THU. JAN. 4 PARIS DRAMA

THU. JAN. 11

WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., Dec. 27.—With special lobby decorations, special programs for the picture shows, special attractions at the Auditorium, and special vaudeville at the Princess and Lyric, to say nothing of special presents for the "kiddies" at all the theaters, this, gentlemen of the moving picture industry, was a special Christmas for the "valley of vapors," and we specialized with special ceremonies "some considerable."

During the two Christmases I have been here I have not seen the theaters present such an attractive appearance, and I dug out of his shell ye oldest resident and asked him whether or not he had ever noted the various places of amusement looking so swell; he replied that he had not, and my informant had been a resident long before "Bath House Row" took on the present palatial institutions where one can hit the porcelain tub and free one's self from the ills that come from social indiscretion.

In fact, Christmas was so everlastingly merry that it seemed as if the waters of the hot springs bubbled with special warmth. It was "some Christmas."

The lobby of the Princess was tastefully decorated in honor of the Yuletide season, and the ticket booth and lobby of the Photo Play presented the same attractive appearance. Up at the Lyceum Eddie Gavrel had placed a large Christmas tree, which was adorned with the usual display, and the Lyric, inside and out, was likewise in gala attire. Over at the Auditorium on Christmas Day Coburn's minstrels made the day even more merry and were followed by "The Chorus Lady," minus Rose Stahl, while "Little Miss Nobody from Starland" proved to be "Little Miss Somebody" before the day was over, and, taken all in all, every one seemed happy.

After months of negotiations it looks as if Hot Springs will do itself proud in the motion picture line. Readers of The Moving Picture News will recall, no doubt that some weeks ago I mentioned a half reel of pictures of Hot Springs views, which showed the alligator farm and a few local scenes, for all of which the Imp Company was responsible. Those pictures are about as good a criterion of this resort as a view of the Statue of Liberty would be of New York City. The local officials would be quite willing to forget all about them, but the outside public won't have it that way, and every week there is received numerous letters from industrial and civic associations, asking for the loan of the Hot Springs pictures. These amiable persons imagine that there is kept in cold storage for just such occasions several reels of the alligator farm to be shot out when the "call of the wild is heard," and the last one came from Brother Jones, who is interested in an agricultural college in Oklahoma, and who wrote for the use of the pictures, which he desired to show during a convention of rural sons at that institution next month. He sent his letter to Mayor Waters. I met his Honor on the street the other day and he showed me Mr. Jones' communication.

"I think the best thing that Hot Springs can do to counteract those other pictures that a company sneaked in here and took would be to authorize some reputable concern to come here and take what we want them to see," said the mayor, after which he wended his way to the office of the Secretary of the Business Men's League, and learned that that most worthy official had been made the recipient of a letter from one W. B. Rothaker, representing the Industrial Motion Picture Company, of Chicago, who wrote that himself and camera men would be in this city next month, at which time they intended to take a series of motion pictures, which they would like the city to handle or place in the hands of the Business Men's League. A conference was immediately held, and it was agreed that everything possible will be done to make the visit of Mr. Rothaker and his staff most agreeable. By the time these gentlemen arrive they will find that everything has been arranged for them. They will learn, too, that all of the city's population that can crowd in Central avenue will be in the picture, expressing great willingness to be thus "mugged," and there will be large parties of tourists in tally-hos to be taken in the drive over the mountain; also some of the eclat on horseback, to say nothing of the two next bathhouses and the golf links. Oh, we are going to do the thing up right this time.

There are a number of persons who are pondering over the many Christmas presents they might have purchased for the $3 and $4 a seat they gave to increase the receipts of Henry W. Savage's grand opera company, "The Girl of the Golden West," which visited Hot Springs. When it was announced that the seats down front would be $4 a crack, the populace immediately sat up and took notice. Many who gave that amount did not take into consideration the fact that there would be an orchestra of fifty, but they found when the musicians tore into the score, that life in a boiler factory was one sweet dream. With the "Lady in the Baths" I visited the Auditorium. Did she like it? Just one act suited her and she beat it for home. The singing wasn't the equal of "The Chocolate Soldier," and the musicians "nigged the show." The young man who sang the part of "Dick Johnson, the outlaw," possessed a very good voice, but he was not alone too young for the part, but deucedly too good looking for an outlaw. The crowd was "stung" good and hard, but we forgive "the Colonel" in consideration of other attractions he has sent here.

One of the best vaudeville shows that has been at the Princess in many weeks had to leave after the Saturday matinee and make a big jump down into Texas. The main feature was the Gus Sun Minstrels, and what they did to this town was a "hugeness." They were an immense hit but when the Saturday matinee was over they did the Arab act and sneaked. Manager Frank Head kept the Whirling Erfords, a wonderfully clever novelty, and, with a local singer and three extra reels of pictures, managed to get by Saturday night.

Biograph sent a good picture here the past week, "In a Looking Glass," while Lubin's "Santa Claus and the Clubman" was not only most timely but exceptionally interesting. Selig's picture, "Industries of the South and West," won favor with the commercial part of the audience and was generally conceded to be a valuable addition to the industrial features of moving pictures. "The Smoke of a Forty-five" held the audience at the Photo Play and was most interesting, proving another feather in the cap of the American. "Love and Charity," by Reliance, was up to the standard of that company, and "Deacon Debbs" caused those who saw it to appreciate the humor of Thanhouser's staff.

We are awaiting with much patience "She," by the same company, and I hope "she" will prove all to the good, too.

In concluding this week's letter will state that we are within two weeks of the opening of the winter social season, and the town is all ready for it, too. Predictions have been made that business will be immense, and it looks that way. Here's wishing every one connected with moving pictures increased happiness and good fortune during the ensuing year.

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

THE CINES CO.
OF ROME

will cease to do business direct in the U. S. A. and Canada after Dec. 31st. Beginning Jan., 1912, CINES films will be released by

GEO. KLEINE
OF CHICAGO

under his license from the MOTION PICTURE PATENTS CO.

445 BROOME ST.
NEW YORK

WILL REMAIN OPEN TILL END OF JANUARY

THE MAJESTIC

¶ Calls attention to the following seven January releases. Each and every picture has a strong story, is cleverly acted and the photography is perfect.

¶ Every exhibitor should feature all of these pictures and should make an immediate booking with his exchange.

¶ Every exhibitor should demand TWO MAJESTICS each week because there are none better.

TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK

WATCH THEM GROWING IN QUALITY!

¶ Our second release begins Friday, January 12th. A high class double exposure comedy —something new and novel—demand it from your exchange.

SEVEN MAJESTICS IN JANUARY

SUNDAY, JANUARY 7TH. "TRAINING A HUSBAND"—A fine comedy—a fault-finding husband who temporarily gets the whip hand of his wife and and his mother-in-law through the aid of his pretty stenographer, but who is finally put in his properly humble position—a comedy of complications.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12TH, "GOSSIP"—A double exposure comedy, showing exterior and interior scenes at same time—relating the bad effects of gossip—how the story grows as told from one to another and the sure cure for the dreaded evil.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14th, "HIS FATE'S REHEARSAL"—One of the strongest dramatic pictures ever produced—the husband reaching home after a bad night's carousal and his wife's father, a physician, administers treatment which causes husband to live through a terrible strain of mind—a strong picture —a good moral lesson.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19TH, "NEXT"—A roaring comedy—the lonesome barber, the manicure girl, the nice boy falls in love, thrown out by parents and finally the manicure girl wins parents—a laugh every foot.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21ST, "SPARE THE ROD"—A strong lesson, showing the results of using the whip on children—the temper of the father is finally overcome by the ever loving mother who takes child from home, earns her own living by teaching school and finally shows husband the error of his ways.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26TH, "THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE"—A comedy. Father has a little extra money, hires an automobile, apparently runs over a woman who then proceeds to extract money, piano, furniture and medicine. Father finally driven to poverty until the discovery of farce and deception.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28TH, "A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE"—The widow at home, in love with a young fellow, who partly returns the affection—the return of the widow's daughter from school—the transferring of affection of young fellow from mother to daughter—then the hidden suffering and sacrifice for strong love for her daughter.

DECEMBER RELEASES

DECEMBER 24TH, "THE ACTRESS"—Strong emotional story—one of the strongest staged pictures ever produced.

Dec. 31, "The Caddy's Dream."
On same reel, Dec. 31, "Will You Marry Me?"
Two clever comedies.

EVERY INDEPENDENT EXCHANGE SHOULD BUY TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK

The Majestic Motion Picture Co.

145 W. 45th ST. NEW YORK CITY

Sold through the Sales Co.

HER NOTION OF BLISS

New Rochelle, Dec. 22.

Editor, Moving Picture News, New York City:

This is in reply to your letter asking for a photo. I send you herewith a photo which gives my idea of perfect bliss. It was snapped while I was rehearsing in a picture called "Just a Bad Kid," and while I don't like a lot of rehearsals usually, I wouldn't have cared if they had a dozen rehearsals of this scene! The jam was the jammiest, peachiest jam I ever tasted. No picture can picture how I enjoyed it!

Mr. Thanhouser is going to give me a French poodle dog for Christmas and I know a lot of others will try to "surprise" me. But I'm "on" to most of them. But Mr. Adler bets me a dime that I don't know what his present will be. A Mr. J. T. Mann of Dallas, Texas, is sending me a Texas prairie dog. These are very little dogs—no larger than a big rat. I will certainly have a Merry "dog" Christmas.

Very truly,
"THE THANHOUSER KID."

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL CO.

We are just advised by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company that the year just closing has been the most successful in the history of their business, which was established more than thirteen years ago, and the sale of the Motiograph has continued on the increase throughout this entire year. The company reports a most gratifying increase in the last three months of the year, and although at the time of receiving this information only two-thirds of the last month in the year had been covered, the company reports that the sales for that period of December were in advance of the sales for the entire month of November, which, by the way, was one of the best months this company has ever had.

Mr. Woodward, the manager of the company, is very optimistic over the prospects of the Motiograph for the year of 1912, and already he has been working on plans which will make this machine even more popular than it has now become.

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company introduced the Motiograph in the early days of 1908, and adopted then as their slogan "Quality Before Quantity," and the exhibitors generally have gradually been brought to realize that the quality which this company has been advertising so consistently is really being put into the Motiograph, and to-day the record which this machine is making is one to be proud of.

Within the last fifteen months the Motiograph has been installed in some of the largest and most expensive theaters throughout the United States, and a list of these installations would make most interesting reading, for one could walk along Broadway in Frisco and find that two-thirds of the machines used were Motiographs. In Los Angeles they could visit Mr. Clune's handsome houses and find the booths equipped with this machine. The same might be said of all the large cities throughout this country, and when one visits Europe and enters some of the large picture palaces in London, Edinburgh, and other large cities, they are surprised to find that the Motiograph manufactured in Chicago is the machine that has been installed.

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company wishes to express their appreciation of the business they have received from the users of the Motiograph and from their many friends among the exchanges, and to wish one and all a happy and prosperous New Year.

SUBMITTED FOR THE GOOD OF THE INDUSTRY

Editor dear: I am sending some junk which probably you will consider just "Punk." But poetry making's so rife in the land, I thought you'd forgive me if I tried my hand. For some of it's awful, and some of it's fine! THE OTHERS' I MEAN (take your own view of mine).

Publish, blue-pencil or throw it away, just as you like. In conclusion would say that without your paper I'd be like a trowel that has no handle.

A. VAN BUREN POWELL.

Just a Celluloid Slip.

(With apologies to the author of the original poem with above title.)

Only a celluloid slip, my dear—
Just a celluloid slip.
But we sit and mourn, as across the sheet
The flickering pictures whip.
Look at that picture! Out of frame!
See! There's another just the same.
That operator, with fiendish grin
Is tempting his audience to sin.
See! He tightens his grip (on the crank).

He'd claim it a celluloid slip, my dear—
Just a celluloid slip.

Only a celluloid slip, my dear—
Just a celluloid slip.
But we sit and fume, in the twilight gloom
As we watch the shutter trip.
There! He has lost his lower loop!
How we would love to be in that coop
Just for a second! We'd make him kneel
And swear to run just ONE perfect reel.
Gee! We'd let 'er rip.

He'd claim it a celluloid slip, my dear—
Just a celluloid slip.

We give a copy of HAVILAND'S MOVING PICTURE PIANIST'S ALBUM free with a year's subscription to MOVING PICTURE NEWS.

$2.00 PER YEAR

MOVING PICTURE NEWS,
30 West 13th Street, New York City

HAROLD A. LOCKWOOD

The Nestor Film Company, always on the alert for new talent, discovered some months ago Mr. Harold A. Lockwood, a splendid-looking young man and a most promising actor. Mr. Milton H. Fahrney, the Nestor Western director, and Mr. Thomas Ricketts, the Nestor comedy director, saw great possibilities in Mr. Lockwood, and he was promptly engaged to play juvenile leads in the Nestor Stock Company.

The young man made good right from the start and was soon a favorite among the 150-odd players forming the giant Nestor Company. Under the able guidance of Messrs. Ricketts and Fahrney, he is fast developing into a motion picture artist of no mean worth. Mr. Lockwood has a pleasing and magnetic personality and is probably the handsomest juvenile lead in filmdom. Some of his recent successes in the silent play are as follows: "A True Westerner," "The Law of the Range," "The New Ranch Owner," "The Best Man Wins," "An Unlucky Present," "The Lost Address," etc.

New York, N. Y.—Morris Steinberg will remodel the building at 87 Ridge Street into a theatre at a cost of $10,000.

New York, N. Y.—The directors of the Metropolitan Opera House at Broadway and Seventh avenue will erect a new larger theater at Lexington and Park avenues.

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF US

LOOK AT THESE PRICES.

2000 ft. 6 times a week	$14.00
2000 ft. 7 times a week	15.00
3000 ft. 6 times a week	18.00
3000 ft. 7 times a week	20.00

Lithographs and song slides free. We pay the express charges one way. Have second-hand Powers No. 6 in good condition for sale at low price. Repair Parts for all machines on hand.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY COMPANY

109 N. DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

"THE PARTING OF THE WAYS"
A Rex Release—Thursday, Jan. 5th.

FUTURE IMP RELEASES

A Strong New Year's Program

The pictures to be released by the Imp Film Company with the new year are exceptionally strong in many respects.

The Imp drama nowadays is universally conceded to touch high water mark in excellence of story, powerful acting and good photography. Typical of this class of work may be mentioned "In the Northern Woods," a very strong drama, set to a Canadian background. The scenes in this drama are singularly fine representations of winter life in a logging camp. The treachery of a half-breed supplies the main motive of the story.

Two industrial pictures that will command attention are one illustrating cotton growing in South Carolina, and the building of the greatest dam in the world. The works at this dam, which is across the Mississippi, equal in magnitude those in progress at Panama, and the Imp Company has secured a striking series of views of the gigantic engineering operations in progress.

Besides being exceptionally strong in the dramatic and industrial ends, the Imp Company is just now devoting great attention to 500-foot humorous comedies. These have a laugh in every foot, and are proving exceptionally popular.

Thus the Imp Film Company is well equipped at all points of picture production, and it may be safe to prophecy that their pictures will advance in popularity in leaps and bounds in 1912.

Several important additions have been made to the staff of directors, actors, and photographers with a view of maintaining the pre-eminent position which the Imp Company have obtained in the world's market. The Imp Scenario Contest, for which hundreds of scenarios have been received from all parts of the world, will close on December 31. The names of the winners in this competition will be announced in the trade papers in due course.

The Western Imp Company will depart for California at the end of December with the purpose of making a series of romantic photo-plays against the background of the magnificent scenery for which California is noted throughout the world.

THE CARL BARCKHOFF CO.

BUILDERS OF PIPE ORGANS

With or Without Self Playing Attachment

POMEROY, OHIO, U. S. A.

Established 1819

Over 3000 Barckhoff Organs in use, which testify to their superiority and durability in construction, workmanship and sweetness of tone.

We make a specialty of Organ Chimes, made by no other builder.

You are dealing with the Manufacturer, no commission.

A LESSON TO HUSBANDS

Imp Release, December 30

A young business man falls an easy victim to a pretty woman who calls upon him and persuades him to change a check for her. Had matters ended here no particular harm would have been done. But the girl with the check is pretty and alluring, and entices her victim into further indiscretions. He lends her money to buy hats; he calls at her house and leaves her flowers. He is infatuated to such an extent that he grows cold toward his wife. A newspaper paragraph recalls him to his senses. The "girl with the checks" is a notorious creature against whom the public is warned; her victims are business men.

This paragraph has a salutary effect upon the young husband, who thereupon recalls himself to his duty and puts himself right with his wife.

"A Lesson to Husbands" is very refined comedy and King Baggot and Margarita Fischer enter so thoroughly into the spirit of the story that they enliven it with some very telling acting.

THE WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE
OF NEW YORK

CITY CUSTOMERS ARE ALL SATISFIED

NOW READY TO CATER TO OUT-OF-TOWN BUSINESS

LET US HEAR FROM YOU

Telephone 2892 Bryant 2893

Forty-Fifth St. Ex. Bldg.
145 WEST 45th STREET

To the Editor of the Moving Picture News,
30 West Thirteenth St., New York City.

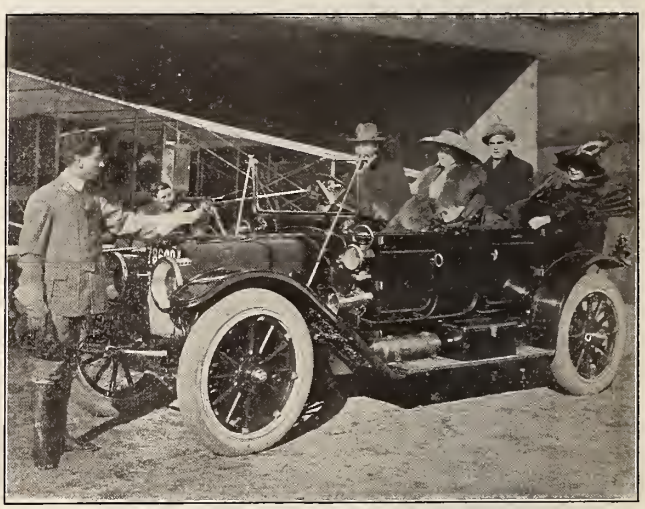
Dear Sir: There occurred an incident here in Washington that I consider should not be passed by without a slight mention. One day, the early part of the week, Eddie Balderston, employed as booker in the Washington Film Exchange, of the city, while preparing a customer show for the day, placed three reels of film in a carrying case. Immediately they were one mass of flame. With a presence of mind that is rarely exhibited, he seized the burning film and rushed from the film room. He only got as far as the stair leading from the film exchange to the street when he was forced to drop the burning film owing to the fact that the flames were spreading over him. Blinded by smoke, he returned to the film room and almost before any one else in the exchange was aware of what had happened he had summoned the fire department. He remained in the film room putting the remaining reels of film in a fireproof vault until the fire department had extinguished the flame. He escaped injury, and the only marks that were noticeable was that some of his hair was missing. The damage, thanks to his presence of mind and daring, was confined to the three reels of film. This is only another case where the flame failed to reach an employee's head, even though it reached his hands.

Thanking you in advance for publishing this incident, and with best wishes for a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, I am respectfully your,

Our Washington correspondent also takes up this matter. We have pleasure in extending this testimony to a brave man. Returning our correspondent's good wishes.—Ed M. P. N.

CHAMPION AEROPLANE RELEASE

"An Aviator's Success" is the title of a very fascinating aeroplane story, to be released January 8, 1912. It depicts the efforts of a young inventor to obtain financial aid to affect a realization of his aeroplane model.



Miss Blanche Scott, the famous woman aviator, assumes the leading role in this subject, as daughter of the banker who backs the young inventor in his project. Incidentally she loses her heart to the young genius, and crowns his achievement by bestowing on him her heart and hand; while they soar together in the air in the aeroplane's initial flight.

Just one word more about the handsome three-sheet poster which goes with "An Aviator's Success."

STOLEN

1 Power's Cameragraph No. 6; Serial No. 3306
" " " " " " " 3403
" " " " " " " 3404
Suitable reward for information that will lead to their recovery
H. A. Mackie, 853 Broadway, New York

The above has been handed to us with the further information that these machines were loaned to Mortimer Kaphan for portraying Dickens characters at 507 Fifth Avenue, New York, in charge of W. J. Lowenhaupt, who skipped with the machines. Any of our readers having them offered for sale or seeing these machines in the possession of gentlemen, kindly communicate with H. A. Mackie at the above address.

OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT

London Office of the News,
8 Sherwood Street.

That British film boom shows signs of beginning already. The British and Colonial Company recently produced a film entitled "A Plot to Blow Up the Medinal"—the vessel in which the King and Queen sailed to India. In this the chief character was "Lieutenant Daring, R. N.," who appears regularly in B. & C. films, and his diving into the water to divert the torpedo which has been fired at the royal vessel has made this film a great popular success. Moreover several London papers have given it special notices. "Daring" made a tour of a number of London halls this week and was vociferously applauded. "B. & C." have had a good ad and they deserve it as one of the most enterprising of British film makers, whose quality and acting are always on a high level. It would pay some American firm to release these productions regularly on your side.

* * * *

There are many keen fishers in the cinematograph trade and a party of them recently made a Sunday trip to Herne Bay and held a little competition. There was a strong Smith contingent. Mr. "Jack," of Barkers; his brothers, Harry of Edison's, and Leslie, of Flying A; also Guy of that ilk, while Mrs. Jack Smith was also of the party and divided the ladies' prize with Mrs. J. Dillestone. Jack himself carried off the wooden spoon, Mr. Hutchings, of the N. A. Co. (also a Barker man), capturing the first prize by a few pounds from Mr. Leslie Smith.

* * * *

Mr. George H. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, this week celebrates his silver wedding. Congratulations.

* * * *

One of the standing surprises of the trade has been the remarkable poverty of cinematograph shows in Manchester. One of the chief centers of the country for things theatrical, in which it frequently shows the way to London, it is remarkable that Manchester proper should have possessed only two living picture shows worthy of the name. Now I hear that a new establishment is to rise in Oxford street, but there is still room for more, and in these days of keen competition in most districts, some of our capitalists might invest some cash in a picture enterprise in Cottonopoles with advantage. I also hear that Sheffield, which certainly is not subject to the same reproach as Manchester, is to have two more shows, which should put it almost in the position of a competitor with New Castle, whose cinematograph theaters are legion.

* * * *

As might have been expected several of the companies formed to run picture theaters are beginning to find it a difficult matter to fulfill the promises in their prospectuses. It is one thing to make 100 per cent profit on one show, fortunately placed as regards position and competition, and quite another to maintain anything approaching that figure on a chain of theaters, some of which will certainly be up against serious opposition and may even turn out losing propositions. Yet it is on the strength of one unusually successful show that most of the money for further enterprises has been obtained from the investing public. As I have pointed out before, the picture showman has something more to do now than to open his doors and take the money. His expenses are increasing as the need for special attractions are growing and instead of having a monopoly he frequently has to share the patronage with three or four other shows. Present conditions are calculated to find out the weak points in the constitution of very many companies formed with great ambitions, while the show floated on a reasonable capital and without extravagant promotion expenses can make a decent profit still.

* * * *

Waltierdaw, always on the lookout for new fields to conquer, have invaded Wales and a new branch was opened this week at Cardiff to transact the film hiring and apparatus business of the company. Waltierdaw are continually decentralizing their business, a Birmingham branch having been open for some time and there is not the slightest doubt that they will capture a great deal of Welsh business by going to the showmen's doors. The saving of time in delivery and the personal attention which can be given in local offices are invaluable to all parties.

* * * *

Mr. H. A. Browne, chairman of the K. M. A., has suggested that cinematograph showmen should show their appreciation of the genius of Charles Dickens, whose works have inspired more than one film producer to his own profit and that of the showmen, by contributing to the Daily Telegraph fund for relatives of the great novelist who have fallen upon hard times. The appeal seems a very proper one at the Christmas season, which Dickens did so much to render a time of happiness and laughter, and it is to be hoped that many showmen will devote the proceeds of a special matinee to this object and if American showmen did the same, I'm sure Mr. Browne and the Telegraph would not object.

* * * *

A writer in the Medical Press has been attacking the arrangement for ventilation in some cinematograph theaters and not without cause, and among other things the writer attacks the fans installed in many shows and declares they make the bacteriological conditions worse instead of better. He suggests compulsory inspection and enforced washing of seats and floor regularly. Such a procedure might be justified, but are any other places of entertainments forced to take these steps? Make the same rule apply to music halls and theaters and showmen will not probably be found to object to it.

* * * *

The Eclair colored films have arrived and will be shown by Tyler's at the Film House next week. They come with a reputation which, if sustained, should make Eclair more than ever popular here.

B. A.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., CORRESPONDENT

December 15, 1911.

Nothing further has been done in regard to the proposed municipal picture show in Long Beach. The Board of Education are considering if such an institution would be fair to the show men of that city.

According to one of the daily papers, the school children spend $120 a week at the picture shows. As the admission charged the children is five cents, this amount pays for 2,400 tickets.

* * * *

The Independents are certainly scoring a victory here in Los Angeles. Nearly every week some house changes to Independent service and the beauty of it is that once they change they are in the ranks to stay.

Both of the local exchanges have been forced to increase their standing orders with the Sales Company in order to meet the demand for films.

Business is at its height over the entire city and consequently the exhibitors are wearing happy smiles.

The latest recruit to the Independent side is the "Wonderland" on Main street between Third and Fourth streets. Four reels of pictures are shown, the program changing twice a week. NEXT!

* * * *

"The Shell," 547 S. Broadway, has installed a new Powers 6 machine. This makes two of those popular projectors now in use at that house.

* * * *

Among the many good releases given us this week by the Independents, Reliance's "The Turnstile" was a corker in which Mr. Walthall's superb acting as usual attracted much notice. Imp gave us a good one in "Why the Check Was Good," and "Only an Iceman," by the Nestor Company, was a comedy in every sense of the word.

* * * *

The Bison Company had some big time Monday night when the entire forces of Miller Bros. 101 Ranch Show gathered at one of the Venice theaters to witness the first release in which that famous aggregation appear.

* * * *

The Star Theater, Anaheim, Cal., which changed to Trust service a short time ago, has returned to the Independent ranks. Service is supplied by Miles Bros. Film Exchange.

* * * *

There will be a hot time in the old town Xmas Eve. for the entire Selig Company will be the guests of Mr. W. N. Selig at a big feed to be given at Delmonico's.

* * * *

The Alhambra, corner Washington and San Pedro streets, is now taking Independent service from Miles Bros. Film Exchange.

Wilmington, Del.—Wilmington Theater Co., capital, $20,000. Wm. N. Harris, Wm. G. Shaw and C. P. Toppin.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Phillippi & Eberhardy will erect a $7,500 moving picture theater on Hopkins street near 23d.

Chicago, Ill.—Felton & Soderman will erect a new $6,000 theater at 4225 Elston avenue.

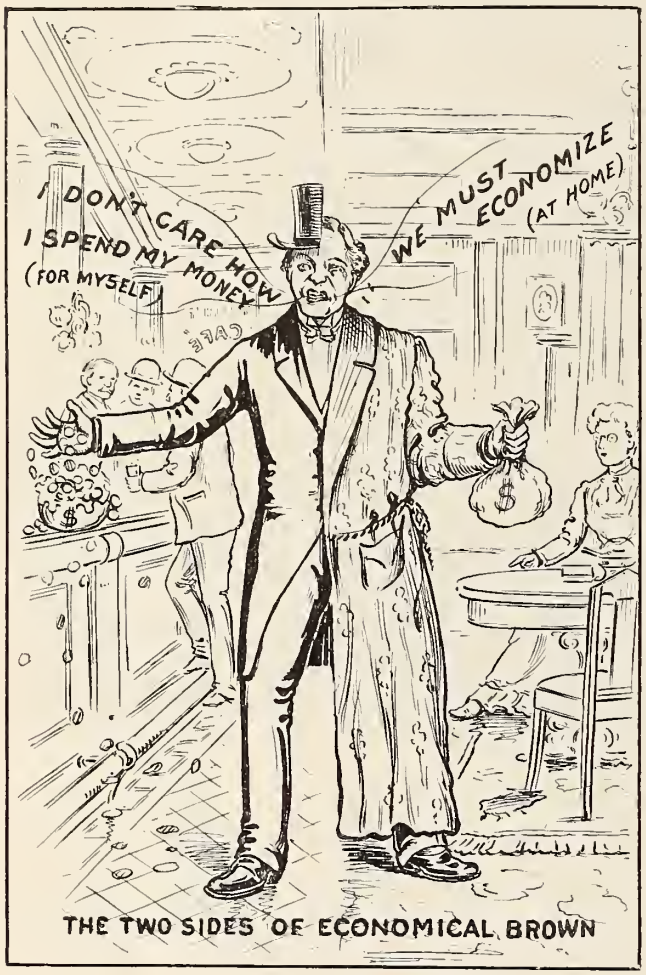
Youngstown, Ohio.—Plans have been completed for the erection of a new theater on N. Walnut street.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Empire Theater, capital, $12,000. Frank Woodward, John E. Wright and Smith Hickenlooper.

ECONOMICAL BROWN (SOLAX)

In Which Miss Fanny Simpson and Mr. Lee Beggs Have Roles to Which They Do Justice

When the motion picture shall have become like the newspapers and the magazines, the mirror of our times, it will have attained its highest educational merit. To reflect from the screen all the frailties of human nature, to show graphically the ambitions and the machinations of society, should be the ambition of all good scenario writers and producers. Only in such a way can the motion picture become a force for good. The trend to-day is in those directions.



THE TWO SIDES OF ECONOMICAL BROWN

In the Solax production of "Economical Brown" is reflected a peculiar characteristic often discernible in many American husbands. This characteristic is the one of extreme extravagance outside of the home and absolute parsimony on the inside. In other words, there are men who never stint themselves when they are "out" with the "jolly bunch" having a good time, but as soon as they cross the threshold of their own homes they are seized suddenly with a the chief thoroughfares in bygone days to the dismay of wild desire for economy. Usually the wife is the sufferer.

Economical Brown is just such a man. Good cigars, taxicabs, high-class tailors and good wine are not too good for him, but his wife, he insists, "must economize." Brown's wife is too clever for him, however; she soon shows him how truly wrong are his principles of economy. In fact she has such convincing arguments for him that he finally loosens up and "comes across" with a three-figure check.

Miss Fanny Simpson, the clever comedienne of the Solax Stock Company, plays the part of the wife, and Miss Simpson plays it very acceptably, and not only "puts across" all of the comedy situations, but injects into her work the buoyant spirit of a young wife with a sense of humor.

Flushing, N. Y.—Representatives of a large theatrical company in Manhattan are negotiating for a site for a new theater on Main street.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

Poster Publicity—A Suggestion

By Leonard Donaldson

In a busy thoroughfare in the London metropolis I lately chanced upon a man attired after the fashion of his Satanic Majesty bearing a sign upon his chest, ". . . . Films are being shown at . . . . Theater." The idea was novel and striking and impressed me with the vast possibilities of this type of publicity. Following upon this, I met a large square caravan, the external walls of which were covered with striking "ads," while the interior was occupied by an individual attired after the manner of an Indian brave. I gained an introduction—or rather introduced myself to the occupant of the caravan who sat within in solitary state on a wooden stool, and during the somewhat prolonged journey through the city gained some valuable technical information on the subject of the bill-posting business and its kindred arts. I was reminded of the period when the most striking advertisements consisted of strange objects placed upon wheels and slowly moving through the chief thoroughfares in bygone days to the dismay of drivers of the public vehicles and the despair of already belated passengers. There were shades of giant poster-covered caravans, Brobdingnagian hats, seven leagued boots, painted and varnished pagodas, and other picturesque symbols which so often strangled the stream of London's traffic for an hour or so, and checked the fevered current of the streets. These are nothing but a recollection now, but a branch of itinerant advertising still flourishes, and has largely developed since the picture theater came into being.

The "sandwich men," as they are termed—the chunks of humanity between slices of deal thinly spread with more or less piquancy—are still familiar figures. They are among the most entertaining of our few remaining public shows, now that legislation has declared against the stolling peddler and mountebanks. How often has our weak curiosity yielded to the appearance of a melancholy looking individual who, with a wistful and imploring air, bore on his feeble front the legend, "Do not look at my back!" How often have we been tormented day by day by a wooden bordered square of unsullied pasteboard borne silently along, its centre containing the command, "Watch this Frame!" This means of directing public attention has not infrequently been adopted in film trade journals!

One ingenious, and for a time, attractive and successful device was to marshal a regiment of board men bearing on back and breast, in huge capitals, the consecutive letters of the title of some sensational drama. The chief difficulty, however, was not only to place them in proper order, so that the public behind them, or before them, should read letter by letter the proper words of the advertisement, but so to regulate the march that each man should maintain his position in single file in spite of the obstructions and the traffic of the streets. However, this method has its disadvantages. For example, supposing these living "ads," instead of exhibiting the consecutive letters which make the words "THE DUKE'S MOTTO, ADELPHI," show to the astonished gaze of the populace, a legend running, "THE DUKE'S MILD HE POTATO"; the difficulties and risks of that mode of announcement are obvious. And when, in an attempt to shuffle them into their correct places, the letters burst forth with the declaration, "THE DUKE SMILED A HOT POT," it would not be easy to restrain popular interference.

Probably all previous successes of the combined effects of "sandwiches" and dramatic properties have been surpassed by the quite recent spectacle of a procession of Indian braves brandishing tomahawks bearing the inscription, "OUR HOME IS AT THE . . . . PICTURE THEATER—COME AND SEE US. Such was the scheme adopted by my caravan friend, and it is one which will suggest numerous similar advertising "stunts" to the progressive exhibitor.

MR. J. C. HEMMENT AND AEROPLANE CINEMATOGRAPHY

Thursday, December 21, 1911, about 11 a.m., the new Burgess hydroplane was run out from the float at the Burgess, Curtiss & Co. works at Marblehead, Mass., into the bay which lay so peacefully at the foot of this quaint and historic old New England town and made fast to a float about half a mile out.

THE BURGESS HYDROPLANE LEAVING THE FLOAT

Mr. Hemment and Mr. Isaac Ludlow had gone down there a week previous with the intention of adapting a motion picture camera to the hydroplane which Mr. Hemment secured in Paris on his way home from the Jungles of Africa where he has spent the past year in making moving pictures of charging lions and rhinos. After several experiments and exhaustive tests, a very satisfactory arrangement was established by which the hydroplane motor was made to run the camera as well as the airship.

The high speed power of the motor was controlled by a very ingenious contrivance on the camera which compensated for the wide variations of the two component factors by Mr. Hemment, which not only ran the exposure shutter the proper revolutions per second, but also overcame the vibrations or oscillations without the use of any kind of shock absorber.

MR. P. M. PAGE SEATED IN HYDROPLANE

The day was not highly favorable to success from a picture standpoint, being very overcast and very cold; however, Mr. W. P. Page, the aviator, assured me the conditions were in all respects ideal for an ascension and in consequence the motor was heated up and in a few minutes we were off, the pontoons were gliding over the waters of the bay at an even rhythm. After making a down-wind run of about a mile or more Mr. Page made a splendid turn, bringing the big winged beauty up into the northwest wind, at the same time throwing in full speed, but she did not rise. I turned to look at him when he shook his head and slackened down his speed and made for the float. "Now, sir," said he, "if you want to go up you must come down in weight some way or another." All extra togging was thrown off and a slight readjustment of the rising plane (made necessary by my capacity for occupying space) we made another start and in less time than I can drive my quill to tell it, Mr. Page was driving his bird-like hydroplane from the water and soaring in the frost-laden air, rising very easily and gracefully on our way to the summer White House of President Taft, at Beverly.

MR. J. C. HEMMENT AND MR. PAGE JUST GOING OUT IN FIRST FLIGHT

About a couple of miles had been traversed the coast line when a flock of ducks was put to flight by the whirring of the hydroplane motors, just in front of us. Mr. Page gave me a nudge as much as to say "shoot 'em," and you can bet I shot. I trained my gun (camera) on them for at least a thousand yards. In that time I calculated I eat up about a hundred feet of film. I could have made more as Mr. Page threw his descending lever into action and brought me down to about one hundred and fifty feet of them, following them across the bay, always keeping them in the view and focus of the easily adjusted camera.

JUST BEFORE LEAVING THE WATER IN BURGESS HYDROPLANE

I believe this flight established a record in more ways than one. Firstly, it has proved beyond a doubt that

(Continued on page 46)

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

LIFE OF DANIEL BOONE

Republic Release, January 13 and 14

REP Daniel Boone, one of the most adventurous of all those "pioneers of civilization" to whose courage, endurance and skill, America owes so much, was born in Virginia. At an early period, he emigrated to North Carolina, but his love of the wilderness not being sufficiently gratified here, he planned an expedition and with a few adventurous men ventured into Kentucky.

On June 7, 1769, he reached the famous Red River and was captured by a tribe of hostile Indians, who finally adopted him. At the first opportunity he escaped and fought his way back to a settlement.

Shortly after, while agent for a Carolina company, he built a fort on the site now known as Boonesborough, and here were fought the greatest Indian battles in the history of that period.

In 1777 that place was attacked several times by bands of Indians, who were repulsed with heavy losses. On the 6th of August, 1777, that famous battle of Boonesborough was fought; 450 Indians led by Chief Blackfish and officered by French-Canadian renegades attacked the fort. In spite of repeated assaults, that little garrison of less than fifty men set at defiance its enemies, who were finally obliged to return with heavy losses.

Besides being famous as an Indian fighter, he was also noted as a successful hunter and trapper, which vocation he followed to almost the last few years of his life. He died a peaceful death in his son's home in 1822, surrounded by his children and grandchildren. In portraying this wonderful life, great pains have been taken to accurately reproduce the famous battles as well as locations mentioned in history, and the result is a magnificent production of Indian and pioneer life, seldom if ever equalled in moving pictures.

The story holds the attention from beginning to end, as the series of adventures follow one another in rapid succession.

AN UNLUCKY PRESENT

Nestor Release, January 1

NESTOR

Young Frank Hope is a lawyer at last. He has his diploma, his office, his telephone and a photo of his dear girl, Bess, the witching manicurist.

The holidays are approaching, and the "present" more than the future is what greatly concerns the young barrister. The girl, true to her sex, is inquisitive and endeavors to make Frank tell just what he is going to give her. He would like to satisfy her curiosity; but, alas! his finances are low and he's hoping for a client, the first client, to help him out of the predicament.

The client comes most unexpectedly. A rich society woman meets two highwaymen, who meet their Waterloo by meeting the athletic young lawyer. Frank and lady exchange cards. She later visits his office, becomes his first client and gives him a retainer.

Now for the present! Frank goes shopping. A large diamond ring casts a spell over him. He must buy it for Bess. Not having sufficient available cash, he pawns his scarf-pin, link-buttons, tie-clasp, a suit of clothes and some law books. Placing the ring in a box of candy, he forthwith sends it to the girl of his dreams.

Bess eagerly opens the box; in her eagerness she does not take time to scrutinize its contents. Candies! Bah! Boiling with rage, she dumps the present into the fire. When Frank calls, she indignantly orders him away; he may go to his rich lady friend, for all she cares. The first client is just in time to clear up the lovers' misunderstanding. The ring is found in the ashes and Frank joyously takes Bess to his heart.

DESPERATE DESMOND FAILS

Nestor Release, January 6

Catching butterflies out in the country on a beautiful summer day is a pleasant occupation. Beautiful Rosamond and Claude Eclaire find it so. Their horizon, however, darkens, for Desperate Desmond has "spotted" them with his field glasses, and awaits the propitious moment to rob Claude of Rosamond.

An elusive butterfly lures Claude away from his girl. Presto! Desmond appears in an auto, captures Rosamond and honk-honks past the butterfly chaser at the rate of one hundred miles a minute.

Claude acts quickly, gives up his pastime and makes a frantic but ridiculous dash after the vanishing villain. Realizing his sweetheart's peril, he calls the United States troops to the rescue. Uncle Sam's brave boys promptly and enthusiastically answer the call, and, led by Claude himself, they ride like a whirlwind in search of Desmond and his fair captive.

Desmond, though on the eve of being caught a number of times, successfully manages to elude his pursuers until at last he believes himself safe in the camp of friendly Indians. Love, however, is the motive power that spurs Claude on, and the boys in blue are with him to the last.

Half-burnt cigarettes bearing Desperate Desmond's initials, and which the villain had carelessly thrown away, give his pursuers the only clues to work on, and Desmond is trailed at last. Cornered, he leads Claude and the soldiers to the wigwam wherein Rosamond was hidden. Leaving the boys on guard, the villain enters the tent and—before Claude and the troops can gather their wits, the wigwam moves rapidly away. Another mad chase follows, but Desmond in his autotent makes good time and keeps the hunters at a safe distance. They dare not shoot for fear of hitting Rosamond, and the villain goes merrily on with the "gal" by his side.

What the boys cannot do, Desmond's own harmless cigarettes unwittingly accomplish. The villain soon finds himself in a trap. Flames to the front of him and soldiers to the rear of him. Curses! He cannot escape this time, and, like the coward that he is, he does not care to die. Surrender is the only alternative left him. What else can he do? He surrenders—curse the luck!

THE TENDERFOOT'S SACRIFICE

Nestor Release, January 3

Her son, Donald, and Marie Lewis would by now have been happily married, sighed Mrs. Andrews, if only that Tenderfoot, Eric Newton, had remained away from the Hotel Lewis. As it was, everything was in chaos. Donald went around like a ghost of his former self, while Marie, because "it was so good for Mr. Newton to be out in the open," spent her entire spare time teaching the Tenderfoot to ride. But what worried her father most was that the girl insisted upon riding "Beauty," whom he declared was "locoed."

One day, however, when they had scarcely gone half a mile, Beauty was frightened by the blasting of rocks, took the bit in her teeth and dashed down the road. Instantly Eric attempted to come to Marie's rescue, but he only succeeded in losing his seat and being thrown, which seemed to frighten Beauty the more. Fortunately for them both, however, the men who were blasting took the situation in at a glance, so while two of the men ran to the Tenderfoot's assistance, Tim soon had his fleet-footed horse galloping wildly after the fast-disappearing Beauty. Then followed an exciting chase—ending happily in Tim getting near enough to pick the girl from the saddle.

Donald was at the hotel to greet them upon their return. Marie's tender solicitude for Eric's injuries strengthened Donald in his determination to go away and leave the field to his rival. Mrs. Andrews, however, hurried over to the Hotel to see Eric. She would find out just how serious Eric's intentions were toward the girl.

Dr. Martin had felt it his duty to tell the young Tenderfoot that he had but a few months to live, so after listening to the mother's passionate pleading for her son's happiness, Eric bravely made his resolve. Marie, with the disagreeable example of her father before her, would not tolerate drunkenness; consequently, the next evening found the young man with the fumes of liquor upon him, and to all appearances, extremely intoxicated, boisterously boasting of his conquests.

Miserable and humiliated that her love should be so lightly regarded, the half-fainting girl turned to Donald for support, while Eric, satisfied that time would heal the wound he had been forced to inflict, and that Marie would yet one day be happy with her old sweetheart, the Tenderfoot, with aching heart, mounted his horse and rode away into the night.

RETRIBUTION

Republic Release, January 20

REP Desirous of having all his friends know that he had made a successful real estate deal, Jameson struts through the village streets, foolishly displaying a large roll of bills. Jack Wilson, a ne'er-do-well of the town, seeing the display of money, makes up his mind to relieve Jameson of it and attempts to hold Jameson up, but is prevented from doing so by the timely arrival of wayfarers. Undaunted, he follows Jameson to his home and is witness to a quarrel between Jameson and his wife; she upbraids him for remaining away so long.

In anger, Jameson leaves the house and throws the money upon the table. Jack Wilson enters the house after Jameson leaves and waiting until the little girl is sent to bed, makes another attempt to get the money. He is caught by Mrs. Jameson and a frightful struggle ensues. The child, awakened by the noise, hastens to her mother's door and cries to be admitted. Wilson threatens to kill Mrs. Jameson unless she tells the child that her father is in the room. After the child leaves the struggle is renewed and Mrs. Jameson is accidentally shot by the discharge of a revolver which both tried to get possession of. Wilson escapes and Jameson coming home intoxicated, is held for the death of his wife. The child's evidence that her mother told her of her father's presence in the room convicts Jameson and he is sentenced to ten years at hard labor.

The child, Grace, is adopted by a wealthy family and becomes a social favorite. Jack Wilson in the meantime has become a modern Raffles and eventually becomes a guest at many social gatherings. As one of the invited guests at a social gathering in the home of Grace's foster parents, he meets the daughter of the woman he had robbed and accidentally killed. He learns her identity when Jameson, released from prison, comes to see his daughter. He falls in love with the beautiful girl and decides to reform. Upon informing his pals of his intentions he is ridiculed and his pals arrange to rob the home where he is a guest. Wilson, trying to prevent the robbery, is shot by one of his former companions, and believing that death is near, makes a complete confession exonerating Jameson of the murder of his wife.

A MARITAL MIRAGE

Republic Release, January 21

Maggie Dooley is the cook and general maid-of-all-work at the home of a stock operator, whose family consists of a wife and marriageable son.

Maggie is grotesque in appearance and her particular forte is a decided ability to break valuable chinaware and get the cooking and house-cleaning particularly mixed.

Things are at such a pass that "paterfamilias" is about to "fire" Maggie, when he receives a message that his fortune is swept away in Wall street.

Simultaneously, Maggie receives a letter, which her master and mistress see, to the effect that she has fallen heir to $100,000, through the death of her uncle.

Maggie's wealth is the immediate object of envy to her employers. They show her every respect, and the situation becomes most ludicrous. Finally the father schemes to annex Maggie's coming fortune by inducing his son to marry her. This doesn't please the boy, but he finally yields to the tearful appeals of his father and mother and consents.

Maggie is highly delighted at the prospect and a speedy marriage is arranged.

After the wedding supper, the hilarity is at its height, when a message comes to inform Maggie that her uncle was merely in a trance and that the first message is therefore a mistake. The effect of this news is electrical—the ensuing conduct of the father, mother, son and Maggie is one continuous scream on and off the film.

To describe the action at this point would be futile. It must be seen.

THE BEST POLICY

American Release, January 29

A Ever watch a dress rehearsal? Then you remember that the stage director spent much of his time in tearing his hair and shouting "Give it more snap! Don't die on the scene. Action! Action! Action! That's what I want!"

Action! There is the keynote of the American release for January 29, entitled, "The Best Policy." The picture opens with a spicy bit of action and the scenes are carried along with a snap and go to the very last picture. Those persons fancying the typical Western comedy heavily surcharged with constant laughter and incessant shifting of plot and scene, will enjoy "The Best Policy."

That it was a study in pantomimical facial expression was the remark of one critic, caused, no doubt, by the fact that all scenes are staged in dense underbrush and the characters are moved so close to the camera as to practically fill the entire curtain.

The story is breezy, decidedly new and novel in thought, and delightfully executed.

Three gentlemen looking somewhat the worse for wear are seen forcing their way through the thick semi-tropical growth of Southern California. Caution is expressed in every movement, for be it known, these gentlemen are seeking quiet and freedom from excitement. If the bag of loot they are carrying between them does not ably express this thought, the subsequent scene showing the sheriff and a determined-looking band of rangers posting a reward notice for the capture of three train robbers, certainly does. The dilapidated trio bear the respective and respectable name of Boggs, Briggs and Boswell.

Boggs is almost twice the age of his companions. He has seen many a tiresome day wind to a sunset close through the gossamer steel web of a San Quentin prison window. "I-for-me-me-for-I" is the sound logic of his creed, rigidly adhered to.

They camped. They slept—or pretended they did. Boggs and Briggs determined to appropriate all they had, thus leaving Boswell free to mend his way and clear his conscience. But Boswell overheard and while the older robber went away to place the treasure in a hollow tree, Boswell bitterly upbraided his companion. So, Briggs relenting, the pair decide to give the old man the double-cross. Proximity of the rangers prevented Briggs and Boswell from retiring very far into the underbrush; hence old Boggs overhears and decides to double-cross both of them. So he leaves the treasure in the tree and places in his vest a false package. Then Briggs held him up and secured what he thought was the treasure. Finding it all his own and deciding that a whole loaf is better than a half, he sees no necessity for sharing it with Boswell. A chase ensues, Boswell catches Briggs, sits upon him and removes the loot quite handily. And then—horror of horrors—they discover the gross fraud perpetrated upon them!

Meanwhile Boggs has lodged himself comfortably against a tree. He draws from his shirt the real loot and examines it long and earnestly, looking up with a pleasant smile just in time to sight down the wrong end of a gun barrel. The law catches tight hold of poor Boggs' collar and Briggs and Boswell are left alone to speculate on the folly and futility of material things.

"The Best Policy" is well acted from start to finish. The story is largely told in facial expression and the pantomime is considerably above par. The photography is excellent.

JUST A BAD KID

Thanhouser Release, January 9

She was very little, and everybody said she was "a bad kid." They did not mean by this that she was wicked, but mischievous and annoying. She rather gloried in her reputation, however, for it gave her influence over the other boys and girls with whom she played in the city's streets.

"The Bad Kid" was an orphan, and was cared for by a sloppy old woman, who made her work (when she could) and constantly ill-treated her. It was this very ill-treatment that brought happiness to the "Bad Kid's" life, although she did not realize it at the time.

The woman beat the child, a kind-hearted neighbor interfered, and a tenement brawl followed. The upshot of it was that the woman was sent to do penance on "The Island," and the child, homeless and friendless, was committed to an institution. There she found other children to tease and other "grown-ups" to hate. Inquiry developed that the child had a relative, an uncle, a farmer out West, who, although only a distant cousin, was the only kin the girl had. It was a happy day in the institution when he was located, and agreed to take "The Bad Kid" off their hands.

In her new home, the child, having never been taught, kept up her troublesome ways. Her new-found relatives, with the knowledge of her reputation, were not disposed to make allowances, and finally decided that it was a hopeless task to try and reform her—she never would amount to anything.

The child overheard their conversation, and vowed to be good, for really she was hungry for someone to love her; the only trouble was she did not know how to go about it, and was too shy to ask. Her pitiful, awkward little efforts to "be a comfort" were a failure, and she ran away, first leaving a letter for the old couple, in which she confessed how she had tried, but knew she had not succeeded.

The farmer and his wife were devout church members, and interested in foreign missions. The child's note brought home to them a realization that there were other heathens, right at home, who needed to be cared for. Besides, they realized after the child was gone, that it was pleasant to have the child about, even if she was a nuisance at times. So the farmer decided to bring her back, and his wife warmly agreed that he was right.

He found a little wanderer, her face tear-splashed, sleeping the sleep of utter exhaustion, some distance from the farm. He tenderly carried her home, but when she revived she wept anew, fearing them. They gently convinced her of their love and assured the weeping child that sometimes, many times, a "Bad Kid" will grow up to be a good girl if she has the proper care and the proper love, and assured her that they would give her both. And she never tried to run away again.

THE TWELFTH JUROR

Thanhouser Release, January 12

A rich man is found dead in his library, with every indication that he has met with foul play. His cashbox, which was known to have been full of money, is lying empty beside him. The last person known to have been with him was his son, and the servants testified that the two had had a violent quarrel. The son is sought, and is found at a railway station. Brought back to the house he is searched and the stolen money is found in his overcoat pocket. He admits the quarrel, and that it was over money matters, but denies the crime and says he does not know how the money got into his pockets.

A strong case is made out against the prisoner when he goes on trial, and everyone imagines that a speedy verdict of guilty will be returned. When the jury take their first ballot, the vote stands eleven for conviction. The majority argue with the stubborn twelfth juror, but to no avail. He says he is sure the prisoner is innocent, but has no arguments to back up his belief.

Finally he bows to the will of the others, and the vote is unanimous. The foreman approaches the door to give the signal that will notify the court officer that a decision has been reached. His hand is raised, but the twelfth juror stays it. He calls the others back, and tells them he has a statement to make. This is his story:

The twelfth juror, in private life, is an underpaid expressman, steady and hard-working. His little daughter is very ill, and the doctor tells the heartbroken father and mother that her only chance of life is to go South. They haven't the money, and realize that their poverty means the death warrant of their loved one.

The expressman is sent to "a fine house" to get a trunk. While waiting in the hall, he sees the prisoner, after a quarrel with his father, run up the stairs. The old man, who is brandishing a cane and holding a cashbox, works himself into a frightful fit of rage. He is suddenly stricken and falls dead. The expressman goes to his assistance, but is attracted by the packet of bills that has fallen on the carpet. He realizes that this wealth means life for his little girl, and yielding to impulse, picks it up and places it in his pocket. He closes the door, and makes his escape undetected.

He finds his crime of no avail, however, for his little daughter proves to him that stolen money is accursed, and the expressman, yielding to her prayers, goes back to the house, intending to return the bills. He finds the front door open and slips the cash into the pocket of a coat on the hat rack, believing that it is the old man's.

When drawn for the jury he serves, hoping that he might be able to save the innocent man; but the circumstantial evidence was so strong that he could not win over even one of his associates, and he finally decided to confess all to them.

The jurors believe him, and return a verdict of not guilty. The Twelfth Juror again confesses his fault in open court, and a new investigation establishes the truth of what he had told. He escapes punishment, under the circumstances, and the little girl is sent South to regain her health through the kindly aid of the man whose life has been put in jeopardy because of the one crime of him who later was the Twelfth Juror.

THROUGH THE AGONY COLUMNS

Lux Release, January 5

Algy and Gertie had a quarrel and parted. Algy got lonely and so did Gertie. Algy sought a soul mate through the Agony Columns and so did Gertie. In consequence, Algy went to meet his unknown companion in sorrow in the park by appointment. So did Gertie. Algy found that he had been corresponding with Gertie. Gertie found that she had been coresponding with Algy. Algy made up his mind to make it up. So did Gertie. So they did and Cupid rejoiced. So did Gertie. On the some reel is

ARTISTIC EARTHENWARE IN THE MAKING

Industrial

From the very earliest days of his meandering around this planet, man has devoted much time and study to the manufacture of pottery. After centuries of hard work he has made himself some very fine articles, which are both useful and ornamental. On these grounds alone, a complete and comprehensive description of the manufacture of artistic earthenware in the celebrated factory at Nevres, in Central France, should prove of the highest value to the showman.

HIS MUSICAL SOUL

Solax Release, January 3

Is there anything funnier than a fat man in love? In "His Musical Soul" a fat man loves a slim little girl, who weighs about one hundred and ninety pounds less than he does.

The fat man has a rival in the shape of a handsome and gallant violinist. The fat man soon gets an inspiration. He decides that he could perhaps charm the sweet damsel with the entrancing (?) strains of a trombone. When he tries, he finds that the silver-throated instrument is not only vibrant and raucous, but a disturbed of peace and quiet.

His courtship is a rather inharmonious one. Indeed, so inharmonious that neighbors decide to interfere. The poor fat man gets the worst of it all—but he is finally rewarded for his efforts. He is the happy recipient of the hand of his sweetheart's spinster sister. Somebody had to play second fiddle!

This is another picture produced under the direction of Madame Alice Blaché. She has incorporated a good deal of interesting trick work which shows up superbly in the photography. This trombone is a magic instrument. Its tones have the effect of moving furniture, pictures and dishes—in fact, the trombone moves everything, even to tears of protestation.

OUR POOR RELATIONS

Solax Release, January 5

In Solax production of "Our Poor Relations" we have a story true to life in all of the essential details. The son of a poor widow leaves his mother and goes out into the "world" to "make his mark." The boy succeeds rapidly. Before long he marries into a family of wealth.

The boy in the meanwhile forgets all about the narrow straits in which he has left his mother. He also forgets that she needs money regularly with which to live. Only periodically does he send her a measly $5. To his new friends and his wife he poses as an orphan without friends or relations.

His mother suffers keenly her son's neglect. At last, when her son had neglected to send her a remittance for a good many months, the mother decides to go to the city and look him up. Worn out with privation and hunger, this poor widow reaches the city. Having no place to go, she wends her way to a house of God. Here she sinks into a faint, while the services are in progress.

A wealthy woman and her little daughter have compassion on the poor woman. Answering the pleading of her little girl and her own humane instincts, she orders that the widow be taken to her home.

The wealthy woman's husband turns out to be the widow's son. Fate brought together mother and son. The son, seeing his mother's condition, soon realizes how snobbish, how undutiful and how mean he has been. And while with bowed head and shamed face he asks her forgiveness, his wife and child clasp their new-found relation to their hearts. The mother forgives her erring son and takes him to her heaving breast.

TRAINING A HUSBAND

Majestic Release, January 7

Charles Bender committed the unpardonable offence. When his wife at the end of a wordy war, dismissed Bridget, their quarrelsome but excellent cook, Charles kicked, and to add insult to injury openly laughed at his little wife's boast that she could do the cooking very well herself. He at last reduced her to tears by openly scorning her best efforts in the way of his morning eggs and coffee.

He afterward took recourse in the century old complaint, "Why didn't you learn to cook like my mother?" whereupon his wife forsook tradition and told him that she would get his mother to come at once and do the cooking, whereat Charles laughed in glee and intimated that there was now a chance that he would once more eat.

Mr. Bender stormed into his office after his unsatisfactory breakfast to find his chief clerk and stenographer waiting to tell him the news of their engagement and impending marriage. More in sorrow than in wrath he warned the young man to beware of the wife that cannot cook and was met with the assurance that the lady's ability as a stenographer was far inferior to her ability in the culinary art.

In the meantime his wife was sobbing out her troubles to her mother-in-law, who promptly took cause against the offender and declared that she would prepare a luncheon for her son that would open his eyes and possibly shock his palate.

Mr. Bender is summoned home by the glad assurance that his mother is now in charge of his kitchen, and with vivid anticipation of a delightful lunch he repairs to the dining room, but at the first mouthful of an omelet, upon which his mother has done her worst, he throws up his hands in horror. Mother pretending indignation, assures him that he has lost all sense of taste, and that she will take his wife to the matinee, and that he can go ahead and prepare the dinner.

The women folk go out, and with sleeves rolled up, Charles attacks the kitchen. One hour later the once well-ordered place is a wreck. Charles faces defeat. An inspiration strikes him—he hurries to the 'phone and tells his stenographer to come at once to his residence, admonishing her to say nothing to anybody of her errand; so without satisfying the curiosity of her fiance, Mr. Bender's chief clerk, she goes to the house and is bribed by her employer to prepare the dinner before his wife and mother-in-law return.

She does so beautifully and when the women return Hubby sits them down to a most excellent meal and grins at them in triumph. He has dismissed the stenographer and the success of his little plot seems assured; the stenographer's fiance, suspicious and jealous, has followed her to the house, and still worse, the girl has returned to the kitchen for her umbrella and is caught by the mother and daughter when they go out to get the after-dinner coffee. Not knowing her, they think they have a thief on their hands, and it is up to her to tell the truth to explain her presence. She is then induced by Mother to stay in the house and tell Hubby that having cooked for him once, she has fallen a victim to his masculine charms and thereby afford an opportunity for his wife to give him a very bad fifteen minutes.

The scheme succeeds very well, but unfortunately the girl's fiance, peeking through the window, has not been told of the plot and when he sees his girl making violent love to his employer and later being upbraided by the seemingly indignant wife and mother-in-law, he breaks into the house with a mad desire to take his employer's life with any weapon handy.

The complications are finally straightened out and the once proud Charles reduced to his normal position of a humble and admiring husband.

THE TEMPTRESS

Great Northern Release, January 6

An out-of-work secretary, reduced to starvation, with his wife at death's door, sees an advertisement for a private secretary to Mr. Multon. He applies for and secures the position, mainly by the assistance of Mrs. Multon, who thinks she sees in him an easy victim to her wiles. Installed in his new position, Mrs. Multon takes advantage of the absence of her husband to practice the blandishments upon her unsuspecting prey. Time after time does this cunning Eve endeavor to make the new secretary bring dishonor upon his family, but without avail. At last, goaded to desperation by her charms having no effect, she employs cunning as an aid to deceit, and creates a scene, in the midst of which her husband rushes into the room and finds his wife in a dishevelled and agitated condition, which makes him only too ready to give credence to her story. The employee is sent about his business, and the woman, to make her revenge more complete, writes a letter which falls into the hands of the secretary's wife, giving the reason of his dismissal. The shock brings about the woman's death, and on the husband's return home, he vows vengeance. Armed with a revolver, he returns to his late employer's mansion, and there accuses the woman of her perfidy. Vixen that she is, she simply laughs in his face. But her idle jests and gibes have been overheard by her husband, who thereby discovers that it is she who has played him false, and the story closes with her ignominious dismissal from the house.

THE WIDOW

Comet Release, January 12

Col. Pepper and his chum, Col. Carson, Kentuckians, are in love with Mrs. Hasthecoin, a rich widow with two children. Col. Pepper pays her an afternoon call and she discovers that he has been gently imbibing. She leaves the room abruptly and tells her eldest daughter to hand the Colonel his hat and cane with the request that he never return. The following day he receives a note from the widow in which she says that whichever of the Colonels first stops drinking she will marry. Thereupon Col. Pepper shows the note to his chum, who at once sympathizes with him. Colonel Pepper eventually gives up the bottle, but Carson finds this impossible and continues to drink as before. Col. Pepper calls on the widow again and although he impresses her with his air of reform and temperance, he learns that she dotes on Carson. Pepper in a manly way reveals the fact to Carson and urges him to reform, too. Carson tries, but gives up the idea as a failure. There is only one way out of it now, and Pepper seeks it. He must leave the field clear to his rival. So he pretends suicide. He goes to the river, leaves his old coat and hat behind, also a note in which he says he has destroyed himself. Pepper goes out of town instead, and when the widow is convinced that he has done away with himself she finally marries his chum.

MR. WHOOPS, THE DETECTIVE

Comet Release, January 8

There is not seemingly a dull moment in this film, which is a series of surprises and situations from the outset. Visiting a fashionable summer resort are a Duke and Duchess. They take their "darling" with them and place their pet in charge of a maid. While on the beach the little one is kidnapped and the Duke and Duchess are almost distracted over their loss. They seek Sherlock Holmes and he tries his best to restore the pet, but without success. The unhappy Duke and Duchess are about to give up all hope when Mr. Holmes suggests calling Mr. Whoops, a well-known milliner detective, to take charge of the case. The latter commences operations at once and his peculiar ideas of unravelling the mystery forms the nucleus of plenty of comedy. Suffice it to say Mr. Whoops is successful, and when it is all over and the kidnappers are safe under lock and key it is discovered that the "darling" is nothing more than an ordinary Simian of the organ-grinder variety.

IN THE NORTHERN WOODS

Imp Release, January 11

Most of us doubt at times whether there is any truth in the Shakespearean dictum, "That there is some soul of goodness in things evil."

In this drama of Canadian logging life there is a half-breed who seems incapable of manifesting any goodness of heart even after the most vital kindnesses and benefactions are conferred upon him. His camp chum saves his life by actually stealing brandy for him; yet later on the half-breed fells his friend in a sawmill and places the body on the machine ready to be cut by the blade. The heroine arrives in time to stop the machine and save her lover.

Two years pass, the lovers are married and there is a child. The implacable half-breed invades the peaceful scene and in the husband's absence offers violence to the young wife.

The opportune arrival of the husband seals the half-breed's fate. "The boys" of the camp decide to hang him. The fatal rope is around his neck, when the young wife intercedes for him and the wretch's life is spared. He is told to go away, but he cannot even do that without turning upon one of the men, who promptly shoots him down.

This fine drama of logging life is splendidly acted by the famous Imp Company and some beautiful winter scenes supply the setting.

A WINNING MISS
Imp Release, January 8

A love story in which the course of true love is beset by many obstacles which are gotten over.

Edward Davis loves Pearl Barbour, the handsome daughter of an exacting father who has other plans for his only child. After a love scene Edward and Pearl go to the father for his blessing, but Edward is kicked out of the room and forbidden the house.

Edward is in despair, but Pearl, womanlike, is resourceful and sends him a note proposing an elopement. Edward is delighted with the idea and just then a wardrobe of large dimensions is delivered to his room. He is so absentminded that he takes no notice of the matter and proceeds to do the ladder act under Pearl's window. It all goes smoothly and Pearl is safely housed in Edward's apartment for the nonce.

Barbour secures the services of a detective and goes to look for his daughter. They arrive soon after Edward has written the minister to come to his apartments and perform the marriage ceremony. As Barbour and the detective arrive Pearl secretes herself in the wardrobe. Soon after the cart drivers appear and announce that the wardrobe was delivered by mistake and Pearl is carried out into an adjoining apartment. The minister arrives and when he learns the condition of affairs, he is frightened. The detective and Barbour are knocking at the door and Edward and the clergyman dive out of the window, alighting in a mortar box where they are plentifully smeared with the white substance. The door is opened and the bereft parent and the sleuth enter. They dive through the same window, alighting in the same mortar box whence they emerge with soiled clothing.

The friend, who has given Pearl refuge, then takes a hand in the game and the prospective groom and minister are directed to his apartment where the ceremony is hastily and effectually performed with a sorry-looking groom.

The father and the detective arrive just too late, but the old man, seeing the humor of the situation, relents and gives them the delayed blessing.

WITH THE TIDE
Powers Release, January 6

The tumultuous, yet silent old ocean is the custodian of countless mysteries that have baffled humanity for ages. What lost souls, what hidden tragedies in those abysmal depths abide we can only judge from the occasional evidence that the tide so rarely gives us. And it is said that the water claims its own, as ordained by Fate.

Yet, notwithstanding the terrible grip of old Neptune, here and there a man with a strong guiding star will cheat him, as did Peter Wall, whose parents had long since mourned him as dead. Urged on in erring ways by the irresponsible hallucinations of youth, he had betrayed his business trust, and his loving ones at home, forgiving him for their disgrace, had written him often to come back. But meanwhile the wanderlust had seized him and the great call of the water with it. And though those "that go down to the sea in ships" oft feel the grip of the watery grave, it is doubtful if any have the experience that befell Peter. The settling hulk of the wrecked vessel is washed by the heavy tide, forcing him higher and higher, until at last all that holds him to this world is the rope by which he is lashed to the topmast.

But Providence intervenes and the wanderer returns.

HOW SHE MARRIED
Imp Release, January 13

There was no doubt that Mary Scott was a plain, homely looking girl. Still she found a lover and on her wedding morning she was as pleased as a prospective bride could be.

Just before the ceremony, however, she receives a letter from her intended husband telling her he does not love her. He prefers beauty and poverty to ugliness and money. He loves her pretty sister. There is a hysterical scene and Mr. Scott, the disappointed bride's father, departs for his office in a very troubled state of mind, not knowing how to get Mary off his hands. But a solution of the problem is found amongst his own office force. He finds it necessary to discharge one of them, Bill Robinson. Before Bill vanishes a thought occurs to Mr. Scott. Would he be willing to marry his daughter? Bill is.

Off he goes to interview the young lady. He balks at her ugliness and, of course, prefers the pretty sister, whom he persuades to elope with him. She tells her ugly sister, Mary, and persuades the latter to take her place. Mary covers her head with a veil, so when Bill Robinson receives his precious charge from out of the window and carries her to the waiting automobile and speeds off to the clergyman to be married to her, he is under the impression he has the pretty sister for a wife.

Starting in hot pursuit, Mr. Scott reaches the clergyman's house just as the marriage is being performed. Bill is removing the veil from the bride's face, only to discover he has married the wrong girl.

Cumpson is at his best and funniest in this amusing comedy of cross purposes. On the same reel is

COTTON INDUSTRY

An interesting picture depicting cotton growing in the South.

First, the negroes, hundreds of them, are seen in the fields, gathering the fleecy staple and putting it in large bags. When these are filled the wagons are loaded with the sacks and hauled to the gins. After ginning the bales are taken to the cities to be sold.

Often in front of stores there are frequently fifty or more wagons, surrounded by cotton buyers, who are sampling the cotton and paying for same according to grade.

When the sale is made, the bales are hauled to the wharf and taken on board vessels, where they are shipped to the manufacturing markets both North and South.

This picture, we are sure, will please all persons, especially those not familiar with the cotton growing industry.

Advertisers want results When writing to them it is our due that you mention The Moving Picture News.

TRY IT!

If you haven't seen any Independent films in the past few months, you've got the biggest surprise of your life coming to you. The steady, never-ceasing growth of my business shows that more and more exhibitors are turning independent and that when once they jump to the independent side they STICK! They wouldn't do this if they didn't increase their profits, you can bet your life. Try it!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters:
New number 204 W. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.
Sykes Block, Minneapolis, Minn.
1312 Farman St., Omaha, Neb.
1110 Wyandotte St., Kansas City, Mo.
421 Walnut St., Des Moines, Iowa.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

AN AVIATOR'S SUCCESS
Champion Release, January 8, 1912

Gerald Griffen is a young inventor, and the triumph of his genius is an aeroplane. With the perfected model, he calls on a broker, Robert Gemp, to back him. Gemp flatly refuses to assist him in his enterprise. With saddened hopes, the young man leaves his office. He now bethinks himself of the banker, Scott. "Great Scott," exclaimed Gerald, "why didn't I think of him at first?" Into the banker's house he comes with his precious model, and presents himself before the family.

They all cluster about the young man with his model. Once more his aspirations are squashed, for the banker is of the broker's turn of mind, for, as he expresses it, the earth is a good enough place for him. But hold on! The pretty daughter has become interested, not only in the machine but in the inventor also. Of course she has her way and in short order our budding genius goes forth with a check of substantial figures in his grasp, and a young girl's affection in his bosom.

Shortly afterwards, Robert Gemp pays a visit to his friend Scott, but the real motive of his call is Scott's daughter. Now, Robert Gemp being a handsome fellow, well set up, and possessing plenty of the world's goods, was not to be "sneezed at," nor up to this moment had Miss Scott attempted to do so. But the coming of Gerald Griffen changed her attitude towards her quondam sweetheart, Gemp.

The climax to all this came on the aviation field. Miss Scott was as daring as she was pretty, and this was the cause of Gemp's undoing. Young Gerald had undertaken to initiate her into the mysteries of the air machine, much to Gemp's annoyance, and when she was about to accept an invitation to fly with the handsome youth, he put in his veto with much vehemence. This was too much for the spirited girl, and she broke with him then and there. The spirit of fear he manifested on her account was in keeping with the cowardice he showed in refusing to help the young aeronaut; all this she duly learned.

Gerald now repeated his request and was accepted in a double sense by Miss Scott, who now entered the aeroplane, and they soared aloft, their hearts throbbing in unison to the tune of throbbing motor of their flying machine.

LOVE THAT NEVER FAILS

Champion Release, January 10, 1912

Paul Burns lives with his wife and five-year-old baby girl in a snug little cottage up among the hills of the Northwest. Paul, who is a hunter and trapper, is passionately fond of his little girl Ruth; his love for his wife is also ideal. Into this happy home comes a human serpent —a boa constrictor of the human species. The woman is charmed by his basilisk eyes, and yielding to the temptation she suffers herself to be led off; feeling in the glow of his slimy encircling coils a false passion that is to compensate for the loss of husband and little baby girl.

This monster who comes into the paradise of the poor trapper is a foreman on a ranch of old Denizot; his name is Pollard. A number of his cohorts accompany him on the fateful morning he carries off the wife of Burns. Just previous to his doing so, the husband had kissed his spouse good-bye, and putting his little Ruth on his back, had sallied forth with his gun to bring down a bird or bag a hare for the midday repast.

Having proceeded on his journey quite a ways, Pollard bethought himself of an act worthy of his type, and despatched one of the cowboys with a hastily scribbled message to be tacked on the home he had just destroyed. When Burns and the child returned there was no wife's voice to greet him. He could not understand it, and while puzzling it over, a rude knock came to the door. It was the cowboy who had pinned the fatal note and then rode swiftly away. When Burns went out on the porch no one was there. He espied the note, and when he read it his heart almost burst. He grabbed the baby and rushed within.

Through sheer exhaustion from worriment, Burns fell asleep. When he awoke with a start his little Ruth had gone—she had wandered out into the woods, calling and searching for her mother. In a mad frenzy her distracted father dashed after her, calling to her loudly as he followed her tracks. But long before, the child had fallen over a high rock. Then Providence intervened. Down at the ranch, when Pollard and his crew arrived, a little baby ran forth to greet the wretch. The guilty mother then realized her own loss, the enormity of her sacrifice. In an instant she broke the fetters of her unholy alliance, and, defying interference, hugged the child to her and retraced her journey towards home.

Long after, she sank from hunger and weakness upon the same rock over which her child had fallen. And here the distracted husband found her, and dashed her headlong overthe ledge. Fortunately, what saved her baby and now saved her was a big snowdrift, into which she fell. Hours later, when she dragged herself homeward, the husband was amazed to see wife and child. The smiling countenance of his little Ruth reflected its purity in their hearts, and wife and husband became reconciled.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS

Rex Release, January 5, 1912

Love has times without number been a blessing and a balm, but very, very often it has gone to the other extreme and been a curse and a ban. Love is sacred, the poets say, but the ties of the Church and the duties of its sons and daughters are alike sacred, and more, irrevocable. The laws of love and the laws of the Church are immutable, and when both clash there is torture and travail for the human hearts that are the battleground.

John Finley meets sweet Mary Sparks at the Little Church Around the Corner, and on their way home the spark enters their hearts and the gift of a great love becomes theirs. John is backward in the telling of his affection, and Mary waits, eagerly, yearningly, for the honeyed words. He who dares to love should have the courage to speak of it, yet many have been the heartaches because of a lingering tongue. At last he writes her, deciding to go West if her reply is not favorable. The woman, in the ecstasy of the attainment of her desire, pens a hasty note, asking him to call at eight for his answer. She assigns her small brother to deliver the note.

But small brothers are not very responsible messengers. On his way to John's home he meets a little acquaintance, who is bound for the pond with a little boat. An invitation is extended, the errand and the purpose are forgotten. Like ships that sail for sunny isles but never reach the shore, the letter is never delivered.

John enters the Church, seeking to find there the balm and peace his spirit craved.

Eight o'clock came and went, but John did not come. The woman, not realizing, not understanding, and misunderstanding, is broken-hearted. Broken-hearted, she loses interest in life. Broken-hearted, she enters the Church as a nun.

Time, the dispeller of all doubts, the interpreter of all misconceived situations, takes its course. And years speed.

One day Mary, in going over some clothes contributed for the poor, comes across her little brother's jacket. She finds the letter—Satan visiting one of God's women!

And then they meet. They look upon each other and into each other's eyes, and there they read the answer. She shows him the letter. They are tempted; Church, Duty, God, Life and Death and all things of the world, and beyond, are forgot—it is the conflict of hearts and the strife of souls! They are just about to . . . when the Angelus rings, and they stop and remember!

He turns his steps about, and re-enters the monastery. She joins the passing line of nuns, and re-enters the convent!

GOSSIP

Majestic Release, January 12, 1912

John Davis, a prominent young attorney, has pleaded his most important case, and a favorable decision has been handed down by "Her Honor," the presiding judge. The decision is, to wit: That on and after a certain date in the immediate future, he is to have and to hold for a period ending only in death her charming daughter, Dorothy. In fact, "Her Honor" goes farther in her kindness and gives a reception to her most intimate friends to make public the said decision.

Loudest in their congratulations and best wishes are Mr. Wm. Smith, a well-known bachelor clubman, and Mr. and Mrs. Jones. The day after the reception John Davis goes to his office and finds himself in a poor mood to dig into musty law books over abstruse decisions. His stenographer, a very pretty girl, by the way, is bewildered by the change from his usual crisp, businesslike attitude. The day finally ends, however, and she leaves the office. On the way to her mother's home she slips on an icy pavement and wrenches her ankle severely. John Davis, speeding in his auto to his fiancée's house, passes her—naturally he goes to her assistance, puts her in his car and takes her to her mother's home, and half carries the poor girl, almost fainting with pain, into the house.

Mr. Wm. Smith, taking a before-dinner walk, is an amazed and uncomprehending observer of the little incident. He shakes his head sadly over what he thinks to be an evidence of the frailty of his young friend John, and makes his way to the club. He is joined there by a crony, Jones, who has run into the club for a smoke before joining Mrs. Jones at home in dinner. John Davis comes into the club hurriedly, only stopping to exchange a word with his friends and dashes out.

Jones turns to Smith and exclaims, "Lucky young dog—charming girl, Dorothy." Smith sighs heavily, and unable to restrain his feelings, tells Jones what he has seen only a short time before. Jones is horrified and indignant, and declares warmly that Davis is a young scoundrel. Upon Jones arriving home, his wife shows him the newspaper report of the reception the night before, given by Mrs. Charles Sterling, to announce her daughter's engagement, and Jones confides to his wife the story he has heard at the club. Unfortunately for the young couple's happiness, each party who repeats the story uses their imaginative powers upon the same, and whereas Smith has merely told Jones that he had seen Dorothy's fiancé taking a merry auto ride with a very beautiful girl and then leave the car with his arm around the said young lady in a very loving manner, Jones describes how the merry ride ended at the exterior of a well-known road house, and the couple entered therein bent upon a joyous time.

Mrs. Jones, a woman of a strong sense of duty, feels there is but one thing for her to do—she must tell the story to Dorothy and her mother, and despite her husband's protestations, she departs, a messenger of high and evil tidings. Dorothy goes wild with grief when Mrs. Jones tells her that it is the talk of the clubs of the city how, this very afternoon, John has been riding gaily about the city, shamelessly exhibiting his passion for a beautiful young girl, dressed in the most gorgeous fashion. She tells how the couple entered a splendid café of "certain reputation," how they dined together in a private room, and of the splendid and costly presents that John showered upon the "brazen creature." Her imagination finally giving out, she leaves, happy in the consciousness of a duty well done. Dorothy, of course, promptly breaks her engagement with John, and will not even deign to give him an explanation. She storms into his office, throws her engagement ring upon his desk and almost hysterical from grief starts to leave; John catches her at the door and fairly forces her to explain, and she tells him of what has been related to her by Mrs. Jones. She will not listen to his protestations of innocence and leaves him.

John's legal training comes to his rescue. He proceeds at once to gather in all the parties to the crime. He goes to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, and despite the resistance hauls them into his car. Mrs. Jones blames Jones and Jones blames Smith. John grimly says, "We will now get Smith," and takes the couple to the club, where Smith is grabbed from his comfortable chair by the energetic John and thrown into the automobile with the other criminals. Dorothy is also gathered in and John deposits the entire party in the home of his stenographer. There sits "the brazen creature," her foot and ankle wrapped in bandages and attended by a very sweet old lady, her mother.

The facts are made clear to Dorothy, and she turns, repentant, to her young attorney. The three gossips look at each other uncomfortably and seek to shift the blame upon the other and finally make peace with the young couple. Dorothy restrains John from assisting the men in the case out of the room in a manner more vigorous than polite and tells him that she wants to go to his office at once. She gives no explanation, but once in the office starts to hunt high and low for the little ring which is so precious a thing to them. It is finally discovered resting peacefully at the bottom of the inkwell, and the young couple, all doubts removed, move upon the presiding judge for an earlier date to be set for the contract announced in "Her Honor's" recent decision.

WHEN HUBBY WENT TO COLLEGE

Powers Release, January 9

Just because a fellow looks like a henpecked old codger to-day gives no reason to blieve that he was always thus. In your mind's eye you can see this same old gink fifteen years ago, a handsome dashing college boy full of all the thousand and one little tricks that make the college boy what he is.

But hubby, in this case, is a patient, suffering old chap until he takes a notion to assert his independence. Then he does it with a vengeance. He calls in all the ingenuity and tomfoolery of happier days, completely turning the tables on her majesty. In fact, so far does he carry matters that when she changes her plans in order to catch him unawares (as she hopes) at a frolic, he manœuvres so cleverly that he soon has the keen satisfaction of seeing his wife intoxicated, and of course he plays the outraged husband to a "T," although he fixed the whole thing up himself. But he bombastically pardons her for her erring ways and in future it is his privilege to smoke, and even take a drink under the very roof where it was heretofore forbidden. And wifey must not say a word.

TOURING VENICE

This picture takes us through sleepy, dreamy Venice, the city of romance and poetry and flower and song. It is a delightful trip, first on a train and then on a gondola with the fine palaces of ancient Venice and the picturesque peasants' homes continually in view.

MR. J. C. HEMMENT AND AEROPLANE CINEMATOGRAPHY

(Continued from page 39)

the Burgess hydro-aeroplane is a weight carrier of no mean proportion, as the combined weight of the camera magazine and its attachments were about sixty pounds; this added to my two hundred pounds avoirdupois makes a tidy lump to go sailing through the air.

In the second place the device which I have used for the working of the motion picture camera is entirely new and dependable. The absence of complicated mechanical appliances, the ease of adjustment in angle of vision desired, the regularity of exposure with the minimum of vibration, places this never-failing truthful eye of photography on a pinnacle never before attained.

Last, but not least, the wonderful advantages to be gained by the war department in locating the enemy's position or the beneficial aid to those whose duty it is to typograph a new and unknown country, in fact, it will be in a very short time just as effective, if not more so, than our big guns of destruction and mercifully more human, making the combination of the camera and aeroplane a faithful servant, yet a terror which ancient Greece never thought about, and which modern civilization will soon behold.

JOHN C. HEMMENT.

A COMMUNICATION FROM GEORGE KLEINE

Chicago, December 26, 1911.

Moving Picture News,
30 West 13th Street,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I find on my return from Europe an unusual degree of interest among moving picture exhibitors and others concerned as to the changes that will be made in our releases, due largely to the various rumors that have been current recently, and I beg to submit the following facts for publication:

Our contract with the Gaumont Company having expired, we shall issue our last Gaumont release on Tuesday, January 15, 1912. All films of this make which have been or will be issued under our license from the Motion Picture Patents Company will remain licensed, and can be shown in any licensed house. The Gaumont Company's films released after January 16, 1912, will not be covered by the Patents Company license.

Beginning January 20, 1912, we shall release two (2) Cines reels weekly, made by the Cines Company, upon our regular release days, Tuesday and Saturday of each week.

We shall continue to release one (1) Urban-Eclipse reel upon Wednesday of each week, as heretofore.

The Cines Company has never been affiliated with organized independent manufacturers.

Before making a final contract with the Cines Company, I looked carefully into the merits of its product with special reference to suitability for the American market, and concluded that no other maker not then licensed by the Patents Company showed such high efficiency, both as to the physical plant and also in the organization of its staff. The Cines organization, as a whole, is most advanced, progressive and complete.

The output of the Cines Company averages five (5) reels weekly, from which we will select our two (2) weekly releases. Of the many advance productions that I saw in Rome, fully 90 per cent were subjects certain to please American audiences.

Our first Cines release will be made January 20, 1912, subject "Brutus," the film being an adaptation from Shakespeare's "Julius Cæsar." It includes the death of Cæsar, Mary Anthony's speech, the flight of Brutus and his fellow conspirators from Rome, the appearance of Cæsar's ghost to Brutus, the Battle of Philippi, and the death of Brutus.

I am particularly pleased with many of the Cines comedies, five hundred to six hundred feet in length. They are of a refined character, without vulgarity, and show genuine humor, such as is appreciated by American audiences.

There are a number of films which were especially made for the American market, and arrangements have been perfected by which there will be a continual output of subjects which will not only embody ideas that are attractive to our people, but which will be staged with all the magnificence, the striking light effects, and the perfect photography of the best European studios.

We have the exclusive rights to Cines films for Canada, the United States, the Philippines, Alaska, and all other territorial possessions of the United States.

Very truly yors,

GEORGE KLEINE.

That Imp Scenario Contest ends on Jan. First

If the postmark on your envelope shows that your manuscript was mailed before noon on January first (no matter where you mail it from) it will be entered in the Imp's great contest and stand an equal chance with all others to win one of the big prizes. No manuscripts mailed after that time will be considered, as far as this contest is concerned, though of course we will offer you the highest market price if they are what we want, at any and all times.

Now hurry and win a big prize

First Prize	$100.00
Second Prize	75.00
Third Prize	60.00
Fourth Prize	50.00

Address all prize contest scenario manuscripts to "Carl Laemmle, Personal," in care of the INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO.

102 West 101st Street, New York.

That Third Imp is King Of All!

Swamped, buried, smothered under an avalanche of congratulatory letters and telegrams! That's the condition we've been in ever since our first "Saturday Split Imp" made its public appearance. Just for instance:—"Congratulations upon the success you are making with your third reel. It's a jim-dandy and the best comedy we have ever shown in our house." So says F. T. Lynch, of Ottumwa, Iowa. There are now only two things as good as the Saturday Imp: One is the Monday Imp. The other is the Thursday Imp. Get them all—yes, even if you have to pay more! They're worth it!

"A WINNING MISS"

With King Baggott in a new sort of role. A love-comedy of the kind you have been clamoring for. Rehearsed MONDAY, Jan. 8th. Copyright, 1911.

"IN THE NORTHERN WOODS"

A thriller with something doing in every foot. A story of Canadian logging life. Released THURSDAY, Jan. 11th. Copyright, 1912.

"COTTON INDUSTRY"

One of the best industrials ever produced. Scenes secured near Charleston, S. C. Released SATURDAY, Jan. 13th. Copyright, 1912. On the same reel you will get a typical Imp comedy entitled,

"HOW SHE MARRIED"

in which Mr. Cumpson (you used to know him as "Bumptious") gives you some of the best laughs you ever had in all your born days.

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES COMPANY
102 W. 101st St., New York. Carl Laemmle, Pres.

Picture postcards of King Baggott are splendid souvenirs. Try 'em! Photos of IMP performers for sale separately or in magnificent lobby frame. Write for particulars today.

WYNARD SENIOR

Mr. Wynard Is on the Jump for Pictures and on His Rambles This is What He Said of Them.

My first venture was a picture of the Hudson River from beginning to end. I found two feet of snow at the head of the river, around the chain of lakes and Indian Lake district. On my way back I stopped at Glens Falls, which I found to be a very interesting and thriving little city, and made a very interesting picture of the paper industry of one of the independent mills. Then going to Plattsburg, I got some educational and scenic pictures. My next stopping place was Au Sable Chasm, which, I found, is one of the most interesting and historical places in the state. It is very dangerous taking pictures at this place, as one must climb down 100 to 180 feet to get to the rocks below.

Then I went to Keysville, Watertown and Oswego, which are great thriving business centres. The bridge at Watertown Falls is one mass of ice during the winter months. A number of theaters in this district have much trouble in securing films.

Baltimore, Md.—Joseph Brodie will erect a moving picture theatre at 1118 Light Street at a cost of $20,000.

Palestine, Tex.—Sims Golley will erect a new theatre.

Morgantown, W. Va.—Hippodrome Theatre Co., capital $5,000. William A. Ream, Stabley L. Nelson and others.

Cedartown, Ga.—Elite Thatre, owned by T. F. Thompson, destroyed by fire at a loss of $1,000.

Muskogee, Okla.—J. W. Houck and others will erect a new moving picture theatre at South 3d Street and Times Alley.

Data from Manufacturers' List of Releases

MEMBERS OF SALES CO.

AMBROSIO

Feet

Dec. 6—Jorio's Daughter .....
Dec. 13—The Marquis of Lantenac.....
Dec. 9—Tweedledum in High Life.....
Dec. 9—The Accusing Dog .....
Dec. 20—Tweedledum Marries an American Girl .....
Dec. 20—The War in Tripoli .....
Dec. 27—Tweedledum Loves a Singer.....
Dec. 27—Tiny Tom's Exploits.....

AMERICAN

Dec. 7—The Smoke of the Forty-Five (Dr.).1000
Dec. 11—The Man Hunt (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 14—Santa Catalina, Magic Isle of the Pacific (Scenic and Educational).1000
Dec. 18—The Last Notch (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 21—The Gold Lost.....1000
Dec. 25—The Duel of Candles.....1000
Dec. 28—Bonita of El Cajon.....1000
Jan. 1—A Midwinter Trip to Los Angeles..1000
Jan. 1—The Misadventures of a Claim Agent (Com. Dr.) 1000
Jan. 8—The Winning of La Mesa.....1000
Jan. 11—The Locket (Dr.).....1000
Jan. 15—The Relentless Law (Dr.).....1000

BISON

Dec. 1—An Easterner's Peril.....
Dec. 5—The Empty Tepee.....
Dec. 8—A Range Romance.....
Dec. 12—Bar Z's New Cook.....
Dec. 15—The Foreman's Courage .....
Dec. 19—Cowgirls' Pranks .....
Dec. 22—An Indian Martyr.....
Dec. 26—The Run on the Bank.....
Dec. 29—Getting His Man.....

CHAMPION

Dec. 11—A Traitor on the Staff..... 950
Dec. 13—The Saving of Dan..... 950
Dec. 18—The Coward's Flute..... 950
Dec. 20—By the Decree of Fate..... 950
Dec. 25—Bonnie of the Hills..... 950
Dec. 27—The Doctor's Close Call..... 950
Jan. 1—The Blood of the Poor (Dr.)..... 950
Jan. 3—The Kid of Roaring Camp (Dr.)... 950

COMET

Dec. 8—The Dead Canary (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 11—The Ups and Downs of Rafferty (Com.) .....
Dec. 15—Just in Time for Dinner (Dr.)...
Dec. 18—A Game of Bridge (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 22—The Man with the Camera (Dr.).. 985
Dec. 25—The Tie that Binds (Com.).....1000
Dec. 29—The Crude Miss Prude (Com.)....1000
Jan. 1—Simple Lives (Dr.).....
Jan. 5—Temperaments (Dr.) .....

ECLAIR

Dec. 7—There Fell a Flower (Com.)..... 660
Dec. 7—Manners and Traditions of Piemont (Edu.) 660
Dec. 12—The Musician's Daughter.....
Dec. 14—Her One Day's Dream.....
Dec. 19—A Tragic Joke (Dr.).....
Dec. 21—A Heart Bowed Down.....
Dec. 26—The Wrong Bottle.....
Dec. 28—A Silent Call .....
Dec. 28—Little Willie's Cure for Uncle (Com.) .....
Jan. 2—Divorcons (Com.) .....
Jan. 4—Old Papers, Old Souvenirs.....
Jan. 4—Charley's Holiday (Com.).....
Jan. 9—The Doctor's Duty.....
Jan. 11—The Inventor .....
Jan. 18—Lady Mary's Love Adventures (Dr.) .....

GREAT NORTHERN

Feet

Nov. 18—High Scotland (Scenic).....
Nov. 25—The Theft of Mona Lisa (Com.)..
Dec. 2—The Penalty of Her Ambition (Dr.)
Dec. 9—Buttons and Hooks (Com.).....
Dec. 9—Winter in Switzerland (Scenic)...
Dec. 16—His First Monocle (Com.).....
Dec. 16—Greece .....
Dec. 23—The Twins (Com.).....
Dec. 23—From Ostersund to Storlien.....
Dec. 30—A Realistic Make-Up.....
Dec. 30—Sea and Landscape, Denmark.....

IMP

Dec. 9—Her Birthday (Com. Dr.)..... 750
Dec. 9—Columbia Interscholastic Chase.... 350
Dec. 11—Why the Check was Good (Dr.)...1000
Dec. 14—The Little Stocking (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 16—Billy's Seance .....
Dec. 16—The Bungalow Burglars .....
Dec. 18—The Girl and the Half-Back.....
Dec. 21—The Professor .....
Dec. 23—A Pair of Gloves..... 600
Dec. 23—Niagara Falls Celebration..... 400
Dec. 25—On the Stroke of Three.....1000
Dec. 28—The Portrait 1000
Dec. 30—Broke 600
Dec. 30—A Lesson to Husbands..... 400
Jan. 1—His New Wife 1000
Jan. 4—The Trinity 700
Jan. 6—Flying the Game..... 600
Jan. 6—Back to His Old Town..... 400
Jan. 8—The Winning Miss.....1000
Jan. 11—In the Northern Woods.....1000
Jan. 13—How She Married..... 600
Jan. 13—Cotton Industry 400

ITALA

Nov. 18—Foolshead, a Professor of Innocence
Nov. 18—The Life of Bees.....
Nov. 25—The Tailor Wants His Pay.....
Nov. 25—The King of Noose Throwers.....
Dec. 2—Severed from the World.....
Dec. 16—An Up-to-Date Doctor.....
Dec. 23—Foolshead's Christmas .....

LUX

By Prieur.

Dec. 1—The Making of an Aeroplane (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Man in the Auto (Dr.)..... 650
Dec. 8—The Adventures of an Amateur Hypnotist (Com.) 350
Dec. 15—Bill and His Chum Tire of Married Life (Com.) 521
Dec. 15—Mistaken for the Culprit (Dr.).... 459
Dec. 22—A Japanese Love Story (Dr.)..... 977
Dec. 29—Making Pianos (Ind.)..... 344
Dec. 29—Caught by Cinematography (Dr.).. 636

MAJESTIC

Dec. 17—Little Red Riding Hood.....
Dec. 24—The Actress .....
Dec. 31—The Caddy's Dream (Com.)..... 400
Dec. 31—Will You Marry Me (Com.)..... 600
Jan. 7—Training a Husband (Com.).....
Jan. 12—Gossip (Com.) .....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Dec. 6—Struck Gold (Dr.).....
Dec. 9—Desperate Desmond Abducts Rosamond (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 11—Only an Iceman (Com.).....
Dec. 13—The Law of the Range (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—In the Early Days (Dr.).....
Dec. 16—Mutt and Jeff Make the Feathers Fly .....
Dec. 18—The Love Chase (Com.).....
Dec. 27—A Western Girl's Love (Dr.).....
Dec. 30—Mutt and Jeff Break Into Society (Com.) .....
Dec. 30—Their Afternoon Off (Com.).....
Jan. 1—An Unlucky Present (Com.).....1000
Jan. 3—The Tenderfoot's Sacrifice (Dr.)...
Jan. 6—Desperate Desmond Fails (Com.)..

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Dec. 5—The Little Thief (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 5—The Secret Order of Horns (Com.)
Dec. 9—Two Men and Girl (Dr.).....
Dec. 12—The Little Chaperone (Com.).....
Dec. 12—Views of Genoa, Italy (Scenic)...
Dec. 16—When Heart Wires Cross (Com. Dr.) .....
Dec. 19—Cupid's Big Sister (Com. Dr.).....
Dec. 19—Touring Brussels (Scenic).....
Dec. 23—Hearts of Italy (Dr.).....
Dec. 26—The Sign of the Helmet (Com.)..
Dec. 26—Where Steel Meets Cloud (Ind.)...
Dec. 30—A Mail Bag Romance (Dr.).....
Jan. 2—Life's Supreme Treasure (Dr.)...
Jan. 6—With the Tide (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Dec. 2—The Poison Cup.....
Dec. 6—The Turn of the Wheel.....
Dec. 9—The Turnstile .....
Dec. 13—Love and Charity.....
Dec. 16—The Playwright .....
Dec. 16—Just Smile .....
Dec. 23—The Doctor's Dilemma.....
Dec. 23—A Pair of Shoes.....
Dec. 30—The Birth-Mark .....
Jan. 3—Resignation .....
Jan. 6—The Two Old Men.....

REPUBLIC

Dec. 23—Before Yorktown (Part I) .....
Dec. 24—Before Yorktown (Part II) .....
Dec. 30—The Pride of Lexington.....
Jan. 13 & 14—Life of Daniel Boone.....
Jan. 20—Retribution .....
Jan. 21—A Martial Mirage.....

REX

Nov. 30—The Strangers .....
Dec. 7—The Measure of a Man (Dr.).....
Dec. 14—Logging Industry in the Northwest
Dec. 21—The Martyr .....
Dec. 28—The Unwelcome Santa Claus (Com.)

SOLAX COMPANY

Dec. 6—The Paper Making Industry (Ind.)
Dec. 8—The Little Shoe (Dr.).....
Dec. 13—Fickle Bridget (Com.).....
Dec. 15—The Little Kiddie Mine (Dr.).....
Dec. 20—Love, Whiskers and Letters.....
Dec. 22—The Violin Makers of Nuremberg.
Dec. 24—Christmas Presents .....
Dec. 27—When Marian Was Little.....
Dec. 29—The Divided Ring.....
Dec. 31—Christmas Presents .....
Jan. 3—His Musical Soul (Com.).....
Jan. 5—Our Poor Relations (Dr.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Dec. 12—The Lady from the Sea.....
Dec. 15—Deacon Debbs (Com.) .....
Dec. 19—The Tomboy .....
Dec. 22—Cinderella .....
Dec. 26—She (Part I).....
Dec. 29—The Expert's Report.....
Jan. 2—She (Part II).....
Jan. 2—The Passing .....
Jan. 5—A Columbus Day Conspiracy.....
Jan. 9—Just a Bad Kid (Com.).....1000
Jan. 12—The Twelfth Juror (Dr.).....1000

FEATURE AND EDUCATIONAL

Nov. 20—Love and Aviation (Dr.).....
Nov. 20—Zigomar (Dr.) .....

"La Cinematografia Italiana ed Estera"
IS ITALY'S LEADING PAPER FOR THE
AIMATED PICTUE BUSINESS,
PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY.
28 Large Pages. Eight Shillings per annum.
Editor-Proprietor: Prof. GUALTIERO I. FABBRI,
la, Via Cumiana, 31 (Barriera di S Paolo) (Italy)
"La Cinematografia Italiana" is the official organ of the Universal Exhibition of 1911 at Turin.

The Bioscope
The Leading Journal of the Moving Picture Business in Europe. Has the largest circulation and is the best Advertising Medium, bar none.
SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 A YEAR. SAMPLE COPY MAILED FREE.
85, Shaftesbury Ave., London, W., England

DER KINEMATOGRAPH, DUSSELDORF
The leading Organ for the Motion Picture Trade in Germany.
Special Supplement for Talking Machines, &c.
Published every Wednesday. Annual Subscription 11/- Post Free.
Advertisements (4 columns to page); 2s. 6d. per inch. Situations Wanted, 1½d. per line.
Reduced Price for a Series of Insertions.
Publisher—ED. LINTZ. Chief Editor—EMIL PERLMANN.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING
The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.
Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

		Feet
Dec.	7—The Failure (Dr.)
Dec.	11—Saved from Himself (Dr.)	999
Dec.	14—Taking His Medicine (Com.)	673
Dec.	14—Her Pet (Com.)	323
Dec.	18—As in a Looking Glass (Dr.)
Dec.	21—A Terrible Discovery (Dr.)
Dec.	25—Caught with the Goods (Com.)
Dec.	25—A Mix-Up in Rain Coats (Com.)
Dec.	28—The Voice of the Child (Dr.)
Jan.	1—The Baby and the Stork (Dr.)
Jan.	4—Who Got the Reward (Com.)
Jan.	4—The Joke on the Joker (Com.)

EDISON

Dec.	15—Brocton Fair and Horse Show	990
Dec.	16—Stage-Struck Lizzie (Com.)	650
Dec.	16—A Trip from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek	350
Dec.	19—Santa Claus and the Cluhman (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	20—The Sign of the Three Lahels (Com.)	1000
Dec.	22—How Sir Andrew Lost His Vote (Com.)	1000
Dec.	23—Pat Clancy's Adventure (Com.)	1000
Dec.	26—Papa's Sweetheart (Dr.)	625
Dec.	26—Modern Weapons for Fighting Fire, New York City	375
Dec.	27—The Stuff that Dreams are Made of (Com.)	1000
Dec.	29—A Romance of the Cliff Dwellers (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	30—Uncle Hiram's List (Com.)	1000
Jan.	2—Eleanore Cuyler (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	3—The Two Flats (Com.)	995
Jan.	5—Freezing Auntie (Com.)	660
Jan.	5—Codfish Industry, Newfoundland	340
Jan.	6—Please Remit (Com.)	995
Jan.	9—Thirty Days at Hard Lahor (Com.)	1000
Jan.	10—Max and Maurice (Com.)	1000
Jan.	12—Lead, Kindly Light (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	13—A Question of Seconds (Dr.)	775
Jan.	16—Jack and the Beanstalk	1000
Jan.	17—St. Johns, Newfoundland, and Its Surroundings	225

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Dec.	2—The Mountain Law (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	5—The Madman (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	7—The Long Strike (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	8—Getting Even with Emily (Com.)
Dec.	8—Stray Bullets (Com.)	1000
Dec.	9—A Frontier Doctor (W. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	12—The First Man (Com.)	1000
Dec.	14—The Hack and Schmidt Bout (Com.)
Dec.	14—A Polished Burglar (Com.)	1000
Dec.	15—A Goodfellow's Christmas Eve (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	16—The Cowhoy Coward (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	19—The Three Bears (Juvenile)	1000
Dec.	21—Winning an Heiress (Com. Dr.)	300
Dec.	21—The Foiling of Red Dugan (Dr.)	700
Dec.	22—The Millionaire Barber (Com.)	1000
Dec.	23—Broncho Billy's Christmas Dinner (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	26—A Story of the West (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	28—For Memory's Sake (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	29—A Bird in the Hand (Com.)	1000
Dec.	30—Broncho Billy's Adventure (W. Dr.)	1000
Jan.	2—The Mail-Order Wife (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	4—The Valley of Regrets (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	5—For the Love of Mike (Com.)	1000
Jan.	6—A Child of the West (Dr.)	1000

GAUMONT
G. Kleine

Dec.	2—The Promoter (Dr.)	1140
Dec.	5—Jimmie Tricks the Landlady (Com.)	475
Dec.	5—The Challenge (Dr.)	525
Dec.	9—Camoens, the Portuguese Shakespeare (Dr.)	610
Dec.	9—Important Scenes in Paris, France (Travel)	320
Dec.	12—Heroism (Dr.)	610
Dec.	12—Arahian Customs (Ind.)	366
Dec.	16—A Queen's Treachery (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	19—Through the Enemy's Lines (Dr.)	985
Dec.	23—The Maid of Argos (Dr.)	980
Dec.	26—From Pity to Love (Dr.)	826
Dec.	26—Scenes Off the Coast of North Africa (Travel)	124
Dec.	30—Curing a Reckless Student (Dr.)	1010
Jan.	2—A Royal Romance (Dr.)	975
Jan.	6—Evils of Impure Literature (Dr.)	1035
Jan.	9—The Winged Messenger	800
Jan.	9—Gorges of the Verdon River	200
Jan.	13—The God of Wine Gets Stung (Com.)	806
Jan.	13—The Ardennes Forests, France (Travel)	194
Jan.	16—Uncle Ned's Diplomacy (Com.)	956

KALEM CO.

Dec.	4—Arrah-Na-Pogue (3 reels) (Dr.)	3000
Dec.	6—The Long Arm of the Law (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	8—Too Much Realism (Com.)	1000
Dec.	11—Molly Pitcher (Hist. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	13—Norma from Norway (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	15—Bill's Flute (W. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	18—He Who Laughs Last (Com.)	1000
Dec.	20—The Flash in the Night (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	22—Between Father and Son (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	25—The "Revenue" and the Girl (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	27—The Higher Toll (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	29—The Maid's Double (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	1—Driving Home the Cows (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	3—The Cowhoy Artist's Jonah Day (Com.)	1000
Jan.	5—The Dude Cowboy (Com.)
Jan.	5—The O'Kalems' Visit to Killarney (Scenic)

LUBIN

Dec.	13—Mr. and Mrs. Suspicious (Com.)	400
Dec.	13—Quick! A Plumber (Com.)	600
Dec.	14—The Substitute (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	16—A Timely Lesson (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	18—Love Decides (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	20—Art Versus Music (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	21—Kiddies' Christmas (2 reels)	1800
Dec.	23—The Sergeant's White Peril (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	25—One Way to Win (Com.)	1000
Dec.	27—The American Girl (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	28—The Soldier's Return (Dr.)
Dec.	30—Father and the Girls (Dr.)
Jan.	1—The Oyster Industry (Ind.)
Jan.	1—Object, Matrimony (Com.)
Jan.	3—A Village Romance (Com. Dr.)	1000
Jan.	4—A Noble Enemy (Dr.)	1000

G. MELIES.

Dec.	7—A Western Girl (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	14—The Better Man (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	21—The Mission Father (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	28—The Ranchman's Debt of Honor (Com. Dr.)	1000
Jan.	4—A Woman's Gratitude (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	11—Roped In (Dr.)	1000

PATHE FRERES

Dec.	14—The Magic Suit Case
Dec.	15—In the Grip of Alcohol (Dr.)
Dec.	16—A Mother's Remorse (Dr.)
Dec.	18—Pathe's Weekly No. 51
Dec.	19—Princess Charming
Dec.	19—Landscape in Japan (Scenic)
Dec.	20—The Fatal Posing (Dr.)
Dec.	21—Dad's Smash Up (Com.)
Dec.	22—Providential Bread
Dec.	22—In Japan, Nara, the Park of the Sacred Does (Scenic)
Dec.	23—Actor's Hearts (Dr.)
Dec.	25—Pathe's Weekly No. 52
Dec.	26—The Burglar's Hard Luck (Com.)
Dec.	12—Youth Versus Age
Dec.	12—Small Trades in Malacca (Scenic)
Dec.	13—The Flower Girl of Las Palmas (Dr.)
Dec.	14—An Episode of the Early Mormon Days (Dr.)
Dec.	26—Aboard a French Battleship (Scenic)
Dec.	26—The Kromats
Dec.	27—Mother-in-law Raises xx! (Com.)
Dec.	28—His Daughter's Bracelet (Dr.)
Dec.	28—Mushroom Culture (Edu.)
Dec.	29—Yann, the Trouhador (Dr.)
Dec.	30—The Idol (Dr.)
Jan.	1—Pathe's Weekly No. 1
Jan.	2—Infancy of Moses
Jan.	2—Ice Formation at Odessa, Russia, at 31 degrees below zero (Sc.)
Jan.	3—The Professor's Daughters (Com.)
Jan.	4—The Rebuked Indian (Dr.)
Jan.	5—Betrayed by a Parasol (Com.)
Jan.	5—Dr. Two Step Prescription (Com.)
Jan.	5—A Malay Village During the Rainy Season (Scenic)
Jan.	6—The Cowboy's Sister (Dr.)
Jan.	6—The Chillouks (Scenic)

SELIG

Dec.	11—April Fool (Com.)	500
Dec.	12—A Romance of the Rio Grande (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	14—George Warrington's Escape (Hist. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	15—Industries of the South and West (Edu.)	1000
Dec.	18—Evangeline (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	19—For His Pal's Sake (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	21—Brown of Harvard (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	22—The Little Widow (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	25—A Modern Rip (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	26—The Bully of Bingo Gulch (Com. Dr.)	1000
Dec.	28—Paid Back (Dr.)	1000
Dec.	29—Their Last Chance (Com.)	1000
Jan.	1—Cinderella (3 reels)	3000
Jan.	2—The Cowboy's Adopted Child (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	2—He, She and It (Com.)	150
Jan.	4—The Mate of the Alden Besse (Dr.)	1000
Jan.	5—The Other Fellow (Com.)	500
Jan.	5—Hutchinson, Kansas, Semi-Centennial Celebration (Topical)	500

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

Dec.	6—The Luckless Banker (Dr.)	1002
Dec.	13—The Tragedy of Old Age (Dr.)	798
Dec.	13—Harbor of Marseilles, France (Sc.)	215
Dec.	20—The Miracle (Dr.)	1040
Dec.	27—The Stolen Treasure (Dr.)	680
Dec.	27—Fair Exchange Is No Rohbery (Com.)	322
Jan.	3—True to Their Trust (Dr.)	656
Jan.	3—A Cotton Goods Factory in France (Ind.)	325
Jan.	10—Lazy Bill and the Strikers (Com.)	702
Jan.	10—Pottery Making in Thoune (Ind.)	273

VITAGRAPH

Dec.	18—Vitagraph Monthly
Dec.	19—Vanity Fair (Three Reels)
Dec.	20—Fires of Driftwood
Dec.	22—A Reformed Santa Claus
Dec.	23—The Old Doll
Dec.	25—Some Good in All
Dec.	26—The Patchwork Quilt
Dec.	27—Testing His Courage
Dec.	29—A Doubly Desired Orphan
Dec.	30—In the Clutches of a Vapor Bath
Jan.	1—A Romance of Wall Street (Dr.)
Jan.	2—A Red Cross Martyr (Dr.)
Jan.	3—The Heart of the King's Jester (Dr.)
Jan.	5—Destiny is Changeless (Dr.)
Jan.	6—The Path of True Love (Dr.)

It Takes a Shrewd Man

to know a good business opportunity when he sees it, and wise men know that our films are features. Strong dramas, masterful acting and excellent photography combine to make them the "goods." If you have the "goods" you can get the money. Read what one state rights buyer says:

Received your recent letter. Am very busy. Played New Castle 4 days, one being returns date. Please keep me posted with the inquiries. I have booked about two weeks in Pittshurgh, in about 3 hours' time. Give me a list of prices for all open states, especially for New York.

"Zigomar" is a Rage. Could not handle people yesterday at Nixon, New Castle, so he took a return date to-day. Has 750 seats, 10 cents. Make a better offer for Iowa and Kansas and I will do some business for you. Yours truly, PENNSYLVANIA ZIGOMAR CO., New Castle, Pa.

ZIGOMAR—the king of sensational pictures. LOVE AND AVIATION—Beautiful spicy and moral drama. WRITE FOR BOOKING—WIRE FOR STATE RIGHTS PRICES

E. MANDELBAUM, Pres.

THE F. & E. FILM COMPANY

GENERAL OFFICES: 112 Prospect Ave., Cleveland, O.
CHICAGO: 36 W. Randolph St., Jerome Abrams, rep.
DETROIT: 305 Equity Building, G. W. Weeks, rep.

Theatre Sales Co.

211 Dearborn Street, opposite Post Office
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
Long Distance Phone, Harrison 341

Dealers in Theatres anywhere in the United States and especially Chicago. Write or Call. Make Known your Wants

JUST OFF THE PRESS—THE NEW

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14

By far the best book of comedy material I have ever written. Contents include 20 sure-fire parodies, 11 great monologues, 10 fine acts for two males, 6 acts for male and female, a splendid minstrel first part, an original one-act comedy, also brand-new acts for quartettes and sister teams, besides an almost endless assortment of newest gags, jokes, sidewalk patter, etc., etc.

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR

MADISON'S BUDGET No. 14 is sold with the guarantee of being absolutely satisfactory in every way or money instantly refunded. Send orders to

JAMES MADISON
1404 Third Avenue, New York

In writing to Advertisers please mention

THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS

25c IN STAMPS GIVES YOU ONE COPY OF

HALLBERG'S

1912 MOTION PICTURE CATALOGUE AND REFERENCE BOOK

Special Jobber of

EDISON
POWERS
MOTIOGRAPH
SIMPLEX

Moving Picture Machines

The "Hallberg Economizer"

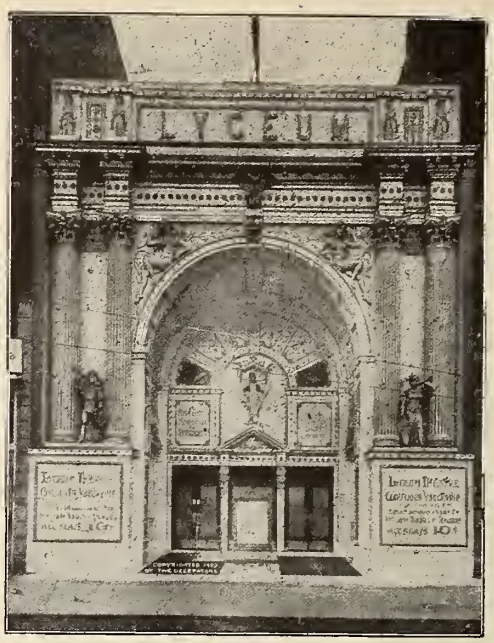
Used in connection with any of the above moving picture machines, produces the finest results on your screen that money can buy.

I Equip Theatres Completely

And carry in stock only the highest grade goods required for your theater.

Free catalogues, circulars and pamphlets furnished of individual items you require.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Free Catalogue No. 2.



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

Our price is right and the service is right, that's why you ought to write right now for our Film List.

Two Reels, 6 times per week	$14.00
Two Reels, 7 times per week	15.00
Three Reels, 6 times per week	16.00
Three Reels, 7 times per week	17.00

NATIONAL FILM BROKERS :: 186 N. LaSalle St., Chicago

QUICK—CHEAP—GOOD

OPERA CHAIRS

Ask for Catalog 306

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.,
218 So. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

BARGAINS—BARGAINS
Motion Picture Machines $35 up.
Send for Supplement 33 Bargain list of Motion Picture Machines Supplies, etc.
Motion Picture Machines Wanted
HARBACH & CO.,
809 Filbert St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST THEATRE CHAIR

Sanitary, Space-Saving, Life-Saving, Money-Saving.
To Use This Chair Is to Make Your Business Grow.
Write Today for Circular W.

HARDESTY MFG. CO.
Canal Dover, Ohio.

LAST FEW DAYS TO SEND IN YOUR ORDER!!!

—FOR—

The DELHI DURBAR

FIRST

GAUMONT INDEPENDENT

RELEASE

On or About January 15th, 1912

A MAGNIFICENT SUBJECT

A WONDERFUL SUBJECT

A FEATURE SUBJECT

The Greatest Film of the Last Ten Years

Gaumont

KING GEORGE V

Crowned Emperor of India, Showing 200 Princes of India and Their Suites, With

1,000 ELEPHANTS

1,000 ELEPHANTS

In Their Trappings of Gold and Precious Stones

AFTER THE ELEPHANTS WE WILL RELEASE

40 ROARING LIONS

embodied in one of the most sensational dramatic features of the day, entitled

THE CHRISTIAN MARTYRS

(Review to be Found in Another Section of this Issue)

A story of the suffering and final triumph of the Christians in Pagan Rome. Hand-colored throughout.

REMEMBER—These are our first REGULAR releases, and although we could obtain more money by selling exclusive state rights, yet we prefer to let the regular exchange obtain these features in the same way as an ordinary reel.

GAUMONT CO., Flushing, N. Y. Agents

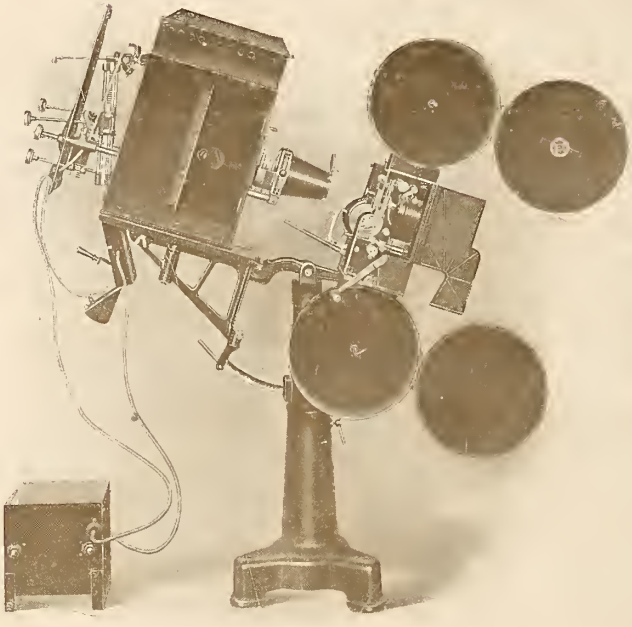
ANNOUNCEMENT No. 8

Simplex

THE PEER OF ALL

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

The table for lamphouse is provided with a substantial swing movement which instantaneously brings the lamp into optical centre either with the M. P. Projection or Stereopticon lenses, and the Tilting arrangement, giving ample latitude, is governed by the moving of the support through the arc provided at the back of the stand.



The base, at its centre, rests on a device by which the machine can be swung to right or left, and the centre of gravity of this stand, together with its table support, and in conjunction with the Head and lamphouse, owing to careful calculation provides a machine of perfect rigidity and freedom from all vibration.

NO MORE TROUBLE WITH CITY EXAMINERS IF YOU USE THIS

THOROUGHLY FIREPROOF MACHINE

Lyric Amusement Co., Champaign, Ill., Nov. 8.

PRECISION MACHINE CO., New York.

I wish to say that the "Simplex" is the greatest machine on the market, after having used four other makes. If you care to use my judgment as a recommendation you may do so. It is from the heart, and I have had lots of experience with machines. Considering everything it is several years ahead of anything on the market today.

Yours very truly,
H. H. JOHNSON.

"Just the Machine the Department has been looking for."
—N. Y. City Official Inspector

EASIEST OF ALL MACHINES TO HANDLE, THREAD AND OPERATE

Sales Office: 23 East 14th Street, New York

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
0 007 551 485 2